Theſe ſpoilers being a competent armie of foure thouſand horſe, and great numbers of foot, returning towards Toledo, had a deſſeigne to enter into Arragon, and to aſſaile Tarraſſone, whereof Don Pedro being aduertiſed, who kept a garriſon of three hundred horſe at Logrogno, for the defence of Caſtile, he ſent to intreat the Infant Don Sancho to march thither, and to ſuccour him againſt the French and Nauarrois, who came to deſtroy his Realme of Arragon, the which he did preſently: ſo as beeing ioyned with the king Don Pedro they ſaued Tarraſſone: yet the Arragonois loſt the caſtell of Vl, the F

A which was wel defended by Ximeno of Artieda: they alſo loſt Lerida and Filera, the which were giuen in gard to them of Sangueſſa: Baylo and Arbuis were ruined, and the French and Nauarrois paſt vnto Verdun. Vpon their retutne, the army of D. Pedro and D. Sancho attended them, where as they could not auoyd the battaile, which the French preſented them: but the Knights of Caſtile which did accompany them, told them that they had willingly ouer-runne the country, and done their indeauors in all aſſaults, but to charge their lances againſt Don Sancho, it was not their intention: that is to ſay, to ſpoile towns, & to ruine poore innocents, who had no intereſt in great mens quarrels, they did it willingly, yet wold they not attempt any thing againſt the heads, who might giue them impunity for all their inſolencies, and could take reuenge of them, if they ſhewed themB ſelues too eager enemies. So the troupes of France and Nauarre returned towards Pampelone, from whence ſome of the Noblemen of Caſtile went to D. Sancho, hauing made their peace.

Arragon.

26 The King D. Pedro finding himſelfe in this danger, it made him to ſeeke a peace with Nauarre for ſome moneths: for he had many queſtions to decide with his Noblemen and Knights of Arragon and Cattelogne, who complained much of his ſower diſpoſition, and his tyrannous manner of gouernement, inſulting ouer the greateſt, yea againſt his owne bloud, contrarie to all lawe and nature. For wee reade, that there were ſcarce two yeares expired, after the deceaſe of his father, when as hee forced his brother Don Iames, to whom the Ilands of Maiorca and Minorca, with other places adiacent, had beene giuen by teſtament, with the title of a king, to hold them of him, as fees depenC ding of the Crowne of Arragon, and therefore he cauſed him to take an oath and do homage, as alſo for the Counties of Roſſillon, Cerdagne, Conflans, Valleſpierre, Colibre, Omelades, Carlades, and for the rights of Montpellier: with promiſe for himſelfe and his deſcendants Kings of Maiorca, to come to the Eſtates of Barcelona beeing called, and to deliuer the citty of Maiorca, the towne of Perpignan, and the caſtell of Cerdagne, vnto the Kings of Arragon, whenſoeuer they ſhold demand them, in regard of which ſubmiſſions and promiſes, the king Don Pedro did confirme theſe lands and portions to the king Don Iames his brother: for the which he would haue the Earles of Foix and Empurias, D. Dalmas of Rocabertin Vicount of Caſtelnau, Raymond of Vrgio, William Canet, D Bernard Hugo Serralongue, Dalmais of Caſtelnau, Ponce Zagardia, Arnaud Corſaccio, William Sous, with the Deputies of the Ilands of Maiorca and Minorca to become cautions. Sometime after picking a quarrell againſt the Nobilitie of Cattelogne, and their priuiledges, this king Don Pedro did ſo furiouſly aſſaile the Earles of Foix, Vrgel, and Palliars, with the Vicount of Cardona, who were the moſt apparent, as hauing beſeeged and taken them in Balaguer, he detained them long in a miſerable priſon, eſpecially the Earle of Foix, whom he intreated vnworthily in the caſtell of Siurana. Moreouer, a little before this laſt warre of Nauarre, hee had attempted and executed great matters againſt the French, raigning in Italy, hauing employed the men and meanes of Arragon and Cattelogne, to the great diſcontentment and oppreſſion of all his ſubiects, and hee was newly E returned out of France, whether the warre of Naples and Sicily had drawne him, vppon the occaſion which followeth.

Iniuſtice of D. Pedro againſt his bro-

Inſolencies of the French in Sicily.

27 The French hauing conquered Naples and Sicily, vnder Charles the firſt brother to Saint Louis, they committed many vnaccuſtomed inſolencies among theſe nations, againſt the honor of women, with other exactions and ſpoiles vnder colour of Iuſtice: by reaſon whereof (as alſo by the iuſt iudgement of God, to whom without doubt the cruel deaths of Conradin, and of the Duke of Auſtria, whoſe heads King Charles had cauſed to be cut off, by the pernitious counſell of Pope Clement) the Sicilians did ſollicite D. Pedro King of Arragon to purſue the right which he had vnto theſe Realmes, as husband to Q. Conſtance heire thereof, beeing daughter to king Manfroy, promiſing to ayde and aſſiſt F him with their perſons and goods: he which did moſt labour in this pourſute was called Iohn de Procula or Prochida, borne at Salerne, Phiſition to the deceaſed King Manfroy, who by his perſwaſions induced the king Don Pedro to affect this conqueſt: for the effecting whereof, he firſt made a ſecret league with Pope Nicholas the third, and with Michel Paleologue Emperour of Conſtantinople, obtayning from the Pope a promiſe of

Inueſtiture

Inueſtiture of the Realmes of Naples and Sicily. Martin the 4. beeing Pope after the de- A ceaſe of Nicholas, the king ſent Hugh Mataplana a Catelan to Rome, to ſound his diſpoſition, touching the confirmation or renewing of this League, and to intertaine him (for Martin was friend to Charles King of Naples) and to diſguiſe the cauſe of his Ambaſſadors voyage, he had charge to mooue the Pope and the Conſiſtorie, to canonize Don Friar Raymond of Pegnafort according to the aduice of a Prouinciall Councell held a litle before at Barcelona, by the Prelates of Arragon and Cattelogne. In the meane time D. Pedro did arme forty galleys with many ſhips, the which he cauſed to paſſe along the coaſt of Affricke vnder a colour of reſtoring Bouqueron king of Conſtatine in Africke, who was expelled by his brother: and the better to couer his enterpriſe, the Ambaſſador beſought the Pope to take the Realme of Arragon into the protection of the Church, B whileſt that the king D. Pedro ſhould be abſent in the warre of Affricke, and to demaund leaue to exact a tenth of his Cleargie. The king was demanded by the Ambaſſadours of France, the reaſon of this great preparation, with offers, that if it were againſt the Infidels, King Philip their maſter would ayde him with all his forces, and withall proteſting, that if it were to preiudice Charles king of Naples, he would take it ill: to whom he made no other anſwer, but that he had meanes ſufficient to end the warre which hee had vnder-taken, without employing any others. To Arnaud Roger Earle of Palliars, who demanded of him, in the name of the whole Nobilitie, whether he meant to leade them, he made a ſharpe anſwer, that if his left hand preſumed to inquire too curiouſly of that which the right intended to do, he would cut it off. So the army parted from Tortoſa, beeing ſollicited by Nicholas Copula and Raymond Portella. C

Sicilian euen-ſong. In the meane time the French were ſlaine thorough out all the townes of Sicily, with ſuch rage and hatred againſt the nation, as whereas they knew any women to be gotten with child by the French, they opened their wombes, and ſlue both mothers and children, for that they would not leaue any of their ſeed in the countrie. Onely one Frenchman called William Porcelot Gouernor of Galataphimia was let go vntouched, for the good opinion they had of his modeſtie and temperance. And then D. Pedro arriuing at Palermo, he cauſed himſelfe to be crowned King, in the yeare 1281. King Charles being deſirous to be reuenged of this iniurie, he led an army againſt Meſſina, but he was repulſed into Calabria, without any effect. The king of Arragon left Queene Conſtance his wife in Sicily with three children: D. James who was king of Sicily, D. Frederick and D. Yolant, D eſtabliſhing a Councell of Eſtate, whereof the chiefe were Willyam Galſeran a Cattelan, Alain Leontine, holding the place of chiefe Iuſtice of Sicily, and chiefe author of their rebellion againſt the French, John Prochida, and Roger de Loria his Admiral, to whom hee appointed an army of 25. gallies: but he wold haue in either of them two Captains, one a Cattelan, the other an Italian, the marriners ſhould be part Cattelans, and part Italians, but the rowers ſhould be all Italians. Hauing thus ſetled the affaires of this Realme, hee returned into Spaine, where he had many matters to attend: for beſides open force, there paſt many ſcandalous books betwixt Charles King of Naples, and D. Pedro king of Arra-gon, ſo as not able to decide their quarrels neither by law nor armes, they challenged E one another with a certaine number of Knights of either part: and this combate was allowed by the Pope; an vnworthy thing for a Chriſtian Prelate. The place beeing appointed at Bourdeaux, in the king of Englands country, a neuter-Prince in this cauſe. King Charles came at the day appointed, but he found not his aduerſarie. Wherefore hauing attended moſt part of the day in the place appointed for the combat, and ſeeing no man appeare, he returned. The King of Arragon who had onely an intent to circumuent his enemy by the expectation of a combate, and in the meane time diuert him from the war of Sicily, had ſtayed in a ſafe place, from whence he came vnknowne to Bourdeaux with great ſpeed, where attending vntill king Charles were parted, when he thought he was far enough off, he ſhewed himſelfe in the place of battel, as if hee had had a great deſire to fight, complaining that he had fayled, where after he had made the proteſtations requiſit F in the like caſe, he tooke an act of his preſence from John Graille Seneſhall of Guien (to whom he left his helmet, his target, his lance, and his ſword in witneſſe of his appearance, and that he had kept his faith and promiſe) he returned with the like ſpeed into Spaine:

and a little before the French and Nauarrois forraged Caſtile, he arriued at Logrogno, where he intertained a garriſon in fauour of D. Sancho, as we haue ſayd. For theſe ſubtilties, Pope Martin (who had ſucceeded Nicholas the 3.) beeing a French man borne, did excommunicate the king D. Pedro, giuing his Realme of Arragon to Charles of Valois ſecond ſonne to Philip King of France, who with the Popes diſpenſation married Conſtance daughter to Charles Prince of Salerne, the onely ſonne to this Charles King of Naples, cauſing a Croyſado to be preached againſt this king D. Pedro. Whilſt that Charles King of Naples was in Gaſcony, the king of Arragons Admirall called Roger de Loria a Calabrois a very expert man in ſea-fights, came running along the coaſt of Italy, with 45. galleys, and many other veſſels, doing much harme: ſo as this army being diſcouered at Naples, approching ſo neere the citty, as the ſouldiers might be heard, prouoking the garriſon by iniuries and caſting of darts into the towne, Charles Prince of Salerne iſſued foorth with 36. gallies, and ſome other veſſels againſt his enemies, where there was a furious fight, but the Admirall of Arragon was victor, who tooke and carried away nine galleys, with a great number of priſoners of note: and amongſt the reſt Charles who would needes go foorth againſt the will of the Popes Legat, and contrary to the commandement which his father had giuen him at his going into France, not to depart out of Naples, nor to hazard a battell, either by ſea or land in any ſort whatſoeuer. The deſire of glorie prouoked it, and brought him to this miſery, which coſt many Noblemen their liues, for the priſoners beeing brought to Meſſina, he beheld with his eyes the heads of 200. Gentlemen cut off, to reuenge the death of Conradin. His father beeing returned to Naples, found the affaires in a pittifull eſtate, and liued not long after. At his death there were two Legats in Sicile to treate of an accord with Queene Conſtance, who was a wiſe and religious Lady, but not able to draw her to any reaſon, they did aggrauate the Excommunication againſt the King D. Pedro, and interdicted the Sicilians, the which did ſo incenſe them, as running in a rage to the priſons where the remainder of the French were that had beene taken by Roger de Loria, they ſought to enter to murther them: but the French made reſiſtance, ſo as theſe mutiners ſeeing there was no meanes to effect what they intended, they ſet fire of the priſons and burnt them all. After which there was an aſſembly of all the chiefe Magiſtrates of the townes of Sicile, to reſolue what was to be done with Charles Prince of Salerne, and nine other Noblemen which were priſoners with him, where they concluded, that after the example of Conradin, and the other Noblemen, they muſt all dye.

Reuenge of the death of Conradin of Suabe.

Whereuppon wee may not let paſſe an act of Queene Conſtance, full of pietie and courage: for this Princeſſe hauing ſent on a Friday morning, to aduertiſe Charles to thinke of the ſaluation of his ſoule, and that he was condemned to die after the ſame maner that Conradin had done: he anſwered, that hee tooke his death the more patiently, for that hee ſhould receiue it the ſame day that our Sauiour Ieſus Chriſt had ſuffered. This anſwer deliuered to the Queene, ſhee ſayd, If it be ſo that the Prince takes his death ſo patiently by reaſon of that day, for my part I am reſolued to ſhew him mercie for his ſake, who the ſame day ſuffered death and paſſion for vs all. Whereuppon ſhee commanded he ſhould be preſerued without any harme, letting the people vnderſtand (who did preſſe her to put him to death) that ſhee ought not in a matter of ſo great importance, and which might be the cauſe of great inconueniences, reſolue nor execute any thing, without the priuity of the king her husband: and therefore ſhe commaunded that Prince Charles ſhould be carried into Cattelogne to the king Don Pedro, to diſpoſe of him as he ſhould thinke fit by good aduice. This generous and Chriſtian like act, is worthie of eternall prayſe, as the exceſſe which king Charles, through bad councell, and an ill-gouerned paſſion, had committed againſt Conradin and other Noblemen his priſoners, is to be blamed and deteſted. This Charles Prince of Salerne was afterwards king of Naples the ſecond of that name.

23 After the king D. Pedros returne out of France, expecting daily (by reaſon of the Popes cenſures, and his enterpriſes againſt Nauarre) to be ſet vpon by Philip k. of France, and Charles of Valois his ſon: and the Noblemen and Knights of Arragon & Cattelogne, being tyred by him in the former wars, & ill intreated, as they thought, in their freedoms, (whereof the townes and commonalties of his Countries did alſo complaine) they did alſo ſtirrre vp troubles and ſeditions, and made an vnion together. The heads of the Nobility were, Symon of Vrrea the elder, D. Pedro Fernandes Lord of Ixar, and D. Pedro of Ayerbio, both baſe brothers vnto the King. Pedro Cornel, Artal Alagon, Lope Ferrnçe de Luna, Athon des Foſſes, Sancho of Antillas, Gombald of Beneuent, and Symon of Vrrea the younger, all of Noble families, and moreouer Lope William of Oteicia, Pedro Iourdain Pegna, Gombald Tramaſſet, Giles of Bidaure, Pero Garces Nuez, who were Knights, whoſe predeceſſors had beene aduanced by Kings. Theſe hauing made a league with the people did promiſe and ſweare to let the king and his ſonne D. Alphonſo, (who was his Lieutenant generall) vnderſtand, that if they did not containe themſelues within the limittes of the lawes of the country, they would withdraw themſelues from their obedience, and declare themſelues enemies, and pourſue them by armes that ſhould ſeeke to breake them. The king had called the Eſtates to Taraſſone, and afterwards to Saragoſſa. There he intreated, promiſed, and did all he could to breake this vnion: but he was forced to yeeld, and therefore he granted vnto the Arragonois, the priuiledge which they call general, whereby the liberty which had beene ſomewhat reſtrayned, was againe reſtored, the ancient maners of the Country, and cuſtoms of their Anceſtors, fit for the country, put again in practiſe. And moreouer, there were lawes made for their Kings, which they ſhould be bound to obey. And for that they were in a mutine in ſome places, by reaſon of certaine Impoſitions layed vpon ſalt, the trafficke thereof was made free by the Eſtates. Notwithſtanding all theſe things, the king refuſed the iudgement of the Iuſtice Maior of Arragon, the which was then exerciſed by Pedro Martines Artaſſone, whom he depoſed from his office: but ſoone after this dignity was fortified with ſtronger lawes. The like aſſembly was made at Barcelona, and to the ſame end; where they obtained confirmation of their old ſtatutes and cuſtomes, which they call Vſatiques. They of Valencia beeing called to the Eſtates of Arragon, would not appeare, pretending liberty to aſſemble apart. In this Realme of Valencia there was a Magiſtrate eſtabliſhed, who was Preſident of the Iuſtice, who ſhold be an Arragonois, and ſhould do right vnto the townes and Noblemen of that Realme, who enioy the priuiledges of Arragon: the firſt in this dignitie was Alphonſo Martines. In Ribagorça there was alſo a peculiar Iudge created at Grados, from whence the firſt appeales ſhould go to Barbaſtro, or to the Iuſtice of Arragon, and the ſecond to the king, or to Iudges deputed by him: but theſe laſt ordonances were made and executed in the yeare 1285. at the Eſtates held at Hueſca, where as the king did preſide. They being transferred to Zufaria, the king beeing abſent, Iohn Giles Tarin Iuſtice Maior of Arragon was Preſident, where it was ſayd, that he was a lawfull Iudge, yea in cauſes commenced againſt the King: who beeing cited and not appearing, there were decrees made againſt him in many inſtances. In the end the king confirmed the decrees of the Iuſtice Maior, and whatſoeuer ſhould be concluded by the Eſtates, the Deputies, and Councellors hauing giuen their ſuffrages. Atthat time the king Don Pedro ſpoyled his brother D. Iames king of Majorca, of the County of Roſſillon, for that he had retired himſelfe into France, and had made a League againſt him with king Philip, who had promiſed him the Realme of Valencia, after the conqueſt which he did hope to make thereof, and of the reſt of D. Pedros country. In theſe combuſtions was the eſtate of Arragon about the returne of the king D. Pedro from the warre of Nauarre attempted with the Caſtillans.

Vnion in Arragon againſt the king for their liberties.

Caſtile.

29 As for D. Sancho Infant of Caſtile, he with all his followers had bene alſo excommunicated by Pope Martin the 4. The Arch-biſhop of Seuile, the Deane of Tudele in Nauarre, and the Arch-deacon of S. Iames in Gallicia were the denouncers thereof: wherfore it was concluded in D. Sanchos Councel, to kill all thoſe that ſhold intimate or bring theſe cenſures: yet the Commiſſioners deputed by the Pope went on in their Commiſſion, and did interdict all parts of Spaine, holding the Infants party. On the other ſide the fury of armes ruining the country, Queene Beatrix the widow of Portugal, D. Mary wife to the Infant, laboured to procure a peace, and to remedie thoſe great miſeries, at which time there was ſome hope that the king and his ſonne ſhould haue an interview: for the king was come to Conſtatine, & the Infant to Guadaſcanall, but the Infants minions and bad Councellers did hinder it. The Ladies purſuing this holy enterpriſe, Don Sancho fell ſicke

A ſicke at Salamanca, and in ſuch extremity, as the Phiſitions had abandoned him: the king in like manner fell ſicke vnto death, whereby it ſeemes that God was highly offended againſt theſe miſerable Princes, whoſe reconciliation was thus preuented. The king ſeing his end drawing nigh, he gaue by his will, Seuile and Badajos, with the title of a Realm, to his ſonne Iohn, with charge, that he ſhould hold them of the Crown of Caſtile and Leon. To D. Iames his other ſonne he gaue the Realme of Murcia with the ſame condition. Hee pardoned all ſuch as had carried armes againſt him, except his ſonne D. Sancho. In the beginning of a will of his made in Nouember 1283. he makes great complaints of his aduerſities, and doth much blame the kings of Portugall, Arragon, England, the Pope, and others, who had fauoured D. Sancho, curſing him and all his poſteritie, and leauing heires B of his Soueraigne Realmes, D. Alphonſo and D. Fernand de la Cerde, one in default of the other, and if they dyed without iſſue, he gaue them to Philip king of France, and to his deſcendants: He gaue many other Legacies to his other children, to Churches, and to his Officers and domeſtique ſeruants. By another teſtament apart, made in the yeare 1284. he ordained, that his heart ſhould be carried and interred on mount Caluarie in the citty of Ieruſalem, and his body in his citty of Seuile or Murcia, in the which his Executors ſhould pleaſe. He dyed in the yeare 1284. and was buried at Seuile, hauing raigned 31. yeares, 10. moneths, and 23. dayes.

Alphonſo king of Caſtile giues portions to his ſonnes.

Curſe of the father vppon D. Sancho and his poſterity.

An. 1284.

This Prince was a preſident of the weakneſſe and inconſtancie of humane things, not onely in the goods which they call of Fortune, but alſo of thoſe of the mind, whereof he C was as well furniſhed as any Prince that hath beene before or ſince him, all which did him more harme then good: for neither vertue, knowledge, honour nor riches auayle not, if the bleſſing of God do not accompany them, but they rather ruine a man. And in truth this Prince may be tearmed miſerable in all theſe things. He was a great and mighty king, but nothing did ſuffice him, by reaſon of his prodigality, and ill-meaſured bounty: he was neuer ſincerely beloued of his ſubiects, by reaſon of his ſower diſpoſition and wilfulnes, proceeding from too great a preſumption of his knowledge: ſo as hee did neuer beleeue any good counſell: It was the fruite of his Philoſophie, the which had made him ſo ouerweening, as he preſumed to controule the Author of Nature, ſaying, That if he had bin preſent at the Creation of the world, he ſhould in many things haue beene of another D opinion, with other ſuch ſpeeches full of impietie. By iudiciarie Aſtronomie, whereunto he was giuen beyond all reaſon,, he had foreſeene (as he thought) his aduentures, the which made him affect the Imperiall dignitie, where hee purchaſed more diſhonour then euer any Prince. This vanity made him cruell to his brother D. Frederick, and other Noblemen, to preuent the conſpiracies which threatened him, but could not auoid them: the which he had done, if leauing theſe diuinations, hee had relyed wholly vpon the prouidence of God, without any further ſearch. But it is the will of God, the curious ſhould haue this torment, alwaies to feare their misfortune, which they would know by damnable meanes, giuing effect to vanity, and to the ſpirit of error, againſt thoſe that follow it. The Queene D. Beatrix his mother (who it may be was ſuperſtitious, and giuen to theſe E impieties) had neuer any contentment after his birth, hauing vnderſtood when hee was in his cradle, from a Grecian, who was a great Sorcereſſe, that he ſhould bee depriued of his Realmes.

D. Sancho the Braue, the fourth and laſt of that name, the 11. of Caſtile, and 32. of Leon.

1. IN the yeare 1284. D. Sancho caried himſelfe as king, hauing performed his fathers obſequies in the city of Auila, where he was at the time of his deceaſe, where he mourned in ſhew, for that which he had long deſired, as we may iudge by his actions. He commanded that D. Maria his wife ſhould be called Queene, and their daughter called Izabell, beeing but two yeares old, to bee declared and receiued heire of thoſe Realmes, if he had no iſſue male: the titles which he gaue himſelfe were, King of Caſtile, Leon, Toledo, Galicia, Seuile, Cordoua, Iaen, Murcia, Badajos, and Algarbe. He came to Toledo with D. Maria, and there they were crowned. By a complot made with D. Pedro king of Arragon, D. Iohn Nugnes of Lara was diſpoſſeſt of the fort of Albarrazin, a free place holding of no man, the which was very preiudiciall to Caſtile: this place was afterwards giuen by the king D. Pedro, to a baſtard ſonne of his called D. Fernand, whome he had by D. Agnes Zapate. The Infant D. Iohn brother to the new king, with the helpe of ſome knights, which were fled out of Caſtile, thought to ſurprize Seuile: but the king poſted thither with ſpeed, & diſappointed their deſſeignes. Being in that citty, Ambaſſadors came to him from Aben Ioſeph king of Maroc, to ſettle ſome order betwixt Affricke and Spaine, but the king D. Sancho being incenſed, that the king of Maroc had come to make warre againſt him in his fathers fauour, anſwered his Ambaſſadors very ſowrely, ſaying, that he held his bread in one hand, and a ſtaffe in the other, and that if any one would ſeeke to take away his bread, he would ſtrike him with his ſtaffe. The Ambaſſador, whoſe name was Abdalla, returned to Algezire, from whence they began to make roads into the territories of Medina Sidonia and Xeres, which cauſed the king D. Sancho to looke to his affaires: who for this cauſe began to make prouiſion of galleys and other veſſels, in the ſea townes of his Iuriſdiction, and did entertaine a Captaine of Genoa, called Benet Zacharie with 12. gallies, to whom he gaue the port of S. Mary in propriety, vpon condition, that he ſhould for euer entertaine one galley armed. This king hauing called a Court at Seuile, hee diſanulled many priuiledges which were extorted in time of neceſſitie. Beeing returned into Caſtile hee diſpoſed of matters of Iuſtice, and puniſhed many which had beene rebels vnto him, cauſing ſome heads to be cut off.

These things paſt in the yeare 1284. about the end of which he had newes of the preparation which the king of France made to inuade Cattelogne, by reaſon whereof, he and his vncle D. Pedro of Arragon had an interview in Ciria, where they were moreouer aduertiſed that there was intelligence betwixt king Philip and him of Maroc, to make warre at one inſtant, the one in Cattelogne the other in Andaluſia: wherefore beeing parted D. Sancho came to Burgos, to hold an aſſembly of the Eſtates.

Arragon.

D. Iohn Nugnes of Lara being diſpoſſeſt of Albarrazin, as we haue ſayd, by Don Lopes Diaz de Haro, being the Commander, he put himſelfe into Tudele, the which hee defended for Philip the faire king of Nauarre, againſt the king D. Pedro, and not onely repulſed him, but alſo tooke great ſtore of victuals and cattell which was brought to the enemies campe: for he had within it aboue 300. horſe, and a great number of foote: ſo as D. Pedro ſeeing that he ſhould do no good before Tudele, he ſpoiled the countrie, and returned into his Realme, to defend the paſſage againſt the king of France, who came to aſſaile him: from whom the Earle of Artois, whome the Spaniards call Charles, and the French Robert, was ſent to the king Don Sancho beeing at Toledo, to perſwade him to ſet at libertie without exception the ſonnes of his deceaſed Brother Don Fernand de la Cerde, who were were priſoners in the hands of D. Pedro King of Arragon; and then he intreated him not to ſuccor the King of Arragon in the warre which the French King pretended to make againſt him. to whom the King D. Sancho made no other anſwere, but that he would ſend his Ambaſſadors to King Philip, to treat of thoſe affaires: wherevpon he ſent vnto him D. Martin Biſhop of Calaorra, and D. Gomes Garcia of Toledo Abbot of Vailledolit, who found King Philip at the entry of the country of Cattelogne, with a great army, beſieging Girone, who were but ſleightly entertained, and returned without any effect. They write that the Earle of Arthois being diſpatched from the court of Caſtille, taking his leaue, the King D. Sancho receiued a pacquet out of France: hauing opened it and read the letters, he ſayd vnto the Earle that he had good friends in the court of France, who adduertiſed him of all that paſſed, intreating him to ioyne with them, and to become his friend: yet the Hiſtories of France ſay, that this Earle of Arthois had beene before in Caſtille, after the ſuppreſſion of the rebels of Nauarre, in the life time of King D. Alphonſo, at which time this packet was brought, and not now: the which the Earle of Arthois hauing reported to the King it cauſed a great tumult and ſearch in court. In the meane time the King D. Sancho made preparation to ſuccor Xeres, the which was already inueſted by the army of the Miralmumin of Maroc, where there were eighteene thouſand horſe Moores, or Arabian Affricans; and came from Toledo by Talauera and Merida to Seuille, whether the Moores made daily roades euen vnto the gates, the King D. Sancho hauing not yet ſufficient forces to ſuppreſſe them: but within few daies after there came vnto him about foure thouſand horſe, as well of the military orders of Spaine, as of Noblemen, with the which he made a ſufficient army to goe to field. Hauing muſtred his troupes, he marched towards his enemies, to whom hee preſented battaile, but the King of Maroc would not accept thereof: for beſides the great forces at land which came daily to the King D. Sancho, hee had a mighty army at ſea, which lay in the Port of Saint Mary, where there were aboue a hundred ſaile of great veſſels. The King of Maroc raiſed his ſiege from Xeres, and afterwards they were made friends, hauing an enterview at Pegna Ferrada, or according vnto ſome in Albuhera, where the King of Caſtille receiued a preſent of Iacob Aben Ioſeph, of two millions of Marauidis of gold, then currant. This peace was not pleaſing to the Infant D. Iohn the Kings brother, nor to Don Lopes Diaz of Haro, who demaunded nothing but warre. About the end of the yeere 1285. the Queene D. Maria was brought to bed in Seuile of a ſonne, called D. Fernand, who ſucceeded the father in thoſe realmes.

An. 1285.

2 Philip the 3. King of France, and his ſonne Philip the faire King of Nauar, being entred into Cattelogne, had taken Perpignan, ruined ſeuen and twenty townes and caſtles, & laied ſiege to Girone. The victuals for the campe were brought from Narbone to the neereſt hauens and ports of Empurias, Roſes and others, and from thence was carried a little ſpace by land with a gard of horſemen. Which the King deſiring to preuent and withall to take the treaſor which he knew was brought to pay the ſouldiers, he came and laied an ambuſh of fiue hundred horſe, and about two thouſand foot betwixt the ſea and the French campe: whereof the King of France, being aduertiſed by his ſpies, ſent before, by the aduice of the Conſtable of France, three hundred choiſe men at armes, vnder his charge, who being come to the ambuſh, and diſcouered to be few in number, were preſently inuironed and charged with great cries, by the Arragonois, who thought to defeat them, but the French who were come thether to fight, did incounter them in ſuch ſort, as although they were much inferior in number, yet they ſeemed more then equal in valour and courrage.

Arragon. Perpignan taken by the French.

The ſiege of Girone.

The Arragonois animated by their King, who was preſent and fighting, behaued themſelues valiantly, ſo as the one yeelding nothing vnto the other, the fight continued long without aduantage, vntill that the King D. Pedro being grieuouſly hurt in the face with a Lance, retired himſelfe out of the fight, wherevpon his men beganne to faint. Many of his horſemen eſcaped with him, but as for the footmen they were all cut in peeces, there were ſome horſemen ſlaine vpon the field, on either ſide, but moſt Arragonois.

The King D. Pedro hauing cauſed himſelfe to be carried to Villa-franca, died ſoone after after of his wound. He had raigned nine yeeres, three monthes and foure daies; A generous Prince, but ambitious beyond all meaſure, being growne an irreconciliable enemy to the French, ſince the ſucceſſe of the Iſland of Sicile, the which he left to D. Iaime or Iames his yonger ſonne.

D. Alphonſo the third of that name, and the tenth King of Arragon.

DOn Alphonſo his eldeſt ſucceeded to the realme of Arragon, this yeere 1285. Don Pedro being aduertiſed by his Phyſitions, the chiefe whereof was Arnaud of Villeneufue (whoſe workes we haue but much curtalled by the Inquiſitors) that he drew neere his end, he did ſollicite his ſonne D. Alphonſo to haſten the conqueſt of Majorca, which he had vndertaken, and did much deſire; wherefore D. Alphonſo preſently after his fathers death, led the army to Majorca, and tooke the Iſland, ioyning that of Majorca to the other titles of the Kings of Arragon. In this action the chiefe Commanders were D. Blaſco of Alagon, Sancho of Antillas, Pedro Garces Nuez, Pedro Seſes, Blaſco Ximenes of Aierbio, Symon Perez Andoſilla of Arragon: and of Cattelogne, D. Pedro de Moncade, Raymond of Vrgi and Maimon Plaigaman. Euen vpon the death of the King D. Pedro, there arriued in Cattelogne, Charles Prince of Salerne, called the halting, a priſoner, being conducted by Raymond Alleman, Symon of Eſtorio and William Ponce Cattelans, who had bound themſelues to the Infant D. Iames, who was appointed King of Sicile, to carry him into Cattelogne, or to looſe their liues, ſwearing that if any came to reſcue him, and that they found themſelues too weake, they would kill him and caſt him into the ſea. You muſt vnderſtand that one of the chiefe conſpirators in Sicile againſt the French, called Alain Leontain, a councellor of Eſtate, and chiefe Iuſtice of the realme, which is one of the greateſt dignities, ſtaied not long before he receiued from the Arragonois, a worthy reward for his notable treachery, and immoderat appetit of reuenge: for being diſcouered that he ſought to reconcile himſelfe vnto the French, for ſome diſcontentment, he was ſent priſoner to the caſtle of Siurane, from whence he neuer parted, being knowne to be a double traitor: and God brought him to this end, to ſhew that he deteſts thoſe, that for their priuat paſſions ſeeke the ruine of Eſtates.

D. Iames King of Maiorca diſpoſſeſt by his Nephew.

Alain Leontin Author of the Sicilian Euenſong a double traitor and his end.

The Conſtable of France returning to the campe before Girone, he was receiued with all poſſible ſignes of ioy: whereas ſoone after they had newes of the death of D. Pedro King of Arragon, whereof hauing aduertiſed the beſieged that they ſhould not continue obſtinate; Raymond of Cardona, who commanded within the towne, demanded leaue to ſend one thether to vnderſtand the truth, who brought him word that hee had ſeene the King his maiſter dead: whereupon he yeelded vp the towne to the French King, the ſouldiars and Inhabitants departing and carrying away what they could, except gold and ſiluer which they were to leaue, for the which they were ſercht. At this ſiege the plague fell into the campe, and the King himſelfe grew ſick, ſo as this warre ceaſed, and they began to thinke of their returne into France. The King had entertained certaine gallies of Piſa and Genoa, which hee now ſent backe, hauing no more vſe for them.

Saying towards Italy, they were met by Roger of Loria Admiral of Sicile, who came to Cattelogne with fiue and fortie gallies, to ſuccour the King of Arragon his Maiſter, of whoſe death he was then aduertiſed. This man who was pollitike, and loath to looſe any oportunity, hauing vnderſtood from theſe captaines the Eſtate of the affaires in Cattelogne, and eſpecially of the enemies army, he entertained all their fleete, and lead them backe towards Ampurias, where they found the remainder of the French fleete in the hauen, whom they did ſodainely ſet vpon and burne, all the ſouldiers and marriners hauing eſcaped, and ioyned with the reſt of the Land-army. King Philip, who cauſed himſelfe to bee carried in a litter, was much grieued at this loſſe, and his ſickneſſe

A ſickneſſe did ſo increaſe, as he gaue vp the ghoſt in the towne of Perpignan, whether the armie came with great difficulty, the Arragonois hauing ſtopt the paſſages of the mountaines, ſo as they were forced to make their way by the ſword. Death of Philip the third King of France.

Philip the firſt of that name, the fiue and twentith King of Nauarre.

B 4 Philip his ſonne, called the faire, who ſucceeded him, was both King of France and Nauarre, hauing a little before married D. Iean the heire of Nauarre. Of which marriage were borne three ſonnes, Lewis Hutin, Philip the long and Charles the faire, all which three were Kings of France and Nauarre one after an other, hauing no children. They had alſo two daughters, Ioane who died young (who is not in the French Genealogies) and Iſabel Queene of England, mother to Edward the third, who contended for the ſucceſſion of the Realme of France againſt Philip of Valois. Nauarre.

At that time 1286. the Realme of Nauarre was gouerned by a Gentleman called Clement of Launay in quality of Viceroy, who defended it againſt the daily inuaſions of the Arragonois. A captaine of Nauarre, whoſe name was D. Iohn Corbaran, hauing the charge of the frontier towards Arragon, was defeated and taken by D. Pedro Cornel, an C Arragonois. The Nauarrois alſo entring into the country of Arragon beſieged Tiermas, but could not take it, yet they did great ſpoiles. About the end of the yeere there was a truce made betwixt theſe two Kingdomes, and a defence made not to moleſt one an other vpon paine of death. There was alſo a truce concluded betwixt Philip King of France and Nauarre, and Don Alphonſo King of Arragon, during the which they ſought meanes to make a peace betwixt them, for the controuerſies of Sicile and other places. An. 1286. Clement of Launay Viceroy of Nauar.

The death of Philip the third King of France being knowne in Caſtille, the King D. Sancho ſent backe the Archbiſhop of Calaorra, and the Abbot of Vailedolit, his Ambaſſadors, to Philip the faire his ſonne, to ſeeke ſome meanes of an accord, for many conſide- D rations: one and the moſt imporant was, that the Kings of France, father and ſonne had beene the meanes at Rome to ſtop the diſpenſations of the marriage which D. Sancho had made with D. Maria his couſin. Theſe Ambaſſadors carried backe into Spaine an entervew of both Kings graunted in the towne of Bayonne; yet they met not, for the King of France would not paſſe the mount of Marçan, and he of Caſtille ſtaied at Saint Sebaſtians, ſending their deputies to treat and end their quarrels. For King Philip there came Robert Duke of Bourgongne and others, for the King of Caſtille came D. Guttieres Archbiſhop of Toledo, ſucceſſor to the Cardinal D. Gonçalo, with the Biſhops of Calaorra, Burgos and others. The firſt demand which the French made, and whereon they E did inſiſt, was, that the King D. Sancho ſhould leaue his wife D. Maria, to marry one of king Philips ſiſters, which ſhould be either Marguerite or Blanche: which the Ambaſſadors of Spaine found to be out of reaſon: and hauing giuen aduice thereof vnto their King, who was neere, he was ſo much offended, as hee recalled them, and would not haue the conference to proceed any further. The Abbot of Vailledolit, who was ſuperintendent of the Kings reuenues, by this voiage fell into diſgrace with his maſter, and was accuſed to haue put this ſauage demand into the Frenchmens heads: wherefore hee was ſtraightly looked into, and diſmiſt from all affaires. The King went from Saint Sebaſtians to Victoria, where the Queen attended him, from whence they paſt to Burgos, from thence he went to Saint Iames in pilgrimage. Paſſing by Sahagun, he cauſed the bodies of the King D. Alphonſo the ſixth, and the Queenes which were there interred, to be F remoued. Caſtille. Conference of Deputies for the Kings of France and Caſtille.

5 His voyage being ended, hee honoured D. Lope Diaz de Haro, Lord of Biſcay, with the dignity of high Steward, and Standard-bearer of the realme of Caſtille, giuing the ſuruiuance vnto D. Diego Lope de Haro his ſonne, with promiſe neuer to diſpoſſeſſe them of their offices, ſo as they did ſerue him and his ſonne D. Fernand faithfully, without affecting *Haro Lord of Biſcay exceedingly honored by the King D. affecting any other parties, appointments or alliances, the which they promiſed ſolemnly, vpon paine of loſing Biſcay, and all they had in Caſtille and Leon: and the King gaue into the hands of D. Lope, for aſſurance of that which he had promiſed, moſt of the forts in Caſtille. A

By meanes of theſe things D. Lope Diaz was made Earle the firſt day of the yeere
An. 1287. 1287. with command ouer all the country, from Burgos vnto the ſea. To D. Diego Lopes de Haro the Earles brother, was giuen the Gouernment of the Moores frontier: about which time the marriage was made betwixt D. Iohn the Kings brother, and D. Maria Diaz de Haro, daughter to the Earle D. Lope: who had a great deſire to ſee the King D. Sancho diuorced from the Queene his wife, to haue him marry the daughter of Gaſton Lord of Berne his couſin, hoping that the children which ſhould come of that B marriage, ſhould inherit thoſe realmes, and thoſe which hee had had by Queene Mary ſhould be excluded, for that the marriage was made without the Popes diſpenſation: but God did otherwiſe diſpoſe. This Princeſſe was brought in bed this yeere of her ſecond ſonne, called Alphonſo, and then the King retired D. Iſabel, heire of the Eſtate of Molina, whom her mother D. Blanch, ſiſter to Queene Mary, would haue married to D. Alphonſo King of Arragon. This great power and authority which the King had giuen to the Earle D. Lope, diſcontented many Noblemen of Gallicia, but eſpecially of Leon, ſo as hee was preſt to abate this power, too great for a ſubiect, the which hee abuſed: but the King had no will to diminiſh any thing, wherefore he tried to content them with good words: and in the meane time he ordained, that the Earle D. Lope ſhould goe into the Marches of Galicia, with good numbers of ſouldiars, to ſuppreſſe ſuch as would C attempt any thing againſt his will. The Earle D. Lopes held a garriſon at Aſtorga, and the King went an other way to ſee his Nephew D. Denis King of Portugal, to reconcile him with D. Alphonſo of Portugal, who held ſome places vpon the frontiers of Leon, where by reaſon of his quarrels hee kept ſome ſouldiers, whether alſo ſome baniſhed men of Caſtille retired themſelues, who made roades into the territories of Leon. The two Kings of Caſtille and Portugal met at the ſiege of Ronches, and tooke it by compoſition: by the which D. Aluaro de Lara, who had retired himſelfe to D. Alphonſo of Portugall, was reſtored to D. Sanchos fauour. At this ſiege the King of Portugal did councel the King of Caſtille to humble D. Lope Diaz de Haro, who did abuſe the authority which he had giuen him tyranouſly, elſe it was to be feared there would grow great D troubles in Caſtille.

This aduice was wel taken by the King D. Sancho, and from that time hee began to ſtudy by what meanes he might take away or diminiſh that extraordinary power, but it was too late: It is not the cuſtome for ſuch as are once mounted, to ſtoope. The Earle D. Lope finding the Kings intent, retired to Gaſton of Berne his couſin, there to make ſome faction: where he had newes of the death of D. Aluaro de Lara his competitor and enemy, whereof he was exceeding glad, and returned into Caſtille, but he found that the King had giuen his offices, and all that D. Aluaro had enioyed to his brother D. Iohn Nugnes de Lara, ſo as D. Lope found himſelfe preuented; wherevpon he debaucht the Infant E D. Iohn his ſonne in law, leauing the court much diſcontented. D. Iohn made ſome roads about Salamanca; wherefore the King being in the towne of Carrion, the weeke before Eaſter, whether the Earle D. Lope Diaz came well accompanied, he complained vnto him of the exceſſe which his ſonne in law D. Iohn had done, to whom the Earle anſwered proudly, that hee had not done any thing but what he had aduiſed him; and that if hee would heare the Infants reaſons, hee ſhould goe to Vailledolit, and hee would bring him to Cigales. This proud manner of ſpeech of the Earles, ſeemed ſtrange vnto the King, and increaſed his deſire to puniſh them both: Notwithſtanding he went to Vailledolit, and the Earle with his ſonne in law came to Cigales, not daring to come in the Kings preſence in any great towne. There the Deputies of either part did confer dayly, at a place called Loueruela, whereas theſe iarres were ſomewhat reconciled: wherevp- F on the King came towards the frontiers of Arragon, to treat with the King D. Alphonſo touching the deliuery of his Nephewes, the ſonnes of La Cerde, whereof hee was much ſollicited, euen by the Earle D. Lope Diaz.

Not-

A Notwithſtanding before the King D. Sancho could approch nere to Taraſſone, where the King of Arragon was, the Earle had preuented him, who hauing ſpoken with the King of Arragon, hee reported vnto his maiſter, that he found by the way, that the King of Arragon would not be pleaſed with this kinde of enterview, and therefore hee had no need to paſſe any farther. The Earle finding himſelfe ſomewhat croſt by the enterview of the King D. Sancho and him of Portugal, did alſo thinke that this would bee nothing fauorable vnto him.

Arragon.

6 As for D. Alphonſo of Arragon, whom we haue left carefull to execute the charge which the King his father had giuen him, to diſpoſſeſſe the King D. Iames his vncle of the Iſlands of Majorca and Minorca: after the conqueſt thereof hee had brought backe his
B victorious army to Valencià, and there was receiued and acknowledged for King by the Valentians. Yet he was admoniſhed by D. Bernard, William Entenza and Symon of Vrrea, Ambaſſadors for the Eſtates of Vrrea, to come ſpeedily to the aſſembly at Saragoſſa, where hauing ſworne and promiſed the obſeruation of the cuſtomes, rights and priuiledges of the country, and receiued the oth of fealty from the deputies, he might lawfully take vpon him the title of King of Arragon, the which (ſaid they) he might not vſe before this act and ceremony, according to the ancient cuſtomes of Arragon. The King hauing giuen them audience at Moruiedro, he anſwered them courteouſly, that he would repaire thether with ſpeed: and as for the royal title, he had held it reaſonable to take it, ſeeing he had beene ſo ſaluted by the Archbiſhop of Tarragone, and by the Cat-
C telans and Valentians. Being come to Saragoſſa, he tooke and receiued the oth, and was crowned by the Biſhop of Hueſco, in the abſence of the Archbiſhop of Tarragone, to whom (by the Popes decree) this office doth appertaine, where he proteſted that he held the realme as hereditary from his father, and was not bound to any. At this aſſembly of the Eſtates, which was in the yeere 1286. there grew great contention touching the reformation of the manners of courtiers, and the ordering of the Kings houſe, the noblemen and deputies of the Eſtates of Arragon maintayning that the knowledge thereof was incident to their charge; the King and his houſhold ſeruants on the other ſide denied that there was either law or cuſtome which tied the King or his followers to any ſuch ſubiection.

Reformation of the King of Arragons houſe belonged to the generall Eſtates.

D In the end it was concluded that the reformation of the court ſhould bee made by twelue of the principal families (which they cal in that country Meſnadas) the like number of Knights, foure Deputies of Saragoſſa, and one of either of the other cities the which ſhould giue their voices in that caſe. This vnion of Arragon obtained a decree, that the King ſhould haue certaine councellors choſen, that is, foure of the chiefe Noblemen, which were D. Pedro d' Aierbe the kings vncle, Pedro Cornel, Artal Alagon and Pedro Martines de Luna; foure knights of noble and ancient races, which were D. Fortun Sanches Vera, Symon Perez Salanoua, Symon Perez Vera, and Arnaud de Caſtro, and foure of his houſehold ſeruants: that is D. Gyles de Bedaure, Roderigo Sanches Pomar, Alphonſo de
E Caſtel nouo and Fernand Perez Pigna: Moreouer two knights for the realme of Valencia, two citizens of Sarragoſſa, and one of either of the other cities of Hueſca, of Taraſſone, Iaca, Barbaſtro, Calatajub, Turol and Daroca: with a condition that whilſt the King ſhould remaine in Arragon, Ribagorça or Valencia, two of the noblemen, two of his houſhold ſeruants, two Knights of Arragon, one of Valencia, and the foure Deputies of the realme of Arragon, ſhould follow and reſide in court, as councellors appointed by the vnion, the which by the mouth of D. Fortun, Sancho de Vera, Sancho Martines Lacunella, and the Deputies of Saragoſſa, Hueſca and Turol (who were ſent to that end) proteſted that if he did not receiue, obſerue and maintaine theſe orders, they would ſeize vpon his reuenues, and of all the fees, offices and dignities of ſuch noblemen as ſhould contradict them: thus were the Kings of Arragon intreated in thoſe times.

Moores expelled out of Minorca.

F This yeere the King reſtored D. Philip de Caſtro, ſonne to his vncle D. Fernand Sanches (who as we haue ſayd was caſt into the riuer of Singa) as wel to the poſſeſſion of the caſtle of Pomar, as to the reſt of his fathers patrimony: and for that there were ſome remainders of Moores which ſtood out in the Iſland of Minorca, the King ſoone after went thether with an army in perſon, and clenſed the whole country, hauing forced them they were tranſported into Affrike, by D. Raymond Marquet and Berenger Majol. In the meane time King D. Alphonſo did ſollicit the Pope by his Ambaſſadors to receiue him into fauour, which the French did hinder: for beſides the rights, pretended by Charles of Valois, and granted to him by the Pope, to the realme of Arragon, and lands anexed, which were interdict, there was moreouer, that not onely the two yong Princes D. Al-

alſo Charles, called the Limping, ſonne and heire to Charles of Aniou, King of Naples neſt ſolicitors, and taken armes, and euen at that inſtant Philip the faire did preſſe the Kings of Caſtille and Arragon, and in regard of Charles the Limping, Edward King of B England did labour to make a peace betwixt him and the Kings of Arragon and Sicile brethren. In the meane time there was continual warre in Italy, whether Robert Earle of Arthois had beene ſent, who with the aduiſe of a Cardinal the Popes Legat, and Mary Princeſſe of Salerne, wife vnto Charles, who was priſoner, gouerned the realme of Naples. They were then vpon termes of a good accord, when as theſe Gouernors hauing ſent a great army into Sicile, vnder the command of Renaud del Balſo, Earle of Auellin, tooke the towne of Cattanea; whereof king D. Alphonſo being aduertiſed, he ſent backe Roger de Loria Admiral of Sicile, to ſuccor and defend his brothers country. The Earle of Auellin hauing made this prize, hee ſent the galleys, which had tranſported his army, backe to Naples, to bring the reſt of his troupes which were yet on land: and at the ſame C inſtant, Guy of Montfort, Earle of Languillare, with the Earles of Boullen and Flanders, hauing leauied men in Tuſcany, were ready to imbarke vpon the bankes of Sienna, when as Roger de Loria the Admiral arriued in the Italian ſeas, who hauing deſcouered the fleet which went to tranſport the ſouldiars at Naples, hee purſued them, and tooke them eaſily, hauing none to make any defence, and ſoone after hee eſpied about ſixty gallies ſayling towards Sicile, which was the army of thoſe French Noblemen aboue named, which had imbarqued in Tuſcany, whoſe Admiral was called Arrighin, a Geneuois. Roger charged them courragiouſly, and put them to rout, without any great difficulty, for the ſouldiars in the French fleete could fight better at land then at ſea: the Commanders were taken, all which paied their ranſoms, except the Earle of Montfort. D who was detained priſoner, and there died.

Theſe two victories were the recouery of Cattanea the which was yeelded to the Arragonois, by the Earle of Auellin, who with his compagnions, returned with their bag and baggage to Naples. By this meanes the treaty of peace which Edward made was broken, but he deſiſted not, vntil he had drawne them to theſe conditions: That Charles ſhould be ſet at liberty, paying twenty thouſand, or (as ſome ſay) thirty thouſand markes of ſiluer for his ranſome. That he ſhould procure the Pope to inueſt King James in the realme of Naples, that he ſhould take away the Interdict, and abſolue the two brethren of Arragon, and that he ſhould be a meanes to make Charles Earle of Valois quit the in-tereſt he pretended in Catalogne, by vertue of a donation made vnto him by Pope Mar- E tin: for the execution whereof hee ſhould haue three yeeres time, and in caſe he could not performe them, hee ſhould returne againe to priſon: for aſſurance whereof, hee ſhould giue his three ſonnes, Lewis, Robert and John in hoſtage, with forty gentlemen of the county of Prouence. The which Charles hauing promiſed, and the hoſtages deli-uered, he was releaſed foure yeeres after his taking. He came into France, and labored in vaine with Charles of Valois, who would neuer relinguiſh the title hee had to Cattelogne. Pope Nicholas alſo would not yeeld vnto that which Charles had promiſed touching the realme of Sicile, the which hee ſayd was a fee belonging to the church, wherefore he paſt ſpeedily into Italy with good troupes of men, led by Emery of Narbone. Being in Tuſcany, he ſpent ſome time to fauour the Guelphes party, againſt the F Gibilins, the which were two frantike factions, afflicting Italy ſince the diſſention betwixt the Popes and Emperor Frederic, continued among the Italians without ſubiect or ſence, with horrible examples of Impiety and inhumanity. The French which delt in theſe quarrels, held the Guelphes faction.

Conditions of peace betwixt the King of Arragon and Naples priſoner.

Charles of Valois will not yeeld vp his right to Cattelogne.

Charles

A Charles beeing come to Rome, Pope Nicholas the fourth crowned him in the yeere of our Lord 1289. King of both Siciles, from the which he could not be diſſwaded: where- An. 1289.
with they Arragonois held themſelues much wronged, and fell to armes more violently then before. Suritez affirmes that this yeere King Charles the Limping came and preſented himſelfe armed betwixt the valley of Ionquera and the hill of Panizaçe, making a ſhew as it he came to yeeld himſelfe to the King of Arragon, according to the treaty, and that hee returned ſodainely to Perpignan. The Calabrois, neighbours to Sicile, were daily ſollicited to reuolt; the which the Inhabitants of the Cathenzan did, who gaue themſelues to King Iames: wherevpon king Charles beeing accompanied by the Earle of Artois, led an army thether, to ſuccor which place, king Iames beeing come with
B his Admiral, and hauing landed his men, hee was incountred and defeated by the French, and forced to ſaue himſelfe in his galleies, yet without any great loſſe; wherefore the Arragonois deſiring to diuert this ſiege, they ſailed towards Gayete, where hauing ſeized vpon a hill neere vnto it, they gaue many aſſaults, but without any effect. King Charles, and the Earle of Arthois, leauing ſufficient troupes to entertaine the ſiege of Cathenzan, marched towards Gayete, being reſolued to giue battaile to the Arragonois: but they kept themſelues from fighting, beeing lodged in a place of aduantage and neere vnto their galleys.

There was a mediation for a truce betwixt the two kings and the realmes of Sicile and Naples, the which king Charles yeelded vnto for fiue yeeres, againſt the aduice Truce for fiue yeeres betwixt the French and Arragonoiz.
of the Earle of Arthois, who held the victory in his hand, aſſuring himſelfe to force the
C enemy to fight: wherevpon hee grew much diſcontented, and leauing Italy, returned into France with his troupes; vpon this truce Cathenzan was yeelded. This firſt conqueſt which the kings of Arragon made out of Spaine, was the cauſe of great broyles, warre and ruines in Chriſtendome, for which they chiefely ſmarted, whereof the Popes were the ſubiect, as they ſtood well or ill affected to thoſe Princes, of whoſe miſeries, and of their ruines they were ſecure ſpectators, beeing defended from all daunger through the opinion of their holineſſe and authority.

At the death of Pope Martin, his ſucceſſour Honorius the fourth, had ſetled and confirmed D. Iames of Arragon, and abſolued the King D. Pedro, but Pope Nicholas the D fourth, malitiouſly and without any feare of the ſhedding of Chriſtians bloud, did kindle a new warre betwixt the French and Arragonois, whereas hee would not crowne Charles King of Naples alone, but of Naples and Sicile together. D. Iames of Arragon holding Sicile at that time, at his coronation he tooke the armes which the realme hath ſince carried, which are an Eagle ſable in a field argent, the which Manfroy was wont to beare, and the bends geules in a field Or of Bareelona.

8 The King of Caſtille being ſollicited, and much troubled to reſolue vpon the deli- caſtille.
uery of his Nephewes of Cerde, detained in Arragon, and to recompence them in ſuch ſort as his ſoueraignty might remaine entire and peceable to him and his ſucceſſours, hee ſent to that end Ambaſſadors to Philip the faire, King of France, beeing
E at Lions: but what they could not then effect by treaties and negotiations, occaſion did afterward bring to paſſe, for there happened a great exceſſe in the court of Caſtille, wherevpon enſued the deliuery of the Infantes of Cerde: the which notwithſtanding was as much diſpleaſing to the King of France, who had purſued it, as to him of Caſtille, who feared it, and auoided it all hee could. A moſt daungerous freedome for them that were deliuered, but of the reſtraint of their perſons, as ſhall appeere.

The King Don Sancho being at Alfaro, with the Queene his wife, Don Gonçalo Archbiſhop of Toledo, with many other Prelats and Noblemen of his realmes, hauing alwaies a deſire to reſtraine and puniſh the pride of the Earle Don Lope Diaz de Haro, F and of the Infant D. Iohn his ſonne in law, who were there preſent, hee ſayd vnto them, that if they would not remaine both priſoners, they ſhould deliuer vp the forts which Quarrels in court where D. Lope Diaz de Haro is ſlaine.
they held within the realm, whereat the Earl and D. Iohn grew into ſuch choller and rage, as beſide words of contempt which they vſed, they laied their hands vpon their ſwords before the King their Lord, threatning to kill them that ſhould offer to lay hands vpon them, and called to their friends for aide : but inſtantly all the Noblemen and Knights there preſent, drew their ſwords and ſlue the Earle vpon the place, whoſe right hand was cut off at the firſt blow (this was the reward for the ſeruice he had done in rayſing D. Sancho to the crowne) the Infant D. Iohn did hurt D. Sancho Martines de Leyua, and Gonçalo Gomes de Mancanedo, and made great reſiſtance, by reaſon hee was ſomewhat ſpared, for that he was the Kings brother : but when he ſaw his father in law ſlaine, hee beganne to flie for ſafety towards Queene Mary, who ſtaied the King (that purſued him with the reſt) from killing him with his owne hand. Beeing taken hee was put into a ſtraight priſon and fettered in the towne of Logrogno, from whence the King went with ſome troupes, to Treuigno and tooke it, and after that the caſtle of Haro. Queene Mary remayning at Saint Dominicke de la Calçada, ſhee was viſited by the widow of the Earle that was ſlaine, whom the King D. Sancho let vnderſtand, that her husbands raſhneſſe had brought him to that deſaſter, aduiſing her to perſwade D. Diego Lopes de Haro her ſonne to lay downe armes, and not to miniſter any further occaſion of trouble: that if he did containe himſelfe within the duty of a ſubiect, the King would forget what was paſt, and both cheriſh and honour him, as his predeceſſors had beene honoured. This Lady promiſed to doe her beſt endeauor for a peace, but ſhee did the contrary : for ſhe ceaſed not to incenſe her ſonne, who was full of rage and deſire of reuenge : ſo as hee retired into Nauarre, with his ſiſter Donna Maria Diaz, wife to the Infant D. Iohn, who was priſoner, where hauing left her, he paſt into Arragon to the King Don Alphonſo, whether alſo came Gaſton, Lord of Bearn, who was no leſſe deſirous to reuenge the death of the Earle his couſin. Theſe Noblemen wrought in ſuch ſort, as the King Don Alphonſo, ſet Don Alphonſo and Don Fernand, Infants of Cerde, at liberty, who had beene detained ten yeeres in the caſtle of Xatiua : and the King ſending for them to Iacca, hee cauſed D. Alphonſo the elder to take vpon him the title of Caſtille and Leon, to whom D. Diego Lopes de Haro did inſtantly doe homage, and acknowledged him for his ſoueraigne King.

The mother perſwads her ſonne to reuenge his fathers death.

King of Arragon ſets the Infants of Cerde at liberty.

D. Alphonſo de la Cerde ſaluted for King of Caſtille.

The King D. Sancho beeing aduertiſed of theſe things, was much diſcontented, and ſought to diſpoſſeſſe D. Diego Lopes of al his lands. Parting from Victoria, whereas the Queene was brought in bed of a ſonne, who was called D. Henry, hee came to Vrdugna, the which he tooke, and then he forced la Baſtida and Ocio in Rioje, where they had proclaimed D. Alphonſo de la Cerde. The King D. Sancho beeing in this perplexity, Ambaſſadors came vnto him from Philip King of France and of Nauarre, who concluded an enterview of the two Kings at Bayone. Thether alſo came Ambaſſadors from Iacob Aben Ioſeph King of Maroc, to renue the alliances paſt. D. Diego Lopes Gouernor generall of the Moores frontiers, brother to the Earle D. Lope Diaz, beeing aduertiſed of his death, beganne to grow fearefull, and to fortefie himſelfe within Carmone, and notwithſtanding all the promiſes and aſſurances, which the King D. Sancho could giue him, hee could not bee ſatisfied : ſo as hee was forced to paſſe into Arragon, where his Nephew was, who died there ſoone after his vncles arriuall : wherevpon the Eſtates of Biſcay, being without a Lord, fel into great combuſtions.

The King of Caſtille ſent Don Diego Lopes de Salcedo thether, who tooke all the caſtles and forts of the country, except the towre of Vnçuera, the which was ſo well defended by the Lord thereof, as all the batteries and aſſaults which Salcedo could giue, could not force it. The King D. Sancho beeing much perplexed at theſe broiles, came to Burgos, whether he cauſed the Infant D. Iohn to be brought and put into the caſtle, & being confident that he ſhould haue warre with Arragon, he ſought to fortefie himſelfe by Portugal, wherefore hauing ſent to intreat D. Denis his Nephew for an enterview, they met at Sabugal.

Portugal.

There D. Sancho demanded aide againſt the King of Arragon, and made a relation vnto the King of Portugal of all that had paſt betwixt him and his ſubiects in Caſtille. About that time the king D. Denis had by his wife D. Iſabel of Arragon one daughter, named D. Conſtance, who was afterwards married to the Infant D. Fernand of Caſtille. Afterwards the king D. Denis had by her the Infant D. Alphonſo, who was king of Portugal. Others adde a daughter named Iſabel.

Genealogy of Portugal.

The

A The warre which the Nauarrois had againſt them of Arragon, gaue ſome reſpight to that betwixt Arragon and Caſtille, for King Philip intertayning ſtrong garriſons of French in Nauarre during the pretenſions of Charles of Valois in Cattelogne, there was no truce could hold, but they were ſtil at blowes, the French and Nauarrois taking from the Arragonois the towne of Sauveterre, in the yeere 1289. The yeere following 1290. Queene Iane of France and of Nauarre was brought in bed of a ſonne, named Lewis, who was heire of both realmes, and ſurnamed Hutin. Nauarre. An. 1290.

This yeere was the entervew betwixt Philip King of France and D. Sancho of Caſtille at Bayone, little fauorable to the Infants of Cerde, for the King of France being iealous that they were aided and ſupported in their quarrels by the King of Arragon, whom hee B loued not, abandoned thē, and made a ſtrict league with him of Caſtille, yea in ſuch ſort, according to the Spaniſh Hiſtories, as to take away all occaſions of quarrell betwixt them he did againe renounce in fauour of D. Sancho, all the right hee had to the Realme of Caſtille. The King of Arragon deſirous to come to ſome accord with the French, imployed Edward King of England, who vſed great dilligence to reconcile them, as we will ſhew. After the conference of Bayone, the King D. Sancho returning by Guipuſcoa he granted priuiledges for the foundation of Tolouſe, Segure and Villefranche, townes in that country. Caſtille. Renunciation reiterated of the rights which the Kings of France comming from Saint Lewis haue to Caſtille.

10 During theſe broiles, the inhabitants of Badajos, by meanes of a quarrel betwixt two factions, reuolted againſt the King D. Sancho, and imbraced the party of D. Alphonſo C de la Cerde, who intituled himſelfe King of Caſtille. The Bejarans and Portugalois, factions among the inhabitants of Badajos, fel to great contention among themſelues, for that the Portugalois againſt all right had vſurped many poſſeſſions belonging to the Bejarans, through the fauour of the King D. Sancho: whereof many complaints beeing made by them that were diſpoſſeſt, the King commanded Iuſtice ſhould bee done them, and that they ſhould bee reſtored to their goods: the which beeing decreed, they that were in poſſeſſion would not obey: wherefore the Bajarans hauing taken armes, and ſlaine many of their aduerſaries, and chaſed the reſt out of the towne, they recouered their owne in this manner: but the exceſſe and violence which they vſed was ſuch, as D fearing to bee ſeuerely puniſhed, as they deſerued, they ſeized vpon the high towne, and beeing fortefied there, they proclaimed D. Alphonſo King of Caſtille and Leon. Tumult at Badaios.

In the beginning the King D. Sancho ſent the Maiſters of the Knights of Saint Iames, Calatraua and Alcantara, with the priors of Templers and Saint Iohn, who wrought in ſuch ſort as they retired the Bejarans from their folly, with aſſurance of their liues, but afterwards the King neglecting his faith promiſed by his Lieutenants, cauſed this people to be cruelly murthered, to the number of foure thouſand, ſparing neither women nor children, for the which he was iuſtly blamed.

There was alſo an other maſſacre at Talauera, for the like faction; proclayming Don Alphonſo de la Cerde for King of Caſtille, whereas one of the ports of the townes E is called at this day Quartos, for that there were aboue foure hundred of the chiefe inhabitants ſlaine there. The continuall griefe wherein hee was by reaſons of theſe difficulties, both at home and abroad, made him to commit theſe outrages, contrarie to all reaſon, the which was no ſigne of magnanimitie, beſides, that the furies (if wee may ſo ſay) by reaſon of his impietie and diſobedience towardes his father did purſue him. Cruelty of the King D. Sancho.

In the yeere of our Lord 1291. Queene Mary was brought in bed of her fourth ſonne, who was named D. Pedro, and the warre being now begonne with Arragon, the King D. Sancho came to Cuenca, and ſent good troupes againſt D. Iohn Nugnes de Lara, who ſpoiled the countries of Cuenca and Alarcon, who were defeated, and many Enſignes and Guidons carried to Valencia, whereas the king of Arragon and D. Diego Lopes de Ha- F ro were: theſe with other diſcontents made the King to fall into a double Quartane, which brought him in danger of his life. In the meane time the King of Arragon, D. Diego Lopes and D. Iohn Nugnes beeing returned to Albarrazin, they did ouerrunne the territories of Molina, Siguença, Atienca, Berlanga and Almacan, where they committed great ſpoiles, and carried away a great booty finding no reſiſtance. D. Iohn An. 1291.

Nugnes was fed with hope to recouer Albarrazin. The Queene who was come to Cuenca, to ſee the King her husband ſicke, wrought meanes to winne Don Iohn Nugnes de Lara, whom they had often attempted to draw vnto the Kings ſeruice, but hee truſted him not, but now hee was perſwaded, vpon a promiſe to giue in marriage to his ſonne, called alſo D. Iohn Nugnes, D. Iſabella, the heire of Molina, and the Queenes Neece, the which was performed: but hauing his head euer fraught with iealouſie and diſtruſt, hee was ſo eaſily induced to beleeue any aduertiſment, as hee was ſtill ready to diſlodge: ſo as the King beeing at Palença, and diſcontented with D. Nugnes carriage, beganne alſo to diſtruſt him. And for that hee had need of captaines, hee drew the Infant Don Iohn his brother out of priſon, in the yeere of our Lord 1291. to imploy him againſt his rebels, hauing cauſed him to take a new oth, to be faithfull vnto him, and to his ſonne D. Fernand, whoſe hands hee cauſed them all to kiſſe, as to the heire of the crowne. From Palença hee went in pilgrimage to Saint Iames, and by the way reduced vnder his obedience D. Iohn Alphonſo d' Albuquerque, a knight of great authority in Gallicia, who had beene wonne by D. Iohn Nugnes. At his returne to Vailledolit, he found that his ſecond ſonne D. Alphonſo was dead.

Arragon.

The ſame yeere a peace was concluded betwixt the Kings of France, Naples and Arragon, the Ambaſſadors of theſe Princes being aſſembled with the Popes Noncio at Taraſcon, at the inſtance of Edward King of England. For the King of Arragon came D. Nugnes Mataplane Biſhop of Sarragoſſa, Raymond Angleſol, Berenger Puchuert, William Lunfort, and Bernard William Pinelio all Lawiers, who treated and agreed vpon theſe conditions. That the donation, made by Pope Martin to Charles of Valois, of the realme of Arragon and the appurtenances, ſhould bee voide and of no force, paying a tribut of thirty ounces of gold yeerely to the Church of Rome. That the Iſland of Majorca ſhould bee reſtored to the lawfull Lord, vpon condition that hee ſhould acknowledge the King of Arragon for his ſoueraigne. That the Arragonois ſhould depart out of the Iſland of Sicile, and leaue the free poſſeſſion vnto Charles King of Naples. That D. Alphonſo King of Arragon ſhould bee at Rome on Whitſonday that preſent yeere, & lead an army againſt the Infidels. That he ſhould perſwade his brother D. Iames, and his mother D. Conſtance, to quit the realm of Sicile, or elſe to make war againſt them.

Peace betwixt France and Arragon.

Theſe were the principall Articles of this peace the which the Arragonois held infamous, accuſing their King of impiety towards his mother, and treaſon to his brother: yet it was concluded and ſigned. And for the confirmation thereof, the biſhop of Sarragoſſa and Berenger Puchuert went to Rome. Some doubt whether the full concluſion thereof were made during the life of King D. Alphonſo, or at the entrance of the King D. Iames: for D. Alphonſo died about this treaty, as hee made preparation to marry the daughter of Edward King of England, called Leonora: yet it is likely this peace was made in the life time of King D. Alphonſo, yea ſome Authors affirme, that King Charles the Limping and he met in the valley of Iunquera, either of them beeing accompanied with twelue gentlemen onely, who carried no other armes then their ſwords, and that there they ratefied and ſigned this accord: as for the effects and execution thereof, it is credible they followed in the time of his ſucceſſor. King D. Alphonſo died in the ſeuen & twentith yeere of his age, hauing raigned fiue yeeres and ſeuen monthes. Being nere his end he would bee attired in the habit of Saint Francis, for an opinion which raigned then, that there conſiſted ſome great vertue in that weed, and ſo hee was carried to the conuent of Franciſcans at Barcelona.

Moores.

About that time the King of Granado, had conference with the gouernor of the frontier of Caſtille, for the King D. Sancho being called D. Fernand Perez Ponce de Leon, and renued the treaty and league with Caſtille, for the confirmation whereof there was a Mooriſh knight ſent to the King to Burgos. Ioſeph Aben Iacob had ſucceeded his father Iacob Aben Ioſeph, in the realme of Maroc, ſince the yeere of our Lord 1285. he hauing raigned fiue and twenty yeeres, with the reputation of a generous Prince, and a good Iuſticer. This yeere he paſt into Spaine, and came to beſiege Bejar, but hee could not take it, wherefore he returned into Affrike with little honour. Meaning to returne ſome time after into Spaine with greater forces, he could not paſſe, beeing ſtayed by the ſicke-

A of Caſtille, which was great and mighty, for feare whereof he ſtayed vpon the bankes of Tanger, for Benoiſt Zachary, Admiral of Caſtille, had taken thirteene galleys from him: by fauour of which victory the King D. Sancho marcht into Andalouſia, to make an enterpriſe vpon Tariffe.

By the way he conferred with D. Denis King of Portugal, made a new league with him, and a future marriage was concluded betwixt D. Fernand of Caſtille and D. Conſtance of Portugal, who were both very young. And for the fulfilling of all promiſes in due time, there were townes and caſtles deliuered in pawne of either ſide, yet the King D. Sancho had no aide from him of Portugal, in this expedition. A little before a marriage had beene treated of by Ambaſſadors, betwixt Don Iames the new King of Arragon, and the Infant D. Iſabel of Caſtille, daughter to D. Sancho, beeing onely nine yeeres old. For confirmation whereof, pacification of the troubles, and other alliances, the two Kings of Caſtille and Arragon, met together in Calatajub, in the yeere of our Lord 1292. but the marriage tooke no effect. Tariffe taken by the Caſtillans. An. 1292.

For as much as D. Iohn Nugnes de Lara the elder, continued ſtill to trouble the realm, the King D. Sancho hauing taken Canette and Moya from him, hee forced him to retire into France, whether Ambaſſadors were ſent ſoone after, to renue the league with King Philip, Don Sancho fearing that by ſome ſiniſter reports hee might bee diuer-

C ted from his friendſhip, Don Iohn Nugnes beeing abſent, Don Iſabel of Molina his daughter in law, died without any children, whoſe inheritance fell to the Queene Donna Maria her aunt. The Infant D. Iohn carrying ſtill a hatred in heart againſt the King his brother, rebelled againe, ioyning with Don Iohn Nugnes de Lara the younger; and drawing vnto his partie many Knights, but the King purſued them in ſuch ſort, as D. Iohn de Lara was forced to yeeld vnto his mercy, and the Infant to flie into Portugal.

11 About that time D. Alphonſo Perez de Guzman liued in great reputation in Spaine, beeing a wiſe and valiant Knight, who had long ſerued the Miralmumin Aben Ia-

D cob of Maroc and his father, leading their armies in qualitie of Lieutenant generall in the warres which they had againſt the other Moores of Affrike, where hee had wonne honour and great riches, with the which being returned into Spaine he purchaſed much land and great Seigneuries. This knight and Donna Maria Alonço Cornel gaue beginning to the family of the Dukes of Medina Sidonia, famous in our time in Spaine, the Lords whereof in the beginning intituled themſelues Earles of Niebla. To this D. Alphonſo Perez de Guzman the King D. Sancho gaue the gouernment of Tariffe, the which hee promiſed to keepe ſafely with leſſe charge by two third parts then the Maiſter of the Calatraua had done. The Earle Don Iohn Nugnes de Lara hauing contin- Beginning of the houſe of Guzman and Dukes of Medina Sidonia.

The King Don Sancho beeing aduertiſed that Mahumet Mir Almus Lemi King of Granado was like to make ſome attempt, hee ſent the Earle Don Iohn Nugnes de Lara, with Don Iohn Nugnes his ſonne, and Don Nugno Gonçales vnto the fronter. The Earle of Lara the father beeing come to Cordoua died. An. 1293.

F This motion of the Granadin Moores was but an idle brute, wherefore the troupes returned. And for that Don Denis King of Portugall did receiue the Infant Don Iohn of Caſtille and the other rebelles, the King D. Sancho ſent him word, that according to their capitulations, hee could not giue any retreat vnto his enemies, and therefore he intreated him to cauſe them to depart his Countrie with all ſpeed, the which he did.

The Infant D. Iohn going to ſea, meaning to paſſe into France, was driuen by a ſtorme A to Tanger, from whence hee went to kiſſe the hands of the Miralmumin Aben Iacob, who entertained him courteouſly, and hauing conferred with him of the affaires of Spaine, knowing that he was deſirous to annoy the King of Caſtille his brother, hee offred him fiue thouſand horſe to make the enterpriſe of Tariffe, the which D. Iohn did willingly accept, returned into Spaine, and beſieged Tariffe, thinking to finde it vnfurniſhed, but D. Alphonſo Perez de Guzman had wiſely prouided, and defended it valiantly. It is not knowne by what accident a ſonne of D. Alphonſo Perez was fallne into the Moores hands: but ſome Authors write that D. Iohn ſeeing there was no meanes to take this place by force, hauing demaunded a parle, hee led this child vnto the ditch, and told the father, who was vpon the walles, that if hee did not deliuer the fort, hee B would cut his ſonnes throat: wherevnto D. Alphonſo anſwered, that the towne was the Kings, who had giuen it him to keepe, and that it was his duety to defend it: as for his ſonne, hee might doe what hee pleaſed, adding moreouer, that to let him vnderſtand that he ment not to preferre the loue of his houſe, before that of his Prince, and the crowne of Caſtille, hee would rather giue a knife, if hee needed one, and at the ſame inſtant threw him his ſword from the walles, and ſo retired to his lodging.

Act of great conſtancy of D Alphonſo Perez de Guzman.

The Infant Don Iohn incenſed at this diſdainefull anſwere, preſently cauſed this poore Innocents head to bee cut off: at which ſpectacle the ſouldiers which were vpon the walles gaue a great ſhout, the which was heard by Don Alphonſo Perez, beeing at the table with his wife: whereat beeing mooued, hee tooke his armes, and commaunded them to follow him. C

Cruelty of D. Iohn of Caſtille.

Beeing come to the place where they had made this noyſe, hee beganne to incourrage the ſouldiers, ſaying that hee was there to ſuccour them, if they were preſt, thinking it was ſome aſſault which the enemie gaue vnto the towne: but the ſouldiers tould him that no man preſt them, and reported vnto him the cruelty which they had ſeene executed vpon his onely ſonne: If it bee no other thing, ſayd Don Alphonſo, bee carefull of your gard, and ſo returned without any outward ſhew of alteration, and without ſpeaking any thing to his wife, hee ſat downe at the table with her. This is honoured amongſt the Spaniards for one of the moſt generous acts in this houſe of Guzman that hath beene ſeene in Spaine. The Moores and their captaine Don Iohn, ſeeing that they had to deale with reſolute men, rayſed their ſiege, and returned into Affrike. D Heerevpon the Miralmumin deliuered vp Algezire to the King of Granado, for that the entertayning of ſo great a garriſon was both chargeable and preiudiciall vnto him. Thus the Kings of Maroc were diſpoſſeſſed of all they held on this ſide the ſea.

Soone after there arriued in Spaine the Infant Don Henry, ſonne to the King Don Fernand the third, and vncle to this King D. Sancho, beeing freed from a long impriſonment with the French at Naples. Hee was well receiued, and did accompany the King into Biſcay, whereas D. Diego Lopes Diaz, being come out of Arragon, had cauſed ſome troubles, the which were pacefied by the Kings preſence. The country did then belong vnto D. Maria Lope de Haro, wife vnto the Infant D. Iohn, who was baniſhed out E of Caſtille. The King being returned to Vailledolit, and from thence to Alcala de Henares, he fell ſicke, which made him to diſpoſe of the affaires of his realme: hee left Don Fernand his ſonne and ſucceſſor, vnder the gouernment of the Queene Donna Maria, to whom hee would haue all the Noblemen which held the chiefe dignities, and others which had charges within the realme, ſweare: wherevnto hauing obeyed in his preſence, he cauſed himſelfe to be carried to Madrid, and from thence to Toledo, where hee died in the yeere of our Lord 1295. hauing raigned eleuen yeeres, and was buried in the great church of that city.

Whileſt theſe things paſt in Caſtille, the realme of Nauarre was gouerned in the name of King Philip and of the widowe D. Iane, by a French Knight called Hughe F of Conſians, after the accuſtomed manner, notwithſtanding the great Eſtates of the Realme, gouernments and other charges, were for the moſt part giuen to the Nauarrois, all which were entertained with the Kings money, and then they made their accompts by Liures, Solz, and Deniers, after the manner of France. Aboue all things the fronters towards Arragon were carefully garded, in which country in the latter wars they had made a great breach, and taken many places which they held by the treatie of Taraſcon, or at the leaſt in making a peace there was no mention made of yeelding them vp. Diego Sanches de Garriz beeing Merino or Prouoſt of Pampelone, the towne was ſet on fire in the night by Symon of Ardaiz, Michel of Alçanegui, and Garci-Sanches, men of baſe condition, deſirous to do ill, wherewith many houſes were burnt: theſe men beeing taken, were hanged. The Gouernor did fortifie many places and houſes within the realm, eſpecially vpon the fronters, and cauſed the Engliſh to diſlodge out of the country, about the yeare 1295. by reaſon of the ciuill warres betwixt the kings of France and England: vnto that time continued the League betwixt France, Nauarre, and Caſtile, which was vnto the deceaſe of the king D. Sancho: but then by reaſon of the factions which were reuiued betwixt his children and them of Cerdes, all leagues were broken.

D. Iames the 2. of that name, 11. king of Arragon.

12 IN Arragon preſently after the death of King D. Alphonſo, D. Pedro his brother aſſembled the Noblemen and Deputies of the Townes at Sarragoſſa, to conſult leaſt the Realme ſhould receiue ſome preiudice, during the abſence of the king Don Iames his elder brother: thither came Don Symon of Vrrea, Bernard William Entenza, Pedro Cornes, Philippes Fernandes de Caſtro, Athon de Foßes, Iohn Ximenes of Vrrea, Sancho Antillas, Artal and Blaſco of Alagon breethren, Lope Ference, Pedro Martines, Roderigo Ximenes de Luna, Gombald Entenza and others. The king beeing arriued at Sarragoſſa, hee was there receiued and crowned, hauing ſworne and promiſed the obſeruation of the rights and priuiledges of the Country: proteſting that he tooke poſſeſſion of his fathers kingdome, belonging vnto him by right, as the elder, and not as an increaſe by reaſon of his brothers death, the which he declared, to the end he might keepe his intereſt to the Realme of Sicile, againſt his brother Don Frederick, who murmured, that the intention of the deceaſed king was to leaue him this Iland for his portion, being diſcontented at the peace concluded with Charles king of Naples and the French: the which D. Iames deſired might take place, confirming it as ſoone as he came to the crowne, ſeeking by all means to haue peace with the French, but eſpecially with the Sea of Rome, held at that time by Boniface the 8. who then did much fauour the French king.

Arragon.

Peace confirmed betwixt the French & Arragonois.

13 By the meanes of Pope Boniface the eight a finall accord was made, about the coming of Don Iames to the Crowne of Arragon, with Charles king of Naples, the King Don Iames promiſing to deliuer his children, who were detayned in Cattelogne for Hoſtages: and moreouer to marry one of his daughters called Blanche, and to quit him the Realme of Sicile, which was but a charge or loſſe to Arragon. The Pope and king Charles for their parts, promiſed to procure Charles of Vallois to relinquiſh the right which hee might pretend in Cattelogne, by the Inueſtiture made vnto him by Pope Martin the 4. for the accompliſhing of which accord King Charles ſtayed ſome time in France, and alſo by Commiſſion from the ſame Pope to mediate a peace betwixt France and England: but returning into Italy, and thinking to haue free poſſeſſion of Italy, hee found that Don Frederick, brother to the king Don Iames of Arragon, had ſeazed thereon, by reaſon whereof there began a more violent warre then before. The Pope hauing cited the two breethren of Arragon, Don Iames came to Rome, and purged himſelfe by oath, that he was ignorant of his brothers enterpriſe, offering to king Charles (who was preſent) ayde to recouer the Iland: whereuppon they continued friends. Thither alſo came queene Conſtance, widow to Don Pedro, and Roger de Loria the Admirall, who were much honored by king Charles, intertayning Roger into his ſeruice.

14 The king D. Iames was made Standard-bearer of the Church by the Pope, who moreouer did inueſt him in the Ilands of Corſica and Sardinia, which were held by the Piſans

Piſans and Geneuois: vpon condition, that he ſhould conquer them by armes at his own charge, and a certaine rent, which (ſome ſay) was two thouſand markes of ſiluer to the Church of Rome, with other burthenſome conditions. According to the offer which the king of Arragon had made vnto king Charles, he gaue him thirty gallies, with the which hauing ioyned his fleet of forty gallies, whereof Roger de Loria was Admirall, they ſayled all towards Sicile, and hauing incountred D. Frederick with 60. gallies, commanded by Frederick d'Oria a Geneuois, they gaue them battell, put them to route, took 22. gallies, and about 6000. priſoners, and if the Cattelans, who tooke part with Charles, had not made way, to giue D. Frederick meanes to eſcape, he had beene alſo taken. Roger de Loria was depriued of his goods in the Iland of Sicile, and condemned as guilty of high treaſon. Don Frederick ſaued himſelfe in Cattelogne, where he did ſomewhat repaire his forces, and then returned to Meſſina. There hee found that the Sicilians had had their reuenge vpon the French, for they had fought with them, and taken Iohn de Loria, nephew to Roger, with ſixteene gallies, and had cut off his head as a rebell, which cauſed Roger to ſhew himſelfe cruell vnto his priſoners. Afterwards king Charles hauing ſent Robert his third ſonne with commiſſion into the Iland, and hauing taken Cattanea, as he reſolued to go and meet with a fleete of 60. Gallies, which Philip Prince of Tarentum, his brother did leade the Sicilians, vnderſtanding that Roberts gallies were in the port of Cattanea; vnmanned, went and aſſayled them, tooke ſome, and diſperſt the reſt in the view of Philip, againſt whom hauing directed their prowes, they alſo gaue battel to his 60. gallies, whom they put to route, tooke him priſoner, and carried him to Palermo: wherfore Rebert their king after theſe two routes, thinking that he ſhould not be ſafe in Sicile, abandoned Cattanea, and returned to Naples. Whileſt theſe contended for Sicile, the King D. Iames did quietly enioy his Eſtates of Arragon, hauing in the yeare 1295. made a new league with the Kings of France, Portugal, and Granado, againſt the new King of Caſtile in fauour of D. Alphonſo de la Cerde, the titularie king of that Realme.

Caſtile.

15 IT is a ſcourge greatly to be feared, with the which God (beeing diſpleaſed) doth puniſh nations, when he giues them children for Princes, and women for Gouernors: for the young age and weake ſexe beeing alwaies little reſpected, and theſe inſtruments eaſie to gouerne by flatterers, and to be terrified by the violent, wee haue alwaies ſeene in ſuch raignes, Maieſtie in contempt, Iuſtice troden vnder foot, the people oppreſt, the good recoyled, Truth baniſhed, and the Country in prey to their neighbors. D. Fernand of Caſtile being a child, the yeare 1295. when his father D. Sancho dyed, the gouernment of him, and of his Realme by the will of the deceaſed King, ſhould remaine in the hands of the Queene D. Mary his mother. A little before D. Henry his great vncle was come into Spaine, who hauing beene chaſed out of the country for his turbulent ſpirit, during the raigne of Don Fernand the third had runne through many countries, both Chriſtians and Infidels, and tryed diuers conditions: ſo as after many yeares he brought backe into Spaine the ſame qualities which had expelled him, yea far worſe: by whoſe aduice the Queene was forced to gouerne her ſelfe, ſo as in effect he was Regent himſelfe, which the Earle D. Iohn Nugnes de Lara, and his brother D. Nugno Gonçales did enuie. Beſides the Noblemen who during the life of the deceaſed king were out of the Realme, hoping in this new raigne to be reſtored, through the fauour of their partiſans and friends, were now returned, which did not a little trouble the Queene mother, who for theſe conſiderations was forced to giue D. Henry great authority againſt her will. D. Diego Lope Diaz de Haro had vſurped the authoritie in the ancient patrimonie of his houſe of Biſcay, and there were newes that the Infant D. Iohn came out of Affricke, to contend for the kingdome: Beſides, that on the other ſide D. Alphonſo de la Cerde, fauoured by the forces of Arragon, France, and Nauarre, carried himſelfe openly for king of Caſtile.

D. Alphonſo de la Cerda and D. Iohn of Caſtile contend for the realme.

Not-

A Notwithſtanding all theſe croſſes and dangers, this Princeſſe who was of a great courage, cauſed Don Fernand her ſonne to be proclaimed and crowned King of Caſtile, Leon, and other lands depending in the citty of Toledo, writing vnto the Noblemen and Prouinces to acknowledge and receiue him: and to the end they ſhould doe it the more willingly, ſhe did releaſe them of a tribute called Sica, which the deceaſed king, beeing preſt with great neceſſitie, had impoſed. In the beginning no man refuſed it, but the Noblemen mentioned bred ſuch a confuſion, as ſhe had almoſt ſunke vnder the burthen. D. Henry to ſettle his authoritie of Regent, which he ſayd did belong vnto him, ſtirred vp the townes of Caſtile to open rebellion, ſo as the Queene mother and her ſonne being come to Vailledolit, where ſhe had called an aſſembly of the Eſtates, they ſhut the gates
B againſt them, and cauſed them to ſtay without vntill night: neither would they then ſuffer ſuch as had accompanied them to enter, but onely ſhe, her ſonne, their Officers and houſhold ſeruants. Don Henry came thither, who hauing ſcarce ſaluted the Queene, he began to perſwade her to end this dangerous warre, and to diſperſe the conſpiracie of ſo many Princes againſt her and her ſonne by her marriage with Don Pedro of Arragon, to whome this Princeſſe gaue a courragious and ſharpe anſwer, reiecting this marriage as vnfit and pernitious.

Troubles raiſed by D. Henry

The Infant Don Iohn the Kings vncle, beeing arriued in Granado, came to Extremadura, and ſeazed vpon the towne of Pont, or Alcantara, and then entred into Portugal, where by the fauor of the King Don Denis, he tooke vppon him the title of King of Ca-
C ſtile, both of them writing to the Inhabitants of the frontier, that they ſhould hold him for their Prince and Soueraigne Lord: and Don Denis not content herewith, ſent to proclaime warre againſt the Queene D. Maria, and Don Henry. The wiſe Queene mother withſtood all theſe dangers, and preuented them as well as ſhe could, yeelding to the malice of the time, reſiſting ſome, and giuing contentment to others, with the leaſt preiudice ſhe could.

The king of Portugall came to Cite Roderigo, whereas the afflicted Queene mother with her ſonne and puple were, and there they did in ſome ſort renew their old allyances: they impoſed ſilence to the Infant Don Iohn, who ſeemed to relinquiſh: and they did a-D gaine conclude a future marriage betwixt the king Don Fernand, and D. Conſtance Infanta of Portugal. To theſe inteſtine troubles, were added the enterpriſes of the Nauarrois and Arragonois, who led by Alphonſo de la Cerde, calling himſelfe King of Caſtile, entred the country by S. Eſteuan de Gormas, and paſſing vnto Leon, hee was there receiued without any difficultie. There Don Iohn, who was rebelled againe, cauſed himſelfe to be crowned king of Leon, diuiding betwixt them the Realmes of Spaine: ſo as Don Alphonſo ſhould be king of Caſtile, Toledo, Cordoua, Murcia, and Iaen: and the Infant Don Iohn of Leon, Gallicia, Extremadura and Seuile. Into this confederacie entred the Kings of Arragon, Portugal, Granado, and the Queene D. Violant, widow to the king Don Alphonſo, with whom there alſo ioyned Philip of France and Nauarre, with many E Noblemen and Knights of the Countrie: in all whoſe names Don Iames, king of Arragon, had ſent to proclaime warre againſt the Queene D. Maria and her ſonne Don Fernand, in the yeare 1269. ſo as there was a pittifull reuolt in all parts of Spaine: theſe afflicted Princes, mother and ſonne, hauing no entrance into any towne without great difficultie. After this inuaſion of Leon, the Nauarrois and Arragonois led by D. Alphonſo, entred into Sahagun, where they crowned him king of Caſtile, and tooke Villagarcia, Tordeſillas, Medina del Rioſecco, la Mota, Villa Fafila, with many other places and forts. Notwithſtanding beeing at the ſeege of Maiorga, a place diſtant fiue leagues from Sahagun, he continued there three moneths, and finding no man to make reſiſtance, God ſhewed his power, for the plague falling in the Nauarrois and the Arragonois Campe, they were forced to rayſe their ſeege, and make a truce with the Queene widow to return
F home, who beeing oppreſt with infinit miſeries, without counſell, ayde, or ſupport, not onely made a truce, but alſo ſent them linnen, carpets, and ſuch like things, to the end they might carry away the bodies of many Noblemen and Knights which were dead of this contagion, the more honorably, among the which were the Infant D. Pedro of Arragon, Don Symon of Vrrea, and Raymond Angleſol Arragonois, giuing commandement that that they ſhould ſuffer them to cary them away without any let or hinderance. Thus ſome retired into Nauarre, and others into Arragon. The king D. Iames on the other ſide, being entred by the fronters of Murcia, had conquered the greateſt part of that kingdome. Hee of Portugal, notwithſtanding the conference and league made at Cite Roderigo, ſhewed himſelfe in armes vpon the fronter, and had ſpoiled the countrie vnto Simanca, and neere to Vailledolit; where beeing aduertiſed of the Nauarrois retreat, hee returned alſo, hauing taken moſt of the places of Alfajares and Sabugal, with ſome others about thoſe quarters: but the king of Granado thinking to effect ſome great matter in Andaluſia, was repulſed by D. Alphonſo Perez de Guzman Gouernor of that Prouince.

Inuaſion of Caſtile by the king of Granado.

16 During theſe warres, many Iewes mooued with feare more then with deuotion, turned to the Chriſtian Religion in Spaine, where they had dwellings & Synagogues almoſt in all the good townes. The occaſion was, that in the citty of Auila, there roſe vp a certaine man of the Iewiſh nation, who tearmed himſelfe a Prophet; with whom another of the town of Aillon, thruſt on with the like ſpirit, did ioyne: who telling of many ſecret reuelations, propheſied vnto the Iewes that the time of their deliuerance did approch. The authority of theſe two perſonages, well knowne, was not little among them, and therefore they were eaſily credited; and the rather, for that they did accompany their preachings and diſcourſes, with modeſtie, grauitie, and holineſſe in their outward behauiour: ſo as theſe newes running throughout all Spaine, the people gaue themſelues to prayers, faſting, almes, and all other commendable good workes, attending the day of their redemption, the which was foretold them by theſe Prophets, and appointed the laſt day of the fourth moneth: on the which (ſayd they) ſhould appeare many ſignes in heauen, with a loud ſound of a trumpet. Thus hauing paſt the time in great repentance, feare and terrour, vnto that day, they were throughout all the townes, earely in the morning, all attired in white before their Synagogues, as they are accuſtomed to do the day of their expiation, to pray vnto God to ſee thoſe celeſtiall ſignes, and to receiue their Meſſias: but ſeeing nothing, they returned to their houſes, whither beeing come, as they ſay, there appeared many croſſes on the walles, and vpon their garments; whereof ſome made good vſe, thinking it came from our Sauiour Ieſus Chriſt, who reproued their hardnes of heart: and therefore acknowleeging the error wherein they had liued, receiued the holy baptiſme; among the which was a great Phiſition called Alphonſo, who did afterwards write againſt the Iewes obſtinacie. Others perſiſting in their impietie, did beleeue that theſe croſſes were illuſions of the diuell to deceiue them.

The ſtorme wherewith Caſtile had beene beaten from Nauarre, Arragon, Portugal, Granado, and her owne rebels, beeing ſomewhat pacified, the Queene-mother ledde an armie into the country of Leon, whereas the Infant D. Iohn raigned, and beſeeged Paredez: and on the other ſide D. Henry went to the fronters of Granado, where hee was defeated and put to flight, and without the ſpeedie aſſiſtance of Alphonſo Perez de Guzman, he had beene taken. This loſſe which did much preiudice the Realme of Caſtile was accompanied with combuſtions and practiſes, which Don Henry made, to the hurt of the king Don Fernand, in the citty of Toledo, and the Dioceſſe of Auila and Segobia, where hauing gathered ſome troupes together, he marched to the campe before Paredez, and wrought ſo, as he made them raiſe the ſeege, vnder colour of holding a Parlament which was called at Vailledolit: and in the meane time he ſought vnderhand to corrupt the Deputies of townes and commonalties, and of the other orders of the countrie, to the preiudice of Don Fernand. The Queene D. Maria preuented all theſe diſorders, which were not hidden from her, but with great paine, ſeeking to content Don Henry. During theſe garboiles, they had newes, that the Nauarrois breaking the truce, had ſeazed vppon the Iuiſuerie of the cittie of Nagera, a place ſtrong by nature, the which they fortified, ſaying, that they held it in the name of the Infant Don Alphonſo de la Cerde, whome they called king of Caſtile, and as they would haue gone on along the riuer of Oja, they were repulſed by Don Iohn Alphonſo de Haro, who beſeeged them in the Iuiſuerie, and preſt them in ſuch ſort, as they were forced to leaue it, and to yeeld: this was in the yeare 1297. when as the kingdome of Nauar was gouerned in the name of the King and Queene of France by Alphonſo de Ronay.

Arragon.

A At which time Don I*ames* king of Arragon was in Italy, where the peace made in the yeare 1295. betwixt him, the king of Naples, and the French king, was renewed and confirmed in the towne of Anania, in the preſence of Pope Boniface, and the better to confirme the friendſhip betwixt theſe Princes, the king of Nauarre yeelded vp the townes of Lerda, Vlfirera and Sauueterre vnto the king Don I*ames*, beeing taken from the Crowne of Arragon: ſo as for this cauſe, the peace and amity betwixt Nauarre and Arragon was firme and vnited againſt Caſtile. By theſe treaties the fort of Albarazin was yeelded vppe to D. I*ohn de Lara*, to entertaine him, and was taken from D. F*ernand* baſtard brother to the king Don I*ames*, as if it had beene vniuſtly taken from the father of Don I*ohn*, who did homage to the king of Arragon.

Caſtile.

B The widow Queene of Caſtile ſeeking by all meanes to preſerue her ſonnes Realme from ſo many imminent dangers, renewed againe the treatie of mariage betwixt him and the Infanta D. Conſtance of Portugal, in the towne of Alcaniz, whether the Infanta was brought by the king her father, and accorded for a future ſpouſe vnto the young king D. F*ernand*, and to make a more ſtrict League of friendſhip, the King D. Denis concluded a marriage betwixt D. Beatrix Infanta of Caſtile, and his eldeſt ſonne D. Alphonſo, who was then but eight yeares old. Theſe marriages were made with great diſaduantage for the king of Caſtile, for the conuentions made in conſideration thereof, were theſe. That the king of Portugal ſhould hold in pawne Oliuencia, Conguela, Campo Moya, and S. Felix de los Gallegos, places belonging to the Crowne of Caſtile. Then did the king D. Denis renounce the league which he had with the Infant Don I*ohn*, who raigned in Leon, and gaue vnto the widow-Queene three hundred horſe to go againſt him, but they returned ſoone after, hauing not done any thing. The Infant Don Alphonſo de la Cerde on the other ſide ſeazed on the towne of Almaçan, and the troupes of Don I*ohn Nugnes*, and of the Infant Don I*ohn* had almoſt ſurprized Siguença; who finding themſelues in great want of ſiluer, coyned great ſtore of falſe money, vnder the ſtampe of the king Don F*ernand*, and did many other acts which were not commendable, the which neceſſitie, and ambitious obſtinacy do force men vnto: ſo as D. Denis king of Portugal, at the inſtance of the widow and the young King, entred into Caſtile by Cite Roderigo, in ſhew to make warre againſt the Rebels, but it was all counterfeit: for the effects did ſhew he came more to fauour them then otherwiſe: whatſoeuer it were, hee did no act of an enemy againſt them, but propounded ſome conditions of peace, fauourable for them; beeing of opinion, that to retire the Infant Don I*ohn* from his purſute, and to draw him to the king Don F*ernands* ſeruice, they ſhould grant the Realme of Gallicia to him and his for euer, and that of Leon for his life time; the which beeing diſliked by the Counceil of Caſtile, the king of Portugal grew thereat diſcontent, and ſo returned into his countrie: after which the Rebels tooke heart, and it was the cauſe of a new reuolt of many knights and townes, and proteſtations of others to do the like, if they did not what they demanded: wherefore the Queene D. Maria and her Councell, were forced to yeeld to many vnworthy things, and was rather gouerned with her ſonne and her Councell, by her ſubiects, then ſhe did gouerne them.

Nauarre.

To this was added a new care which came from Nauarre, where as Alphonſo de Roleed was Gouernor in the yeare 1300. who ſent an Ambaſſador into Caſtile, in the name of king Philip the Faire, and D. Ieanne his wife, Queene proprietarie of Nauarre, to demand the lands and ancient patrimonie of the Crowne of Nauarre, vſurped by the precedent kings of Caſtile, extending from the limits which were then betwixt the two kingdoms, vnto Atapuerca, and places neere vnto the cittie of Burgos; which Ambaſſadour beeing a knight of Nauarre, was ſent backe to the Queene D Maria and her Councell, with the beſt words they could giue him. The French king was then much troubled with the Flemings of Bruges and others, by whom he had receiued a notable route, with the death of many Noblemen: among the which were Robert Earle of Artois, Renald of Neſle Conſtable of France, and aboue two hundred men of eſteeme. The Ambaſſadour beeing returned, the Gouernour held a Councell with the Infant D. Alphonſo de la Cerde, D. Iohn Nugnes de Lara, and other enemies to the king of Caſtile, at a place called Duegnas, where they reſolued to ſend D. Iohn Nugnes vnto King Philip, with other Ambaſſadors, to the end he ſhould authorize the promiſes made in this aſſembly, to ayde one another to conquer the lands of the riuer of Oja for the Crowne of Nauarre, and the Realme of Caſtile, for the Infant D. Alphonſo de la Cerde. Theſe Ambaſſadors were well receiued in the Court of France, and preſent diſpatches were made, with approbation of all that had beene done, the king writing vnto the gouernor, that he ſhold giue all ayde and aſſiſtance to them that were fled out of Caſtile againſt the King D. Fernand.

Caſtile. 17 At that time we find, that the towne of Bilbao was built by Don Diego Lopes de Haro, who had made his peace with the young King Don Fernand, and did enioy Biſcay.

Foundation of Bilbao. This place is built vpon a riuer called in the country language Ybay çabal, which ſignifieth Great-riuer: for it is the greateſt in all theſe quarters, and ſome affirme, that it is the riuer which was anciently called Neruium, very nauigable, the which falls into the ſea at Portugalette, two leagues from Bilbao. This towne retained the name of a little hamlet neere vnto it ſo called as that time, but they now call it Bilbao the old, to make a difference betwixt it and the towne, where there is at this day as good trafficke for the Northerne parts, as at any vppon that coaſt. It was firſt peopled by men borne thereabouts. Beyond that towne the Baſcangado language is no more in vſe, which they will haue to be the ancient Cantabria.

In the aſſembly of Vailledolit, the Queen D. Maria had obtained great ſummes of money from ſome of the townes and Commonalties, to make warre againſt the rebels, and D. Henry had beene made Gouernor of the Mores fronter, who notwithſtanding ſought to entertaine the troubles and diuiſions, wherein he tooke great delight, neither did hee care if that Tariffe had fallen into the king of Granados hands. Don Iohn Nugnes de Lara beeing returned out of France, hee beganne to ouer-runne the Biſhopricke of Calaorra, with the Nauarrois and French, againſt whom D. Alphonſo de Haro aduanced with ſome troupes leuied in haſt, and finding him in a conuenient place, he fought with him, defeated him, and tooke him priſoner, deliuering him into the hands of the Queene D. Maria, who hauing recouered from him all the places he held of the Crowne of Caſtile, and made him ſweare that he ſhold from thencefoorth faithfully ſerue her ſonne D. Fernand, ſhe gaue him his libertie. In the yeare 1301. the King of Portugall came to Plaiſance to meet with the Queene D. Maria, where they did treat to ſue vnto the Pope for a diſpenſation of the marriages which they had contracted betwixt the Infants of Caſtille and of Portugall, conferring of the charges they muſt be at, not onely to obtaine theſe diſpenſations from Pope Boniface, but alſo the legitimation of the King D. Fernand, for that the marriage betwixt the deceaſed King D. Sancho, and D. Maria of Molina, had neuer beene diſpenced withall. For the effecting whereof they muſt haue good ſtore of doublons: for Pope Boniface although he were of a Spaniſh race, yet would he not do any thing for them without a good fee. After the taking and compoſition of D. Iohn Nugnes de Lara, the Infant D. Iohn ſeeing himſelfe abandoned of his beſt friend, reconciled himſelfe vnto the widow Queene, and to the King Don Fernand her ſonne, quitting the title of king of Leon, and all that he held in that country: and for that D. Diego Lope de Haro held the country of Biſcay, which did belong vnto his wife D. Maria Diaz de Haro, hee had in recompence therof the towns of Manſilla, Paredes, Medina de Rioſecco, Caſtro-nouo and Cabreros: for the Councell were not of opinion, that they ſhould diſcontent Don Diego Lopes in diſpoſſeſſing him.

An. 1301.

Theſe things thus repayred, it ſeemed that all troubles had beene pacified within the Realme, but thoſe which were entertayned by the Infant Don Alphonſo de la Cerde: wherfore it was reſolued to repell him couragiouſly, beginning by the ſeege of Almaçan, which held for him: but D. Henry who deſired no peace in Spaine, diſappointed this enterpriſe, and afterwards the King of Arragon and he hauing met at Ariza; they made leagues and confederacies, without acquainting the Queene or her Councell therwith. The King of Arragon tooke Lorca, both towne and caſtell, by the ſufferance of Don Henry and Don Iohn alſo. Thus was this couragious Queene oppreſt with a thouſand inſupportable difficulties in her Gouernement and Regency, which were procured by her owne ſubiects, beſides the feare ſhe had of forraine enemies.

There was a new aſſembly of eſtates called at Burgos, and afterwards continued at Zamora,

A Zamora, where there were granted a ſubuention of great ſummes of mony for the war, and alſo for the diſpenſations which they demanded from the Pope, who by that meanes granted them, and they were publiſhed. The Infants D. Henry, and D. Iohn beeing ſtill diſcontented, did ſoone begin to make new practiſes, to diuide the king and his mother, whoſe wiſedome and iudgement did diſpleaſe them. The Queene beeing at Burgos, there came other Ambaſſadors to her from the French king, to aduiſe her to do him reaſon for the lands of Nagera, the riuer of Oja, and others that were held by the precedent kings of Caſtile, otherwiſe they did proteſt in their Maſters name, that he would haue recourſe to armes: whereat the Queene was much perplexed, apprehending greatly the forces of ſuch a king as Philip the Faire was. Hauing conferred with D. Henry, D. Iohn of Caſtile,
B and D. Iohn Nugnes de Lara, it was concluded with the Ambaſſadors, that the Queene of Caſtile, and the Gouernor of Nauar ſhould meet at Victoria, where they ſhould treate of all differences. Whilſt that this poore Princeſſe did labor to maintaine her ſons eſtate, the Noblemen aboue-named carried away the king to Leon, and did ſeparate him from her: neither was there any thing concluded at the interview of Victoria, for the great differences of either part.

tell her, that if ſhe would be a meanes, that he might hold the towne of Alicante without any controuerſie, he would reſtore all that he had taken in the Realme of Murcia: wherunto ſhe would not conſent: for hauing (like a Lady of iudgement) intelligence what was
C done by her neighbours, ſhe did not now ſo much feare the king of Arragon as ſhee had done, ſeeing him in trouble with his Nobility, by reaſon of a tribute which he had impoſed as well vpon the Nobility as the reſt of his Realme, called Selga: wherefore ſhe ſought Selga a tribute to haue intelligence with the malcontents of Arragon, to intertaine and augment theſe Diuiſions in diuiſions. About this time dyed the Queene D. Conſtance, mother to the king D. Iames Arragon.
and D. Frederick at Barcelona.

The Queene-mother of Caſtile hearing the wrong they had done her, in carrying a- Caſtile.
way her ſon, ſhe came with all ſpeed to Vailledolit, and to diſappoint her aduerſaries deſſeigns, ſhe ſent vnto the king of Portugal, to effect the marriage betwixt the king her ſon, and the Infanta D. Conſtance, that by this means ſhe might get from him the places which D he held in pawne of the Crowne of Caſtile, wherunto the Portugois yeelded. But they which held the youg king D. Fernand, deſirous to entertaine the king of Portugals fauor, to the end they might be ſupported by him in their tyrannies, aduiſed him not to yeeld vp any thing, promiſing that the marriage ſhould be accompliſhed when he pleaſed: whereat he was very glad, and ſtayed not long to put the married couple together, but did not giue vp the townes. Hereupon the king D. Fernand called an aſſembly of the Eſtates at Medina del campo, whither the Deputies wold not come, without the expreſſe commandement of the Queene-mother, but ſhe appointed them to go, promiſing to be there her ſelfe. The Deputies made great complaints, that the kings perſon was detained by the In-E fant D. Iohn, and D. Iohn de Lara. They for their part obiected many things againſt the Queen: In the mean time the king being practiſed by his mother, ſtole from the knights which had debaucht him, and followed her, holding the way to Burgos, but as he was yong and inconſtant, before they came vnto the citty, he abandoned her, and D. Henry, who was newly made great Maſter, and returned with the others; by reaſon whereof there was much diſpute. The Queene bearing and diſſembling all, being wiſe, and excuſing her ſons youth, who went to winter at Leon.

all preſents, after that he had tryed all meanes to recouer Tariffa, in the which D. Henry had alwaies fauored him, propounding it in the open Eſtates, and aduiſing them to yeeld
F it vnto him: but ſeeing he could not preuaile by theſe meanes, he vſed open force, aſſayling Andaluſia, which was neere vnto him, and laying ſeege to Alcaudete, the which hee tooke thinking to do the like at Baena: Alphonſo Peres of Saauedra was Captaine of the caſtell, and D. Fernand Alphonſo of Cordoua, Payo, Arias, Iohn Martines of Argote, and others, being in garriſon in the towne, he was repulſt, and forced to returne into Granado:

But ſoone after hearing that the towne of Iaen was not well manned, and that a peece of the wall was fallen, he came with greater forces, and gaue a furious aſſault, ſo as many good ſouldiers dyed in the defence thereof: and among them Henry Perez of Arana, a Knight of a noble houſe, yet it was preſerued from the furie of the Moores: and king Mahumet ſeeing he could not take it, went to Queſada, the which hee forced. This king of the Moores was ſtrictly allyed, and a great friend to D. Iames king of Arragon, to whome he had promiſed to ayde Don Alphonſo de la Cerde with all his meanes to recouer the Realme of Caſtile, demanding for his part of the conqueſt of Tariffe, Medina Sidonia, Alala and Bejar, which were wont to belong to the Crowne of Granado, the which was granted, but he did not ſee it effected, for he dyed in the yeare 1302. the thirtith yeare of his raigne, and of the Arabians 685. In whoſe place raigned his ſonne Mahumet the third called Aben Alhamar, or Alamir Aben-Azar. About that time dyed Raymond that great Philoſopher, (yet had he no great learning, but in opinion) he was borne in the Iland of Maiorca, and in his younger yeares was a merchant. Beeing wearie of the world, hee retired into the deſerts, and there compoſed that briefe Art, or abridgement of diuine and humane ſciences, whereby they haue beleeued that men in an inſtant might become very learned: the which (he ſayd) he had by reuelation. He was religious, and thinking to draw the Mahumetiſts to the knowledge of Ieſus Chriſt, he paſt into Affricke, where preaching the faith with an inconſiderate zeale, he was ſtoned by the Moores. Notwithſtanding his writings being examined and cenſured ſome yeares after his death, by the Iudgement of Aimeric a Iacobin, and other Inquiſitours Spaniards, they were condemned by Pope Gregory, ſitting at Auignon, as dangerous and full of ill doctrine, contrary to our faith.

Caſtile.

Enterview of the kings of Caſtile and Portugall.

The king of Caſtile, beeing (as he thought) at libertie, for that he was from his mother deſired to confer with D. Denis king of Portugall his father-in-law, the which the Queene D. Maria, D. Henry, and D. Diego Lopes de Haro ſought by all meanes to hinder, but they could not: for theſe two kings met at Badajos. The apparent colour of this interview was, that the king D. Fernand had of his father-in-law a preſent of a million of Marauidis of mony currant in thoſe times; but what was treated in ſecret was ſuſpect to D. Henry, to Diego Lopes de Haro, and euen to D. Iohn Manuel, ſon to the Infant Manuel with others, who fearing leſt they ſhould plot ſomething againſt them, made a league with the king of Arragon, and D. Alphonſo de la Cerde, and would haue comprehended the Queene-mother in their league, but ſhe refuſed it, and gaue good reaſons for her excuſe: wherefore they receiued the Infant D. Alphonſo de la Cerde for king of Caſtile, the which the Queene ſeeking to hinder, ſhe laboured in vaine, and retired to Medina del campo, the Inhabitants of which towne were faithfull to her ſonne. Thereupon, being in the yeare 1304. Don Henry, who was very old, dyed, whoſe inconſtant and turbulent ſpirit had troubled both himſelf and others, and ſo this league vaniſhed: he was buried in the church of Saint Francis at Vallcdolit. This death did much content the king, who was then at Cordoua, and hauing there ſetled his affaires with the new king of Granado, who made a league with him vpon the ſame conditions, and paying the ſame tribute which his father had done, he departed, leauing D. Iohn Nugnes de Lara for Gouernor general of the fronter, diuiding all the goods and poſſeſſions which D. Henry had held among his Knights, whereof a good part fell to D. Iohn Nugnes, although the king loued him little, but he feared him. The Queen-mother was then forced to follow his humors, yet ſhe did all things for his profit and good. By her meanes D. Diego Lopes de Haro reconciled himſelfe vnto him. But there fell out another contention betwixt D. Diego and the Infant D. Iohn, who notwithſtanding any accord that had beene made, would haue the Country of Biſcay, which did belong vnto him in the right of his wife. The Queen and the Noblemen of the Councell ſought to pacifie them, but not able to do it, they ſtayed the deciſion of this controuerſie, to end matters more important to the realm, with the king of Arragon, and the Infant D. Alphonſo de la Cerde: for the one held in a manner all the Realme of Murcia, and the other intitled himſelfe ſtill king of Caſtile: for the which Don Iohn of Caſtile was ſent to the king of Arragon, to take ſome good courſe with him, to end their pretenſions and quarrels, who preuailed ſo, as the king of Arragon put that which concerned himhimſelfe to compromiſe, chooſing for Abitrators the King of Portugall, who had married his ſiſter Donna Izabel, the ſame Don Iohn, and the Biſhop of Sarragoſſa. The Infant Don Alphonſo content in like manner that his right ſhould be friendly decided, did chooſe and elect for Arbitrators, the kings of Arragon and Portugall, and the ſame Don Iohn: the which, the King Don Fernand did willingly allow of, but not the Queene his Mother, who did fore-ſee, that the end of this compromiſe would fall out to her ſonnes preiudice. Compromiſe betwixt the Chriſtian Princes of Spaine.

This election of Arbitratours ſignified to the King of Portugall, and accepted by him, hee went to Tarraſſone in Arragon, paſſing by Medina del Campo, from whence the King Don Fernand did accompany him vnto Soria. To Taraſſone there alſo came the King of Arragon, Don Iohn, and the Biſhop of Sarragoſſa, who imployed themſelues to examine the rights and pretenſions of the parties, whileſt that the King Don Fernand, and the Queene his Mother, attended their ſentence in Agreda. In regard of the Realme of Murcia, the King of Portugall, Don Iohn, and the Biſhop did pronounce: That the riuer of Segura ſhould make the ſeparation betwixt the Lands of Murcia and Valencia, ſo as that which is to the South of Murcia, ſhould be of the Iuriſdiction of Don Fernand: and from the ſayd riuer towards Valencia, ſhould belong to the King of Arragon: ſo as Don Iames did not onely get the towne of Alicante, which hee had demanded, but alſo many other places.

As for the differences betwixt the king Don Fernand, and Don Alphonſo de la Cerde, which were greater, for that Don Alphonſo pretended the whole Realme of Caſtile to belong lawfully vnto him, it was iudged and arbitrated by the kings of Arragon and Portugall: That for the right and intereſt which the ſayd Don Alphonſo pretended, by an arbitrarie ſentence pronounced vppon the pretenſion of Don Alphonſo de la Cerde, the king Don Fernand ſhould giue and ſurrender vnto him the places which follow: Alba de Tormes, Bejar, Val de Corneja, Gibraleon, Gargantalaolla, Torremenga, Paſſaron, el Reall de Mancanares, Algaua, Mont de la Grede de Magan, the Towne of Sarria, with the appurtenances thereunto adjacent, Monçon, Lemos, Robayna Aliadra, Almonia, Canall, and la Barka Eſtercolina, Torre Blanca, Rodo Eledia, Hornacuelos, las Hazennas of Corduba, the Royall right and inheritance of Bonilla, with the appurtenances thereunto belonging, Colmenar of Sepulueda, and Aldea maior, with Sal de Campos, Vencos, Gaton, Ferran, Moliellas, the Salt-pits of Rubio, Belbimbre, Caſtro Caluon, the Port of Vizagra of the Cittie of Toledo, and the Martinengas of Madrid, and of Medina del campo.

All theſe fore-mentioned places were adiudged and giuen by the Arbitrators, to the Infant Don Alphonſo, into the poſſeſſion whereof, hee ſhould (without any oppoſed contradiction) bee actually put and inueſted by the king Don Fernand, by our Lady day (otherwiſe called the Natiuitie of the bleſſed Virgin Mary) in September following: and in conſideration thereof, the Infant Don Alphonſo ſhould no more intitle himſelfe king of Caſtile and Leon, nor carrie the armes quartered of Caſtile and Leon, as hee had done before, and continued it to that preſent day: and hee ſhould deliuer vp, and ſurrender vnto the king Don Fernand, the Towne of Almaçan with the appurtenances adiacent, and ſome other places which hee had taken during the warre.

This arbitrarie ſentence was giuen and pronounced by the Arbitrators in the yeare one thouſand, three hundred and foure, whereunto were added and annexed great penalties and forfeitures to the partie that ſhould infringe or violate the ſame: at the which were preſent Don Raymond Biſhop of Valencia, Don Martin Biſhop of Lisbon, the Biſhop of Hueſca, and the Biſhop of Cordoua: Don Iohn Oſerio Maſter of the knights of Saint Iames, Iohn Ximen, Diego Gonçales Secretarie of Taraſſone, Gonçalo Gonçales, Raymond Altar of Aguilar, Pero Lopes of Padilla, Fernand Gutteres of Quixada, Gonçalo Diaz de Cauallos, Lope Garcia of Hermoſilla, Martin Fernandes, Porto Carrero, Alphonſo Perez of Saauedra, Sancho Ruis of Eſcalante: moreouer, there were alſo preſent at that time, Velaſco Peres of Leyua, Stephen Peres of Auila, Lope

Peres of Burgos, with many other Noblemen and Knights; and it was written and ſigned by Andrew Perez of Corbera, publike Notarie of Tarraſſone. In this laſt ſentence D. Iohn was no Iudge, but Agent and Atturney for the king D. Fernand, in whoſe name hee yeelded. As for the Infant D. Alphonſo, what ſhew ſoeuer he made, he was nothing pleaſed, as it will appeare by the euent. The kings hauing beene ſome daies together as well at Taraſſone, as at Agreda, parted good friends. A

Theſe matters beeing ended they reſolued to determine the controuerſie betwixt the Infant D. Iohn, and Don Diego Lopes de Haro: to which end D. Diego was cited to come to Court, which was then at Medina del Campo, to anſwer to the demands of Don Iohn and of his wife D. Maria Diaz de Haro, heire proprietarie of Biſcay: D. Diego would not plead in the Court of Leon, but he appeared in that of Caſtile, which gaue ninty dayes B reſpite to the defender, notwithſtanding if he let the thirtieth day paſſe and did not preſent himſelfe, or giue a lawfull excuſe, they might ſeaze vpon their ſheepe, oxen, cowes, and ſwine, and eate them, tying the feete againſt the walles and trees, in ſigne of the demanders poſſeſſion.

Don Diego appeared, and pleaded for his defence, that conſidering the accords and tranſactions made heretofore, betwixt him, Don I*ohn*, and Donna Maria his wife, by the which they had yeelded vnto him the poſſeſſion of the Segneurie of Biſcay, in regard of the recompences which they had receiued, wherewith they were contented, and had ſworne and confirmed it by oath: they were now fallen from all the right they could pretend to the ſayd Segneurie, and the dependances. The cauſe beeing pleaded of either ſide, with allegations of maine reaſon, they were referred to councell: and in the C meane time, the Queene D. Maria foreſeeing ſome new trouble, laboured by all meanes to accord them, or to vndergo an arbitrarie and friendly ſentence: but Don Diego Lopes would not yeeld thereunto, but departed without the King or Queenes priuitie, and returned into Biſcay, the which was very ill taken. The aſſembly beeing ended, the king came to Vailedolit, where he was ſo importuned by the Infant Don I*ohn*, as he pronounced ſentence, by the aduice of his Councel, contayning, That D. I*ohn* and his wife Donna Maria Diaz ſhould be put in poſſeſſion of Biſcay: yet he did ſuſpend the execution of the ſentence, thinking that Don Diego would grow thereby more tractable: but he was reſolued to hold his Segneurie: ſo the king ſeeing his obſtinacie, would haue diſmembred the country of Guipuſcoa from his Crowne, to giue it to his vncle in recompence: wher- D unto he yeelded, to end all quarrels: but D. Maria Diaz de Haro beeing obſtinate, ſayd reſolutely, that ſhe demanded nothing of another mans, and that ſhe would neuer quitte her fathers inheritance, no not if they would giue her ten times as much as the Segneury of Biſcay was worth.

Sentence giuen by the king againſt D. Diego Lopes de Haro.

Theſe pourſuites did ſo trouble and diſturbe euery man, and euen Don I*ohn* himſelfe, as they all thought it fit and conuenient (the King ſo commanding) to ſurceaſe the proceſſe for two yeares; during the which the parties ſhould haue truce, and not attempt any thing one againſt another. And for that the great loue and friendſhip betwixt Don Diego Lopes de Haro, and Don I*ohn Nugnes de Lara*, was ſuſpect vnto the king, he ſought E in the meane time to breede and ſtirre vp ſome iealouſie and diuiſion betwixt them, gratifying Don Diego in many things, making his Sonne Don Lopes Diaz de Haro Lord Steward of his houſe, but it was not poſſible to diuide them: neither could Don Diego by any meanes bring Don I*ohn Nugnes* in fauour with the king, who was reſolued to make warre againſt him, againſt the opinion of the Queene his mother, and all his Councell: ſo as hee was forced and conſtrained to diſlodge haſtily in the night from Aranda of Duero, and came to Don Diego Lopes and his ſonne, who altogether made a league and confederacie againſt the king: Whereuppon there were many enterpriſes and incounters, without any great effect: ſo as beeing returned to Aranda, and the king not able to draw Don Diego from that partie, there was a day appointed to meet at Cerezo, and in the meane time a truce was made. F

There Don Alphonſo Perez de Guzman who did negotiate for the king, preuailed ſo with them of the league, and the Queen-mother with the king D. Fernand her ſon, who attended the reſolution of this aſſembly in the towne of Pancoruo, that all theſe, that

A is to ſay, the Lords of Haro father and ſonne, and D. Iohn Nugnes, ſhould remaine his ſeruants, and he receiued them into grace, yeelding vnto them all they were wont to enioy, and they for a gage of their faith deliuered ſome places in pawne. Don Iohn of Caſtile, who purſued the Seigneurie of Biſcay, was not pleaſed with this accord, wherefore he did preſſe the king to haue the ſentence giuen by him in fauour of D. Maria Diaz his wife, put in execution, wherewith the king was much troubled; and both he, the Queene and others of the Councell, ſought by all meanes to agree theſe parties contending, who were reſolued to go to armes: to preuent the which, the king made many great offers vnto Don Diego Lopes, the which he refuſed: but afterwards he repented it often. There was ſo great labouring for a peace, and eſpecially by the Queene-mother, as in the end they
B yeelded to this compoſition. That Don Diego Lopes ſhould, during his life, enioy the Segneurie of Biſcay, and lands belonging thereunto, and that after his deceaſe the poſſeſſion ſhould be giuen to Don Iohn, and to D. Maria his wife, or to their heires, except Vrdugna, Val de Balmeſeda, and S. Olalla, which three places ſhould remaine to Don Lope Diaz de Haro, ſonne to D. Diego: to whom moreouer the king ſhould giue for the entertayning of this peace, Miranda of Ebro, and Vilalua of Loſa. D. Diego Lopes yeelded to theſe conditions, to pleaſe the king though vnwillingly.

The troubles and ſeditions wherewith the Realme of Caſtile was afflicted at that time, was a plague which humane policie could not preuent: for when as one fire was quen-
C ched, another was ſuddenly kindled: ſo as theſe miſeries continuing, men periſhed, the treaſures were waſted, and Chriſtians ruined one another in theſe ciuill warres, giuing meanes and leyſure to the Moores of Granado to aſſure their Eſtates, who furniſhed themſelues with ſuch ſtore of munition, and built ſo many forts, towers, and caſtels, vppon the ſea coaſt, as they maintained themſelues for many yeres, againſt all the attempts of their enemies. D. Iohn Nugnes de Lara was not pleaſed to ſee an accord made betwixt D. Diego Lopes, and the Infant D. Iohn of Caſtille: wherefore he retired from Court, and fortified himſelfe in Tordehumos, where he was beſeeged by the king: but in the end the King was forced to giue him Moja and Cagnette, and to receiue him againe into fauour, ſeeing his vncle D. Iohn, to hinder the ſeege vnder-hand, cauſed the Knights to disband:
D yet for all this they liued not long in peace, for all theſe ſeditious men, although they had many quarrels among themſelues, yet they agreed in this point, to keepe the Realme in perpetuall combuſtion. The Infant D. Iohn, and D. Iohn Nugnes did afterwards make a league againſt the king, vppon a falſe aduertiſement, that the king meant to kill them: whereupon they troubled the State againe, ſo as they had great difficulty to retire the Infant D. Iohn from this enterprize: but as for D. Iohn Nugnes he continued in his rebellion, and would not come to the Eſtates held at Burgos, where there was queſtion to treate of the kings patrimony, and the reuenues of the Crowne; which were greatly impaired.

Miſerable Eſtate of Caſtile.

Mahumet Aben Alhamar, the third king of Granado.

THe Moores (as I haue ſayd) during theſe garboiles, did fortifie themſelues in Granado, ouer whom raigned Mahumet Aben Alhamar the third king, and third of that name, by the deceaſe of his father Mahumet Myr, who at his death had left two ſonnes, the which raigned one after another, and one daughter. The younger was called Mahumet Aben-Nacar Aben-Lemin Abeadille. King Mahumet during his raigne was blind by an accident, his ſiſter was married to a great kinght, a Moore, called Ferrachen Arraez, or Captaine of Malaga, who was alwaies much eſteemed by the king, and honoured for his vertue. This Ferrachen vſurped the towne of Ceuta in Affrick, and did great exploits both
F by ſea and land. He had many children by his wife, who was Infant of Granado, among the which were Iſmael and Mahumet, who raigned in Granado, as we will hereafter ſhew. This king Mahumet Aben Alhamar being blind, had from his entrance continued the war by his captaines againſt the Chriſtians; the which had been begun in his fathers life time, and tooke Bethmar and other places, during the broyles in Caſtile.

Granado.

Wherefore for a time he exempted himſelfe of the tribute, which his predeceſſours had payed to the kings of Caſtile: but the king Don Fernand in the yeare 1304. hauing (as hath beene ſayd) renewed their League, and ſent Fernand Gomez of Toledo his Chancelor, with a Iew called Samuel, to Granado, to demand the tribute, where they treated a truce with Mahumet, whereat Mahamet was well pleaſed, and they did agree that either ſhould enioy the places which they had taken one from another: that is, the king of Caſtile Tariffe, and the king of Granado Alcandete, Queſada, Bedmar and others, and that the yearely tribute ſhould be payed to the king of Caſtile. Which Articles were ſigned by king Mahumet and the Ambaſſadors, and afterwards confirmed by the king D. Fernand in the citty of Cordoua, whether was ſent to that end from the king of Granado, an Alfagui called Mahumet. This truce continued about foure yeares, during the which the Moores were carefull to furniſh their countrie with all things neceſſary, to repell the inuaſions of their forraine enemies: yet had they troubles among themſelues: for Mahumet beeing growne contemptible among his ſubiects, by reaſon of his blindneſſe, Aborrabe an audacious Moore, who was Gouernour of Almery, began to tyrannize, and to vſurpe the title of King: and although he were chaſed away, and forced (the towne being taken) to flie into Affricke, yet he left not to call himſelfe King, and would haue ſurprized Ceuta.

Nauarre.

During theſe things, Arnaud of Puyane, Biſhop of Pampelona, a Baſque by nation, held their Synods for reformation of his Clergie, which was very needfull. Two yeares before their had beene a Synode held of many Biſhops at Pegnafiel, where it was decreed that Prieſts might keepe Concubines ſecretly, but not openly.

Prieſts allowed to keepe Concubines.

Arragon.

In Arragon a marriage was treated betwixt the Infant D. Maria, daughter to the king Don Iames and Lewis Hutin the eldeſt Sonne, and then with the Earle of Poictiers ſecond ſonne to King Philip the Faire, and of the Queene Don Ieanne his wife, but it tooke no effect. We haue ſayd before, that the King Don Iames, the better to entertaine the peace which he had made with the French raigning in Naples, had promiſed to marrie Blanche the daughter of Charles the Limping, the which he did. By this Ladie he had the iſſue which followes: Don Iames his eldeſt, who was married to D. Leonora Infant of Caſtile: but hauing not touched her, hé ſent her home, and made himſelfe a knight of the order of Saint Iohn of Hieruſalem, and was afterwards Maſter of the order of Monteça. D. Alphonſo his ſecond ſonne was king after him. Don Pedro the third, Earle of Ampurias, D. Raymond Berenger Earle of Prages and Ribagorça, Don Iohn who was Archbiſhoppe of Toledo, and afterwards Patriarch of Alexandria, and Arch biſhop of Tarragone. Moreouer D. Conſtance married to Don Iohn Manuel of Caſtile, ſonne to the Infant D. Manuel: D. Maria who was wife to Don Pedro Infant of Caſtile, ſonne to Don Sancho the 4. D. Blanche a religious woman, and a Prioreſſe of Sixena: D. Violant married to the prince of Tarentum: and D. Iſabella wife to Don Frederick Arch-duke of Auſtria: theſe were his lawfull children: and by his ſtolne loues he had a daughter, which dyed young, and Don Iames of Arragon, who hauing married the daughter and heire of Don Lope de Luna, was Earle of Luna.

Genealogie of Arragon.

Nauarre.

The marriage treated betwixt D. Maria of Arragon, and the ſecond ſonne of France, by the meanes of Pope Boniface, tooke no effect, for that the conditions propounded ſemed very preiudiciall to Lewis Hutin, to whom the ſucceſſion of Nauarre by right belonged as the eldeſt, the which the Pope and the king of Arragon would haue transferred to the Earle of Poictiers, with the Earledomes of Champaigne and Brie, and other lands belonging to Queene Ieanne their mother. This Donna Ieanne Queene of Nauar, a little before her death, cauſed that famous Colledge of Nauarre to be built in Paris, endowing it with good rents in Champaigne, as well for the entertayning of Regents and Profeſſors in Diuinity and Humanity, as of the chappell and Miniſters thereof. The ſame Princeſſe built the towne called Pont de la Roine in Nauarre, otherwiſe called Cares, and hauing liued in France one and thirty yeares, and neuer returned into Nauarre, ſhe died in the yeare 1305. leauing Lewis, Philip, and Charles, who raigned in France and Nauarre ſucceſſiuely one after another, and Iſabel who was Queene of England, married to Edward the ſecond, her children. She was buried at the Franciſcans in Paris. A yeare after the

A the deceaſe of this Lady King Philip deſired to make an allyance with Caſtille, demaunding by his Ambaſſadors D. Iſabel, ſiſter to the King D. Fernand, but this marriage tooke no effect, for ſome reaſons not written, ſome ſay it was three yeeres after the death of Queene Iane.

Lewis Hutin the firſt of that name, ſix and twentith King of Nauarre.

B 19 Lewis, ſonne to King Philip and Donna Iane, ſurnamed Hutin, firſt of that name amongſt the Kings of Nauarre, ſucceeded his mother in the ſayd realme: he did not intitle himſelfe King, vntill hee had beene crowned at Pampelone, but onely the eldeſt ſonne and heire of the Realme: his ſurname of Hutin ſignifies mutin or riotous, which he purchaſed after his comming to the crowne of France, or as ſome ſay, before, whether it were that he had beene the cauſe of contentions, or that hee had pacefied them. The Queenes death being knowne in Nauarre, the Eſtates aſſembled at Pampelone, where they reſolued to ſend Ambaſſadors into France, to beſeech King Philip, to ſend them Lewis his ſonne, their naturall Prince, and hauing written letters to that effect in the name of the Eſtates, they diſpatched D. Arnaud of Puyana, Biſhop of Pampelone, and Don
C Fortun Almorauid, who were well and honorably accompanied: who being come to the court of France, they gaue the Kings to vnderſtand the great griefe the people of Nauarre had for the death of their Queene, and Soueraigne Lady; for whoſe conſolation, they beſought them that their new King Lewis might goe thither as ſoone as might bee, accompanying this extreame deſire of the Nauarrois, with neceſſary reaſons, for that they had great complaints to make of the gouernment of their Viceroys, who had gouerned the affaires of the realme, to the great preiudice thereof. Whereof the continuall abſence of their ſoueraigne Magiſtrate was the cauſe, who could not viſibly ſee the Eſtate of his country and people, but was ſerued by the eyes and eares of others, whoſe
D reports are commonly falſe, and the truth either concealed or diſſembled. This requeſt ſeemed iuſt vnto the Kings, both father and ſonne: yet King Lewis came not into Nauarre but two yeeres after, and in the meane time hee married Marguerite daughter to Robert Duke of Bourgongne, with whom hee had in marriage fifty thouſand Liuers in ſiluer, and the lands of Gyen vpon Seine: of which marriage iſſued Ieanne, who was Queene of Nauarre, maried to Philip Earle of Eureux, ſon to Lewis of France, by whom the Kings of Nauarre haue pretended right to the Dutchy of Bourgongne againſt the Kings of France: for Robert Duke of Bourgongne, father to this Marguerite, hauing had many children, moſt of them left not any heires, and their poſterity which had children, tailed ſoone, there remayning no iſſue of the houſe of Bourgongne, but that

Genealogy of Nauarre.

20 Whilſt that the King of Nauarre delaied the time to come into his Realme, there were Gouernors, or Viceroies, after the accuſtomed manner. The great quarrels which had happened in France ſome yeeres before, betwixt King Philp the faire and Pope Boniface the eight, had cauſed many diſorders, by reaſon whereof there was a great famine throughout all the realme. Pope Boniface had excommunicated King Philip, and giuen his realme in prey to him that could take it; but hee was a prey to the French, who being led by Nogaret of Saint Felix, and by the inteligence of Sarra Colonne, ſurprized the Pope at Anania, and intreated him ſo il, as ſoone after for rage and ſpight hee died at Rome: whoſe ſucceſſor Benedict the eleuenth, abſolued the King, his houſe and his realme, who held the ſea but eight monthes. After whoſe deceaſe there grew great
F factions for the election of a new Pope, ſo as the ſea was voide abouetenne monthes, for that the French and Italian Cardinals, beeing aſſembled at Perugia, could not agree, who in the end concluded, that three French Cardinals ſhould be named by the Italians, or elſe three Italians by the French, one of the which ſhould bee choſen Pope by the other faction.

The

The Italians would needs name three French prelats, whom they knew to bee diſcon- A tented and enemies to King Philip, among the which was the Archbiſhop of Bourdeaux, called Bertrand Gor, ſonne to Bernard, a Baſque by nation, who was choſen Pope by the French, and that at the inſtance of King Philip, who during the delay of forty daies, which had beene reſerued for the two parties, after the nomination, to aduiſe which of the three they ſhould chooſe, was aduertiſed of all: and they ſay that hee aduertiſed the Archbiſhop that he was one of the three named, and that if hee would promiſe and ſweare vnto him to doe many things which he propounded, and among others to change the Popes ſea from Italy into France, it was in his power to make him Pope. The good Archbiſhop deſirous to attaine to that dignity, promiſed it, and did effect it being choſen, cauſing all the Cardinals and Officers of the court of Rome to come to Lions, where he was B crowned in the Church of Saint Iuſt, that yeere 1305. There were preſent the French King, with many other Princes and Noblemen, and an infinite multitude of people of all ſorts.

Duke of Britany ſlaine at the Popes coronation.

During the pompe of this coronation, Iohn Duke of Brittaine was ſlaine with the ruine of an old wal, on the which there was a world of people to ſee this ſpectacle, and the King and Pope himſelfe were in great daunger. Hee was called Clement the fifth, who ſent three Cardinals to Rome, to gouerne the city, and other places of the territories of the Church. Hee made his reſidence in France, for the moſt part in Auignon where other his ſucceſſors remained for the ſpace of ſeuenty yeeres, which were Clement the fifth, C Iohn the two and twentith, Benedict the twelfth, Clement the ſixth, who bought Auignon of Queene Iane, Innocent the ſixth, Vrbaine the fifth, and Gregory the eleuenth, who returned the ſea to Rome: It is called by the Italians the new tranſmigration, and captiuity of Babilon. This Pope granted to the French King the tithes of the Clergy, for reparation of the ſpoiles which the warre had cauſed, and the right of patronage of many Churches which were vacant, to prouide Miniſters and Paſtors worthy of their charges. King Lewis Hutin did accompany his father during all the alterations, ſo as he could not ſo ſoone goe into his realme of Nauarre, as he deſired, beſides hee was very young: notwithſtanding all diſpatches were made in his name. After that the Kings of France had and then he beganne to ſtile himſelfe King, beeing about ſixteene yeere of age. Hee ſware to obſerue the lawes and rights of the realme, and then hee went to viſit the towns and places thereof, with a great concourſe of his vaſſals and ſubiects, who had not of E long time ſeene their Kings and Soueraigne Princes, to whom the King ſhewed himſelfe milde and affable: Notwithſtanding being in the towne of Eſtella, hee cauſed D. Fortun Almorauid and Martin Ximenes of Ayuar to bee put in priſon, who had mutined for the preuiledges of the Nobility of Nauarre, againſt the French Gouernors, and had medled in the gouernment, for the preſeruation of the country: whereat the Nauarrois were ſomewhat diſcontented, but he paied them with reaſons, and parting out of Nauarre, to returne into France, he carried theſe two priſoners with him: D. Fortun died in priſon, but Martin got his liberty through the fauour of the Earle of Vallois, who notwithſtanding liued not long after. Hee was followed by aboue two hundred gentlemen Nauarrois, whom he aduanced in France, both to make them more affectio- F

21 Pope Clement the fifth, hauing (as we haue ſayd) done a memorable act, which did much import the Italians and other nations, to haue tranſported the Papal ſea into

France

A France vndertooke an other buſineſſe worthy of no leſſe fame, the Knights Templers being growne very rich, were by conſequence inſolent; they were enuied by great men, and generally hated; ſo as the people either mooued in conſcience, and deſire to reforme and roote out vice, or ſeeking to haue part of the ſpoile, in the yeere of our Lord 1308. An. 1308. made informations againſt them through al Chriſtendome: ſending word to the Biſhops Purſuit for the abolition of the Templers. to make inquiry in their Biſhopriks, of their liues, manners and religion, citing them generally to appeere at a councell which he had called to that end at Vienne in Daulphine, in the yeere of our Lord 1310. Before and after this councel, many of them (after informations made) being attainted and conuicted of greeuous crimes of hereſie, Apoſtaſie, & other impieties, againſt God, nature and al good manners, great executions fol-

B lowed, many being conuicted were put to death by fire, and other puniſhments: many (whoſe accuſations were not well verefied) being cruelly tortured, confeſſed greenous crimes, whereof they would diſcharge themſelues, being at their executions; and of this number was the great Maiſter of the Order, called Iames Mole of Bourgongne, many alſo without any confeſſion, were put to death: wherefore the Pope hauing made a ſtrict ſerch, reſolued to aboliſh this Order, and pronounced this ſentence againſt them, in the preſence of the Kings of France and Nauarre, of Charles Earle of Vallois, Philip and Sentence giuen by the Pope againſt the Templers. Charles brethren to Lewis Hutin and others. The execution of this ſentence was ſuſpended, in regard of the Knights Templers of Caſtille, Arragon, Majorca and Portugal, the ſuppreſſion of whom the Pope reſerued to the diſpoſition of the Apoſtolike ſea, to

Thus ended the Order of the Templers, which had continued about two hundred yeeres: a preſident which ſhould be followed in other things, which hauing beene inſtituted to a good end, and whoſe beginnings were not wholy to be blamed, are ſince ſo degenerat, as the profeſſions of Chriſtians is made odious and abominable to other nations. In time the knights Templers of Caſtille, Portugal and Arragon were ſuppreſt with the reſt, being growne the more odious to all men, for that they had beene condemned by a councel. The Knights of Saint Iohn of Ieruſalem were enriched with the ſpoiles of theſe Templers, who had in the yeere of our Lord 1308. taken the Iſland of Rhodes, or at the leaſt hauing beene conquered by other Chriſtians, were put in poſſeſ- Hoſpitaliers inricht with the ſpoiles of the Templers.

D ſion by Pope Clement the fifth. Theſe Rhodiens (as they were afterwards called) made profeſſion of the order of Saint Auguſtine, and obtained great preuiledges from the Popes, enioying this Iſland aboue two hundred yeeres. They had helpt to ruine the Templers, and therefore had part of the ſpoile. Pope Clement and King Philip the faire diuided their mouable goods betwixt them.

22 Other Orders of holy knight-hood had their beginnings by the ruines of this, as Portugal. thoſe called of Chriſtus in Portugal, by the deuotion and dilligence of the King D. Denis: who aſſigned them rents and reuenues of the Templers Comanderies and benifices: Order of Chriſtus in Lortugal. and it was ordained that they ſhould carry for a marke or badge, a white croſſe with a

E red. This King of Portugal wrought ſo, as the knights of Saint Iames were ſeperated and exempted from the ſubiection of the Maſtery of Caſtille, wherein hee was aſſiſted by the Apoſtolike Authority, who made Alcacar de Sal the chiefe place of the order of Saint Iames, the which was afterwards tranſlated to Pamela, D. Fernand King of Caſtille ſeized vpon the places, townes and forts, and all the reuenues of the Templers in his country, to diſpoſe thereof as ſhould be thought fit.

23 The Order called our Lady of Monteça tooke its beginning by the ruine of the Arragon. Templers, in the realme of Valencia which is like vnto the knights of Calarraua, and vnder the Order of Ciſteaux, vnto whom were rents aſſigned out of the Templers confiſcations. This Order was afterwards confirmed by Pope Iohn the two and twentith, ſucceſſor to Clement the fifth. In the time of this Clement, Robert King of Naples ſonne to

F Charles the Limping, was crowned in Auignon, being before Duke of Calabria, a great enemy of D. Frederic King of Sicile, of which Kingdome of Naples, we will forbeare to ſpeake, for that it concernes not the affaires of Spaine, vntill that the Arragonois were called to that crowne by Queene Ioanne the two and twentith, as we ſhall heereafter ſhew.

Caſtille.

24 The accord betwixt the Kings of Caſtille and Granado, as ſoone as the King D. Fernand ſaw his eſtate ſomewhat ſetled, was broken: for the Kings of Caſtille and Arragon hauing met at Monreal, in the yeere of our Lord 1309. beſides the marriage which An. 1309. was treated betwixt the Infant D. Iames of Arragon, and the Infanta D. Leonora of Caſtille, they concluded to make warre againſt King Mahumet Aben-Alhamar the blinde: Warre made by Caſtille and Arragon againſt Granado. and although the conqueſt of Granado did belong to Caſtille, yet a ſixth part thereof was granted to the King of Arragon, who made preparation to beſiege Almery, whileſt that the King D. Fernand ſhould beſiege Algezire.

Moores. The King of Granado aduertiſed of this plot, was much incenſed againſt theſe Princes, which had not kept their words, but eſpecially againſt the King of Arragon, who had no intereſt to Granado, the diuiſion being made betwixt the ancient Chriſtian Kings, and by the Popes authority. He ſent a good garriſon to Algezire, and to all other places, attending the euent of this warre, the which was begunne by the King of Arragon, who ſent ſome galleys in fauour of Aborrabe the Moore, who was expelled, ſtiling himſelfe King of Almery, who beſieged Ceuta in Affrike, and tooke it by meanes of theſe ſuccors; at the ſame time the King of Arragon came and layed ſiege to Almerie, and he of Caſtille to Algezire.

The Moores incenſed moſt againſt the Arragonois, went to field on that ſide, and gaue many routs, and hindrances to them that held the ſiege, and to them that came to it. Algezire being well furniſhed, defended it ſelfe in ſuch ſort, as the King D. Fernand finding the ſiege would bee long, ſent the Archbiſhop of Seuile, D. Alphonſo Perez de Guſman, and D. Iohn Nugnes de Lara, with part of the army to Gibraltar, the which Gibraltar taken. place was yeelded, and the Inhabitants and ſouldiars tranſported into Affrike, with their baggage, in ſhips which the King of Caſtille did furniſh, according to the accord: for an old Moore being there, who complayning vnto the King of diuers alterations, whereunto he had beene forced, all the people were reſolued to paſſe into Affrike, and not to liue any more in Spaine. This Moore beeing come thether at the newes of the taking thereof, ſayd vnto the King: I was an Inhabitant of Seuille, when thy Great grand father D. Fernand tooke it, from whence being expelled, I came to remaine at Xeres, from thence D. Alphonſo thy grand-father chaſed me, and I retired to Tariffe, the which being taken by the King D. Sancho thy father, I thought to liue here in peace, from whence you diſlodge mee: wherefore I will paſſe into Affrike, to ſpend the remainder of my daies, with all the Inhabitants of this place, where wee ſhall haue no cauſe to feare the Chriſtians.

The King Don Fernand being returned to Algezire, and ſeeking by all meanes poſſible to force it, the Moores by commiſſion from their King made an accord with him, to yeeld vnto him all the places taken in the former warres in Andaluſia, and moreouer fifty thouſand doublons, ſo as hee would raiſe the ſiege from before Algezire. This accord was made when as the King could not doe any more by reaſon of the diſcommodities which his army ſuffred, through the continual raine, and other croſſes, Accord betwixt Granado and Caſtille. ſo as many Noblemen died of infirmities, amongſt the which was Don Diego Lopes de Haro; by whoſe deceaſe the Siegneurie of Biſcay went out of the familie of Haro, Biſcay falles to D. Iohn of Caſtille. and fell into the poſſeſſion of them of the bloud royal of Caſtille, by D. Iohn husband to Donna Maria Diaz de Haro, daughter and heire to Lope Diaz de Haro, ſlaine at Alfaro. During this warre D. Alphonſo Perez de Guzman died alſo in an incounter againſt the Moores, beeing ſhot through with an arrow, hee left one ſonne and heire, Don Iohn Alphonſo de Guzman, Lord of Saint Lucar.

Theſe loſſes were increaſed by the retreat of Don Iohn of Caſtille, who carried many knights away with him, the which did much weaken the army: wherefore the King reſolued to agree, and receiued the ſum of gold aboue mentioned, with the places of Queſada, Bedmar, Quadros and Chungin.

Thus Algezire was deliuered, and a truce made betwixt the Realmes of Caſtille and Granado: but when as the King D. Fernand found himſelfe ſeized of theſe townes, and of a good ſumme of money, hee did not much care to maintaine that which hee had promiſed, but ſent Don Pedro his brother with the reſt of the army, to the caſtle of

A of Tempul, neere to Algezire, the which he tooke, and then returned to Seuille, where D. Iohn Nugnes de Lara was newly arriued out of France, from Pope Clement, of whom he had obtained permiſſion for the King, to take the tithes for the warres againſt the Moores. King Mahumet the Blinde was ſoone after depoſed by his owne brother Mahumet Azar Aben Lemin, being fauored by many great men Moores, who were diſcontented to be gouerned by a blinde King, who could not lead them to the warres in perſon. He was taken and diſpoſſeſſed in the yeere 1309. hauing raigned ſeuen yeeres, the ſix hundred ninty and two of the Arabians. The King of Granado depoſed.

As for the ſiege of Almery, it was nothing fortunat for the Arragonois, who were beaten both by the ſuccors that were ſent from Granado, and by the beſieged which ſallied Arragon.
B out vpon them, ſo as they loſt many good knights and valiant ſouldiars. Such was the religious duty of vaſſals to their Lords, and of ſubiects to their Prince, & ſo holy and inviolable the military diſcipline in thoſe daies, that Martin Ximenes of Ayuar, holding a fee of Symon Perez of Arenos, ſlaine in that warre, was accuſed of felony, for that he had not ſuccored his Lord in fight: but he prooued his alibi, and that he was not in that incounter: and D. Pedro Martines de Luna being accuſed of the like crime, purged himſelfe by oth, before the King and Noblemen, that he was not at the charge whereas Symon Perez had beene ſlaine, D. Fernand Infant of Majorca was at this ſiege, where he gaue great prooſes of his valour.

Some Authors make mention of memorable exploits, done about that time in Grece,
C by ſome troupes of Arragonois and Cattelans, the which we may not omit. It happened about the yeere 1302. that in Italy betwixt Charles the Limping King of Naples, and D. Frederic of Arragon, holding the Iſland of Sicile, contrary to the treaty of peace made at Taraſcon, after many routs giuen and receiued of either part, there was an accord made by the meanes of Charles of Valois and others; the conditions were. That D. Frederic ſhould enioy the realme of Sicile during his life, the which after his death ſhould returne to King Charles of Naples, or to his ſucceſſors. That the Princes treating this peace, and hauing intereſt therein, ſhould bee a meanes that the Iſland of Corſica and Sardinia ſhould be giuen to D. Frederic and his deſcendants.

The townes taken by the Arragonois and Cattelans on this ſide the ſtraight
D ſhould bee yeelded vp. The Mediators ſhould bee ſutors that the interdict of Sicile ſhould be diſcharged, and the priſoners ſhould be deliuered, amongſt the which was Philip Prince of Tarentum, ſonne to Charles, and Gautier Earle of Brenne, which accord was ratefied by Pope Boniface, who impoſed a tribut of fifteene thouſand florins of gold vpon the realme of Sicile, paiable yeerely vnto the church of Rome. Vpon the concluſion of this peace, the captaines and ſouldiers of either part retired into other countries. Roger de Loria, who had beene in great reputation to bee an excellent ſea captaine, yea the beſt of his age, retired himſelfe into Spaine, where he died in the city of Valencia, in the yeere 1305. and left an honorable poſterity. About foure thouſand Cattelans and Tribut impoſed by the Pope vpon the realm of Sicile.
E Arragonois, and amongſt them ſome Sicilians ſayled towards Greece, vnder the command of Roger Florio, Berenger Entenza an Arragonois, and others, to ſerue the Emperor Andronicus Paleologus then raigning, whoſe ſonne Michel Paleologus ſlue Roger Florio in treaſon at Adrianople, a man of valour, of a Germain race, but borne at Brindiſi, much lamented; wherevpon the troupes of Cattelans and Arragonois did chooſe for their General Berenger Entenza, being commanded vnder him by Fernand of Ahones, Corbaran of Leet, Bernard of Rochfort, Raymond of Montanero, William Sichar, Symon Albert and others. Being mutined by reaſon of theſe Grecian Princes, they fortified themſelues vpon the ſtraight of Calipoli, and there made warre with all violence againſt the Emperor Andronicus, and cut in peeces Caio Iean one of his children, with foure hundred horſe, which were ſent againſt them, at a place called Pont Roial, ſix miles 25 Cattelans and Arragonois in Greece and Thrace.

The ſtrength of this army conſiſted in two thouſand fiue hundred horſe at the moſt, who being led by Bernard of Rochfort, who was choſen their head after the taking of Entenza, gaue a notable defeat to Michel Paleologus, ſonne to Andronicus (who had with him all the Cauallarie of Conſtantinople) neere to the towne of Apros in Thrace, ſo as Michel being wounded was forced to ſaue himſelfe by flight, and ſhut himſelfe into Adrianopoli, whereas the Cattelans beſeeged him long. A

Their fort of Calipoli being afterwards aſſailed by Andriol Moro (who led Theodore Paleologus Marquis of Montferrat into Italy with an army) was ſo well defended, as there were aboue ſixe hundred with their commander Andriol ſlaine there. Yet neceſſity in the meane time did conſume theſe Cattelan troupes being in an enemies countrie, few in number and farre from all ſuccors, ſo as finding themſelues in extreame deſpaire, D. Fernand, Infant of Majorca, arriued happely, being ſent by D. Frederic King of Sicile, to giue them ſome releeſe. Then was Berenger Entenza returned from priſon, who B ſeeking to reſume his authority of captaine generall, againſt Bernard of Rochfort, there grew ſuch a quarrel betwixt them and their partiſans, as Entenza was ſlaine; wherefore the Infant of Majorcca deteſting ſo raſh and mutinous an army left them, and thinking to returne into Sicile, fell vpon the Iſle of Negrepont, where hee was ſtaied and carried priſoner to Saint Omer, a fort of Athens: being put into the hands of Gaultier of Brenne, ruling in that country.

Soone after Bernard of Rochfort and Albert his brother, commanding the Cattelans at Calipoli, ſuffred themſelues to bee ſurprized by the Gouernor of Negrepont called Thibaud of Sipoiſe, who deliuered them to Robert King of Naples, who cauſed them C to die in priſon: by reaſon whereof the Cattelan troupes beganne to ouerrunne the country, like made men, without commanders, and without order, and falling vpon the country of Macedonie which was nere, they paſt through it like a lightning, ouerthrowing all they incountred, vntill they came into the territorie of Athens, whereas the French commanded; ſtaying there they demaunded to bee entertained in pay by Duke Gaultier, but hee deſirous rather to chaſe away this vagabond people, who were poore and inſolent, went to incounter them with his forces, to fight with them, by whom notwithſtanding hee was defeated and ſlaine, and almoſt all his men. By this victory the Cattelans made themſelues Maiſters of all that the French held in that country, and lodged themſelues there, whereas ſince they had many commanders ſucceſſiuely, as D. Manfroy ſon to D. Frederic King of Sicile, then D. Frederic Alphonſo his brother, who re- D mained Gouernor there, and married the daughter of Boniface of Verona a Nobleman of great power in Negrepont, with others: from thence is come the title of Dukes of Athens to the Princes of Arragon. D. Fernand Infant of Majorca being deliuered out of priſon through the fauour of Robert King of Naples, his kinſman, married Iſabel the heire of Morea by whom he had D. Iames who was King of Majorca after D. Sancho his vncle; hee tooke Clarence, and made many other conqueſts in Morea. D. Fernand to to his ſecond wife married a Princeſſe of Cypres, of whom Fernand was borne, who was husband to Eſchiue daughter to Hugues King of Cypres. After this ſecond marriage, and the birth of this ſonne, D. Fernand of Majorca Prince of Morea, hauing performed great matters both in the Eaſt and Weſt, died in the floure of his age, about the E yeere of our Lord 1315. ſo as the affaires of the Arragonois in that countrie went to ruine.

Genealogie of Maiorca.

He was the third ſonne of D. Iames King of Majorca the firſt of that name, whoſe poſterity we haue gathered out of hiſtories, after this manner. He had by his wife Eſclermonde of Foix, Iames his eldeſt ſonne, who being wholy giuen to deuotion, left the ſucceſſion of the realme, to his yonger brother, and became a Franciſcan friar. D. Sancho the ſecond ſonne was King after the father, in the yeere of our Lord 1312. who hauing married the daughter of Charles the ſecond King of Naples, named Marie, had no children by her, wherefore dying, hee left the Realme of Majorca, to Don Iames ſonne to his brother D. Fernand aboue named. Of this firſt ſtemme of Majorca, wee finde there F iſſued theſe three ſonnes, D. Iames, D. Sancho and D. Fernand, and one daughter named D. Sancha, married to Robert Duke of Calabria; to the which ſome adde D. Philip the fourth ſonne.

Nauarre.

But returning to Spaine, we finde that about the time of theſe laſt wars of Granado, whereof whereof wee haue newly made mention, or ſoone after, the Nauarrois renued their old quarrels againſt them of Arragon, to whom (notwithſtanding any accords) they were neuer good friends: ſo as going out of Pitiella, a place then of the Kingdome of Nauarre, they entred the neighbour country of Arragon, and committed great ſpoiles, whereat D. Iames King of Arragon being incenſed, hee ſent an army to beſeege that place, but they were diſlodged by the Inhabitants of Sangueſſe, a frontire towne of Nauarre, being aſſiſted by ſome French troupes, who fought with them and they were defeated. The Arragonois being returned againe into Nauarre, and hauing runne as farre as the towne of Olite, and forraged the country, they were againe charged by them of Sangueſſe and other neighbor places, being ready to paſſe the riuer of Arragon, at the ford of Saint Adrian, and were there defeated with great ſlaughter of their men, and the loſſe of the Standard royal of Arragon, which they of Sangueſſe carried away, by reaſon whereof, and in remembrance of their vertue and valour, they carry for their armes, by grant from King Lewis Hutin, the bands gueules of Arragon, but in a field argent.

26 In the yeere of our Lord 1312. were the troubles of Lions vpon Rhoſne, betwixt the Inhabitants of the towne and their Archbiſhop Peter of Breſſe, by reaſon that he did vſurpe vpon the Kings Iuſtice: King Philip ſent his ſonne the King of Nauarre thether, who tooke this Prelat priſoner, and ſent him to the King his father, for which cauſe, and for that he durſt preſume to lay his hands vpon an Archbiſhop, he was called Hutin, or mutin as ſome ſay. The citizens of Lion beeing pacefied, they mutined againe, by reaſon of the differences which they had with their Archbiſhop, but they were ſuppreſt, and puniſhed by the ſame King of Nauar, and reduced vnder the King his fathers obedience. It was at that time that Marguerite Queene of Nauar, the Counteſſe Ieanne of Poictiers & Blanche of la Marche, who had married the three brethren of France, Lewis Hutin, Philip and Charles, were accuſed of adultry, & put in priſon at Chaſteau Gaillard, of the which the Counteſſe Ieanne of Poictiers, was found innocent and abſolued: but Marguerite Queene of Nauar, and the Conteſſe Blanch being conuicted, were condemned to perpetual priſon, whereas Marguerite died ſoone after: the adulterers were put to death with cruel torments: the which were Philip and Gaulter of Aunoy brethren. An vſher of the chamber, who ſerued as baud and meſſenger of their loues, was hanged. It is reported of this Queene of Nauar, that ſeeing any faire yong man paſſe by, ſhee cauſed him to be taken, & brought ſecretly at night into her chamber, & that after ſhe had taken her diſhoneſt pleaſure with him, ſhe cauſed him to bee caſt into the riuer of Seyne, to the end hee ſhould not vaunt thereof: the which was diſcouered by a ſcholler, who ſaued himſelfe by ſwimming, being not wel bound. Thereof grew that ambiguous ſentence. Reginam interficere nolite timere bonum eſt. This vnchaſtneſſe is attributed by ſome to Ieanne mother to Lewis Hutin, Queene of Nauarre, who was a ſcourge to the Flemings, and the cauſe of al the wars betwixt the King and them.

An. 1312. Troubles at Lions.

The king D. Fernand about the end of the war of Granado, gaue order for the building of Sauueterre, and Azpeity in Guipuſcoa, granting then the rights & preuiledges of Victoria: he married his daughter Iſabel to Duke Iohn of Brittaine, and made D. Iohn Manuel of Caſtille, ſonne to D. Manuel, Lord Steward of his houſe, taking that dignity from his brother D. Pedro, to whom in recompence he gaue Almaçan and Berlanga: whereby it appeeres that theſe offices depended on the kings pleaſure. This D. Iohn Manuel had two daughters, which were both Queenes, the one named D. Ieanne, wife to Henry the ſecond King of Caſtile, and the other D. Conſtance, married to D. Pedro King of Portugal. During the marriage of Duke Iohn of Brittaine, and of D. Iſabel at Burgos, the Infant D. Iohn of Caſtile, alwaies like himſelf, turbulent & ſeditious, came nere vnto the city, accompanied with ſoldiars, & would not enter without aſſurance, the which was giuen him: yet notwithſtanding the King commanded he ſhould be taken and ſlaine; whereof beeing aduertiſed by the Queene mother, vpon whoſe word hee was chiefely entred into the Citie; hee went forth verie earely in the morning, ſeeming for to goe a hunting, and ſo eſcaped: Beeing purſued in vaine by the Kings men which hee had ſent after him. Many knights and among others D. Iohn Nugnes de Lara, deteſting the Kings treachery, and withal ill affected to him, followed D. Iohn, and beganne new troubles troubles in the Realme of Caſtille. The Duke of Brittaine gaue them leaue to end A their quarrels, and carried away his ſpouſe into Brittaine. The Queene mother, with the Archbiſhop of Saint Iames, and the Biſhops of Palence, Lugo and Mondognedo, labored to pacifie, and content theſe rebels, and in the meane time D. Conſtance the Queene raigning was brought in bed of her ſonne D. Alphonſo, in the city of Salamanca, who was heire of the Realmes of Caſtille and Leon. The King of Caſtille and Ar-Alliance renued betwixt Caſtille and Arragon. ragon, had an enterview at Calatajub, where a promiſe of marriage was made betwixt

D. Leonora of Caſtille, who was but three yeeres old, and the Infant D. Iames of Arragon, and an other marriage was concluded betwixt D. Pedro brother to the King of Caſtille with Donna Maria daughter to the King of Arragon, and there the two Kings made a new league and confederation againſt the Infidels, to make warre againſt whom the B King of Caſtille called an aſſembly of the Eſtates of Caſtille at Vailedolit, from whence D. Pedro the Kings brother was ſent with an army, to beſeege Alcaudete. In the meane time the King ſtaied in Caſtille, making ſeizures, and taking by force certaine caſtles which did belong vnto his Rebels. Afterwards hee came in perſon into Anda-luſia where being arriued at Martos, hee cauſed two knights brethren to bee apprehended, being accuſed for a murther commited on the perſon of Don Iohn Alphonſo de Be-nauides, who had beene ſlaine at Palence, going out of the Kings lodging. Theſe Two brethren executed vniuſtly. two brethren whom they called Peter and Iohn of Carauajal, beeing condemned without any great proofes, to bee caſt downe head-long from the top of the rocke of Martos, as they were at their execution, proteſting of their Innocency, they adiourned Alcaudete taken by the King of Caſtille. the King to appeere before the Tribunal ſeat of Almighty GOD, within thirty daies C after, to giue reaſon of the death which he made them ſuffer vniuſtly: notwithſtanding all this, they were executed.

The King beeing come to the Campe before Alcaudete, hee beganne to be ill, and came to Iaen, where hee remained ſome daies, little regarding his Phyſitions, in the meane time D. Pedro tooke Alcaudete.

Mahumet Aben-Azar the fourth King. of Granado. D

Moores. IN the realme of Granado, the yonger brother hauing diſpoſſeſt the elder, had much ado to be receiued, and obeyed by the Moores Granadins, who reſiſted him, eſpecially Farrachen his brother in law, captaine of Malaga: ſo as Alcaudete could not be releeued.
The new King Mahumet Aben-Azar. Aben-Lemin, being in ſome ſort ſetled and aſſured of his Kingdome, cauſed his brother that was priſoner to be cruelly ſlaine, and ſent to the King D. Fernand being at Iaen, to renue the league which the Kings his predeceſſors had with Caſtille, the which was done, the Infant Don Pedro beeing preſent, where E amongſt other reſolutions, it was concluded, that all together ſhould make warre againſt Ferrachen of Malaga: but the ſodaine death of Don Fernand, croſſed this deſeigne.

Caſtille. The King being laied to ſleepe one afternoone, the thirtieth day from the aſſignati-on which was giuen him by the two gentlemen which were executed at Martos, when as they of his chamber thought that he ſlept more then was fit, they entred into his chamber to ſee what he did, where they found him ſtarke dead, the which was attributed to the Death of King Fernand the fourth. iudgement of God. This vnexpected death which happened in the yeere of our Lord 1312. did much trouble the Realme, he was about fiue and twenty yeeres old, he had raig-ned aboue ſeuenteene, and was buried in the great church at Cordoua.

Nauarre. Soone after Philip the Faire the French King died, leauing the Crowne and Scepter F to Lewis Hutin King of Nauarre his ſonne. Some hold that this King Philip had the like adiournement to the Iudgement of God, in the towne of Bourdeaux, where there was a knight of the Templers executed in his preſence, beeing borne at Naples, who ſeeing
the

A the Pope and the King at a window, to behold this execution, cried out with a loud voice, ſeeing there is no worldly power to the which I may appeale from the ſentence giuen againſt the Templers by the Pope, at the Kings inſtance, I doe adiorne them both to appeere before God within one yeere, ſo as that yeere being 1313. they both died. An. 1313.

Lewis Hutin had then raigned eight yeeres in Nauarre, when he came to the crowne of France, King Philip the faire his father is noted to bee very vnfortunat in many things, both in religion, in the gouernment of his realme, and in his owne houſe. Hee was neuer in peace with the Church of Rome, in the which (although he were the eldeſt ſonne) he cauſed many ſcandales, hauing had deadly hatred with the Popes, eſpecially with Pope Boniface the eight, whom hee forced to die miſerably: hee tranſported the Sea of
B Rome into France, Clement the fifth being made Pope, whom he vſed as a fit inſtrument, in many bad practiſes, as hatred and couetouſneſſe did mooue him: hee did ruine with a ſtrang cruelty and without diſcretion the Order of the Templers, which ſect, admit it were corrupted yet many deſerued better vſage: he falſefied the money in France, exacted tithes of the Clergy, impoſed the tribut called Maletoſts, and the fifth penny vpon all Marchandiſe: he was prodigall without iudgement: hee intreated the Flemings vniuſtly, and their Princes cruelly, by captiuities and vnworthy vexations, not ſparing the innocent virgin Philip daughter to Cont Guy, who had beene giuen him in hoſtage, whom they ſay he cauſed to be ſmothered: others affirme he cauſed her to be poiſoned: ſome ſay ſhee was drowned, with many gentlewomen and maidens of honour which
C did attend her, others, and it may be the moſt certaine, write, that ſhe died for griefe. All this Kings children died young, their wiues were accuſed and conuicted of adultery, and his owne ſuſpected to haue beene vnchaſt: yet he inſtituted the Court of Parliament of Paris, and cauſed the palace to bee built, which may bee numbred amongſt his memorable deeds. The firſt notable act which his ſonne Lewis Hutin did after his comming to the crowne of France, was that he cauſed Enguerrant of Marigni, Earle of Longueuille to be hanged, being accuſed to haue hindred the King from ſubduing the Flemings, but the chiefe occaſion was, for that he was ſuſpected to haue robbed King Philips treaſure, the which was found empty by his children Lewis, Philip and Charles: he had no greater enemy then Charles of Valois the Kings vncle, to whom Enguerrant had once giuen the D lie debating in councel of the bad gouernment of that treaſor as they ſay. There is no great memory of that which paſt in Nauarre, after that King Lewis came to the crowne of France, his daies being but ſhort, for eighteene monthes after he died at Bois de Vincennes, being about foure and twenty yeeres old, leauing Clemence his ſecond wife, daughter to Charles the ſecond King of Naples and ſiſter to King Robert, great with child of a ſonne, which liued not. Hee had married Clemence preſently after the condemnation of his firſt wife Marguerite, by whom hee had one daughter, named Ieanne, who was Queene of Nauarre, but not ſo ſoone: for attending Queene Clemences deliuery, Philip of France, Earle of Poictiers, was choſen Regent of the two Realmes of E France and Nauarre, to gouerne them vntill the child which ſhould bee borne, if it were a male, ſhould come to the age of foureteene yeere; and if it were a daughter, that to her and her ſiſter Ieanne ſhould belong the Realme of Nauarre, with the counties of Champaigne and Brie: but he ſhould ſucceed to the crowne of France, by vertue of the law Salique, as ſome Authors thinke: but rather by the right of cuſtome inueterat amongſt the French, conformable to the order which God hath ſet in nature, and according to the good conſtitutions of ancient Eſtates, not to receiue a woman to the crowne, who is made to bee gouerned, and not to command. Whatſoeuer it were, this law was then practiſed, as well in regard of France, as of Nauarre, whereas Philip the Long, brother to the deceaſed King raigned, in the yeere of our Lord 1315. not without great troubles and tumults amongſt the Nauarrois.

D. Alphonſo the twelfth of that name thirteenth King of Caſtille and foure and thirtith of Leon.

Caſtille.

28 THe vnhappineſſe of the houſe of Caſtille, continued the minority of King D. Alphonſo, being numbred by ſome the eleuenth, by others the twelfth of that name: for the Infant D. Iohn of Caſtille, and D. Iohn Nugnes de Lara (two firebrands which had often put the Realme into combuſtion) hearing of the Kings death, were returned, the one from Valencia, the other out of Portugal, whether they were fled, to ruine the E- B ſtate, after their accuſtomed manner; and ſeeing that the Infant D. Pedro, brother to the deceaſed King, by the conſent of the Queenes, was entred into the mannaging of the affaires, and the gouernment of the King, who was at Auila, they came to Vailledolit, and tould the Queene Donna Maria, that they were well content ſhe ſhould gouerne, but that they would neuer endure that D. Pedro ſhould haue that authority: and from that time they ſought all meanes to get the King into their hands, but the Inhabitants of Auila, and D. Sancho, their Biſhop elect, gaue him ſo good gards as they labored in vaine, being reſolued not to giue the poſſeſſion and gouernment of this yong Prince to any one that were not appointed by the aſſembly of the Eſtates: imitating therein the fide- C lity and care of their anceſtors towards King Alphonſo the ninth, whereof followed great factions, and tyranous ciuil warre throughout the whole realme: the ring-leaders wher- of, on the one ſide, were the Infant D. Pedro, fauored by the Queene Donna Maria: and on the other the Infant D. Iohn, a warlike and factious Prince, who had ioyned vnto him D. Iohn Nugnes, and the fauor of Queene Conſtance the Kings mother: either of them being followed with a great number of knights: a generall aſſembly beeing called at Palence, the deputies of the Eſtates were alſo diuided, ſome deſyring that the Queene D. Maria and her ſonne D. Pedro ſhould haue the gouernment of the King, and others demanding that D. Iohn alone ſhould haue this charge: ſo as there was nothing done, but to animate them more to ruine the publike, and their priuat enemies. The Inhabitants of Auila, without any further reſpect, did acknowledge the Queene Donna Maria and D. D Pedro for tutors to the King, and Gouernors of the realme, yet would they not ſuffer them to lead the King out of their towne. D. Pedro with this aduantage made a progreſſe throughout the Realme, and comming to Toledo, and from thence into Andaluſia, hee was receiued, and generally obeyed.

Iſmael the fifth King of Granado.

Moores.

IT happened that in the realme of Granado, the citizens of Granado had rebelled a- E gainſt King Mahumet Aben-Azar, the murtherer of his brother: the Author of which rebellion was Iſmael, the ſonne of Ferrachen, and of the Kings ſiſter, who held Malaga. He with the fauor of his father, and of a mighty Moore, of the lignage of the Merins of Maroc, called Ozmin, purſued King Mahumet in ſuch ſort, as he ſhut him vp, and beſieged him in the fort of Granado, called Alhambra, the which notwithſtanding was well manned with Moores of his party, and ſtrong both by nature and art. D. Pedro aduertiſed of this diſorder by King Mahumet, who was a friend and ally to Caſtille, and intreated by him to ſuccor him, went to field with ſuch troupes as he could gather togither in ſo ſhort a time: but before he could come to Granado, hee had newes that the fort was yeelded to Iſmael, and that King Mahumet had reſeigned the realme vnto him, beeing contented F to liue in a priuat Eſtate in the towne of Guadix, without any other title, then Lord of Guadix: wherevpon D. Pedro returned, and came and aſſaulted the caſtle of Rute, a verie ſtrong place, and which hee tooke, whileſt that the affaires of Granado were yet in diſorder. Thus King Mahumet was diſpoſſeſt of his crowne, which hee had

The faction of Caſtille which followed D. Iohn, aſſembled in the towne of Sahagun, Caſtile. whereas Queene Conſtance fell ſicke, and died ſo poore, as ſhee had beene forced to ſell her Iewels to feed her. This death and the proſperities of D. Pedro, made D. Iohn to propound ſome meanes for an accord, ſo as he and D. Pedro agreed, that the nouriſhment of the King ſhould be at the diſpoſition of the Queene Donna Maria his grand-mother, & as for the gouernment, it ſhould be common betwixt them two, as it ſeemed the Eſtates of Palence had thought fit: wherewith the Queene D. Maria ſeemed wel pleaſed: for at the leaſt ſhee got by this accord, that the Kings perſon was deliuered vnto her, whom ſhe led to Toro, in the yeere 1314. where ſhe cauſed him to be bred vp, vnder the care of An. 1314.

B a noble Lady, grand-child to Theodore Laſcari, ſometimes Emperor of Greece, her name was Vataça. An other aſſembly of the Eſtates was called at Burgos, where it was decreed that the gouernment of the King, and the regency of the realme ſhould be reduced al into one body betwixt Queene Mary, D. Pedro and D. Iohn, and if any one of them ſhould die, it ſhould remaine to the two others, that did ſuruiue, and to one if two died. There Death of D. Iohn Nugnez de Lara. was an order ſet downe for the augmenting of the reuenues of the crowne, with many other decrees, for the good of the King and realme. D. Iohn Nugnes de Lara died then being come to the aſſembly of the Eſtates, and left no children.

The Eſtates being ended, D. Pedro came into Andaluſia, to aſſiſt Mahumet Aben-Azar, Moores. who held Guadix, being depriued of the realme of Granado, leauing the Queene D. Maria, and the Infant D. Iohn to gouerne in Caſtille. D. Pedro had an incounter vpon the

C frontiers with the Moores, whereas he ſlue a thouſand fiue hundreth, and did afterwards take from them the caſtle of Cambil and Ardauados. Mahumet Aben-Azar, cauſed himſelfe to bee ſtil called King of Granado, notwithſtanding that hee had promiſed to leaue this title to Iſmael: but this victory of D. Pedros freed him, hauing in his company the maiſters of the knights of Saint Iames and Calatraua. They write that among the Moores which were ſlaine vpon the place, there were aboue forty captaines, and almoſt al the floure of Granado, ſo as King Iſmael found himſelfe much weakened, wherefore D. Pedro and his captaines, both this yeere, which was in the yeere of our Lord 1315. An. 1315. and the next following, made many courſes and enterpriſes in the territory of Granado,

D ſpoyling the vignes and fields, euen vnto the city gate, King Iſmael making no reſiſtance in field, nor any purſuite, when as they retired charged with ſpoiles. After this the King of the Moores hauing tried to beſiege Gibraltar, hee was repulſt, and forced to retire with ſhame, by D. Pedros army, the which ſurprized the towne of Belmes, which was ill garded, and then forced the Moores of the caſtle to yeeld, at which ſiege they lay three weekes, and yet no ſuccours came from Granado, (being but eight ſmall leagues from thence) but too late, after the yeelding, which ſuccours returned notwithſtanding without fighting. During this warre Iſmael laboured to haue a truce, or to make an accord with the Chriſtians, but D. Pedro would not harken to it, deſyring to roote that race of Infidels out of Spaine, whereof hee ſeemed to bee in a good way, and in

E great hope, wherefore they anoyed one an other all they could, but King Iſmael ſeeing that in the end he ſhould not be able to ſubſiſt, he ſent to ſolicite the King of Maroc, for the community that was betwixt them in ſect and nation, to aide him to defend the realme of Granado againſt the Chriſtians, the which beeing loſt hee muſt not thinke that euer the Arabians ſhould haue any acceſſe or entry into Europe, for aſſurance of which African Kings armies, he not onely offred Algezire, but alſo al the places which are from Algezire vnto Ronde incluſiuely; Ronde, Caſtellar, Axuneua, Eſtepona, Marbela and others.

29 Whileſt that Chriſtian Princes made warre againſt Infidels, the Clergy and pillers of the Romiſh Church were not well vnited amongſt themſelues. After the

F death of Pope Clement the fifth, the Cardinals beeing aſſembled at Carpentras for the election of a new Pope, they grew into ſo great a fury, as two of them were murthered in the Conclaue, the reſt disbanded, and were diſperſed throughout France, abandoning all, ſeeing there was no meanes to accord them.

King Lewis Hutin who liued then, was very carefull to pacefie this ſcandale, cauſing them all to come to Lions where they held their conclaue in the conuent of Iacobins, where after his death, there was choſen by two and twenty Cardinals, Iames of Oça, Cardinal of Saint Ruffinus, Biſhop of Portuenſe, borne at Cahors, who was called Iohn the two and twentith. This Pope made Sarragoſſa an Archbiſhoprike, and likewiſe Toloufe, and erected Cahors, the place of his birth, to a Biſhoprike.

Sarragoſſe and Tolouſa made Archiſhopriks.

Philip the long, the ſecond of that name, the ſeuen and twentith King of Nauarre.

Nauarre. 30 IT was in the yeere of our Lord 1315. that Philip the long came to the crowne of France and Nauarre, at whoſe entrance they beganne to diſpute of the law Salique: for many Noblemen were of opinion, that Iohn Poſthumus, the ſonne of King Lewis Hutin being dead, the realmes of France and Nauarre did belong by right of ſucceſſion, to Ieanne of France his daughter, by Marguerite of Bourgongne.

Thoſe which held this partie, were Eude Duke of Bourgongne, Lewis Earle of Neuers, Himbert Daulphin of Viennois, and others of their faction: but Philip, who for the diuerſity of opinions and interpretations feared that the law Salique did not extend to the ſucceſſion of Kingdomes, and that poſſibly his right was not grounded thereon, contrary to the cuſtome receiued in all other nations, and eſpecially in Nauarre, whereof he pretended to diſapoint Ieanne the heire thereof as well as of the crowne of France, hauing alſo many noblemen which fauoured him, hee wonne his cauſe, by meanes of greater efficacy then diſputes, and allegations of rights: for hee gaue Ieanne his eldeſt daughter in marriage to the Duke of Bourgongne, and for doury the countie of Bourgongne her patrimonie: To the Earle of Neuers his ſecond called Marguerite, and Marie the third to the Daulphin: in this manner hee ſtopt their mouthes, and made them conſent with the reſt, recoyling Ieanne his Neece not onely from the crowne of France, but alſo from the Realme of Nauarre, which was not to bee queſtioned with. Force and authority preuailed in this point; beſides this Princeſſe was not gratious with the French, by reaſon of her mothers fault. The Nauarrois followed the authority of the French, becauſe they could not withſtand it, and receiued Philip the long for their King, that yeere 1315.

Caſtile. The Kings Tutors, and the Gouernors of the realme of Caſtille were required by the Eſtates in an aſſembly made at Carrion, to giue caution for their gouernment, and to giue an account what they had done, Don Pedro obtained liberty from the Pope to receiue the tithes, and to proclaime a Croiſadoe againſt the Moores, againſt whom hee made violent and ſucceſſull warre, as hath beene ſayd, whereof his fellow Tutor was enuious, and gaue him many croſſes, to draw him into daunger; of ſuch force is enuie, that to preiudice an other, hee doth often bring ruine vnto himſelfe, and to a whole Eſtate.

Thus the affaires of great Monarkes are often times ill mannaged by them, who haue the moſt important charges, who being loth to yeeld one vnto an other, in that which concernes the good and proffit of the State and the ſeruice of their Prince, and being alwaies enuious of the honour and glory of their companions, let ſlippe occaſions, diſſemble, delay, and had rather incurre the perpetuall infamy of traitors, cowards and peruerſe emulators, then to aide one an other in a good action.

Thus did D. Iohn againſt D. Pedro, croſſing and hindring his gallant deſeignes and enterpriſes of warre, vpon the Moores frontiers, whileſt that hee gouerned within the heart of the Realme; ſometimes ſtaying the Nobility of Caſtille and Leon from going to D. Pedro, ſometimes keeping backe the treaſure, and alwaies finding meanes to croſſe him, and to make the people leſſe obedient vnto him, ſo as the Queene Donna Maria, who was a verie wiſe Ladie, and ſaw cleerely into theſe troubles and bad affections, had

A had much toyle to keepe them from an open diuiſion: and did often and wiſely call an aſ-ſembly of the Eſtates to that effect, ſometimes at Vailledolit for the Caſtillans, and ſomtimes at Medina del campo for them of Leon and Extremadura.

In their yeare 1317. Don Berenger Arch-biſhop of Saint Iames, brought a commande- An. 1317.
ment and cenſures from the Pope to put Don Alphonſo de la Cerde in poſſeſſion of the lands and goods which were adiudged by the Arbitrators at Taraſſone: whereunto the Gouernours would not obey, but ſent their reaſons to the Pope, excuſing themſelues, that the Infant had not for his part kept the conditions ſet downe in the ſentence.

31 Don Pedro notwithſtanding the enuie which his vncle Don Iohn bare vnto him, Moores.
did ſtill ſeeke to annoy the Moores all he could, and in the beginning of the yeare, 1319. An. 1319.
B he reſolued to beſeege the towne of Tiſcar, which was held by a Moore, called Mahumet Tiſcar a ſtrong place taken by Don Pedro.
Andon, and was one of the ſtrongeſt places in Spaine: yet the happines, iudgement, and good fortune of Don Pedro were ſuch, as (notwithſtanding it was with great toyle and danger of the ſouldiers) it was taken: whereat euen the Chriſtians themſelues wondered, conſidering the ſtrength of the place. The caſtell made ſome reſiſtance after the taking of the towne, but in the end it yeelded by compoſition: That the Moores which were within it with their Lord Mahumet Andon, ſhould depart with bag and baggage, the which was granted and kept. 4500. ſoules went out of the place, and were put in ſafety into Ba-ça. This did increaſe Don Iohns enuie againſt the proſperities of Don Pedro: wherefore he approched then vnto the fronters, beeing thruſt on by iealouſie, to attempt ſomthing againſt the Moores for his part: hee came to Baena, euen as Don Pedro prepared to be-C ſeege the towne of Belmar, beeing aduertiſed of Don Iohns comming, he marched that way, that they might ioyne their forces together, and do ſome notable exploite in the enemies countrie. Hauing ioyned at Alcaudete with great demonſtrations of loue, they led the armie ioyntly through the champian countrie towards Granado, whereof Don Iohn led the foreward, and hauing taken the caſtell of Yllora, they preſented themſelues before Granado, ſtanding a whole day in battell in the ſight thereof, and yet king Iſmael neuer ſallyed foorth, nor ſent any one forth to skirmiſh with them, nor to diſcouer them.
Don Pedro was of opinion to begin the ſeege, but Don Iohn held it fitteſt to retire, ſaying, that they neither had men enough, nor munition ſufficient to beſeege ſuch a towne:
D whereas the king was in perſon, accompanied with all the flower of his Knights and ſouldiers, and an incredible multitude of people: for at that time they thought there liued within that cittie aboue 200000. perſons, although there were ſcarce 500. heads of families Moores by race, for all the reſt were Chriſtians Renegados or their deſcendants, or Chriſtian ſlaues.

Vpon theſe perſwaſions, the Princes and Captaines began to turne head, hauing changed the order of their march, Don Iohn beeing in the rereward. When as the Granadins ſaw them diſlodge, king Iſmael ſent forth his men, commanding them to charge the ene-mie in the rereward, and to preſſe them in ſuch ſort, as they might put them out of order, if it were poſſible, and that they ſhould not then forget that which the diſcipline of warre
E required: the which they did execute reſolutely, ſo as Don Pedro was forced to turn head with the foreward to ſuccour Don Iohn: but the diſorder was ſuch amongſt Don Pedros men, as he could not bring them to march in Battaile, nor to keep any good order: where he tormented himſelfe in ſuch ſort, hauing his ſword drawne, crying ſometimes to one, ſometimes to another, as he was out of breath, and loſt his ſpeech, and in an inſtant by this ſtrange accident he fell downe dead from his horſe: the which beeing reported to D.
Iohn who ſaw himſelfe in danger, the contrarietie of paſſions wherewith he was afflicted, Strange death of D. Pedro of Caſtile, and D. John his vnkle were of ſuch force, as it happened to him as to his nephew, ſo as looſing his ſpeech, he fel amazed from his horſe. The armie hauing loſt their two Commanders, notwithſtanding any indeauour of the Arch-biſhop of Toledo, and the Maſters of the militarie Or-F ders of S. Iames and Calatraua, all were put to rout, and were purſued farre by the Mores with great ſlaughter; who ſpoyled their campe, and ceaſed their pourſuite: wherefore the Chriſtians which were about Don Pedro that was dead, and Don Iohn drawing towards his end had meanes to eſcape, laying him that was aliue on an horſe, and the dead bodie vpon a moyle: but beeing ſurprized by the night, they which conducted Don Iohn marching

ching more ſlowly then the reſt, ſaw him expire: wherefore fearing to be purſued, they A left the bodie vpon the field, and ſaued themſelues as they could. Don Iohn left one ſon of the ſame name, who for that he had loſt an eye, was called the blind, and was his heire and ſucceſſor in the Segneurie of Biſcay. He ſent to intreat King Iſmael to ſend him his fathers bodie. The King cauſed it to be ſought for, which being found, hee commanded it ſhould be brought to Granado, where it was layed in a great hall, in the fort of Alhambra, vpon a herſe couered with rich cloth of gold, ſetting a great number of waxe tapers about it; the king commanding the Noblemen, and knights Moores, with all the Chriſtian captiues that were in Granado, to pray about the dead body: doing many other ſolemnities after their manner, then he ſent to D. Iohn, that he ſhould ſend for his fathers body, the which he gaue him willingly, being ſorry for the accident which had happened, for B Don Iohn had neuer done him wrong. Don Iohn the blind ſent many Knights thither, to whom the bodie was deliuered, and they were accompanied to the firſt towne of the Chriſtians, then they tooke their way to Cordoua, from thence it was tranſported to Burgos, whither they had carried D. Pedro, and there they were interred. By this vnexpe-cted victorie the affaires of Iſmael king of Granado grew in reputation and force, recouering many places which had beene loſt before. Don Iohn Manuel the ſonne of D. Manuel of Caſtile maintaining the warre againſt the Moores. Towards Murcia Iſmael tooke Hueſcar, Ores, and Galere, places belonging to the Order of Saint Iames: and returning towards Andaluſia, he beſeeged Martos, and tooke it by force, commanding them to kill all they found aliue in it: yet moſt of them ſaued themſelues in the fort, and defended it againſt the Moores, who loſt many of their beſt men: and among others, a Nephew to C Ozmin, the which gaue great occaſion of murmure againſt king Iſmael, for that he did ſo hazard his Nobility in theſe dangerous aſſaults. In this eſtate ſtood the warre of Granado, the which was ended with them of Andaluſia, vpon king Iſmaels returne to Granado, vpon condition, that the Caſtillans, being ready to chuſe new tutors for the yong king D.
Alphonſo, ſhould not receiue nor acknowledge any, but that ſhould confirme this truce.

Caſtile. During theſe alterations, the Q. D. Maria was gone into Portugal, where ſhe had conference with her ſon-in-law, D. Alphonſo Infant of Portugal, at Font d'Aguilero, a Bourg of Cite Roderigo, & frō thence was returned with the yong K. of Caſtile to Toro, where ſhe had newes of the miſerable end of D. Pedro and D. Iohn: whereupon ſhe made preſent diſpatches to all the chiefe townes of the realme, and to the Noblemen, aduertiſing them D of this diſaſter, and exhorting them to continue faithfull vnto the king her grand-child, and not to receiue commandement from any, but from him or them that ſhould bee appointed by the Eſtates: for ſhe feared D. Iohn Manuel, who was rich and mighty, and deſirous of innouations, would ſeeke to attaine to the Regencie of the king and Realme: and ſaw on the other ſide, that D. Iohn the blind had the like ambition: againſt whom the Q.
Tumults in Caſtile for the gouernement. oppoſed D. Philip her ſon, (but as the moſt certaine Authors ſay D. Alphonſo) vncle to the king D. Alphonſo. All theſe Noblemen being well followed, and keeping the field with good troupes of ſoldiers, they were ready to ioyne in battell neere vnto Auila, the which was preuented by D. Iohn Manuel. The Infant D. Fernand de la Cerde, who was Lord Steward to the king, was an actor in theſe ciuill ſeditions, ſo as the realmes of Caſtile, Leon, E and their appurtenances, were full of all exceſſe, violence, and inſolencies, the which continued long: notwithſtanding that the Eſtates had choſen for tutors D. Philip or Don Al-
An. 1320. phonſo, D. Iohn Manuel, and D. Iohn the blind in the yeare 1320. In the meane time the K.
D. Alphonſo to make his name more reuerent amongſt his ſubiects, granted certaine pri-uiledges vnto townes, aud among others, to wall in a Bourg, called Renteria, the which was named Villanoua of Ojarçum in Guipuſcoa, and gaue it the title of a town, & the pri-uiledges of S. Sebaſtian from whence it is but a league diſtant. The Infant D. Philip, or Alphonſo ſware the truce made betwixt the king of Granado and them of Andaluſia, wherein the Cittie of Cordoua was comprehended, for that they had giuen their voice for the gouernement of the King to Don Iohn Manuel, againſt whome King Iſmael was F incenſed.

This yeare D. Iohn, Infant of Arragon, ſon to the king D. Iames the 2. was conſecrated Archb. of Toledo, in the towne of Lerida in Cattelogne, in ſtead of D. Gonçales deceaſed,

A many Prelates beeing preſent, and namely, D. Ximenes de Luna Arch biſhop of Tarragone, and Don Pedro de Luna, firſt Arch-biſhop of Saragoſſa, erected to that dignitie in the yeare 1318. by Pope Iohn the 22. ouer the Biſhops of Pampelona, Calahorra, Calçada, Taraſſone, Hueſca, Segobia, and Albarazin. Theſe two Arch-biſhops of Tarragone and Saragoſſa did watch if the new Arch-biſhop of Toledo, as Primate of Spaine, would march through their Dioceſes with his croſſe before him, to the end they might oppoſe themſelues by vertue of a certaine Conſtitution made at the Councell of Tarragone, and ſo it happened: whereupon the Arch-biſhop of Toledo and all his followers were excommunicated by them, for entring into their Iuriſdictions: which cenſure and excommunication was publiſhed by him of Sarragoſſa: whereat the King Don Iames was
B much offended, and did write vnto the Pope, making great complaints of this manner of proceeding: but being afterwards perſwaded that it was done to maintaine the dignity of the Churches of his Realme, he was pacified. The Primate appealed from their ſentences and proceeded againſt them. The Pope calling the deciding of this queſtion to the Apoſtolicke ſea, abſolued the Arch-biſhop of Toledo in the meane time, and gaue him faculties to abſolue his followers and ſeruants. He was the ſeuen and fiftieth Arch-biſhop of this ſea, Primate of Spaine.

At the ſame time, or litle before, the king of Arragon had giuen to the knights of Monteça, the towne and caſtell of Monteça, wherof this Order carries the name: the firſt Maſter was William of Errill, who tooke the white habite of Calatraua, in the yeare 1319. in C the Monaſterie of Santa Cruz, from the hands of the Commander of Alcaniz. Theſe knights had ſome yeares after faculties to leaue the habite of Ciſteaux, and in ſtead thereof to carrie a redde croſſe vpon their breſts granted by Pope Benedict the thirteenth, and confirmed by Pope Martin the fifth. The King D. Iames by the aduice of his Eſtates held at Tarragone, did make a perpetuall vnion of the Realmes of Arragon and Valencia, and the principalitie of Cattelogne, the which from that time, ſhould not for any occaſion be diſ-united. In which aſſembly, the Infant Don Iames the eldeſt and heire to the Crown, beeing readie to marrie D. Leonora of Caſtile, ſuddenly, by a ſtrange affection, quitting both his wife, and ſo goodly a ſucceſſion as that of the Realme of Arragon, told the D king his father, that he had made a vow neither to marrie nor to raigne: ſo as notwithſtanding all the perſwaſions of the king and Noblemen, he quit his birth-right to his brother D. Alphonſo, after the example of Eſau. Beeing there ſet at liberty by the king, he diſcharged the Eſtates of the oath they had made vnto him, and preſently put on the habite of the Knights of Ieruſalem, the which he receiued by the hands of Bernard Solier, in the preſence of his brother Don Iohn Arch-biſhop of Toledo, Don Symon of Luna, Arch-biſhop of Tarragone, Berenger Biſhop of Vic, and Raymond of Ampurias, Prior of S. Iohn in Cattelogne, and others. Afterwards this ill aduiſed Prince, hauing left this Order, became one of Monteça, where he ſpent his dayes in diſſolutenes and filthy pleaſures. This age afforded other ſuch like examples in Don Iames, eldeſt ſonne to the king of Maiorca,
E and Lewis ſonne to Charles the lymping king of Caſtile, who became Franciſcan Friars: but they were mooued by zeale of religion, and were not giuen to vices. His ſecond brother D. Alphonſo was by the ſame Eſtates of Tarragone acknowledged, and ſworne heire of thoſe kingdomes after the deceaſe of Don Iames their father. This Infant had married D. Thereſa of Entenza, and had in her right the County of Vrgel, which came vnto her by ſucceſſion from her vncle Don Armingol of Cabrera, vpon condition ſhe ſhould marrie the Infant Don Alphonſo: of which marriage was borne at that time Don Pedro, who was king of Arragon, the fourth of that name. At the ſame Eſtates of Arragon were pacified the quarrels betwixt Don Artal of Alagon, and Don Symon Cornel, who kept the Realme in diuiſion: and that according to the aduice and order of the Magiſtrate called the Iuſtice Maior of Arragon, called Symon Peres of Salanoua, the parties ſhould vn-
F dergo the iudgement of the King and his Eſtates. Doubtleſſe the authority of this Magiſtrate at that time was great, who might both cenſure the King and the Eſtates, and appoint them a place, and admit them that did aſſiſt, or reiect them.

33. Iames heire of Arragon quits his inheritance

But returning to the affaires of Caſtile, the election of Don Iohn of Arragon to the Arch-biſhoppricke of Toledo, did not much pleaſe the Queene D. Maria, fearing hee would Caſtille.

would not greatly fauour D. Alphonſo king of Caſtile, but would alwaies hold the partie of Don Manuel his brother-in-law, who was a mighty Prince in Caſtile, and wonderfull factious: but the Pope aſſured the contrarie, and paſt his election: and to ſpeake the truth he neuer ſupported D. Iohn Manuel in any action that was preiudiciall to the King, although that Toledo and the iuriſdiction thereof were in his gouernement, by reaſon of the tutelage: ſo as they fell to ſuch debate, as Pope Iohn was forced to ſend a Cardinal Legate into Spaine, to reconcile them, and to bring the Archbiſhop into his ſea, the which he had abandoned. The Queene D. Maria hauing called the Eſtates at Palence, in the yeare 1322. as ſhe prepared her ſelfe to go thither, ſhe fell ſicke at Vailledolit, wherof ſhe dyed, to the great griefe of all good men: for by her wiſedome and bountie, ſhe had bene the ſupport and onely defence of Spaine, againſt the rebellious and ambitious deſires of Princes and Noblemen, wherein ſhe laboured wonderfully, with great happineſſe and commendable ſucceſſe. The young king and the Realme were depriued of this ſupport, for the which he ſoone after ſmarted. The Queenes bodie was layed in the Monaſterie of las Huelgas at Vailledolit, which ſhe had cauſed to be built, hauing alſo founded in her time that of Saint Paul in the ſame towne, and that of the preaching Friars at Toro, with others. We read as a memorable thing, vpon the religious exerciſes, and concerning the diuine ſeruice, in the Conſtitutions of D. Iohn Arch biſhop of Toledo then liuing, that the Prieſts do offer the Hoſtie at the leaſt foure times in the yere, and that after Morning prayer.

An. 1322. Death of Q. D. Mary of Caſtile.

The ſame yeare the Eſtates beeing aſſembled in the towne of Siracuſa in Sicile, the king Don Frederick cauſed his ſonne Don Pedro to be crowned king with him, and they raigned together in that Iland. Don Pedro did afterwards marrie Izabel daughter to Iohn King of Bohemia, or of Henry Duke of Carinthia, as ſome ſay. It was at ſuch time as the expedition was made for the conqueſt of Sardinia, whereof D. Alphonſo, Infant of Arragon, was Generall by the reſolution of the Eſtates, held at Gyrone, and in conſideration of the ſubuention giuen by them for the charges of that warre. We haue ſayd before, that the Ilands of Sardinia and Corſica had beene giuen in fee by Pope Beniface the eight vnto Don Iames King of Arragon, and to his ſucceſſors males or females paying a certain rent to the Church of Rome, for an acknowledgement of Soueraignetie, and that hee ſhould conquer them at his owne perill. The ſame donation had beene confirmed by Pope Benedict in the yeare 1304. to the ſame king Don Iames, and facultie giuen him to leauie the tythes for this conqueſt, and a Legate appointed to aſſiſt therein: but it was deferred by reaſon of other lets. The reaſons which moued the Popes to make this donation, were their paſſions and hatred againſt the common-weales of Genoua and Piſa, who commanded in thoſe Ilands: but the pretext was, that theſe Ilands lying in the Mediterranean ſea, as a barre betwixt Affricke and Italy, diuiding it from the North to the South, they entertained the Potentates of Italy, eſpecially theſe two common-weales of Genoua and Piſa, who were then very ſtrong at ſea, in continuall quarrels and warre, moſt pernitious for Chriſtendome: fighting for the poſſeſſion thereof, with great effuſion of bloud, and waſting of their forces and treaſures, the which they ſhould haue employed in better occaſions, againſt the Infidels, vnder this colour, the fame of the Caſtillans and Arragonois and of their Princes being then great, it ſeemed expedient for the ſuppreſſing of all iealouſie and quarrell betwixt the Geneuois and Piſans, to take from them the right of theſe Ilands, and to transferre them to a greater power, which might be able to keep and defend them from the inuaſions of Sarraſins and Arabians, who ſtill made ſome breach there. The conqueſt therefore of the Iland of Sardinia beeing vndertaken in the time of Pope Iohn the 22. ſitting in Auignon, by this king D. Iames the 2. there were many ſhips of warre and burthen prepared, as well in a port called Fangoſo, vnder Tortoſa, at the mouth of Ebro, as at Barcelona, Tarragone, Valencia & other places of that coaſt, wherin they ſpent much time, whileſt that the king D. Iames tooke his fourth wife Eclyſende ſiſter to Othon of Moncada, a woman of good yeares: and he made D. Pedro his ſon Earle of Ribagorça and Ampurias, the laſt Earle Mangolin being dead without children. And for that the enterpriſe ſeemed difficult, by reaſon of the Piſans power, who enioyed the Iland, and had newly made a peace with the Geneuois, the king of Arragon did ſollicite

A Pope Iohn the 22. by his Ambaſſador Vidal of Villanoua, to aſſiſt him in this warre with his meanes and fauour, to the Princes of Italy: but this Pope beeing diſtaſted by certaine Cardinals which fauored the Piſans, ſought to diuert this enterpriſe all he could: exhorting the king of Arragon rather to purſue his right by Iuſtice, then by armes: notwithſtanding the fleete beeing in a manner readie to ſet ſayle, and the king perſiſted in his reſolution, and bound himſelfe to pay great tributes vnto the Church. At that time the chiefe men in the Iland were Brancaleon d'Oria, and Hugues Vicont of Baſſi: this laſt being corrupted by the king of Arragon, ſhewed himſelfe an enemy to the Piſans, and began the war of Sardinia with happie ſucceſſe. The king drew vnto his partie Guelphe Earle of Donoratico, Kinſman to Cardinall Luke Fieſco, and ſuddenly ſent Dalmais Vicount of B Rocabertin, and his vncle Girard, Bertrand of Caſtelet, and Hugh of S. Paix Cattelans, with 200. horſe, and 2000. foot, to fortifie his partiſans in the Iland. Whileſt that the armie aſſembled in the port of Fangoſo, where there met about the end of Iune, in the yeare 1233. ſixty gallies, and 20. ſhips armed, and aboue twice as many other veſſels carrying victuals and baggage. The Infant D. Alphonſo parted with his fleet, vnder the conduct of Franciſco Carroço Admirall, and came with a good wind to the port of S. Marke, neere vnto the ruines of the ancient cittie of Sulſi, a Colony of the Carthaginians. The ſouldiers beeing landed, began to preſſe the towne from the Church, in the which were Barnabas d'Oria ſonne to Brancaleon and other Captaines, who after long reſiſtance yeelded it to the Infant D. Alphonſo. The citties of Cailleri, Egliſe, Aquafredda, Iojoſa-
C guarda, Orguilos, Oleaſtro, Quirrano, Patra and other places, held good for the Piſans: whileſt they battered the towne of Egliſe, the Admirall Franciſco Carroſo, with 20. gallies beſeeged the port of Cailleri, and Dalmais Vicount of Rocabertin by land, ſeazed vppon an hill which commanded the caſtell, or fort of that citty: but this place was releeued by Manfroy ſonne to Regnier, one of the Earles of Donoratico, who came to Terranoua with 25. gallies of Piſa, and ſome number of ſouldiers, the which hauing landed at Decimo, a Bourg ſo called, for that it is ten myles from Cailleri: by the fauour of this armie, he gathered together a great number of Sardes, and fortified himſelfe in ſuch ſort, as hee preſumed to offer battaile to the Arragonois. Thoſe that were before the towne of Egliſe were wonderfully afflicted with ſickneſſe, which grew through the bad diſpoſition of the D ayre of Sardinia, and euen the Infant D. Alphonſo was in danger of death, yet perſiſting at the ſeege, the towne beeing preſt by force, and want of victuals, it was yeelded, hauing held out eight moneths: during the which many dyed through the infection of the peſtilent ayre, Don Artal de Luna, and his ſonne of the ſame name, Gambault of Beneuent D'almais of Chaſtelnoua, Girard of Rocabertin, Gillebert Centillas, Pedro Querault, Raymond Berenger Ceruillon, Raymond Alleman, Galcerand S. Paix, and Raymond of Cardona, all men of note: ſo as the taking of the towne of Egliſe, coſt the Arragonois deare. After this exploit, the Infant D. Alphonſo led the armie to the ſeege of Cailleri, againſt whome Manfroy aduanced with thoſe Piſans which he had brought, and ſome Sardes gathered together, where there was a fierce and bloudie battell: but the Arragonois had the victorie,
E hauing loſt D. Alleman de Luna, nephew to D. Symon de Luna Arch biſhop of Tarragone, who was much lamented: Manfroy being wounded, ſaued himſelfe in the fort of Cailleri: and at that inſtant there arriued 18. gallies of ſupplies to the Infant D. Alphonſo from Barcelona. Wherefore the towne and fort of Cailleri were more ſtraightly and violently battered then before, ſo as the beſeeged beeing reduced to great extremities, following the aduiſe of Manfroy their Captaine, and by his leading, made a ſudden ſally foorth with all their horſe, (among the which were 500. ſouldiers, the beſt and moſt reſolute ſpirits among all the Piſans) and charged the Arragonois army, with great terrour and amazement: yet through the diligence of the Infant and his Captaines, the enemy was repulſed, with the loſſe of three hundred horſe. Here Manfroy was grieuouſly wounded
F againe, whereof, and for griefe of this laſt loſſe, he died ſoone after; the which draue the beſeeged into ſuch deſpaire, that hauing aduertiſed the Piſans of their eſtate, and they ſending to demand a peace of the king D. Iames, beeing at Barcelona, by the meanes and negotiation of Brancaleon D'Oria, they came to compoſition vppon theſe conditions: That the citty and caſtell of Cailleri ſhould bee yeelded vp to the Infant, and the priſoners of either either part deliuered; which citty and caſtell ſhould be deliuered againe vnto the Piſans, A vppon condition, that they ſhould hold it, and all they enioyed in Sardinia, in fee and homage of the crowne of Arragon; Yea ſome Authors among the Arragonois ſay, that the citty it ſelfe of Piſa, and that it ſhould be lawfull for the Piſans to trafficke in Cattelogne and Arragon, and to haue a Conſull in the citty of Barcelona. Theſe things being accorded and performed, the Infant D. Alphonſo gaue many caſtels, lands and reuenues to Noblemen and Gentlemen which had ſerued faithfully and valiantly in this warre, in the which many gallies of Majorca had continued. He left D. Philip de Salces Gouernour of Sardinia, and Commander of the men of warre, and D. Berenger Carroſo, ſonne to Don Francis, to command the gallies which were left there for the guard of the Iland. Hauing thus diſpoſed of the affaires, the army imbarked at Saint Macaire, and ſayled with their B Generall D. Alphonſo towards Barcelona, where they arriued with a proſperous wind, a-

An. 1324. bout the beginning of Auguſt, in the yeare 1324. There were great ſignes of ioy made at the landing of this victorious armie, and thankſ-giuing vnto God in the citty of Barcelona; but ſome write, that the king Don Iames going foorth to meet his ſonne triumphing and full of glorie, for the warre of Sardinia ſo happily ended, ſeeing him attired in the habit of a Sarde, he grew ſad, and would not ſpeake vnto him, vntill hee had taken a more ſeemely garment: whereofore in the midſt of this pompe, the Infant put on his coate of armes, and then the king his father imbraced him, and honored him much, ſaying aloud, that he tooke great delight to ſee him attired like the Commander of a victorious warre, and not in the habite of a ſlaue. After the conqueſt of Sardinia, the king D. Iames was ſollicited by Caſtruccio Caſtracani, gouerning at that time at Luca, to make the expedition C of Corſica againſt the Geneuois, promiſing that he would prouide them ſuch worke in Italy, as the enterpriſe of that Iland ſhould be eaſie: but Barnabas d'Oria, who was then in fauour with the King D. Iames, diuerted him, ſhewing that it ſhould bee more expedient and profitable, to practiſe the chiefe Noblemen of Corſica, and to draw them to his ſeruice. The affaires of Sardinia continued not long quiet, as we will ſhew: but it is neceſſary to relate firſt what paſt in the other parts of Spaine, during theſe wars and conqueſts of the Arragonois.

Portugal. 35 In Portugal there was then erected the Order of Knights of Chriſtus, by Buls from Pope Iohn in the yeare 1320. by the which it was receiued into the protection of the A-
Order of Chriſtus in Portugal. poſtolike ſea of Rome, and the towne of Caſtro Marin aſſigned for the chiefe of this Or- D der, being neere vnto the Mores, and ſince the conuent was tranſported to Touar. The knights of this Order carry a red croſſe ſplit and opened by the foure branches, with a white line, ſo as one croſſe makes two, the one red, the other white. The election of the Maſter belongs to 13. perſons: that is, the Prior, the Commander maior, the Treaſurer, the Secretary, and nine Commanders. The election was made, euery one of theſe 13. giuing his voyce; the which being publikely pronounced, he that had moſt voices was choſen Maſter. The firſt was D. Gil Martines, who had beene Maſter of the militarie Order of Auis. The elect is bound (ſwearing in the Priors hands) to promiſe to bee in fauour with the Pope, and the Church of Rome, and to preſent himſelfe vnto the King, to do him the E homage of fealty. The Commanders of this Order, are, the Prior, the great Commander, the Treaſurer, Secretary, Commander of Arquin, of Rodano, Proença, Olallas, Caſtilejo, Sanacheyra, Prucos, Segura, Lardoça, and Deroſmanichal. Since there hath beene added the Commanderies of S. Michel, and S. Mary in the Ilands, by the king Don
An. 1323. Manuel. In the yeare 1323. the king D. Denis endowed this Order with priuiledges fit for Genealogie of Portugall. the dignity thereof, and the ornament of his religion. The ſame yeare D. Beatrix wife to the Infant D. Alphonſo, was brought in bed of a ſon in the city of Coimbra, who was named Peter, and raigned after his Grandfather and father: This king Denis, was in ſo great eſteeme among the Portugals, as they haue a Prouerbe in vſe at this day: El Rey D. Denis, que fiz quanto quiz, that is to ſay, The king D. Denis who did all he would. It is as well by reaſon of the inſtitution of theſe militarie Orders, as of many foundations and remem- F brances he left of him: as the Monaſterie of S. Francis of Portalegre, and the Monaſterie of Nuns of the Order of Ciſteaux, or S. Bernard: of S. Denis, of Odiuela a league and a halfe from Lisbone, where he appointed his body ſhould be interred: and other publike workes,

A workes, as causeys, towers, castels, walles, fortifications, and reparations of townes without number. By him the new street of Lisbone, so much esteemed in Portugall, was made, as also the castels of Serpa, Moura, Oliuencia, Campo maior, Argela and the fortresse: that of Portalegre, Odiana, Marbari, the castell of Abibe, Alegrete, Monches, Monfort, Beyros, Arroyolos, Hebora monte, Bosba, Villauicioſa, Montcarraz, Redondo, Model, Beja, Geromena, Sabugal, Alfayates, Castelrubio, Villamaior, Castellobon, Castellomejor, Almeida, Castelmendo, and Pinel, most of the which were walled in by this king. He did also wall in Braga, Guimaranes, Miranda of Duero, with the Castell of Monçon, and Caraſtolo. He built new Muja, Saluueterre, Montargel, Atalaya, Acerceyra, and many others, which we will omit for breuities sake. The king Don Denis
B spent his time, and employed his treasure in such things. He had some warre against Castile in fauour of the rebels and otherwise, as we haue formerly related: and moreouer, against his owne brother, whom he spoiled of his lands, forcing him to retire into Castile to his wiues kindred. Towards the end of his dayes, there was no good agreement betwixt him and his sonne Don Alphonso: for the sonne bred such a reuolt and sedition throughout the whole Realme, as he was often in armes against the father, and readie to giue battell, neere to Coimbra, Saint Iren, Albaran and else-where, beeing thrust on by flatterers and counsellors of iniquity: which disorders Queene Izabel, a Princesse full of piety, did happily repaire, and preuented the effusion of bloud, praying continually vnto
C God for concord betwixt the father and sonne, the which shee obtayned before the decease of the king her husband, which was in the yeare 1325. hauing raigned 45. yeares, nine moneths, and 5. dayes, and the 64. of his age. He dyed at S. Iren, and was interred in the Monasterie of S. Denis of Oduielas, as hee had ordayned by his testament, by the which he gaue 140000. lyures of money then currant in Portugall, to be distributed to poore hospitals, monasteries, widowes, orphelins, marrying of maydens, redemption of prisoners, and such like, at the discretion of the Queene his wife, and the Executors of his testament. Besides, his lawfull children, he had by one, or by diuers concubines, Don Alphonse, the beginner of the family of Albuquerque, Don Pedro, who gaue himselfe to studie, and hath compiled a Volume of the great Houses of Spayne, D. Iohn, and D.
D Fernand, one daughter that was maried to D. Iohn de la Cerde, and one daughter a Nun.

Piety of the Queen Izabel.

An. 1325.

Death of the king D. Denis.

This holy Queene Izabel, daughter to Don Pedro the third king of Arragon, and of Donna Constance daughter to Manfroy king of Naples, was married beeing but eleuen yeares old, and carried her selfe so wisely and religiously, as she was admired and honoured of all men: she shewed in her royall estate a wonderfull humilitie and modestie: shee laboured with her hands to auoyde idlenesse, and what shee made shee gaue away for Gods sake, wherein shee did not spare her meanes which were otherwise great: fasting and prayer were her delights, and she was in continuall anguish for her sins, and for her peoples: she serued God as she had beene instructed, by gifts, offerings, Masses, and suffrages without measure. Finally, she was so giuen to contemplation, and to the spirit, as she E tooke no delight in any thing that pleased the sences: shee fledde and forsooke (as much as possibly shee could) all royall Pallaces, beeing the Magazine of delights, and of peruerse affections, so as the king Don Denis who was of a contrarie disposition, made small account of her, giuing himselfe often to vnlawfull and lustfull loues, by whome hee had children, the which this good and vertuous Queene caused to bee bredde vp as her owne, although shee were wonderfully afflicted to see this bad course of the King her husband; fearing, and rightly, that God would punish him: for this consideration she did pray continually for his amendment, which happened in the end. The K. D. Denis did oft vse her roughly, wherein she shewed such patience, as she neuer vsed any word of complaint, but only prayed to God to let him vnderstand the truth: yea when she was in a manner chased from his presence, and retired to her house at Alenguer, by reason of the quar-
F rels betwixt the father and the son, whereof the minions of the Court layd all the blame vpon her, perswading the k. that she intertayned them, against all likelihood of truth. Shee did wonderfully esteem the Orders of begging Friars, thinking that their estate was the most perfect among the Christians, and therefore shee gaue as well to them within the realme as without. She built the monastery of S. Claire the royal of Coimbra, she finished the houſe of the Innocents at S. Iren, the which was begunne by D. Martin Biſhop of la Garde: and did the like to the Monaſterie of Almoſter of Nunnes, the which was begun by a Lady called D. Berenguela Ayres: and after the deceaſe of the King her husband, ſhee gaue herſelfe wholy to a religious life, and tooke vpon her the habit of S. Claire, which ſhe vſed euer after: ſhe ſould her Iewels, and conuerted them into Ornaments and veſſels to ſerue churches, the which ſhe gaue to many Monaſteries. Shee went vnknowne on foot to viſit the Sepulcher of S. Iames, asking almes, and paſt her dayes in like workes with great zeale: ſhe dyed in the towne of Eſtremos, whether ſhe went to mediate a peace betwixt her ſonne and the king of Caſtile her grand-child, borne of her daughter. Beſides theſe aboue-named workes, ſhe had built at Torreſnouas a Monaſterie of repentants, and at Leyra an hoſpitall of poore baſhfull men. Her body was carried to Coimbra, and layd in the Monaſterie of Santa Cruz. The apparitions which the Spaniards write happened vnto her in her life time, and at her death, with ſuch like things, are the impoſtures of Monkes of thoſe times.

Caſtile. 36 As for the affaires of Caſtile, wee find, that after the deceaſe of the Queene D. Maria, (who by her wiſedome preuented many miſchiefes) the troubles grew greater then euer: all Iuſtice ceaſed, and the moſt inſolent were moſt in credit. King Don Alphonſo, although he were young, was much diſcontented at theſe diſorders, and ſought to redreſſe them, but he was not obeyed: ſo as by reaſon of the violences, tyrannies, ruine of places, murthers, and other ſuch wickedneſſe, which then raigned, he ſaw his ſubiects abandon their houſes, and retire into Arragon, Nauarre, Portugall and elſe-where, there to ſeeke peace and reſt: the Gouernours were the cauſe of all theſe miſeries, vſing the people of their Iuriſdictions tyrannouſly, beeing in perpetuall diſcord among themſelues. Thoſe that were of the priuie Councell aduiſed him to ſeaze vppon the places belonging to D. Blanche his Couſin, daughter to the deceaſed Don Pedro, the which were in the hands of Garſilaço de la Vega, in the name of Donna Maria of Arragon her mother: for that (ſayd they) it was not fit the King of Arragon ſhould meddle much in the affaires of Caſtile, nor that he ſhould know all the vlcers of that kingdome, the which hee did, more then was conuenient, by the meanes of theſe places, and vnder colour to procure the good of Donna Blanche his Grand-child, watching in the meane time to make his profit with the preiudice of Caſtile.

He which was moſt vehement in this Councell, was Don Garſilaço himſelfe, beeing Marin Maior of Caſtile. Don Iohn of Arragon Arch-biſhop of Toledo, was by that reaſon ſuſpected of them, hauing for his chiefe aduerſarie Don Iohn Manuel, one of the Kings tutors, who had his gouernement in the Country of Toledo, and againſt whoſe diſordinate deſires, the Arch biſhop of Toledo, (a better ſeruant to the King then they eſteemed him) had alwaies oppoſed himſelfe. So as they treated ſecretly with the king to take the royall ſeales from him, for they held it dangerous, that an Arragonois ſhould be Chancelor of the Realme; who by reaſon of that dignity was priuie to all that was treated and reſolued in the kings Councell.

Seales taken from the Arch-biſhop of Toledo.

According to this reſolution, there was an occaſion offered: The Arch-biſhop beeing in the Kings Pallace, and beeing demanded of the affaires of the Biſhoppricke, touching the Eſtate, and the kings reuenues, hee excuſed himſelfe vppon the actions of Don Iohn Manuel his brother-in-law, who was there preſent, who anſwered very peremptorily for himſelfe, ſo as there were bitter words betwixt them in the Kings preſence. For this cauſe ſoone after the ſeales were taken away, and giuen to Don Garcylaço de la Vega: whereat the Arch-biſhop Don Iohn beeing much diſcontented, hee neuer ceaſed vntill hee had exchanged his Arch-biſhoppricke of Toledo, with that of Tarragone, cauſing Don Iohn de Luna, to be aduanced to the Archiepiſcopall dignitie of Toledo, and Primacie of Spaine by Pope Iohn.

1326. 37 In the meane time came the yeare 1326. when as the King tooke vppon him the gouernement of his Realme, at a Parlament held at Vailledolit, whereas D. Philip or Alphonſo, Don Iohn Manuel, and Don Iohn the Blind were diſcharged of their adminiſtration, which they had managed with great ſcandall. There did the king ſweare to obſerue the fundamentall Lawes of the Realme, and to adminiſter Iuſtice, maintaining euery

A euery one in his eſtate, goods, and honour. To whome alſo the Deputies of the Eſtates did ſweare fidelitie, and offered the rights and ordinarie ſeruices due vnto the Crowne. This done, the King did chooſe two wiſe Knights to bee of his Councell of State, Don Garcylaço de la Vega, aboue-named, and Alnar Nugnes Oſorio: and for his treaſure a Iew called Ioſeph of Ecchia, to whome he gaue the Superintendencie of the Cuſtomes, Impoſts, Rents and Reuenues of the Realme. Oth reciprocal betwixt the K. and his ſubiects

In the diſpoſition whereof, hee did not gouerne himſelfe by the aduice of Don Iohn Manuel, nor Don Iohn the Blind, nor did much eſteeme them: whereat beeing iealous and diſcontented, they parted from Vailledolit without taking any leaue of the King, and made a league together at Cigales. The king was ſoone aduertiſed hereof, and did
B in few dayes breake this plot, making himſelfe ſure to Donna Conſtance Manuel, daughter to Don Iohn Manuel at Vailledolit: but this marriage tooke no effect: and he gaue vnto Don Iohn Manuel, (to draw him vnto him) the gouernement of the fronter. Thus was Don Iohn the Blind abandoned, ſo as hee was more incenſed then before: this Prince entertayned ſuch bad deſſeignes, as his end was miſerable. Hee ſought to marrie Donna Blanche daughter to Don Pedro of Caſtile, to the end hee might enioy the places which ſhee held vppon the frontier of Arragon, and from thence make warre againſt the King Don Alphonſo: Hee made a league with the new King of Portugall againſt him, and attempted all meanes to annoy his Prince, notwithſtanding that the king Don Alphonſo tryed al waies to pacifie him, ſo as he was forced to vſe more violent remedies.

C 38 During theſe home-bred troubles of Caſtile, Iſmael king of Granado was ſlaine by his ſubiects, vppon this occaſion. Among the priſoners which the Moores had brought from Martos, there was a Chriſtian woman, exceeding fayre, who fell into the hands of the kings Couſin, ſonne to the Gouernour of Algezire, who was called Mahumet. This priſoner beeing ſeene by king Iſmael, he grew ſo in loue with her, as he demanded her of Mahumet: who yeelding more vnto his deſires, then to the reſpect hee ought vnto his Prince, refuſed him plainely: whereupon the king gaue him many bitter and threatning words: Mahumet either for feare or diſdaine, to haue beene threatened with iniurious words, layed a plot with Ozmin, who was already much diſcontented for the death of his ſonne, whome they had ſo little ſpared at the aſſault of the rocke of Martos, Moores.
D and reſolued together to kill king Iſmael, and to place in the royall Seate of Granado, a Moore called Mahumet Aben Alhamar, or the Vermeil, who deſcended from the firſt king of Granado, and carried the ſame name, ſaying, that the Crowne belonged more rightly to him, then to Iſmael, who was allyed to theſe kings onely by the Mothers ſide. This king was called to this Councell, and they made a new confederacie with Ozmin, who ſhould bee readie in Armes with his friends and ſeruants, whileſt that Mahumet, ſonne to the Gouernour of Algezire, with his father, and another brother, ſhould execute the murther vpon the perſon of king Iſmael. Theſe things beeing concluded, the Conſpirators entred into Alhambra of Granado, and addreſſing themſelues vnto the king, they told him, that they had ſome matters of great importance to impart vnto him,
E deſiring him to gitte them audience in ſome retired place: the which the king willingly graunted, who beeing entred into a gallerie, the father and the ſonne marching before the king, and his brother after, with the great Prouoſt, or Conſtable of Granado, whom they called Alguazil Maior, the two foremoſt turned ſuddenly vppon the king, and gaue him two wounds vpon the head. The Alguazil ſeeing this diſloyaltie, drew his ſword to defend his king, and fought ſo valiantly againſt theſe two traytors, father and ſonne, as hee made them giue backe vnto the end of the gallerie, and to enter into a chamber, into the which hee ſhut them, notwithſtanding that the brother, who was the third murtherer, had wounded him behind in foure places, who returning afterwards againſt the king, gaue him a mortall wound in the ſhoulder. The Alguazil hauing ſhut vp the two
F firſt, came againſt the third, and forced him to enter into an old cabinet, into the which he alſo ſhut him. Beeing thus freed of the traytors, this faithfull ſeruant came vnto the king, whom he found grieuouſly wounded, and almoſt fainting, hauing taken him in his armes, and carried him into a chamber, in the which were his mother, widow to Ferrachen and his wiues, where leauing the cure and care of him to them, hee went into the pallace Iſmael king of Granado ſlaine by his owne ſeruant.

Court of Alhambra, where as he found many, as well of the conſpirators, as of others which might haue heard the noyſe, and vnderſtood ſomething of the fact, to whome hee ſayd, there was no great danger, and that the kings wounds were light: and hauing called ſome vnto him, whom he knew faithfull vnto the king, he entred with them into thoſe places where as the traytors were ſhut, and cut off their heads: then he returned into the chamber where as the king was in the Phiſitions and Surgeons hands, but there was no more hope of life: wherefore going out of Alhambra, he met with Ozmin, who came running at this noyſe well accompanied, and asked him of the kings life. The Alguazil diſſembling the truth, anſwered, that all was well, intreating him to accompany him to ſeaze vpon thoſe that were ſuſpected to be of this conſpiracie, the which Ozmin durſt not refuſe: thus of a traytor he became faithfull by conſtraint, and running through the citty of Granado, they ſeazed vpon all the friends and ſeruants of the murtherer Mahumet, and brought them into Alhambra, where in the heate they were put to death. In the meane time king Iſmael breathed his laſt, hauing raigned by force about nine yeares: this was in the yeare 1322. and the 705. of the Arabians.

TO him ſucceeded his ſonne Mahomet the ſixt, by the meanes and dexteritie of the Prouoſt or Alquazil, who hauing ſeene the kings death, and keeping it as ſecret as he could, he gaue the Noblemen and Knights Granadins to vnderſtand, that they ſhould ſhew themſelues in armes before the caſtell, to receiue the Kings commandements, and namely Ozmin, who was not well aſſured in his conſcience, but ſtudied what hee ſhould do: yet he came well followed. The Nobility being aſſembled, the Alguazil being faithfull to the king, euen after his death, taking the eldeſt of three ſons (which he had left) in his armes, he went out of Alhambra, and declared the truth vnto the aſſembly, how the king had benne ſlaine by the treaſon of Mahumet, and what had followed, and preſenting the child, who was but twelue yeares old, vnto the knights, hee recommended him vnto them, and perſwaded them to acknowledge him for their lawfull king. Ozmin who was of greateſt authority among them, was wonderfully perplext, and wauering in his diſcourſes, yet thinking that he ſhould rule this Infant better then any other, he was the firſt that gaue his conſent, ſaying, Mahumet is our king. His voyce was allowed by all that were preſent, and the brute both of Iſmaels death, and of the election of Mahumet his ſonne, was diſperſed through the town: and ſoone after the new king was led through the ſtreets and ſhewed vnto the Granadins, who were diſcontented at this ſudden change, as well by reaſon of the King murthered, as of the haſty election of his ſonne, beeing ſo young, yet it held good: but notwithſtanding that this yong Mahumet obtained the Realme by a lawfull meanes, yet his end was miſerable, being a familiar thing among the Arabians, one to ſpoyle and diſpoſſeſſe an other by wicked and cruell treaſons, as a people alwaies void of all good gouernement. Such of the conſpirators as were not taken, fled: among the which was Mahumet Aben-Athamar, who in time returned to Granado, and raigned, as we ſhall hereafter ſhew.

Nauarre. What paſt in Nauarre during the raigne of Philip the Long, who dyed about the time of theſe reuolutions in Granado, we find not any thing worth the relating: only mention is made of a Gouernor for the king in that Realme, called Ponce of Morentain, whome ſome terme Lord of Roſſillon: others, Vicont of Anay, of Arnaud of Barbaſtan Biſhop of Pampelona, D. Martin of Ayuar Standard-bearer of the Realme, D. Inigo Peres de Rada a Knight, D. Iohn Arnaud of Eſpeleta, of the Abbot of Lerin, of D. Martin Iuanes of Vrris, D. Pedro Ximenes of Mirafuentes, D. Garcia Martines of Ollaoqui, Diego Martines of Vrris, and Michel Martines of Arletta, knights, who made the Councell of ſtate of that Realme.

Charles

Charles the Faire, the firſt of that name, and eight and twentith King of Nauarre.

TO King Philip, being dead at Fontainbleau without heires male, ſucceeded in the yeere of our Lord 1321. his brother Charles the Faire, in the two Realmes of France and Nauarre, to the preiudice of his Neece Ieanne, the lawfull heire of Nauarre. Charles when hee was farre from theſe ſucceſſions, had put away Blanche his wife, being conuicted of adultery, as hath beene ſayd, whoſe life was ſaued, for that the marriage might bee diſſolued without death, by the Popes authority, for that there was betwixt the husband and the wife a ſpiritual alliance, which had made the marriage vnlawfull, ſo as by conſequent there was no adultery, but ſimple fornication, for that Charles the Faire was Godfather to Blanche. Wherefore hee tooke to his ſecond wife the daughter of Henry of Luxembourg Emperor, and ſiſter to Iohn King of Bohemia, hauing firſt demaunded in marriage Donna Violant of Arragon, daughter to the King D. Iames the ſecond, but could not obtaine her, for ſome reaſons. In the beginning of King Charles his raigne, Ponce Morantin beeing Gouernor and Viceroy of the country, the caſtle of Gorriti was ſurprized by them of Guipuſcoa from the Nauarrois: for this and other conſiderations, the Gouernor hauing raiſed an army of Nauarrois and French, entred into Guipuſcoa, being reſolued to put the country to fire and ſword: and beginning by Tolouſa in Guipuſcoa, he burned Beraſtegui, and did incredible harm, ſparing neither holy nor prophane. Marching towards Beotiba, the Nauarrois army was ſtayed at the foot of the mountaines by the Guipuſcoans, who were gathered together to the number of eight hundred (ſome ſay eight thouſand) in armes, vnder the conduct of Gil Lopes of Ognes, Lord of Larrea, and were ſeized vpon the Straights and places of aduantage, where the army ſhould paſſe, hauing planted ſome peaſants vpon the tops of the rockes and precipices, who when the body of the army beeing aduanced in theſe difficult paſſages, ſhould march, they ſhould roule downe pipes full of ſtones, which they had prepared, the which ouerthrew many, and beſides put ſuch a diſorder in the army, as that eight hundred armed men which were vpon the paſſages, preſented themſelues, and put all their enemies to rout, with a wonderfull ſlaughter, and tooke all their baggage: the which was eſteemed worth a hundred thouſand liuers, a matter almoſt incredible, conſidering the inequality of their forces, but it is witneſſed, not onely by the records of Guipuſcoa, but alſo of Nauarre, ſo dangerous is the hazard of warre, and ſo great an aduantage doth the ſcituation of a country giue, when it is well choſen by a wiſe and expert captaine.

Defeat of Nauarrois in Guipuſcoa.

Amongſt the men of marke that were ſlaine in the Nauarrois army, were found the Viceroys brother, and D. Michel Sanches Alaues, D. Martin of Roncal, Martin Vrtiz, the Lord of Roſobel, Iohn Corboran of Leer, Iohn Martines of Medrano, Iohn Henriques, D. Martin de la Pegna, Pero Sotes, Iohn Lopes of Vrros Merin Major of the Mountaine, Peter of Ayuar, Martin of Vrſa ſonne to Martin of Ayuar, who carried the Standard royal, and others to the number of fiue and fifty knights. Amongſt the priſoners was Martin of Ayuar and an other ſonne of his. The number of ſouldiars that were ſlaine, was very great: and of this incounter they doe at this day ſing ſongs, both in Caſtille and Guipuſcoa, in their country language. Here of grew other warres betwixt Caſtille and Nauarre.

Men of account ſlaine.

In the yeere of our Lord 1324. Queene Mary beeing dead, King Charles married the third time with Ieanne daughter to Lewis of France, Earle of Eureux, and ſiſter to Philip of Eureux, who was King of Nauarre ſoone after, by reaſon of his wife Ieanne, daughter to King Lewis Hutin, heire of Nauarre. The ſame yeere Nauarette of Pampelone, by the permiſſion of Charles, was begunne to be re-edefied, hauing beene ruined eight and forty Third marriage of King Charles.

forty yeeres before by Robert Earle of Arthois. This King Charles the Faire, nor his brother Philip the Long, neuer came into Nauarre, by reaſon whereof many grew inſolent, eſpecially vpon the frontiers, againſt the will of their Prince, the Gouernors, and Viceroys winking at them, who regarded more their owne priuat proffit and paſſions then the honour and ſeruice of their Maiſter; wherefore betwixt the Nauarrois and Arragonois, of the frontiers of Sangueſſa Real, and other bordering places, notwithſtanding any accord the Kings had made, there was ſtil roades and ſpoyling one of an other, ſo as the Arragonois were forced to keepe great garriſons in thoſe parts, whereof the King of Arragon complayned to King Charles, who commanded ſtill that they ſhould liue like neighbours and friends, but he was not obeyed.

Princes abſence cauſe of liberty and diſorder.

In the yeere of our Lord 1328. King Charles died at Bois de Vincennes, hauing raigned ſeuen yeeres and ſome daies, leauing Queene Ieanne his wife with child, who was deliuered of a daughter, called Blanche, married afterwards to Philip Duke of Orleance, hee was buried at Saint Denis in France. After the death of this King, there were great quarrels and diuiſions both in France and Nauarre. In France, for that during the Queenes being with child Edward King of England, ſonne to Iſabel of France, ſiſter to the deceaſed King maintained that the Gouernment did belong to him: On the other ſide Philip ſonne to Charles Earle of Valois, couſin germaine to the three laſt Kings, ſaid that the regency did belong to him, as next heire to the crowne of France, which did not belong but to males deſcended of males, and was regent. The Queene beeing deliuered at Bois de Vincennes of a daughter, Philip, of Regent was proclaymed King, againſt the pretenſions of Edward King of England, who was put by, vnder collour of the Salique law. Herevpon followed great and continuall warres, which had in a manner ruined France, if God had not releeued it. Theſe contended a doubtfull title, which belonged to neither of them, if the crowne had fallne to the femal: for Ieanne daughter to King Lewis Hutin, did precede them al.

2 The death of King Charles beeing knowne in Nauarre, this nation, which was accuſtomed to liue licentiouſly, for that they had not a long time ſeene the face of their Kings, thought now they had gotten liberty to doe what they pleaſed; ſo as they beganne to mutine and to raiſe ſeditions in all the townes of the realme. In the end they diſcharged their choller vpon the Iewes who were diſperſed throughout the townes in great numbers, and very odious to the Chriſtians, as well by reaſon of the diuerſity of religion, as for their exceſſiue vſury, whereby they did exhauſt al their ſubſtance: wherefore they beganne to ſpoile them in all places as enemies, at Eſtella, Viana, Funes, Marzilla and many other places, with ſo great cruelty, and greedineſſe to get, as it is ſayd they ſlue aboue tenne thouſand perſons of that ſect, men, women and little children. To redreſſe which exceſſe, and to take away the cauſe, the Eſtates of Nauarre aſſembled at Puenta la Reyna, to reſolue without any reſpect, to whom the realme of Nauarre belonged, whether to Edward King of England or to D. Ieanne Counteſſe of Eureux. The Eſtates were referred to Pampelone, the chiefe towne of the Realme, whereas their opinions were diuers, many holding that King Edward ſhould haue the Realme of Nauarre, as grandchild (borne of the daughter) to Queene Ieanne, daughter to King Henry, rather then the Counteſſe of Eureux, in regard of the ſex: others, and with more reaſon, held for the Counteſſe, who was in the ſame degree, but daughter to a ſonne, and heire to Queene Ieanne, and preuailed, drawing the reſt to their opinion.

Maſſacre of Iewes in Nauarre.

3 Thus was Ieanne Counteſſe of Eureux declared the true and lawfull Queene of Nauarre, in the yeere of our Lord 1328. the realme hauing beene vacant about foure monthes. And vntill that ſhe and Cont Philip her husband, ſhould come and take poſſeſſion of the Realm, they declared Regent and Viceroy D. Iohn Corboran of Leet, Standard-bearer of the realme, and Iohn Martines of Medrano.

PHilip Earle of Eureux, ſonne to Lewis of France, who was ſonne to Philip the third, ſonne to the King Saint Lewis, is counted by vs for the nine and twentith King of Nauarre, the third of that name, and was ſurnamed the noble. As ſoone as the Election was made by the Eſtates of Nauar, they ſent Ambaſſadors to Ph. of Valois the French
B King, to let him vnderſtand the reaſons that the King elected had vnto the realme, which had mooued the Eſtates to make this election; and by the ſame Ambaſſadors they aduertiſed Philip of Eureux and Ieanne his wife thereof, ſommoning them to come and take poſſeſſion of the realme, and to gouerne it. The French King did no way hinder it, wherefore the Kings of Nauarre elect prepared for their voiage, and arriued there about the beginning of the yeere of our Lord 1329. hauing not ſeene a King in their country An. 1329.
of a long time. The Prelats, Knights and wiſe men of the realme before their comming, had ſet downe in writing the conditions wherevnto they would receiue them in the ſucceſſion of the realme, the which before the ſolemnities of the coronation and oth, they preſented vnto Philip and to Ieanne his wife, the which they yeelded willingly
C vnto. The Eſtates beeing aſſembled at Pampelone, theſe conditions were ſworne by them, whereof the principal Articles were.

Articles ſworn by the Kings of Nauarre.

1 Firſt to the Eſtates to maintaine and keepe the rights, lawes, cuſtomes, liberties and preuiledges of the Realme, both written and not written, and whereof they were in poſſeſſion, to them and their ſucceſſors for euer, and not to diminiſh, but rather augment them.

2 That they ſhould diſanull all that had beene done to the preiudice thereof by the Kings their Predeceſſours, and by their Miniſters, without delay, notwithſtanding any let.

3 That for the terme of twelue yeeres to come, they ſhould not coine any money,
D but ſuch as was then currant within the Realme, and that during their liues they ſhould not coine aboue one ſort of new money, and that they ſhould diſtribute part of the reuenues, profits and commodities of the realme vnto the ſubiects.

4 That they ſhould not receiue into their ſeruice aboue foure ſtrangers, but ſhould imploy them of the country.

5 That the forts and garriſons of the realme, ſhould bee giuen to gentlemen borne and dwelling in the Country, and not to any ſtranger: who ſhould doe homage to the Queene, and promiſe for to hold them for her, and for the lawfull heire of the countrie.

6 That they ſhould not exchange nor ingage the realme for any other Eſtat what-

7 That they ſhould not ſell nor ingage any of the reuenues of the crowne, neither ſhould make any law nor ſtatute againſt the realme, nor againſt them that ſhould lawfully ſucceed therein.

8 That to the firſt ſonne which God ſhould giue them, comming to the age of twenty yeeres, they ſhould leaue the Kingdome free and without factions, vpon condition that the Eſtates ſhould pay vnto them for their expences a hundred thouſand Sanchets (which was a peece of gold then currant) or in other French money equiualent.

9 That if God gaue them no children, in that caſe they ſhould leaue the realme after them free, with the forts, in the hands of the Eſtates, to inueſt them to whom by F right it ſhould belong.

10 That if they infring any of theſe Articles, or any part of them, the ſubiects ſhould be quit of their oth of ſubiection which they ought them.

Theſe Articles being promiſed and ſworne by the King and Queene, they were ſollemnly crowned, and the Deputies of the Eſtates, Noblemen and Officers of the crowne tooke their oth of obedience, in the Cathedral church of Pampelone. And afterwards A there were orders ſet downe by the King and Queene for the Gouernment of the Realme: the which being written were ſent into France, and confirmed by King Philip of Valois at Paris the ſame yeere of our Lord 1329. After that time the French Kings had no command in Nauarre, hauing held that realme eight and fifty yeeres vnited to the crowne of France: yet King Philip of Valois, retained of the inheritance of his couſin, the Counteſſe of Bry, and a while after hee gaue them other lands in exchange, yet not of that value.

Genealogy of Nauarre.

Philip and Ieanne King of Nauarre had theſe children following, Charles who ſucceeded in the realme, Philip Earle of Longueuille, Lewis Earle of Beaumont le Royer, and afterwards Duke of Duras, Ieanne married to the vicont of Rohan, Mary Queene of Ar- B ragon, wife to D. Pedro the ceremonious, Blanche Queene of France, laſt wife to Philip of Valois, and Agnes Counteſſe of Foix married to Gaſton Phœbus: ſome of which were borne before their Election, and ſome after. Lewis the third ſonne of this marriage was Earle of Beaumont in Normandie, for that he married the heire of that houſe, by whom he had one ſonne called Charles of Beaumont, who married the daughter of the Vicont of Maulcon in Nauar, and was the firſt Standard-bearer of the realm, through the fauour of King Charles his vncle. Of this Charles of Beaumont is deſcended the houſe of Beaumont in Nauarre. After the death of the Counteſſe of Beaumont, Lewis married Ieanne daughter and heire to the Duke of Duras, vpon the coaſt of Macedonia, towards the Adriatike ſea, and was intitled Duke.

Beginning of the houſe of Beaumont in Nauarre.

Theſe things being done in Nauarre, King Philip being aduertiſed that the French C King marched with a mighty army againſt the Flemings rebelled, who had chaſed away Lewis their Earle, and committed many inſolencies againſt the Kings Officers, both in words and deeds: he parted out of Nauarre, beeing loath to faile him at need who had ſo kindly ſuffred him to take poſſeſſion of the Realme, leauing the Queene D. Ieanne to gouerne Nauarre. He was preſent at the battaile which King Philip of Valois gaue the Flemings at Caſſel, whereas twenty thouſand were ſlaine vpon the place: by meanes whereof Count Lewis was reſtored to his Eſtate, and the Flemings ſubdued. This warre being ended, the King of Nauarre returned into his realme: It was then that the Infant D. Alphonſo de la Cerda, ſonne to D. Fernand, eldeſt ſonne to King D. Alphonſo the Aſtro- loguer, being ill intreated in Caſtille, where he pretended the crowne, made a donation D vnto the crowne of Nauarre, of the rights which he pretended in Guipuſcoa, Alaua, Rioja and other lands, the which had in former times belonged to Nauarre, and were vſurped and retained by the Kings of Caſtille. Some affirme that this donation was made in the yere of our Lord 1330. But howſoeuer, King Philip deſirous to do Iuſtice, & to gouerne his Realm wel, which had great need, and therefore was neceſſary to entertaine peace with his neighbours, made no great account thereof at that time, but ſent Ambaſſadors to D. Alphonſo then raigning in Caſtile, to ſeeke his friendſhip. The Ambaſſadors found the King at Talauera la Reyna, who entertained them well. Their Ambaſſage was, that the Realme hauing many yeeres wanted the Soueraigne Magi- E ſtate, and in a manner abandoned by their Kings, it was no wonder if many things had happened contrarie to the ancient alliances betwixt the houſes of Caſtille and Nauarre, for what did the Viceroys and Gouernors care, beeing ſtrangers (hauing no reſemblance of manners, nor other bond of friendſhip with the Spaniards) how all things went, ſo as they were obeyed in the country, and that they might vaunt they had rather done wrong, then receiued any, keeping continuall garriſons of ſtrangers, ready to commit any inſolencies: whereof God had ſome times ſhewed his Iudgement, euen in the laſt incounter neere vnto Beotibar: where by an extraordinary and miraculous puniſhmen. God had chaſtiſed the negligence of the foure laſt Kings which had held the realme of Nauarre, who had reſpected it ſo little as they had ſcarce looked towards it, yea the two laſt neuer came nere it, which had made the bad to grow more inſolent, and ſo to F continue, vntill that the lawfull heires of the crowne of Nauarre were come to their poſſeſſion, by the deceaſe of King Charles the Faire, Philip Earle of Eureux, husband husband to their true Queene D.Ieanne, being called to raigne, who had ſent this Ambaſſage vnto him, to let him vnderſtand theſe things, as a neighbour Prince and friend, with whom they deſired to entertaine peace and friendſhip, by all good offices which Princes and neighbour Eſtates may receiue one from an other.

The King D.Alphonſo hauing heard this Ambaſſage, fitted vnto the deſeignes of the new Kings of Nauarre, moderating the things which had paſt betwixt theſe two realms, before their Election, anſwered, that hee was glad the Nauarrois had had meanes to recouer them for their Kings, to whom the crowne did by right belong, and that for his part he deſired to entertaine a perpetuall friendſhip with King Philip and Queene Ieanne, and to ſhew it by the effects in any occaſion that ſhould be offred, wherewith he would acquaint his ſubiects, to the end their Kings vaſſals, both Nauarrois and French, ſhould be well intreated in Caſtille, and if any wrong were done them, it ſhould bee repaired: and that they ſhould aduertiſe their Kings on his behalfe, to doe the like in their countries. The Ambaſſadors returning with this anſwere, gaue great contentment to King Philip, who to adminiſter Iuſtice, erected a new Court of Parliament in Nauarre, the which was called New to diſtinguiſh it from the Old, hee and the three Eſtates of the realme naming men, worthy of that charge. The like Ambaſſage was ſent by him into Arragon and Portugal, who were returned with pleaſing anſwers. Matters beeing thus ſetled in a better Eſtate then before, the King and Queene returned into France, leauing for Gouernor a French gentleman, called Henry of Guliac, or of Solibert, but with a more lymited power then former Viceroys and Gouernors. Such was the Eſtate of Nauarre vnto the yeere 1331.

Arragon.

Let vs now returne to the Hiſtory of Arragon, the which we haue left at the new conqueſt of Sardinia, in the which ſoone after the departure of the Infant D.Alphonſo they fel to rebellion, beginning in the towne of Saſſari, the which is one of the greateſt of the Iſland, by the faction of them of the houſe and family of Oria, great and mighty Lords, eſpecially in that towne, whereof the chiefe were Franceſquin, Maſtin, Branca, and Vinciguerra, all of the family of Oria. Theſe with their partiſans hauing ſought many meanes to expell the garriſon of Arragonois which was at Saſſari, in the end they rebelled openly, and by their example, and vpon the firſt oportunity, the Piſans holding the city and caſtle of Caglieri, ſeemed to haue a deſire to doe the like: whereof the King of Arragon beeing aduertiſed, he neglected all other deſeignes, and thought of the preſeruation of this Iſland, which hee had ſubdued with great charge and loſſe: and for the which and for that of Corſica, hee was bound to pay vnto the Pope and to the Sea of Rome, an exceſſiue tribut of two thouſand markes of ſiluer, and to entertaine a certaine number of ſouldiers for the defence of the church.

Sardinia rebels againſt the Arragonois.

The deceaſe of D. Sancho King of Majorça without children, had made him deſirous to ioyne the Iſlands and the Siegneuries which he had enioyed vpon the firme land to his crowne of Arragon, wherefore he had ſent the Infant D. Alphonſo into the counties of Roſſillon and Cerdagne, with forces to ſeize thereon, but he was ſo careful of the affaires of Sardinia, as he did eaſily incline to the requeſt which D.Philip, brother to the deceaſed King of Majorca, made in fauour of his Nephew D.Iames, ſonne to the Infant D.Fernand their brother, who as wee haue ſayd died Prince of Morea: wherefore the realme of Majorca, and the ſucceſſion of the King D. Sancho was left vnto this D.Iames being yet very young, except the right of Soueraignty. Being now forced to ſend an army into Sardinia, to his great charge, the Pope was intreated by the Infant D.Pedro (who was ſent Ambaſſador expreſly to that end by the king his father) being at Auignon, to abate this tribute to fiue hundred markes, and to exempt him from the moity of the ſouldiars pay, wherevnto he was liable by reaſon of the ſame contract, and for the ſayd Iſlands, for the defence of the territories of the church. The Infant D.Pedro was courteouſly receiued by the Pope, and fauourably heard in the conſiſtory, where he obtained abatement of halfe the tribute and of the ſouldiers pay for tenne yeeres, and moreouer to receiue the tithes for two yeeres.

D.Iames King of Majorca, ſecond of that name.

In the meane time the King D. Iames armed twelue gallies in Cattelogne, and ſent thē before to Sardinia, vnder the charge of Bernard Ceſpuiade, to aſſiſt the Arragonois, and others that held for him in the Iſland: Barnabo who had beene faithfull to the King of Arragon, was now dead, whoſe children Caſſan, Galeor, Geoffroy and Brancaleon, ſhewed themſelues enemies vnto him, and ſo in like manner did Federic, Azon and John Maleſpina, Marquiſes, who were rich and of great power in Sardinia: Notwithſtanding that their vncles Chriſtian Spinola, entertained the friendſhip of the King D. Iames, and was acceptable vnto him. Theſe men by a general conſpiracy, had taken armes, in fauour of an army which the Piſan and the Gibiline faction of Genoa did raiſe to ſend into Sardinia, the which was newly increaſed by two and twenty Genoua gallies, which had beene firſt entertained by Frederic King of Sicile, making warre againſt Robert King of Naples, of the which Gaſpar d' Oria was General, who afterwards leauing the party of the Arragonois and Sicilians, and carrying away the King D. Frederickes money, hee ioyned with the Piſans, who made him Admiral of all the fleet. Then beganne there cruel warres betwixt the Cattelans and Geneuois, whom Franciſco Carroſo, Generall of the Gallies of Arragon, and a ſworne enemy to that nation, did puniſh ſeuerly when as he tooke any one of their Pirats. Hauing imbarked certaine troupes of old ſouldiars, Arragonois and Cattelans, he came and preſented himſelfe before the port of Cailleri, about the end of Auguſt, in the yeere 1325. and held the city and fort as it were beſieged.

and

Eſtates of Arragon.

This yeere the Eſtates were called at Sarragoſſa in Arragon, where were preſent D. Pedro de Luna, Archbiſhop of Sarragoſſa, D. Sancho de Arragon the Kings brother: Don Iames of Arragon of Xerica, D. Symon Cornel, D. Pero Martines de Luna, D. Blaſco Maza de Verga, D. Iohn Ximenes of Vrrea, Don Symon de Foſſes, Don Raymond of Perault, Don Martin Gil of Atroſil, Don Gombald Tramaſſet, Don William Entenza, Don Michel Peres Gottorio, Don Gil Garces of Atroſil, Don Michel Gurrea, Don Blaſco Maza de Celles, Don Symon Peres de Punia, Don Artorella of Ortis, Don Garcia Peres pegna acuta, D. Pedro Ruis de Sagra, D. Ponce Ignes Entenza, D. Lope Ximenes de Luna, D. Pedro de Laino, D. Michel Peres Zapata, with other Noblemen and Knights that were preſent, and the Deputies of D. Blaſco de Alagon, of D. Lopes de Luna, of D. Alphonſo Fernand of Ixar, and others abſent, and the Deputies of the townes and commonalties hauing any place in the ſayd Eſtates. There D. Pedro, ſonne to the Infant D. Alphonſo, was ſworne preſumptiue heire, and ſucceſſor to the crowne, after the deceaſe of the Grandfather and father: the which was then decreed and practiſed, for that Don Pedro Earle of Ribagorça and Ampurias did maintaine that if his brother D. Alphonſo ſhould die before their father, the realme did belong to him by right of Proximity, wherefore he refuſed then to ſweare vnto his Nephew, but hee did afterwards. There the Articles of the generall priuiledges were confirmed, the which had beene accorded and ſworne by the deceaſed King Don Pedro, and it was ordained for a law, that no free man ſhould be put to the racke, and that confiſcations ſhould not bee allowed, but in caſes of coyning, and high treaſon.

Right of repreſentation.

The young King of Majorca beeing vnder the Gouernment of his vncle D. Philip, was there made ſure to Don Conſtance of Arragon, daughter to the Infant Don Alphonſo, hee beeing eleuen yeeres old, and ſhe but fiue: theſe were the chiefe actes of this aſſembly.

Battaile at ſea before Cailleri.

The Piſans army, led by Gaſpar d'Oria, approaching neere vnto the Gulph of Cailleri, whereas Franciſco Carroça laie with the army of Arragon, there was a cruel and dangerous battaile for the looſer, for their reſts were vp: but the Arragonois were victors, who by this memorable victory, tooke a part of the towne of Cailleri, called Stampace; beeing aſſaulted at ſea by Franciſco Carroço, and at Land by Raymond of Peralta. Soone after there fell ſo daungerous a ſedition betwixt the Land and Sea-forces of the Arragonois, as both captaines and ſouldiars ranne like madde men one vpon an other with greater obſtinacy then againſt their enemies, and many were cruelly ſlaine: ſo as this rage had in a manner ruined the Arragonois Eſtate in that Iſland, but God had otherwiſe decreed: for the Piſans beeing very weake, and brought low with the long precedent warres, which they had ſuſtained both againſt the Geneuois and Arragonois, did quit the Iſland of Sardinia, by an agreement made betwixt the

King

A King of Arragon, and their Senat, in the yeere of our Lord 1326. ſo as the towne of Saſſari was yeelded to the Arragonois, the Marquis of Maleſpina ſurceaſing, and promiſing to be obedient to the King and his Lieutenants. Thus the Kings of Arragon became Lords of Sardinia without contradiction, for a time: but in their owne country of Cattelogne, and Valencia, there wanted no troubles and quarrels, which grew amongſt the Noblemen of the country, beeing an ordinary thing, that whereas there is great ſtore of idle Nobilitie, there is alwaies warre and contention, to the oppreſſion of the people.

Troubles and quarrels where is much idle Nobility.

D. Arnaud Roger Earle of Palliars, and Raymund Folch Vicount of Cardona, were then in armes one againſt an other, by reaſon of a murther committed on the perſon of D.
B William Queralt, whereof the Earle of Palliars was accuſed, and either of them hauing a great troupe of friends and Partiſans, held all Cattelogne in confuſion, with their horrible inſolencies. In the country of Valencia, D. Iames Lord of Xetica, was in quarrell with his owne mother, D. Beatrix of Loria, and would haue put her out of her lands and poſſeſſions, ſo as this quarrel did in a manner diuide the King and his ſonne D. Alphonſo, the one ſupporting the mother, and the other the ſonne. Theſe quarrels were reconciled with much paine: for when as the Souveraigne Magiſtrate doth medle in his ſubiects quarrels, and of a Iudge becomes a Partiſan, his authority leanes to the one ſide, and the remedies are more difficult, and leſſe effectuall. D. Iames of Xerica, during theſe troubles, married the widowe Queene of D. Sancho of Majorca, whoſe name was Mary, ſiſter to Robert King of Naples, a woman of an vnchaſt life.

The ſouveraigne ſhould a maies be a Iudge and not a Partiſan in his ſubiects quarrels.

C In the yeere of our Lord 1327. Don Iames the Young of Majorca did homage for the Iſlands, and Land which hee held, as well in Cattelogne, as on this ſide the mountaines to the King of Arragon, as to his ſoueraigne, in the preſence of Don Philip his vncle and Tutor, Don Pedro and Don Raymond Berenger, the Kings children, Caſton of Moncade, Biſhoppe of Hueſca, and many others: and within few daies after Don Iames King of Arragon died in the towne of Barcelona, hauing raigned ſixe and thirty yeeres, foure monthes and a halfe. A Prince rather inclined to good then bad, to whom learning and learned men owe the foundation of the Vniuerſitie of Lerida, in Cattelogne, ſeuen and twenty yeeres before his death, which hee endowed with D many preuiledges, and would haue that alone throughout all his dominions, forbidding all other ſchooles but for Grammer and Logicke. His bodie lies buried in the Monaſtery of Santa Cruz.

D. Alphonſo the fourth of that name, the twelfth King of Arragon.

E DOn Alphonſo his ſonne, ſucceeded him, to whom was giuen the ſurname of pittifull. Hee was not the eldeſt, but that Don Iames his eldeſt brother, quitting in his fathers life time, the ſucceſſion of the crowne of Arragon, as wee haue ſaid, entred and inueſted himſelfe into that Order of Knights of Saint Iohn of Ieruſalem: Hee was King. 6

This was his iſſue; During his fathers life, hee married firſt Donna Thereſa of Entenza, Counteſſe heire of Vrgell, by whom hee had the Infant Don Pedro, borne at ſeuen monthes end, who was King, and the Infant Don Iames Earle of Vrgell and Vicont of Ajar, and moreouer foure other ſonnes and one daughter, who died verie yong, F and are interred at Sarragoſſa in Saint Francis Church with their mother Donna Conſtance, who was wife vnto Don Iames the laſt King of Majorca. Donna Thereſa had not the title of a Queene, for that ſhee died foure daies before the King Don Iames her father in lawe. Beeing King, hee tooke to his ſecond wife, Donna Leonora of Caſtille, daughter to the King Don Fernand the fourth, who was mother to Don Fernand Marquiſſe of Tortoça, who married at Ebora, Donna Maria of Portugal, daughter to the King Don Pedro, and was ſlaine by the commaundement of his brother raigning in Arragon; hee had alſo by her Don Iohn, who died in Caſtille, Don Alphonſo beeing come to the crowne, hee gaue the countrie of Vrgel and other Lands, to his ſecond ſonne Don Iames.

Comming to Saragoſſa where the generall Eſtates were aſſembled, hee tooke and receiued a reciprocall oth according to the auncient cuſtome of Kings his predeceſſors, and was crowned King in the yeere of our Lord 1328. in which yeere were crowned in Nauarre Philip of Eureux, in France Philip of Valois, and at Rome the Emperour Lewis of Bauaria. At this Coronation of King Don Alphonſo did aſſiſt with the Deputies of the Eſtates, Don Iames of Arragon Lord of Xerica, Don Pedro Iuge of Arborea, Don Raymond Folc Vicont of Cardona, Don Arnauld Roger of Mataplane Earle of Palliars, Don Alphonſo Fernandes of Arragon Lord of Ixar, Don Lope de Luna, Don William and Berenger Angleſol, Don Iohn Ximenes of Vrrea, Don Pedro Cornel, Don William Ceruillon, Don Othon of Moncado, and Don Othon of Foſſes, with other Noblemen. There were aboue two hundred and fiftie Knights made with the ceremonies accuſtomed in thoſe times, where there was preſent the Ambaſſadors of Iohn King of Bohemia, called Henry Bomallia, who brought a promiſe from his Maiſter that hee would come into Spaine, to make warre againſt the Moores, with the King of Arragon, the which he did not.

The warre which Arragon made againſt the Infidells, was more in Affrike then in Spaine: for the oportunity of Sardinia did inuite the Kings of Arragon for to raiſe their powers and make warre againſt the Moores, which commaunded at Tunes, Bugie, and Tremeſſen: Notwithſtanding beeing mutined againe by the perſwaſion of the Geneuois, this yeere a truce was made betwixt the King of Arragon, and Abubacar pettie King of Tunes and Bugia, and Abduris Hamen King of Tremeſſen. The Court beeing at Daroca, about the end of this yeere, an Edict was made, that for tenne yeeres, no towne, caſtle, gouernment, nor any cuſtomes, impoſts or places of Iuſtice whatſoeuer, ſhould bee giuen or alyenated from the reuenewes of the Crowne: the which the King ſeeking afterwardes for to breake, it cauſed great alterations and tumults, Don Iames King of Maiorca did a new homage to King D. Alphonſo for his realme, and other lands, ſubmitting himſelfe to the Souveraignty of Arragon.

Reuolts in Sardinia.

After all theſe things they thought to prouide for the reuolts of Sardinia, whereas Barnabe d' Oria, beeing young and ill aduiſed, had ſurprized Caſtle Geneuois, and chaſed away the garriſons which were placed there by his vncles Caſſan and Galeaz, whom Azon Marquiſſe of Maleſpina did aide and ſupport: but Caſſan and Galeaz Oria, hauing incountred Azon and his troupes, marching towards Caſtel Geneuois, they fought with them, defeated them, and tooke Azon priſoner: wee ſhall hereafter make mention of theſe new broiles, but we muſt now returne to the affaires of Caſtille and other countries of Spaine.

Caſtile.

The league made in Caſtille, betwixt Don Iohn Manuel, and Don Iohn the Blinde, beeing broken, by a treaty of a future marriage, betwixt the King and D. Conſtance Manuel: D. Iohn Manuel went vnto his Gouernment vpon the frontier, whereunto hee had beene in conſideration thereof newly aduanced, and remained at Cordoua, from whence hee iſſued forth one daie, beeing aduertiſed of a great troupe of Moores Granadins, led by Ozmin, who was choſen gouernor of the King and Realme of Granado, and Commaunder of the ſouldiars about Antiquero, the which hee charged ſodainely, and made a great and cruell ſlaughter of them, vpon the riuer of Guadalforce, beeing aſſiſted by the holie Knights of Saint Iaimes, Calatraua, Alcantara and their Maiſters.

Moores.

Ozmin had beene choſen to this dignity by the Granadins, who were ignorant, or at leaſt diſſembled, how ill hee had beene affected to the deceaſed king Iſmael, ſeeing the power of the realme in his hands, hee brake the truce without any cauſe, and ſurprized Rute beeing il garded by the Chriſtians, beeing lawfull for him to diſpoſe of the affaires of the kingdome, during the minority of king Mahumet, ſeeing there was not any man of authority to contradict him, the good & faithful Alguazil, or Prouoſt (who had put the

by all milde courſes to winne D. Iohn the Blinde, ſeeming to haue a deſire to giue him contentment and to honour him, wherevnto D. Iohn yeelded, and beeing inuited to dine Treachery of D. Alphonſo King of Caſtile againſt his bloud.
with the King vpon All Saints day, thinking to make good cheere, he was by the Kings commandement murthered, with two Knights his vaſſalls, called Garci Fernandes Sarmiento, and Lopes Aluares of Hermoſilla. After this fact (to vnſeemely for a King who is the mirror of Iuſtice) they made his proceſſe; who beeing layed vpon a Beere
B couered with a blacke cloath, the King condemned him as a traitor and did confiſcate all his goods, and vnited them to the crowne, hauing aboue foureſcore townes and caſtles. The deceaſed left one only daughter his heire, the which was conueied into France by her Gouerneſſe, and came to Bayone, which at that time was held by the Engliſh, and was afterwards wife to D. Iohns Nugnes de Lara. D. Maria Diaz de Haro, D. Iohns mother, who was then in the Monaſtery of Peralez, hearing of his death, and wanting good councel, by the perſwaſion of D. Garcilaço de la Vega ſould the Siegneury of Biſcay Biſcay ſold to King D. Alphonſo.
to the King, the which was not confiſcable, for it was her patrimony: yet the King did not enioy it very ſoone, neither is the ſale very certaine. The murther of D. Iohn the Blinde, comming to the knowledge of D. Iohn Manuel, made him to ſtand vpon his
C gard: wherefore leauing the fronter, and the Kings forces, hee retired to a caſtle of his called Chincilla, where he fortefied himſelfe, from whence the King could not of a long time draw him, notwithſtanding all promiſes and aſſurances: wherefore hee himſelfe came to Seuille, where hee made a ſtately entry, and beganne to make warre againſt the Moores, with great preparation both by land and ſea. Thether came a ſonne of Ozmins, called Abraham the drinker for that hee drunke wine, who offered for to doe him ſeruice, and hee was entertained. On the other ſide D. Iohn Manuell gaue the King of Granado to vnderſtand, that he was at his commaundement, and that hee would giue him great meanes to anoy the King of Caſtile.

D In the yeere of our Lord 1328. King Don Alphonſo did beſeege Oluera, and tooke it by compoſition, to haue their liues and goods ſaued: in the meane time beeing aduertiſed that the Moores of Ayamont, fearing a ſeege, ſent their wiues, and vnneceſſary people towards Ronde, hee ſent the troupes of Seuile to ſpoile them, and to take this multitude priſoners. Ruy Gonçales of Mancanedo, who led this companie, did effect what hee had in charge, but ſeeking to attempt Ayamont, the Moores within it made a verie furious ſallie vpon him and his troupes, and put them all to rout, tooke away their Standard, and ſlue him that carried it: and but for the Archbiſhop of Seuile, who made it good, and withſtood the force of the Barbarians with ſome knights and ſouldiars which hee had rallied together, they had beene all cut in E peeces. The King after the taking of Oluera came to Pruna, a ſtrong towne, which had a caſtle impregnable: yet there were two Chriſtians, which did aſſure the King that they had a meanes to take it. The King hauing giuen them a good troupe, and ſet them to worke, he gaue a generall aſſault to the towne with his whole army, ſo as the beſeeged holding themſelues aſſured of the caſtle, left onely two or three Moores Pruna taken by the Chriſtians.
to gard it, and went all to defend the towne: whereby the two Chriſtians, with them that followed them had meanes to ſeize vpon the caſtle, the vnexpected taking whereof made the towne to be preſently yeelded.

From thence the Chriſtian armie went to Ayamont, and to the tower of Alfaquin, the which yeelded without any reſiſtance. Alphonſo Geoffrey Tenorio, Admirall at Sea, gaue battaile to two and twentie gallies, ſome belonging to the King of F Granado, and ſome to him of Maroc, the which he vanquiſhed, and tooke twelue hundred Moores; hee ſunke foure gallies, and carried away three: And for this yeere beeing 1328. there was no other exploite of warre done, by reaſon of the rayne, and winter approching, which made the King returne to Seuile. An. 1328.

Don Iohn Manuel reuolted againſt his King and country, by reaſon of the diſloyalty vſed to D. Iohn the blinde, and allied himſelfe with the Kings of Arragon and Granado, being the more incenſed with the newes hee had, that the King treated a marriage with the Infanta of Portugal, leauing his daughter D. Conſtance Manuel, to whom hee was made ſure, as we haue ſayd. The Infanta was called Mary, and was daughter to King D. Alphonſo, who had in the yeere of our Lord 1325. ſucceeded King Denis his father in the realme of Portugal, and of D. Beatrix of Caſtille, ſiſter to the King D. Fernand the fourth, ſo as ſhe was couſin Germaine to his future Spouſe.

D. Alphonſo the fourth of that name, the ſeuenth King of Portugal.

Portugal. THis D. Alphonſo of Portugall was ſurnamed the braue, for that he was valiant and generous. He was about fiue and thirty yeeres old, when hee beganne to raigne, and had beene made ſure to D. Beatrix, beeing but eight yeeres old, and was married at the age of ſixteene. They had many children, whereof Alphonſo, Denis and Iohn died young: then they had D. Pedro, who was King after his father, Donna Maria, of whoſe marriage with King D. Alphonſo of Caſtille, we haue begunne to ſpeake, and D. Leonora or Eluira, who was wife to D. Pedro the Ceremonious, King of Arragon. This King D. Alphonſo had beene very turbulent in his fathers life time, maintayning certaine rebels againſt him: yet beeing come vnto the crowne, hee became vertuous, and a great fauorer of Iuſtice, making many good lawes, and gouerning his realme wiſely: yet hee had great quarrels with D. Alphonſo Sanches his baſtard brother, to the great oppreſſion of his ſubiects: for Don Alphonſo Sanches was a braue knight, and could well defend himſelfe, hauing the fauour of the Caſtillians, and of the King of Arragon, who ſought many meanes to reconcile them, but in vaine. The ſubiect of their quarrels was onely iealouſie, conceiued in the heart of King D. Alphonſo, for that King Denis their father had loued this baſtard exceedingly. But in the end the King was Maiſter, neuer ceaſing vntill he had chaſed him into Caſtile, after which he confiſcated his goods, and proceeded againſt him by courſe of Iuſtice.

Genealogy of Portugal.

Caſtille. 9 During the treaty of marriage betwixt D. Maria of Portugal and D. Alphonſo King of Caſtille, D. Iohn Manuel, with the helpe of the Arragonois and Granadins, beganne to ouerrunne the territories of Caſtille, from Almança vnto Pegnafiel, ruining, burning and ſpoyling all they incountred: Then did the King make his well beloued fauorite and councellor, D. Aluar Nugnes Oſorio, Earle of Tranſtamara, Lemos and Sarria, and Lord of Riuiere and Cabrera, for in thoſe daies there was no Earledome hereditary in Caſtille nor Leon, and hereof Spaine doth yet retaine thoſe markes of antiquity, that the children of Noblemen carrying the titles of Dukes, Marquiſes or Earles (which were all perſonall and temporall dignities) dare not take them after the deceaſe of their fathers, without a new permiſſion from the King, except ſome which haue that right by preuiledge.

Dukes, Marquiſes and Earles not hereditary in Spaine.

Hee did this to oppoſe him to D. Iohn Manuel, againſt whom hee ſent D. Garcilaço de la Vega, whileſt that hee remained at Cordoua, and prepared for his future marriage with the Infanta of Portugall: Don Garcilaço comming to Soria, was ill receiued, for the Nobility hauing had a falſe aduertiſment that hee was come thether to carrie many Knights priſoners, they murthered him in Saint Francis Church, beeing at Maſſe with his people. Theſe were the fruites of the Infidelity which the King had vſed againſt Don Iohn the Blinde, a Prince of his owne bloud, by reaſon whereof euerie one grewe very iealous both of him, and of his priuate ſeruants. This murther did much diſpleaſe the King, and incenſed him againſt Don Iohn Manuel more then before.

Murther of Garcilaſo de La Vega.

Hee

A Hee came to Toledo, where hauing aſſembled great forces, hee went and beſeeged Eſcalona. D. Iohn Manuel on the other ſide laied ſiege to Huete, but neither of them preuailed. The marriage with the Infanta of Portugall was in the end concluded, and moreouer D. Blanche, daughter to the deceaſed D. Pedro of Caſtile, the Kings vncle, was accorded to the Infant D. Pedro of Portugal. Pope Iohn beeing aduertiſed of the reuolt of Caſtile, gaue charge to Don Pedro of Toledo, Biſhop of Carthagena, newly made Cardinal, to mediate a peace in the realme, interpoſing his Apoſtolike authority: but hee labored in vaine, for hee found the King ſo incenſed, as hee would not heare of any compoſition with his ſubiects, giuing the Cardinal probable reaſons: wherefore hee made his report vnto the Pope, and diſcharged himſelfe of his B commiſſion.

During theſe troubles, D. Fernand Rodrigues of Bilbao, Prior of Saint Iohn, a great friend to Don Iohn Manuel, cauſed the cities of Toro and Zamora to rebell againſt the King, ſaying that it was by reaſon hee had aduanced D. Aluaro Nugnes Oſorio to the dignity of an Earle: the towne of Vailledolit did the like, whereas Ioſeph of Eccia a Iew, Intendant generall of the impoſts, had like to haue beene ſlaine. Herevpon the King left the ſeege of Eſcalona; and came to Vailledolit: where the inhabitants, beeing animated by the Prior of Saint Iohn, ſhut the gates againſt him: yet beeing come to a parle with Don Iohn Martines de Leyua, Iohn Veles of Gueuara, Fernand Ladron of Rioja, and Ruis Diaz his brother, Pero Rodrigues of Villega, and Garcilaço de la Vega, ſonne to him that had beene ſlaine at Soria: theſe knights and others wrought ſo, as
C the King diſmiſt the Earle Don Aluar Nugnes, and ſo was receiued into the towne, and by the ſame meanes hee made a compoſition with Toro and Zamora; from thence hee went to Ciudad Roderigo, to celebrate his marriage.

Reuolts in Caſtile.

The King is forced to diſmiſſe D. Aluaro his Mignon.

Seeking for to retire out of Don Aluaro's hands, the fortes which hee had giuen vnto him in charge, hee could not recouer them all, and moreouer Don Aluar, beeing diſcontented with this diſgrace, hee preſently went and ioyned with Don Iohn Manuell: wherevpon the King was aduiſed to kill him: And ſeeking a murtherer, and a fit occaſion, hee found a man furniſhed with the quallities of a diſloyall Courtiar: this was Raymyr Flores de Guzman, who notwithſtanding that hee had beene a verie
D great friend to the Earle, offered to diſpatch him, vpon the great promiſes which the King made him: wherefore fayning to bee in diſgace with him hee went vnto the Earle, by whom beeing well entertained, lyuing and lying together, hee had meanes and oportunity to kill him whileſt that the King did celebrate his marriage in Alfayates, and did capitulate with D. Alphonſo King of Portugal, who came in perſon to Font Grimald.

The Court beeing come neere to Medina del Campo, the King was aduertiſed of the death of Count Aluar, to iuſtifie the which hee cauſed his proceſſe to bee made, and condemned him himſelfe ſitting in the ſeat of Iuſtice at Tordehumos: hee cauſed his E body to be burned, and his goods to bee confiſcated as a traitor, whereof Ramir Flores de Guzman, had for his reward, and the price of his friends bloud, which he had ſhed, the caſtle of Beluer, and the towne of Cabreros. Theſe are commonly the fauours of the beſt beloued Courtiers, which abuſe the familiarity of their Kings, or relie to much thereon. King Don Alphonſo perceiuing the miſery whereinto hee did runne, deſired to make a peace with Don Iohn Manuel, but hee laboured in vaine, for the Prior of Saint Iohn vndid all that hee could doe.

The ſame yeere, beeing the yeere of our Lord 1329. the marriage which had beene treated ſome monthes before, betwixt Don Alphonſo King of Arragon and D. Leonora of Caſtile, ſiſter to this King Don Alphonſo of Caſtile, was celebrated at Taraſſone, F whereas both Kings met, beeing accompanied by many Princes, Princeſſes, Prelates and Knights, and the Ambaſſadors of Don Alphonſo King of Portugal. There was the league renued betwixt the three Eſtates of Caſtille, Arragon and Portugal, and decreed not to receiue one an others Rebels, promiſing withall to aſſiſt the King of Caſtille in his warres againſt the Moores, with the forces of Arragon and Portugall:

Arragon. An. 1329.

what iſſue came of this marriage wee haue before related, when as D. Leonora ſaw her ſelfe mother to Don Fernand her firſt ſonne, which was at the end of the yeere, beeing deſirous hee ſhould ſucceed the King his father, ſhee ſought by all meanes to ſhewe her ſelfe a ſtepmother to Don Pedro, her husbands ſonne by his firſt wife, but hee finding it, hee kept himſelfe farre off during his fathers life. Don Pedro for his part was of a rough and ſower diſpoſition. A

As ſoone as the Infant D. Fernand was borne, the King his father gaue him the Marquiſate of Tortoſe and Albarrazin, contrary to the Edict and law of Daroca, whereof wee haue made mention, whereat the Eſtates were much diſcontented, and with them the Infant D. Pedro, Don Pedro de Luna, Archbiſhop of Saragoſſa, Don Michel Gurrea, who was at it were Gouernor of the Realme, a dignity which they were wont to giue to the eldeſt Princes of Arragon, Don Pedro and Symon Gurrea brethren: this laſt was Abbot of Montarragon, Vidal of Villanoua, Garcia de Loris, Michel Zapate, and other Noblemen: yet they were forced to haue patience, for D. Alphonſo King of Arragon ſuffered himſelfe to bee wholy gouerned by D. Leonora: this was the firſt ſubiect of hatred betwixt D. Pedro and her. B

Caſtile. The King of Caſtille beeing much diſcontented for the death of D. Garcilaço de la Vega, came preſently after his marriage to his aunt beeing at Soria, where cauſing informations to bee made againſt the murtherers hee condemned the guiltie to death, and did confiſcate their goods. Hee aſſembled the Eſtates of all his realmes at Madrid, of whom hee obtained a guiſt of great ſummes of Marauidis of gold, to make warre againſt the Moores, who that yeere had ſodainely taken the towne of Priego. D. Iohn Manuel, as well for the marriage betwixt the King of Arragon, and the Infanta of Caſtille, as for that his wife, ſiſter to the King of Arragon, was newly dead, loſt his ſupport on that ſide: yet hee married againe with D. Blanche, daughter to the Infant D. Fernand de la Cerde, younger brother to D. Alphonſo de la Cerde, couſin to D. Iohn Nugnes de Lara, which de Lara married at the ſame time the daughter of D. Iohn the blinde, the heire of Biſcay, who was yet at Bayone, whether ſhee had beene conuaied, when her father was ſlaine, her name was Mary. C

The King beeing preſt to reſiſt the Inuaſions of the Moores, hee found meanes to make a peace with Don Iohn Manuell, to whom he reſtored Donna Conſtance his daughter, whom hee had kept in the caſtle of Toro, and graunted vnto him certaine other conditions, whereby hee pacefied the inteſtin troubles of the realme. Beeing at Vailledolit, hee cauſed Ioſeph of Eccia, the Iew, to yeeld an account of the reuenues of his cuſtomes, and for that there had beene great complainrs made of him, hee tooke that charge from him, ordayning that from thenceforth it ſhould bee diſcharged by Chriſtians, with the title of Treaſorers, and not of Cuſtomers. D

An. 1330. In the yeere of our Lord 1330. the Kings of Caſtille and Portugal, meeting at Font Grimald, renued their alliances and leagues, and did capitulate a new, that the King of Portugal ſhould aſſiſt him of Caſtille, wih fiue hundred horſe for the Moores warre: and then was a marriage celebrated betwixt Don Pedro the Infant of Portugal, and Donna Blanche daughter to Don Pedro of Caſtille. The Rendezuous for the Chriſtians army was appointed at Cordoua, whether the King came with his fiue hundred horſe Portugois: led by the maiſter of the troupes of the Order of Chriſtus: ſo as all things being ready they laied ſiege to Thiebe Hardales. E

Moores. Mahumet King of Granado, who kept himſelfe in a manner alwaies in the caſtle of Alhambra, gaue the whole conduct of the warre to Ozmin, who hauing taken Pruna by treaſon came and lodged with ſix thouſand horſe, and good troupes of foote at Turon, three leagues from Thiebe, ſeeking by his continuall alarmes to diuert the Chriſtians ſeege, making daylie skirmiſhes about the riuer of Guadathiebe, which was the common watering of both armies: notwithſtanding all this, the Chriſtians continued their battery, and the towne was valiantly defended by the Inhabitants, who burned the Engins of battery with wilde fire, and did fruſtrate many of the aſſaylants attempts. F

Stratagem of Ozmin. In the end Ozmin deſirous to raiſe the ſeege, he reſolued to charge the campe with this pollicie. He diuided his army into two, and ſent three thouſand horſes farre about, and by

A by couered places, to charge the Chriſtian army behind, or in flanke, vpon ſigne giuen, whilſt that he with the other three thouſand, and his footmen did ſet vpon them in front, thinking that the whole armie would make head againſt him, and that whileſt they were in fight, the reſt falling vpon them with great cryes, ſhould amaze them, and eaſily diſorder them: but he fayled in this diſſeigne: for the king of Caſtile beeing aduertiſed by his ſpies, that part of the Mores army was disbanded, and that the reſt came againſt him, hee appointed a good ſquadron of horſe to defend the rere, and he with the reſt went to incounter Ozmin, whom he fought withall and repulſed, and had defeated him, if the three thouſand horſe, which he had ſent to charge the armie behind, had not turned head, (finding all things in good order) and come in time to ſuccour Ozmin, which was the
B cauſe he was not wholy defeated. Whileſt they were in fight, the king ſent two thouſand horſe to aſſayle the Mores campe, and to ſpoyle their baggage, the which they effected, bringing away many priſoners.

This ill-ſucceeding enterpriſe was poorely repayred the next day by the Moores, who ſlue about fifty ſouldiers whom they found disbanded about the riuer, and this was all: wherefore they retired, and the ſeege was continued: and then the Moores beeing out of hope of ſuccors, yeelded to haue their liues ſaued. Afterwards Priego and Lagnetta were yeelded, and the forts of Cuenas and Ortexica recouered, which had beene abandoned by the Moores.

With theſe victories king D. Alphonſo returned to Seuile, being much incenſed againſt
C Don Iohn Manuel, who had ſtill ſecret intelligence with the king of Granado, and beeing ill affected to D. Alphonſo, had not ſtirred during the ſeege, notwithſtanding that hee had promiſed to aſſayle the Moores towards Murcia, neither was hee much contented with the Portugois, who left him almoſt at the beginning of the ſeege of Thiebe, and returned to their houſes. By reaſon of theſe infidelities, he reſolued to haue peace with the king of Granado, who ſought it and accepted what he offeeed to his Ambaſſadors at Seuile, that he ſhould pay him twelue thouſand doublons of yearely tribute, and do him homage for his Realme of Granado, ſo as he might be allowed to draw victuals out of the Chriſtians country, paying the twentith penny.

10 The king D. Alphonſo beeing at Seuile without any cares of warre, he gaue him- Caſtile.
D ſelfe to the long-ſought loue of Donna Leonora of Guzman, daughter to Don Pero Nugnes de Guzman, who had beene wife to Don Iohn de Velaſco, whom he enioyed. This Lady (who had not her like for beautie in all Spaine) did ſo gouerne him, as hee did not any thing but by her will, excuſing himſelfe that the Queene Donna Maria, whome hee had married but two yeares before, had no children. Being come from Seuile to Xeres of Badajos, to viſit Queene Elizabeth his Grand-mother, Dowager of Portugall, beeing yet aliue, he found there by chance the Infant D. Alphonſo de la Cerde, that came out of France, who kiſt his hand and yeelded vnto him the right which he pretended to the Realmes of D. Alphonſo de la Cerde quits his intereſt to Caſtile.
Caſtile and Leon, the which he had long diſputed but in vaine. He had the ſame yeare (as E ſome hold) yeelded to Philip king of Nauarre, the intereſt which he had or might pretend as king of Caſtile, to Alaua, Rioja, Guipuſcoa, and other lands adjacent, of the auncient patrimony of Nauarre. The king of Nauarre in recompence gaue him certaine places and penſions, to entertayne his eſtate, and ſo they continued good friends. This D. Alphonſo de la Cerde had married a Lady in France of the bloud Royall, named Malfade, by whom he had two ſonnes, Don Lewis and Don Iohn: this laſt was Earle of Angouleſme, and Conſtable of France, during the raigne of King Iohn, whom the Hiſtories of France, cal Don Iohn of Spaine. Thus Don Alphonſo was prouided for, beeing iſſued from the eldeſt ſonne of D. Alphonſo the Learned. Don Iohn Manuel the king, ſeeing that it was now time to liue in peace, employed Donna Leonora of Guzman, to bring him into fauour, the which ſhe obtayned, yet was it not wholy to his content. This Lady was deliuered in An. 1331.
F the yeare 1331. of a ſonne by the king, who was named Don Pedro, and to whome the king aſſigned for a perpetuall inheritance, Aguilar del campo, and many other reuenues.

11 In thoſe times they of the Prouince of Alaua, had a cuſtome to chooſe a Lord, Cuſtome of Alaua.
vnder the ſoueraignty of Caſtille, who did gouerne, and enioyed the reuenues which were were appointed for the Lords of the Countrie: ſometimes they were Princes of the A houſe of Caſtile, the kings children, and ſometimes the Lords of Biſcay, or of the houſe of Lara, or others, as they thought good: for the doing whereof, they were accuſtomed to aſſemble in the field of Arriaga, neere to Victoria, and there made their election: and thoſe of this election were called brethren, and the aſſemblie a Brotherhood. Thither came the chiefe families of Alaua, with the Biſhop of Calaorra, and the deputies for the Labourers: the towne of Victoria, and that of Treuigno were not of this aſſembly, but had bin alwaies vnited to the Crowne. This yeare the Brotherhood ſent deputies vnto the king, beeing at Burgos, deſiring him to incorporate them vnto the crowne, and that they might no more chooſe any Lord, or ſubalternall gouernour; for that in the factions and ſeditions paſt, they had beene diſtracted from the kings obedience, by the Gouer- B nors, whereby the countrey had ſuffered much. The King deſirous to giue them contentment, aſſuring his eſtate the more thereby, and increaſing his demeynes, came to Victoria, and from thence to the aſſembly of the Brotherhood, beeing in the field of Ar-riaga; whereas publikely, and in all their names, there was a petition preſented vnto him by theſe Knights hereafter named: D. Lopes of Mendoça, D. Bertrand Iuanes of Gueuara, Lord of Ogna, and Ladron of Gueuara his ſon, Iuan Hurtado of Mendoça, Fernand Ruis of Mendoça, Arch-deacon of Calaorra, Ruis Lopes of Mendoça, ſons to D. Lopes Diego Hurtado of Mendoça, Fernand Peres of Ayala, Fernand Sanches of Velaſco, Gonçalo Iua- nez of Mendoça, and Hurtado Diaz his brother, Lopes Garcia of Salazar, and Ruis Diaz of Torres. Theſe beeing followed by many other gentlemen, and the deputies of the Clergie, and third Eſtate, preſented many Articles vnto the King, beſeeching him to C Alua vnited to the Crowne of Caſtile. grant them, promiſing for their part, that this ſhould bee their laſt aſſembly, and that the name and effect of their Brotherhood ſhould remaine for euer extinct. The King hauing heard them, and giuen the Articles to his Councell to peruſe, receiued them, and vnited the Prouince of Alaua for euer vnto the crowne of Caſtile; whereof letters were afterward diſpatcht at Victoria, in the yeare 1332. And theſe were the Articles.

1 That the King nor his ſucceſſors ſhould not alienate any place of his demeines.

2 That the gentlemen and their goods ſhould bee free and exempt from all ſubſi-dies, as they had bin heretofore.

the gentlemen ſhould receiue the reuenues.

ding to the cuſtomes and rights of Soportilla, and in all offences their cauſes ſhould bee iudged according to the lawes of the Siete partidas.

6 That the Iudges royall, and Captaines of caſtels ſhould be borne and reſident in the country, who could not proceed againſt any one but vpon complaint, vnleſſe they E vnleſſe they were ſubiect to a corporall puniſhment.

7 That all Labourers dwelling vnder Monaſteriall Churches, and Collations of Gentlemen, ſhould bee free and exempted from all tribute and ſubiection, except the Oxe of March.

8 That Labourers dwelling in Pallaces and Caſtels of Gentlemen, ſhould haue the ſame exemptions, ſo as there were but one at once, and thoſe which nurſe Gentlemens lawfull children, ſhould enioy the like priuiledges, during the time of their nouriſh-ment.

9 The Gentlemen which dwell in villages vnder the Iuriſdiction of Victoria, ſhould enioy the ſame rights with them of the Prouince of Alaua: wherein ſhould bee obſerued F the ſentence giuen betwixt the towne of Victoria, and the villages thereunto belonging.

10 Whoſoeuer ſhould kill a Gentleman, ſhould pay 500. ſolz for a fyne, and whoſoeuer ſhould hurt or diſhonor a gentleman, ſhould pay the like ſumme vnto the party.

During the kings aboad at Victoria, he did inſtitute (as ſome affirme) the Order of the Knights of the band.
C Order of the Knights of the Band, to maintaine ſouldiers in Spaine, the which went to decay: yet ſome hold it was ſome yeares before. But this yeare returning to Burgos, hee ſet downe the Orders, whereof the chiefe Articles are theſe:

They carried a red band foure fingers broade, in manner of a ſcarfe, which came from the left ſhoulder vnder the right arme, the which the king gaue onely to Gentlemen which had followed the Court tenne yeares, or beene in the warre againſt the Mores and by their Orders it was not to be giuen but to younger brothers, who had no great ſhares in their fathers inheritances. Theſe Knights beeing receiued, tooke an oath to obſerue the rules of the Order which follow:

1 That the knight of the band ſhould be bound to ſpeake vnto the king for the com- Articles of the Order.
D mon good and defence of them of his countrie, beeing required by them.

2 That he ſhould ſpeake the truth vnto the King, and ſhould be bound to reueale vnto the King what he ſhould knowe or heare ſpoken againſt him.

3 The Knight conuicted of a lie, ſhould not carrie a ſword for one whole moneth.

4 He ſhould conuerſe with ſouldiers and other men of qualitie, and not with men of baſe conditions.

5 They ſhould keepe their promiſe to all men, of what eſtate and condition ſoeuer.

6 They ſhould be prouided of armes and horſes, vppon paine to looſe the title of Knight-hood.

E 7 The Knight ſhould not be ſeene mounted vpon a Moile, nor without band, nor ſword.

8 He ſhould be no Ieſter, but his diſcourſe ſhould be graue and honeſt.

13 The Knight which did vſurpe the band, and had not receiued it from the kings hands, ſhould be bound to defend it againſt two knights of the Order of the band, and if he did vanquiſh them, he might then carry it without contradiction, but if he were van-

19 The knights of the Band ſhould aſſemble thrice a yeare, to treate of the affaires of their Order, where the king ſhould appoint it, beeing mounted and armed, and the ſayd aſſemblies ſhould be in April, September, and at Chriſtmas. B

20 They ſhould exerciſe themſelues in Iouſts, Ioco de-canna, toſſing the pike, and managing of horſes, at a certaine time appointed.

21 No knight ſhould liue in Court, without ſeruing a Ladie or Gentlewoman to haue her in marriage, or otherwiſe with honour.

22 The knights of the Band ſhould be bound to be at all tourneys within ten leagues of the Court.

23 If any of them did marrie within twenty leagues of the Court, the other knights ſhould be bound to beare him companie, and to honour him and his ſpouſe, making ſome exerciſes of armes, and giuing him preſents. C

24 The firſt Sunday of euery moneth they ſhould come into the great hall of the Pallace, and there exerciſe all ſorts of armes before the king, without offending one another either maliciouſly, or in choller.

25 A knight beeing ready to dye, he ſhould be viſited, comforted, and exhorted by his companions, and after his death they ſhould be bound to aſſiſt at his funerals, and ſhould mourne a moneth, all Iouſts and exerciſes of armes ceaſing.

26 His Band that was dead ſhould be reſtored to the king by the other knights, who ſhould be ſutors to haue ſome one of his children receiued into the Order, or to obtaine ſome preſent for the widow to honour her, and entertaine her eſtate of Nobility, or to marry ſome of her daughters. D

The firſt knights of this Order, yet not all at once were choſen, without reſpect to the elder, to honour him, and not to draw it into conſequence.

Some put D. Iohn the Blind in the number of theſe Knights, which ſhewes that the Order was long before inſtituted.

Theſe were at this time the moſt renowned families of Spaine, wherof ſome are wholy extinct. Other houſes are ſince growne great, as the Velaſques, Manriques, Pimentel, B Mendoça, Cordoua, Pacheco, Eſtunica, Fajardos, Arellanos, Tendillas, Cueuas, Andradas, Fonçecas, Luna, Villandrado, Sotomaiores.

This Order of Knight-hood did flouriſh for a time, but for that it was not religious as the reſt, it was neglected and came to nothing.

At the ſame time Henry of Solibert Gouernor of Nauarre, by the perſwaſion, as it is likely, of D. Iohn Manuel, and of Don Iohn Nugnes de Lara, entred into quarrell with the king of Caſtile: and for that he knew the forces of Nauarre were not ſufficient to annoy the King of Caſtile, and that thoſe of France, were both farre off, and in warre with the Engliſh, he inſinuated himſelfe with the king of Arragon, vnder hope of a marriage betwixt D. Ieanne eldeſt daughter to Philip king of Nauarre, and Don Pedro Infant of Arragon, and heire to the Crowne: for this effect D. Pero Gonçales of Morentin, was ſent to C Tortoſa in Cattelogne, where he was well receiued by the king, who hauing appointed D. Pedro de Luna, Arch-biſhop of Saragoſſa, to treate with him of this marriage, they concluded it, as we ſhall ſhew, and agreed, that it ſhould be accompliſhed within a certaine time, and that in the meane time D. Pedro ſhould ayde the Gouernors of Nauarre, both preſent and to come, in all the wars they ſhould haue for the realme of Nauarre. The chiefe motiue of this marriage, was D. Iohn Alonzo de Haro, Seigneur de los Cameros, who was very inward with D. Iohn Manuel, and ſought al occaſions to annoy king D. Alphonſo. D. Ieanne Queene of Nauarre being in France, was that yeare deliuered of the Infant D. Charles, heire of the Realme of Nauarre, and the County of Eureux.

Nauarre

League and marriage betwixt Nauarre and Arragon.

Caſtille.

D Another marriage was treated of in Portugal, to the preiudice of king D. Alphonſo of Caſtile: for D. Fernand Rodrigues of Bilbao, Prior of S. Iohn, Chancelor to Queene Mary, wife to king D. Alphonſo, a great friend to D. Iohn Manuel, and to whome the reuenges which the king did vſually take of his Nobility were not pleaſing: beeing alſo incenſed at the familiarity which the king had with D. Leonora of Guzman, and at the authority ſhee had within the Realme, being alſo much deuoted to the king of Portugall, he preuailed ſo with him by his practiſes, as he cauſed a diuorce betwixt the Infant D. Pedro of Portugall, and his wife D. Blanche of Caſtile, who was very ſickly, and made him to marrie D. Conſtance daughter to D. Iohn Manuel, who thought to haue bin Queene of Caſtile. The king
E of Caſtile, who dreamed not of theſe things, thought himſelfe aſſured of the Chriſtians, and was wholy attentiue to the actions of the Moores of Granado, with whom he ſought meanes to breake the truce, by ſtopping of their victuals: but beeing better aduiſed, hee ſent to demand the tribute for that yere of king Mahumet, the which was paid, ſo as he ſuffered the Mores to haue paſſage for their victuals out of Andaluſia, and other places therabouts: yet king Mahumet vnderſtanding what ſmall aſſurance there was in this truce, and watching all occaſions, either how to free himſelfe from the ſubiection of the Chriſtians, or to annoy them: he paſt ſoone after into Affricke, to ſollicite king Albohaçen Miralmumin of Maroc, to make ſome great enterpriſe with him in Spaine.

13 And for that the Moores of Spaine haue alwaies had great affinity and intelligence Moores.
F with theſe Miralmumins of Affricke, it ſhall be fit to relate the continuance, ſince Ioſeph Aben Iacob, the ſecond king of the race of Merins, whom we left vpon the banks of Affrick trying to paſſe into Spaine in the yeare 1291. when as the king of Caſtile tooke Tariffe from him: but being ſtopt by Benedict Zachary Admirall of Caſtile, he conuerted his deſſeigns againſt Alboacid king of Tremeſſen, and his ſucceſſor Boham.

This Miralmumin beeing at the ſeege of Tremeſſen, a familiar friend of his called Alfetrian,

Alfetrian, ſlue him in his bed: whereupon his ſon Bucale tooke vppon him the ſcepter of the Arabian Mores, and was the 3. king of the race of Merins. Being yet in the campe before Tremeſſen, Albohaya his vncle being inueſted by the Maroquins to take the Realme from Bucale, he refuſed it for himſelfe, but he aduanced another King of the ſame family of Merins, called Botebid, ſon to a brother of this Bucale, who forced him to fly, finding himſelfe too weake to make head againſt him. Bucale thinking to ſaue himſelfe in Affricke was ſlaine by them that purſued him, neere vnto Mont Atlas. Thus Botebid raigned the 4. of the familie of Merins, who at the end of the yeare, ended both raigne and life: in whoſe place Abortabe his Brother was the fift king of Maroc, by the helpe of certaine Chriſtian ſouldiers, who were then in Affricke, led by a knight called Goncalo Sanches of Troncones, who notwithſtanding had like to haue beene ſlaine by this ingratefull barbarian, being forced to ſaue his life by flight, and ſo retired into Spaine. Abortabe raigned onely 2. yeares, and died in the citty of Ribate, leauing the Realme of Maroc to his great Vncle Aben Ioſeph, ſonne to king Iacob Aben Ioſeph, the firſt of the family of the Merins which had raigned in Maroc, and brother to Aben Iacob. This Aben Ioſeph had one ſon called Alboali, whome he ſought to make king of Fez in his life time, but as he had indiſcreetly, and too ambitiouſly cheriſhed this ſon, he was forced to repent him, for ſuch was the ſons hatred, as he depriued his father of the Realme of Maroc, and appointed him (by the interceſſion of the Almodes then raigning at Tunis, who had there erected a kingdome of the reliques of their families and forces chaſed from Maroc) Bolahu for his aboade and entertainment: and Alboali raigned in the 7. place: but he enioyed it not long: for it was the wil of God, that this wicked ſonne fell grieuouſly ſicke in the towne of Fez, neere vnto Tremeſſen (not that Fez which is the chiefe of a kingdome) his father Aben Ioſeph came thither to beſeege him, and preſt him in ſuch ſort, as he was forced to leaue the realm of Maroc and Fez, and to content himſelfe with that of Sojumenca. By this meanes Aben Ioſeph recouered his Crowne and royall authority in Maroc, who holding Alboali vnworthy to ſucceed him: he appointed Alboacen his younger ſonne to be heire of the Crowne. Alboali the elder aduertiſed of this inſtitution, watched a time when both the father and the ſonne were abſent out of Maroc, and comming thither on the ſudden well accompanied, he ſeazed thereon, thinking by that meanes to haue recouered his realme: but hee was beſeeged by king Aben Ioſeph and Albohacen, vpon whom making a ſally, he was defeated, and ſore wounded, ſo as he was forced to yeeld to his fathers will, and to retire himſelfe to Sojumenca, the which was granted him againe for his portion: after which Aben Ioſeph liued 18. yeares quietly king of Maroc, by whoſe deceaſe ſucceeded his ſon Alboacen, the eighth king of the family of Merins, yet with great contention againſt his elder brother Alboali, who ſought by all practiſes to caſt him from his throne, and beeing not of ſtrength ſufficient himſelfe, he begged ayde of other Barbarian Kings, ſo as with the forces he obtained from king Botexefin ſonne to Boham then raigning at Tremeſſen, he came againe to beſeege the capital town of Maroc, where Abderrahamen a braue knight commanded, who defended it ſo valiantly, as he forced Alboali to retire with ſhame, who in his retreat was incountred and defeated by the kings army, and ſoone after beſeeged in his towne of Sojumenca, who ſeeing himſelfe reduced to extremitie, hee tooke a new compoſition, promiſing neuer to pretend any intereſt to the realm of Maroc, but to content himſelfe with that of Sojumenca: for aſſurance whereof he gaue his ſonne called Bozien for hoſtage. Wee muſt needes confeſſe that the humanity both of the father and the ſonne to Alboali was exceeding great, hauing ſo often rebelled, and aſpired to the crowne, a crime which doth often cauſe all reſpect of bloud and allyance to bee forgotten, euen in Chriſtian Princes. Alboacen riſing from Sojumenca, ouer-runne Pilla, and burnt all the countrie of Tremeſſen, in reuenge that King Botexefin had giuen ayde to his brother at the ſeege of Maroc: It is this Alboacen which had beene ſollicited by Mahumet king of Granado, to paſſe into Spaine againſt Don Alphonſo the eleuenth king of Caſtile: and who afterwards hauing ſubdued the Realmes of Sojumenca and Tremiſſen, was the greateſt Prince in all Affricke.

A leauing two sonnes Abraham and Abucebet, after whose death King Mahumet put himselfe into fauour with King Alboacen, (for Ozmin notwithstanding that he was of the same family of Merins, had alwaies beene an enemy vnto him) wherefore Mahumet going to Fez, he was courteously entertayned by the Miralmumin, to whome hauing made his complaints of the King of Castile, who did alwaies trecherously breake the truce: he perswaded and intreated him, to ioyne with him against Spaine. For (sayd hee) God hauing made you the mightiest Prince of the Religion, published by the Prophet Mahumet, and whome so many Kings and Princes of Affricke obey, thou canst not more religiously, and with greater honour employ thy forces, then against the Christians of Spaine, our persecutors, and the implacable enemies of our law, nor more profitably addresse thy B noble enterprises, nor with hope of better successe, then against them, hauing the ports and townes of Spayne at thy command, from the Streight along the coast of the Mediterranean sea: whereunto the troubled Estate of Castile doth alwaies inuite thee, whereas Don Alphonso, who tearmes himselfe King, through an insatiable desire of rule, hauing spoyled his subiects of their lawfull inheritances, and pursued them in their honours and liues by tyrannous cruelty, extending his outragious disdaine euen to women of his owne bloud, and others of noble Families, hee hath so estranged most of the Princes and Noblemen of Spaine, as they now seeke our friendship, and offer to ioyne with vs, to make warre against him. It will be therefore an act worthy of thy wisedome, not to let slippe so great occasions, and befitting the generositie of thy Noble and renowned C Family, by this oportunitie to repayre the ruined honour of the Arabians, troden vnder foote in Spayne, for the sinnes of our Nation, by the will and pleasure of the great God, who shewes plainely, that hee hath now turned his wrath against the Spaniards, both Princes and people beeing plunged in all impietie, disloyalty, dissimulation, and couetousnesse.

King Mahumets words to Alboacen.

To this effect spake Mahumet to the King of Maroc, who heard him with great attention, and answered by the aduice of his Councell: that hee desired nothing more, then to do what he had propounded, but at that time hee could not wholy attend it as it was fit, being let by the warre which he had against the king of Tremessen, the which being ended, hee would employ himselfe in person with all his forces. In the mean time he offered D him good troupes of horse, and gaue him great summes of mony. Thus the king of Granado returned well satisfied into his country, where beeing arriued, hee sent presently to Don Iohn Manuel, to conclude a firme League with him, and the other Noblemen his Confederates, and to resolue of the meanes how to beginne the warre against the King of Castile.

In this league ioyned Don Iohn Nugnes de Lara, Don Iohn Martines de Leyua, and many others: and there was sent from them vnto Granado with the messengers Moores, Don Pero Martines Clauijo, to haue the king confirme their accord. Wherefore the same yeare 1332. Rodeuan Captaine of the Lymits of Granado towards Murcia, Abuceber sonne to Ozmin deceased, and Machilif Gouernour of Antequera; entred the Realme of E Murcia in armes, vnto the territorie of Valencia, spoyling, killing, and burning all about Orihuela and Guardamar: from whence they returned laden with spoyles to Granado, whereby king Don Alphonso knew that hee must of force go to armes: for before hee had a conceit that Mahumets practises would proue vaine, and hoped to reclaime his Rebels, by promises and other practises, but he was deceiued. Wherefore to beginne a warre of so great waight and difficultie, hee went in pilgrimage to Saint Iames, and there was made Knight, beeing in compleat armour, ordayning that from thence-foorth whosoeuer should desire to be made a knight, should present himselfe armed at all peeces. Returning to Burgos, he caused himselfe to be crowned king, to giue more authoritie to his royall Maiestie: he also caused Queene Mary his wife to be crowned with great pompe F and charge to the Inhabitants. The next day the king did arme and make aboue an hundred Noblemen and Gentlemen Knights, in the Monasterie of Huelgas, being al couered with white. The ceremonie being ended, he gaue to the Cittie of Burgos, the place of Nugno, with the iurisdiction for euer, to recompence the expences they had beene at in his Coronation.

During theſe Ceremonies the king of Maroc ſent his ſonne Abomelic, called the Infant Picao, into Granado, with ſeuen thouſand horſe: armed a la Genette, who landed at Algezire, whereof the Gouernors of Tariffe and Gibraltar, did preſently aduertiſe the king of Caſtile, which newes he receiued, to checke his ioy for the birth of two children, the one by the Queene his wife in Vailledolit, whoſe name was Don Fernand, the other by Donna Leonora of Guzman, called Don Sancho, to whom the king aſſigned Ledeſma, and other places. Aſſoone as the Moore Abomelic had landed, he tooke vppon him the title of King of Algezire and Ronde, and came and beſeeged the towne of Gibraltar, in the beginning of the yeare 1333. for the releeſe whereof the king D. Alphonſo ſent the maſters of the militarie Orders of S. Iames, Calatraua, Alcantare, and the Knights of the band: A.1333. ſe king by all meanes poſſible to giue contentment to Don Iohn Manuel and other Noblemen which had rebelled againſt him, but it was labour loſt: wherefore hearing that the king of Granado had on the other ſide beſeeged caſtell del Rio, in the territorie of Cordoua, he marched to the fronter in perſon. Thoſe which defended caſtel del Rio, beeing commanded by Martin Alphonſo, behaued themſelues ſo valiantly, with ſome ſmall ſuccours which came vnto them from Cordoua, as the king of Granado rayſed the ſeege and went to Cabra, a towne belonging to the knights of Calatraua, the which hee tooke by the treaſon of the Gouernour Pero Diaz of Agrayo, and hauing ſent the priſoners hee found in it to Granado, he razed the place. The towne of Gibaltar beeing battered and furiouſly aſſaulted by the Affricane Moores, for the ſpace of fiue moneths, hauing receiued no ſuccours from the King of Caſtile, was yeelded vp by Vaſco Perez de de Meyra, who in ſtead of imploying the kings mony about the fortification of the place, and to furniſh it with victuals and other neceſſaries, had made goodly purchaſes for his owne particular, about Xeres.

After the taking of Cabra, D. I*ohn Nugnes de* P*rado*, maſter of Calatraua, preſented himſelfe in view of the Moores army, with the troupes of Cordoua, Eccia, Carmona, Marchena, and other places, meaning to giue them battell, but king Mahumet retired himſelfe. King Don Alphonſo finding all things in diſorder at his comming to Seuile, hee preſently led his army before Gibraltar, to recouer it from the enemy, before they ſhould haue leyſure to fortifie it, but it was manned with a great garriſon, which made many ſallies, the which was loſſe of many good men of either part: in the end the Chriſtian army beeing greatly oppreſt with hunger, the gallies beeing not able to furniſh the campe with victuals, they were forced to rayſe the ſeege, to returne another time, as they did. At the retreat of Abomelic, King of Algezire, they ſurprized in the paſſage ſo greata number of Chriſtians of all ſorts, as beeing led to Algezire, the beſt of theſe poore ſlaues was ſold for a doublon. Some months after, the King of Granado tooke the caſtell of Benamexi, a place belonging to the knights of S. Iames, the which was defended by Gomes Arias, and afterwards ſpoyled the territorie of Cordoua, euen to the citty gates, finding not any reſiſtance: for the army returned to the ſeege of Gibraltar, the which they found more difficult then before, yet the Chriſtians vſed all diligence to batter, myne, ſappe, and aſſault it continually: king Abomelic ſent to haue the king of Granado to approch with his forces, beeing reſolued to giue battel, and to rayſe the ſeege from Gibraltar. King Arahumet was readie, and came and camped neere vnto the riuer of Guadiara, aduertiſing Abomelic of his beeing there, who came to field, whereas the two Moriſh armyes ioyned, within a league of the king of Caſtiles campe, to whom they preſented themſelues in battel three dayes together: but D. Alphonſo was aduiſed to forbeare, and wiſely. For the hazard of a battell, drawes after it either the happines, or the ruine of an eſtate, and ſhould neuer be put in queſtion by any wiſe captaine within his owne countrie, but vpon very great aduantage, wherefore he fortified his campe with a trench, which reached to either ſhoore. The armies hauing continued thus neere together ſome dayes without fighting, there was a truce propounded, whereunto king D. Alphonſo was the more willing to yeeld hauing newes of many inſolencies which the rebels of Caſtile had committed. Wherefore it was concluded of either ſide for foure yeares, the king of Granado remaining vaſſall to him of Caſtile, paying a tribute of 12000. doublons, and Gibraltar ſhould remaine in the poſſeſſion of Abomelic, who ioyned it to his titles.

Townes taken by the Moores.

During

During this warre D. Iohn Manuel, and Don Iohn Nugnes de Lara, had conference with Don Alphonſo of Arragon, at the caſtell of Habib, ſeeking to draw him to their league, againſt D. Alphonſo king of Caſtile his brother-in-law, but they could not preuaile. Theſe, with other of their faction, began to ouer-runne the countrie, to take townes and priſoners, and to do all acts of hoſtility, in the Realme of Caſtile. The king hearing of this ſpoyle, at the very inſtant when as he was aduertiſed of the death of his onely ſonne and heire Don Fernand, in the citty of Toro, was wonderfully afflicted, and therefore inclined to a truce, as we haue ſayd: after which he was viſited by king Mahumet in his campe, whome he receiued kindly, giuing great preſents one vnto another. King Mahumet returning to his army, many that were deſirous of innouation, murmured at this interview, and reproched vnto the king, that he had eaten with a Chriſtian king. Among others Abraham and Abuceber, ſons to Ozmin, (ſmothering in their breſts an hereditarie hatred againſt this king, and all his houſe) made a conſpiracie, with ſuch as they knew to be ill affected, hauing intelligence with Mahomad Alhamar, already mentioned in the conſpiracie againſt his father: and watching an oportunity to put their wicked deſſeigne in execution, ſeeing him one day attired in a rich roabe which king D. Alphonſo had giuen him they began to deteſt him, and to rayle of him to all men, ſaying, that he ſhewed himſelfe to be baſe and a coward, and that as he did outwardly carry the badge of a Chriſtian, ſo there was no doubt but he was infected within: with ſuch and the like reaſons he incenſed the Moores in generall, ſo as they ſlue the king inhumanely with their ſwords at the entry of his tent, as he was talking with his Alguazil in the 23. yeare of his age, and of the Arabians 716. hauing raigned in Granado eleuen yeares.

Death of D. Fernand heire of Caſtile.

Mahumet king of Granado murthered by his ſubiects.

Ioſeph the ſeuenth King of Granado.

AT the time of this murther committed on the perſon of a king by his execrable ſubiects, from whom they had receiued all good honour; Rodoan, a captaine of great authoritie, and much fauoured by the deceaſed king, whoſe Alguazil he had beene, was then abſent from the armie, but he was ſoone aduertiſed of this diſaſter, wherefore he went with all the ſpeed he could, not vnto the campe, to pacifie the mutinies which might riſe by reaſon of this accident, but to the cittie of Granado, wheras king Mahumets brethren were bred vp, which were two, Farrachen the elder, and Ioſeph the yonger, into whoſe hands (beeing moſt affected to him) he would put the ſcepter of the Granadins, as he did to the preiudice of the elder, and hauing great authority in the cittie of Granado, he cauſed the people to chooſe Ioſeph. The example of which citty was followed by all the reſt of the kingdome, and ſoone after allowed by Abomelic, King of Algezire, and by Abraham and Abucebet, the murtherers of king Mahumet, who contemning the truce made ſome few daies before with the king of Caſtile, and wheron they had taken occaſion to murther their Prince, thought to breake it inſtantly, preſuming that the tumult of armes, and the neceſſitie of warre would paſſe ouer their treaſon with ſilence, the which in a time of peace might be puniſhed. Abomelic beeing as deſirous of warre, ſent Ambaſſadors to Granado to this effect: to congratulate the Kings elections, and to perſwade him to take armes, and to go to field. The new king thinking it not conuenient to oppoſe himſelfe to the deſire of the men of warre, for that they were yet mutined with the murther of the King his brother, committed in the middeſt of their campe, in hatred of the truce, and fearing that Ferrachen his elder brother, would eaſily winne them, if they were diſcontented, he ſuffered himſelfe to be perſwaded: whereupon he ſent his Ambaſſadors to the Miralmumin of Maroc, that he might be receiued vnder his protection, the which hee obtayned.

The King of Caſtile beeing aduertiſed of theſe practiſes, as hee was readie to diſlodge from Seuile, to go and ſuppreſſe the Rebels, hee was forced to ſtay there. And at the ſame time hauing diſcouered, that certaine Knights had had a ſecret Conſpiracy with king Mahumet deceaſed, to the preiudice of his Crown, he cauſed one of them called Diego Sanches de Iaen to be executed at Cordoua, the reſt fled into the Moores countrie, of which number were Don Gonçalo Lord of Aguilar and Montilla, and his brother Don Fernand Gonçales of Aguilar, who made themſelues vaſſals to the king of Granado, and by them and others of the ſame ſort, (who were well entertayned by king Ioſeph) the warre was begun; making roades from their Caſtels of Aguilar, Montilla, Monturgue, and other forts which were in their hands, agreeing with D. Iohn Manuel, D. Nugno de Lara, and other rebels, who for their parts committed no leſſe exceſſe in Caſtile, the which did much trouble the king Don. Alphonſo, fearing aboue all, that the brethren of Aguilar would deliuer the places which they held, vnto the Moores.

Seuerity of the king of Caſtile, makes many Chriſtian Knights fly to the Moores.

Moores.

Alboacen king of Maroc was glad of theſe troubles, and deſired to entertain the reuolts of Caſtile, for that he had an intent to go in perſon into Spaine, with a great power, as ſoone as the warre of Tremeſſen ſhould giue him any leyſure, the which notwithſtanding did ſo trouble him, as he changed his reſolution for a time, and was ſo preſt, as hee called home ſome of his troupes, which he had ſent into Spaine with his ſon Abomelic: whereupon he ſent him word, that he ſhould ſeeke by all ſecret practiſes to make a truce for himſelfe alone, aduertiſing him, that if the king of Caſtiles ambaſſadors ſhould demand, if he meant to comprehend King Alboacen his father, hee ſhould anſwer, that it might bee hee would accept thereof, if any meſſengers were ſent vnto him. According to theſe inſtructions Abomelic ſent Ambaſſadors to king D. Alphonſo being at Seuile, to treat of a truce, to whom the queſtion was made according to king Alboacens deſire, and vpon their anſwer D. Gonçalo Garcia of Gallegos, Alcaide maior of Seuile, was ſent to Maroc to vnderſtand king Alboacens will concerning this truce, who anſwered, that hee would willingly enter, ſo as Ioſeph the new king of Granado were comprehended: for being vnder his protection, he could not abandon him, deſiring that he might be aſſured from all troubles, and moreouer freed from the tribute which hee payed to the king of Caſtile during this truce. The Alcaide who had no ſuch commiſſion, aduertiſed the king his maſter, who ſeeing himſelfe annoyed by his owne ſubiects, was content the king of Granado ſhould bee comprehended, and that he ſhould not pay any tribute during the truce, the which was concluded in the beginning of the yeare 1334. to continue foure yeares, cauſing king Alboacen to make his Letters pattents ſealed with a ſeale of gold, and ſo in like manner did D. Alphonſo king of Caſtile, Abomelic of Algezire and Ioſeph of Granado. This Ioſeph called Aben Amet was the firſt King of the Moores of Granado, that was exempt from paying tribute to the kings of Caſtile in time of peace, through the fauour of the king of Maroc, and the factions and ſeditions of Caſtile.

Truce very beneficial for the Moores.

Caſtile.

14 King Don Alphonſo beeing thus afflicted betwixt warre and truce, in the Cittie of Seuile Donna Loonora of Guzman brought him two ſonnes at one birth. Don Henry, who obtayned the Realme of Caſtile, as you ſhall heare, and Don Fredericke who was Maſter of the Order of Saint Iames.

About March this yeare 1334. the king went from Seuile, hauing prouided for the places on the fronters, as it was neceſſarie, and came to Vailledolit where hauing ſuddenly raiſed an armie, he marched againſt the Rebels, and hauing taken ſome places from them, he came to Lerma, whereas Don Iohn Nugnes de Lara was, for whom he layed many ambuſhes, but without effect: wherefore he entred into Biſcay, and beeing at Guernica, a place deputed for the aſſembly of the Eſtates of the countrie, vnder a tree, after the manner of their anceſtors, he receiued from them the oath of fealty, and they yeelded vnto him moſt of the townes and places of the country: for ſome held yet for Donna Maria of Haro their Lady. This beeing done, hee came to Bermeo, and aſſayled a caſtell vpon the ſea, called Saint Iohn de la Pegna, two ſmall Leagues from Bermeo: the Garriſon was obſtinat in the defence thereof, and would not yeeld: wherefore the king beeing called away for matters of greater conſequence, built certaine ſmall forts about it, and manned them with ſouldiers to hinder their going in and comming out, and came to Logrogno, and from thence to Algoncillo, where hee ſurprized Don Iohn Alphonſo de Haro, Lord of that place, one of the rebels, whome he cauſed preſently to be ſlayne, and

A and did confiſcate his goods, except los Cameros, which he gaue vnto his brother: then returning to Burgos, he beſeeged Herrera, a place belonging to Don Iohn Nugnes, who either wearie of the warre, or diſtruſting the euent thereof, hee made his peace with the king, and returned to his ſeruice.

During this ſeege Queene Mary was brought in bed of a ſonne at Burgos, who was named Don Pedro heire of the kingdome. The Writers of Arragon ſay, that this Infant was ſuppoſed by Queene Mary, being iealous that the king her husband did ſo loue D. Leonora of Guzman, and that ſhe brought him ſo many children. The king hauing pacified the troubles towards Biſcay, he marched with his army towards D. Iohn Manuels country, and beſeeged Rojas, the which was defended by a Gentleman called Diego Gil, in the name of B D. Lope Diaz de Rojas, vaſſall to Don Iohn Manuel. This Diego Gil, hauing made ſome reſiſtance, in the end yeelded, vppon condition to haue their liues ſaued: notwithſtanding the king condemned him to death, with ſome others, for that he had reſiſted againſt the Standard royall. And then there was an Edict made: That all Gentlemen holding towns, caſtels, or houſes of ſtrength, belonging to any Nobleman, knight, or other of the kings vaſſals, the king comming thither in perſon, they ſhould be bound to receiue him, without any imputation: if not, they ſhould looſe their liues: which Decree was afterwards put in practiſe vppon the Gouernour of Iſcar, who loſt his head, for that hee had preſumed to reſiſt the king.

Diſloyalty of King D. Alphonſo.

Edict againſt Captaines of places, that did reſiſt the king.

About the end of the yeare, king Don Alphonſo came to Atera, a place neere to Cala-
C tajub, where he found Donna Leonora his ſiſter, Queene of Arragon, with whome hauing treated of certaine affaires, he returned to Vailledolit, where by the negotiation of certaine Mediators, an accord was made betwixt him and Don Iohn Manuel, and a peace throughout all the Realme, which the Spaniſh Authors attribute to his ſeueritie againſt the Rebels, when hee tooke them, condemning moſt of them after their deaths: about the ſame time Donna Leonora of Guzman was deliuered of a Sonne, whome the King named Don Fernand: for which cauſe there were generally great feaſts and Ioy, and at Court there was a ſtately tourney: where on the one ſide the knights of the Band did runne, among the which was the king in a diſguiſed habit.

Accord betwixt the king of Caſtile and Don Iohn Manuel.

Which Captaines of Forts were all entertayned by the King, and enioyed many priuiledges, according to the lawes and cuſtomes of Nauarre. The treatie of marriage continued ſtill, betwixt the Infant of Nauarre, and D. Pedro heire of Arragon, by D. Pedro de Luna, Arch-biſhop of Sarragoſſa, D. Pedro Gonçales of Morentiu, and other Deputies, who hauing beene long together in the towne of Cortez, concluded it in the yeare 1334.

The

A The conditions were, that King Philip of Nauarre, ſhould giue in dowry with his daughter D.Ieanne, a 100000. Sanchots, which were worth ſo many Liuers turnois, and for aſſurance of a future marriage, there were giuen in pawne for Nauarre, Leſcar, Arguedas, Saint Care, Murillo, Gallipenço and Murgui; and for the King of Arragon, Fayos, Boria, Malona, Campdalijub, Sos and Sauveterre, & the Articles were ſigned by the parties with many knights at Daroca. The King of Caſtille hearing of this alliance, being iealous and foreſeeing that they ſought but an occaſition of warre, he wrote vnto the Gouernor, that hee could neuer vnderſtand that his ſubiects had wronged the Nauarrois, and that if any thing had beene committed which required reparation, hee was readie to ſee it done: but the Gouernor giuing a deafe eare to that which hee had

B written, perſiſted in his reſolution and ſeized vpon the Monaſtery of Hitero by force, being then in the poſſeſſion of Caſtille, and had before beene of Nauarre. The King of Caſtille ſeeing the warre to be ineuitable, ſent to the King of Arragon, to intreat him to be a meanes, that his ſonne D. Pedro, might not ioyne with the Nauarrois, nor aide them to annoy Caſtille. The King of Arragon, beeing verie ſicke anſwered that his indiſpoſition would not ſuffer him to thinke of ſuch affaires, and that if his ſonne had a will to fauor the Nauarrois, he could not hinder him, being in that Eſtate. This anſwere beeing made knowne to the Arragonois, they grewe more deſirous to ioyne with the Nauarrois, wherevpon D. Lope de Luna, one of the greateſt Noblemen of the Realme, D. Michel Perez Zapata and Lopes Garcia, accompanied with many other knights, whom

D other things: wherefore King D. Alphonſo made Martin Fernandes Puerto Carrero Generall of this warre, and ſent with him vnto the frontier D. Diego Lopes de Haro, ſonne to D. Lopes the little, D. Fernand Rodrigues of Villalobos, D. Iohn Garcia Manriques, D. Rodrigo of Ciſneros, D. Pero Nugnes de Guzman, and his brother, Ramir Flores, D. Lopes Diaz of Almaſan, D. Gonçalo Ruis Giron, D. Gonçalo Ruis Diaça, D. Aluar Rodrigues Daça, Alphonſo Fernandes Cornel, Garſilaſo de la Vega, and his brother Gonçalo Ruis de la Vega, Pero Ruis Carilli, Iohn Alphonſo of Benauides, D. Rodrigues of Sandoual, Sancho Sanches de Roias, and many other knights of marke, which did not refuſe to march vnder Martin Fernandes, although there were many amongſt them of greater houſes, in regard that hee did repreſent the perſon of the Infant D. Pedro of Caſtille, and had diſplayed the ſtandard royall, and was appointed by the King to be his Lieutenant generall; and as the

E King ſought to make his excuſe, ſaying, that hee would gladly his ſonne had beene of age to goe to horſe, and that hee would willingly haue made him their leader and generall, they anſwered, that they would not onely obey Martin Fernandes Puerto Carrero, whom they knew to bee a worthy knight, ſeeing hee gaue him them for their Leader, but any one of leſſe qualitie, yea a groome of his ſtable, if he commaunded it.

Obedience of the Noblemen of Caſtille to their King and Lord.

The Gouernor of Nauarre beeing aduertiſed of this army of Caſtillans, fortefied the Monaſtery of Hitero, and ſent thether D. Michel Perez Zapata, thinking they would come and aſſaile it. The Caſtillans being all aſſembled at Alfaro, leauing the Monaſtery, marched directly towards Tudele; being diſcouered, the Arragonois and Nauarrois ſallied forth to incounter them, not caring to attend the returne of Michel Perez, who

F had led part of their forces to Hitero.

The Caſtillans were ſtronger in horſe, and the place fit to vſe them: wherefore beeing ioyned, although the Nauarrois made great reſiſtance, yet they were put to rout, and repulſt towards the towne, with great ſlaughter, and the loſſe of many that were taken priſoners. And you muſt vnderſtand that neither the Gouernor, not D. Lope de Luna, were at this charge, but kept themſelues in Tudela, ſo as the army of Arragonois and Nauarrois were without a head, and were chaſed euen to the towne gates. The victorious Caſtillans returning towards Alfaro, incountred Michel Perez Zapata, with his troupes, comming from Hitero, who put his men in battaile, by the fauor of a Dich, the which he defended againſt his enemies, who were full of fury, after their late victory, and ſought to force it, but many miſcarried: yet the multitude of the Caſtillans preuailed, and Michel Perez was ouerthrowne, and taken priſoner with many others: if night had not approcht without doubt (as the Hiſtories ſay) the Nauarrois and Arragonois, in this laſt incounter, had beene all put to the ſword. A

Thus the Caſtillans after two victories, returned with many priſoners, and great ſpoiles to Alfaro, forbearing for a time to returne into Nauarre, hauing not gotten theſe victories without loſſe. Thoſe that were in the Monaſtery of Saint Mary of Hitero, notwithſtanding that they were well fortefied, and furniſhed with victuals, durſt not abide there, ſo as the Caſtillans ſeized thereon, from whence they went to beſeege the Caſtille of Tudeguen, in the which there was a garriſon of Gaſcons and Nauarrois, who yeelded the place; beeing perſwaded by the faire ſpeeches of a Caſtillan monke, who was in the caſtle with them. The Caſtillans taking heart by this happy ſucceſſe returned afterwards thrice into Nauarre, and ſpoiled the country, carrying away many priſoners, and great ſtore of cattaile. B

Guipuſcoans enemies to the Nauarrois.

On the other ſide the people of Guipuſcoa, hearing of the warre, vpon the frontiers of Caſtille, Nauarre and Arragon, hauing no commaundement, entred in armes into Nauarre, vnder the conduct of Lopes Garcia of Lazcano, whom they made their captaine, ſpoyling a great part of the country of the iuriſdiction of Pampelone; and in the end they laied ſeege to the caſtle of Vnça, which they tooke. The King of Caſtille aduertiſed of theſe happy exploits, was deſirous to ſtay the courſe of their victories, fearing leaſt hee ſhould kindle a warre betwixt France and Spaine, which ſhould not bee eaſily quencht: wherefore he commaunded them to containe themſelues, and onely to defend the frontiers of his Kingdome, yea hee called home moſt of the captaines and knights, which were vnder the Infant D. Pedro's Banner, being led by Martin Fernandes Puerto Carrero. Hee and ſome others did inſtantly obey, but Garcilaſo de la Vega, and Gonçalo Ruis his brother, made an other roade, with certaine troupes, into Nauarre, about Soſiere, where they left lamentable markes, burning and ſpoyling all they found. The newes of theſe outrages came into France, which did mooue many kinſmen, friends and ſubiects of King Philip to apprehend the ſpoiles which the Caſtillans had made in Nauarre, among the which Gaſton Lord of Bearne, and Earle of Foix made haſt to paſſe the mountaines, with many ſouldiers, Bearnois and Gaſcons, and hauing taken view of his troupes at Viane, which is a league from Logrogno, he entred into Caſtille, where hee made the like ſpoile as the Caſtillans had done in Nauarre, and then came and camped before Logrogno, the Inhabitants whereof ſallied forth vpon them, beeing led by a gentleman of the country called Ruis Diaz of Gaona, but they were repulſt into the towne, and purſued ſo neere, as without the valour of Ruis Diaz of Gaona (who with three companions made head againſt the enemies, at the entry of the bridge, whilſt the reſt had recouered the towne, and aſſured the Ports) they had entred Pel-mel with them, and taken Logrogno. This Eſquier imploied his life for the preſeruation of his country, imitating (but with leſſe happineſſe) the example of the Romaine Horatius Cocles, for hee was ſlaine vpon the bridge. The Earle of Foix fayling of his hope to take Logrogno by this meanes, returned with his men to Viana. C D E F

Gaſton Earle of Foix the firſt of that name.

Defeate of the garriſon of Logrogno by the Earle of Foix.

The King of Caſtille beeing in the meane time aduertiſed of his comming, had commanded many companies of foote and horſe to march towards the frontiers, meaning that when they had raiſed a great army, they ſhould enter into Nauarre, if it were conuenient, ſo as it was likely there would bee a dangerous warre betwixt theſe two mighty Kingdomes: for it is to bee preſumed the French King would haue beene engaged, in fauour of his couſin Philip King of Nauarre, and not to giue occaſion to the Spaniards to preſume to paſſe ſo eaſily ouer the limits wherewith nature had diuided thoſe two nations. But it was the will of God, that in this heat of their courrages of either ſide, Iohn

Arch-

A Archbiſhop of Rheims came into Nauar, going in pilgrimage to Saint Iames of Gallicia, who ſeeing this warre begunne betwixt the Nauarrois and the Caſtillans, for light occaſions; wrote a letter to the King of Caſtile, admoniſhing him to harken vnto a peace. The King who was no leſſe deſirous then the Archbiſhop, imbraced this occaſion; and ſhewing that the reuerence of ſo great a prelat, made him willing to obey his holy aduertiſments, he ſent vnto him Martin Fernandes Puerto Carrero, D. Gil Carillo of Albornoz, Archdeacon of Calatraua in the church of Toledo, who was afterwards Cardinall. By the aduice and reſolution of which three, with whom was ioyned Fernand Sanches of Vailledolit, notarie Maior, or Secretary of Caſtille, who concluded a peace vpon theſe conditions.

B That there ſhould be peace betwixt Philip King of Nauarre and D. Alphonſo King of Caſtile, their vaſſals and ſubiects, and a ceſſation of armes for a certaine time. That foure commiſſioners ſhould bee named, two for Nauarre, and two for Caſtile, for the reſtabliſhment and reſtitution of what had beene taken of either part, and for the reparation of any thing that ſhould bee committed to the preiudice of this accord. That the Monaſtery of Santa Maria of Hitero, ſhould be reſtored to the Monkes, who ſhould remaine Neuters, vntill it were decided to what iuriſdiction it did belong: to the end the diuine ſeruice ſhould not be interrupted, nor they any waies moleſted by the Nauarrois or Caſtillans. That the caſtles of Tudeguen and Vrſa ſhould remaine in the poſſeſſion of the King of Caſtile, vntil their differences were decided, and a definitiue ſentence giuen. That in regard of the propriety of the Monaſtery of Hitero, there ſhould bee arbitrators choſen, a Nauarrois, a Caſtillan and a Cardinal of Rome, who ſhould bee agreeable to both parties, to iudge thereof, and in the meane time all quarrels ſhould ceaſe betwixt the two realmes, Kings and ſubiects. Theſe Articles beeing concluded, they were afterwards confirmed by the two Kings. Peace betwixt Nauarre and Caſtile.

16 During theſe warres of the King of Caſtille againſt the Moores and his Rebels, and againſt Nauarre, the realme of Arragon was troubled with the quarrels and hatred of the Queene D. Leonor againſt the Infant D. Pedro her ſonne in law, ſhewing herſelfe in all ſhee could, a right mother in law. Wherein ſhee was the more to bee feared, for that ſhe did gouerne the King D. Alphonſo her husband at her pleaſure, and did worke in D him what impreſſions ſhe would, ſo as many times the Infant was in great danger, which he did afterwards reuenge. Beſides theſe inteſtine iarres, the King of Arragon was much troubled which the continual rebellions of the Sardiniens, and their Lords, who were for the moſt part Geneuois, but hee wrought ſo by his wiſdome, and dilligence, as without vſing any force, but in extremity, he reduced moſt of them to his deuotion. Francis d'Oria ſonne to Leonard, as well in his owne name, as of Alion, Marian Fabian Dignamin, and Nicholas of Oria, came and did homage to the King, and obtained pardon, and confirmation of all the Lands which they did hold in Sardinia; vpon condition that they ſhould not giue any aide nor fauour to the rebels and baniſhed men of the towne of Saſſari, where notwithſtanding the King granted a repeale for ſuch as had beene con- E demned for light crimes, but thoſe of the families of the Cathons, Pali and d'Oria, who had beene condemned of high treaſon, by D. Berenger of Caroſſo, were baniſhed the Iſland for euer. This nation of the Sardes was ſo prompt to reuolt, as notwithſtanding any prouiſion the King of Arragon could make, and all accords and treaties, hee was conſtrained to be watchful, with care, and exeeding great charge. Ayton of Oria hauing rigged out nine gallies, and ſome other Genouay ſhips of the Ghibeline faction, remayning at Sauonne, houering about the Iſland of Sardinia, ſurprized neere vnto Cap de Terre, nine ſhips of Cattelogna, and ſunke them, and ſo paſſing on he terrified all the Arragonois in the Iſland, and held the fort of Cailleri as it were beſeeged for a time, which F made all the Sardiniens in a manner to rebel: wherevpon D. Alphonſo King of Arragon ſent D. Raymond of Cardona thether, a captaine of great experience, and made him Lieutenant general of that Iſland. Arragon. Sardinien. turbulent. Geneuois of the Ghibeline faction againſt the Arragonois in Sardinia.

Theſe things paſt in the yeere of our Lord 1330. about the time that the Moores did inuade the realme of Murcia, of the which wee haue treated, at which time the Infant D. Pedro Earl of Ribagorça and Amputias, the Kings brother married Ieanne ſiſter to Gaſton

Earle

Earle of Foix, the firſt of that name, and daughter to Roger Bernard. A

The Cattelans enemies irreconciliable to the Geneuois, and newly incenſed by the loſſes which they had receiued by the army of Ayton d' Oria, who after that he had ſpoiled all that he found of the Arragonois faction vpon the bankes of Sardinia, retired into Corſica, to the Port of Boniface; they drew out of their Ports and Hauens of Cattelogne about forty Gallies, and thirty Foiſts and Brigantins, and directing their courſe towards the riuer of Genoa, they burnt al the Geneuois houſes of pleaſure, without reſpect of friend or foe: for the common weale of Genoa being then diuided, by reaſon of the faction of Guelphes and Ghibelins; the Ghibilins open enemies to the King of Arragon did for the moſt reſide at Sauonne, and from thence made their ſallies and enterpriſes; ſometimes drawing ſome priuate men of the Guelphes faction, to runne vp- B on the Cattelans, by reaſon whereof this Cattelan army intreated them all after one manner.

Cattelans burne and ſpoile the riuer of Genoa.

During theſe wrackes, Luke of Fieſco one of the chiefe of the Guelphes faction, had begunne to treat with King D. Alphonſo, by the meanes of Francis of Saint Eulalia, that if he would harken to a good accord with the Geneuois, holding the city of Genoa for friend, and forget al wrongs done, they would furniſh him with fifteene gallies, and follow his ſtandard againſt the Geneuois Ghibelins remayning at Sauonne, who had cauſed all the reuolts and troubles in Sardinia, wherewith the King was very well pleaſed: but the ſpoiles which the Cattelan army had made during the treaty in the riuer of Genoa intercepted all; ſo as theſe two factions of Genoa, being equally afflicted by a forraine enemy, were the more willing to giue credit to the perſwaſions of Robert King of Na- C ples, who reconciled them, and then they ioyned againſt the King of Arragon, to diſpoſſeſſe him of the Iſland of Sardinia. The heads of the two factions, were the families of Oria for the Guelphes, and Spinola for the Ghibelins. Beeing thus incenſed they runne along the coaſt of Cattelogne, with three ſcore ſaile, where they tooke many ſhips and other ſpoiles, leauing lamentable ſpectacles in all places where they had landed. Thirteene of their gallies paſſing from thence into Sardinia, attempted the fort and Port of Caillerij in vaine, from whence they were repulſt with loſſe. Theſe warres at ſea, betwixt the Cattelans and Geneuois might bee held equall, for they were the mightieſt nations at ſea in that age. All was full of difficultie, and iealouſie in the Iſland, notwithſtanding that King Don Alphonſo, by his bountie, aduancements, alliances D and marriages contracted in his fauour, and at his inſtance betwixt the Noblemen Cattelans, and Sardiniens, or Geneuois (hauing charges or lands in the Iſland) had ſought to draw them vnto him, and to make them friends, and affected to his party: yet he was in continuall warre, and was forced to keepe great garriſons in the Iſland, and many gallies at ſea with ſo great charge, as all the reuenues of the Iſland of Sardinia did auaile him little: beeing often conſtayned to importune the Pope, to diſcharge him of the tribute, which hee ought vnto the church of Rome, by reaſon of this chargeable conqueſt.

Thus King Don Alphonſo paſt his raigne in theſe home-bred and forraine troubles, E beeing but ſhort. A little before hee died Don Iames of Arragon, Lord of Xerica, who had married Queene Marie, which had beene left by D. Sancho King of Majorca, who liuing diſſolutly & vnchaſtly, was by this king ſent home to the king of Naples her father.

Mary of Naples Queene of Majorca vnchaſt.

The peace betwixt Arragon and Granado was ſworne by him and confirmed at the caſtle of Valence, with Albuhacen, Abencomixe and Paſcal Cirera, Ambaſſadors for King Ioſeph Abenamet, vpon the like conditions, as with Caſtille. Earle of Foix, the firſt of that name, and daughter to Roger Bernard. A

The Cattelans enemies irreconciliable to the Geneuois, and newly incenſed by the loſſes which they had receiued by the army of Ayton d' Oria, who after that he had ſpoiled all that he found of the Arragonois faction vpon the bankes of Sardinia, retired into Corſica, to the Port of Boniface; they drew out of their Ports and Hauens of Cattelogne about forty Gallies, and thirty Foiſts and Brigantins, and directing their courſe towards the riuer of Genoa, they burnt al the Geneuois houſes of pleaſure, without reſpect of friend or foe: for the common weale of Genoa being then diuided, by reaſon of the faction of Guelphes and Ghibelins; the Ghibilins open enemies to the King of Arragon did for the moſt reſide at Sauonne, and from thence made their ſallies and enterpriſes; ſometimes drawing ſome priuate men of the Guelphes faction, to runne vp- B on the Cattelans, by reaſon whereof this Cattelan army intreated them all after one manner.

Cattelans burne and ſpoile the riuer of Genoa.

During theſe wrackes, Luke of Fieſco one of the chiefe of the Guelphes faction, had begunne to treat with King D. Alphonſo, by the meanes of Francis of Saint Eulalia, that if he would harken to a good accord with the Geneuois, holding the city of Genoa for friend, and forget al wrongs done, they would furniſh him with fifteene gallies, and follow his ſtandard againſt the Geneuois Ghibelins remayning at Sauonne, who had cauſed all the reuolts and troubles in Sardinia, wherewith the King was very well pleaſed: but the ſpoiles which the Cattelan army had made during the treaty in the riuer of Genoa intercepted all; ſo as theſe two factions of Genoa, being equally afflicted by a forraine enemy, were the more willing to giue credit to the perſwaſions of Robert King of Na- C ples, who reconciled them, and then they ioyned againſt the King of Arragon, to diſpoſſeſſe him of the Iſland of Sardinia. The heads of the two factions, were the families of Oria for the Guelphes, and Spinola for the Ghibelins. Beeing thus incenſed they runne along the coaſt of Cattelogne, with three ſcore ſaile, where they tooke many ſhips and other ſpoiles, leauing lamentable ſpectacles in all places where they had landed. Thirteene of their gallies paſſing from thence into Sardinia, attempted the fort and Port of Caillerij in vaine, from whence they were repulſt with loſſe. Theſe warres at ſea, betwixt the Cattelans and Geneuois might bee held equall, for they were the mightieſt nations at ſea in that age. All was full of difficultie, and iealouſie in the Iſland, D notwithſtanding that King Don Alphonſo, by his bountie, aduancements, alliances and marriages contracted in his fauour, and at his inſtance betwixt the Noblemen Cattelans, and Sardiniens, or Geneuois (hauing charges or lands in the Iſland) had ſought to draw them vnto him, and to make them friends, and affected to his party: yet he was in continuall warre, and was forced to keepe great garriſons in the Iſland, and many gallies at ſea with ſo great charge, as all the reuenues of the Iſland of Sardinia did auaile him little: beeing often conſtayned to importune the Pope, to diſcharge him of the tribute, which hee ought vnto the church of Rome, by reaſon of this chargeable conqueſt.

Thus King Don Alphenſo paſt his raigne in theſe home-bred and forraine troubles, E beeing but ſhort. A little before hee died Don Iames of Arragon, Lord of Xerica, who had married Queene Marie, which had beene left by D. Sancho King of Majorca, who liuing diſſolutly & vnchaſtly, was by this king ſent home to the king of Naples her father.

nard of Villaragut, Arnaud Morera, and Azbert Caliaza Ambaſſadors to the Pope, to doe him homage for the Iſlands of Corſica, and Sardinia: In this laſt the Eſtate was then ſomewhat quiet: for Azon and Iohn, Marquiſſes of Maleſpine, ſonnes to Opicin, Damian Barnabas, and Brancaleon d'Oria, Earles of Donoratico, the townes left vnto the Piſans, demanteled, and without any munition, Peter Iuge of Arborea, with Marian and Iohn his brethren, all holding lands, and beeing ſubiects in the Iſland, conteined themſelues in the friendſhip of the new King of Arragon, and did willingly acknowledge him for their ſuperior. The reſt of the family of Oria, for a wrong newly receiued from Ray-

Caſtille. 18 D. Alphonſo King of Caſtille hauing made a peace with the Nauarrois, found himſelfe freed of a great care, beeing ready to fall into new broiles by the practiſes of his tion and publike act.

warre of Nauarre) with D. Alphonſo King of Portugall, and did incenſe him to take armes for their defence, but their attempts had no better ſucceſſe then the precedent, for D. Alphonſo King of Caſtille, meaning to preuent theſe diſorders, gaue commandement throughout all the Prouinces of his Realme, to ſuppreſſe all thoſe that ſhould take armes without his priuity and warrant, ſeeking by all meanes to keepe the F Rebelles diuided one from an other. Moreouer hauing ſome fealing, that cruelty was to violent a remedie for men that were nobly borne, hee ſought by all milde and courteous meanes to diuide them, and to draw ſome of them vnto his ſeruice; the which he effected with D. Pero Fernandes de Caſtro, and D. Iohn Alphonſo of Albuquerque, who abandoned their companions.

And

A And not able to doe the like with the reſt, he went in perſon to beſeege D. Iohn Nugnes de Lara, being in Lerma, and gaue order that in other parts of the Realme they ſhould ſeize vpon the houſes and perſons of other rebels, beſeeging and forcing them if they made reſiſtance: and aboue al he ſent againſt D. Iohn Manuel, the orders of holy knights. The ſeege being before Lerma, there were many skirmiſhes and furious incounters: wherevpon the King of Portugall tooke occaſion to declare himſelfe, ſending word vnto the King of Caſtile, that he ſhould leaue D. Iohn Nugnes de Lara in peace, who (he ſayd) was his vaſſal, whereof the King of Caſtile made no great eſteeme, but continued his ſeege more violent then before: ſome authors ſay that the King of Caſtile, had a deſire to repudiat his lawful wife Donna Maria, who was daughter to D. Alphonſo King B of Portugal, and to marry D. Leonora de Guzman, his concubine, and that it was the true cauſe of their hatred. D. Iohn Manuel going ſecretly out of the caſtle of Garci Nugnes, he came to Pegnafiel to fauor them that were beſeeged within Lerma. In the meane time the tower of Lobaton and Soto were taken by the Kings men, where ſome Knights being taken, they were condemned and put to death.

VVarre made by Portugal againſt Caſtile.

The King of Portugall thinking hee had iuſt cauſe to enter in hoſtil manner into Caſtile, hee beſeeged Badajos: which ſeege continued, vntil that D. Pero Alphonſo de Soſa a Portugall, was defeated, with his troupes, by the garriſons and people of Andaluſie and Extremadura, neere vnto Villanoua of Barca Rotta, where many Portugals of account beeing ſlaine, the King was forced to raiſe his ſeege. They of Lerma ſeeing themſelues battred with great obſtinacy, beganne to diſtruſt their owne ſtrength, C and were out of hope of any ſuccours, wherefore they ſought meanes how to let D. Iohn Nugnes de Lara eſcape by night; leaſt hee ſhould fall into the King of Caſtiles hands, who was much incenſed, but all paſſages were ſo ſtopt as hee could not poſſibly get out, ſo as in the end hee was forced to compound, yeelding himſelfe, with the forts of Biſcay, vpon condition that hee ſhould haue his life ſaued, the which was promiſed him and kept. The townes of Lerma, Buſto and Villafranca in the mountaines of Oca, were demanteled, and the forts of Piſcay deliuered into the Kings hands, for an aſſurance of Don Iohn Nugnes faith, hauing promiſed and ſworne neuer to leaue his ſeruice, who followed the court at Vailledolit, and was afterwards much honored by D the King, who beſides other dignities made him chiefe ſtandard-bearer of the Realme, and in the end he recouered al that had beene taken from him.

Arragons

D. Iohn Manuel ſeeing this, retired himſelfe into Arragon, where there were great broiles betwixt the King D. Pedro, and D. Leonora his mother in law, and her partiſans: for D. Pedro of Xerica, whoſe lands the King had taken away, was in armes, with Diego Lopes of Haro, Iohn Martin of Leua, Lope Diaz Rogio and other Commanders, beeing ſent by the King of Caſtile, who aſſiſted them with men, money and councell: and to conferre of theſe quarrels, hee and his ſiſter Donna Leonora met at Ayllon, whereas ſhee made great complaints of the King D. Pedro, who had chaſed her out of Arragon, and E ſpoiled both her and her children.

Caſtile and Portugal.

The King of Caſtile deſyring to bee reuenged of the King of Portugall, hee marched towardes Badajos, where vpon the way hee was aduertiſed that Donna Leonora de Guzman was deliuered of a ſonne, the which hee cauſed to bee named Don Tello, this was in the yeere of our Lord 1337. Donna Beatrix his aunte, Queene of Portugall, came vnto him at Badajos, intreating him for to pardon the Portugalles, and not to enter in hoſtile manner into the countrie, promiſing to finde meanes to reconcile all quarrels betwixt her ſonne and him, and that all reaſonable ſatisfaction ſhould bee made.

An. 1337.

Her praiers were reiected, and hee marched with his army towards the towne of Yelbes, where hee cut vp the Vignes and Oliue trees, and ſpoiled all there abouts, then hee paſt by Ronches and Beros, and returned to Chelles and Oliuencia, deſyring much to incounter the Portugal army, the which hee knew to bee in field, but it marched another way. Don Alphonſo Ieoffres Tenorio, Admirall of Caſtille, defeated the Portugal army at ſea, beeing commanded by Manuel Pecagno a Geneuois, and carried away the Admirall priſoner, yet not without loſſe of ſome of his ſhips and men.

King of Caſtile inuades Portugal with an army.

This was the firſt attempt of Caſtile againſt Portugal, the which was ſtaied by the A Kings ſickneſſe, whereupon he cauſed himſelf to be carried to Seuile, and put his army into garriſons: but being ſoone recouered, he gathered his forces againe togither, and entred into the country of Algarbe (notwithſtanding that the great maſter of Rhodes, by commiſſion from Pope Benedict the eleuenth, had exhorted him to deſiſt from this war: and in like manner the Archbiſhop of Rheims, who was then Ambaſſador in Caſtile for the French King) he paſt the riuer of Guadiana, and came to Ayamont, which finding abandoned, he repaſt at Caſtromarin, the which was wel fortefied, ſo as he would not ſtay, but marcht towards Tabira, where he burnt the trees, and razed the farme houſes there abouts, and then he returned into Caſtile by Alcautin. Whileſt he waſted the country of Algarbe in Portugal, the King of Portugal did the like in Gallicia, and beſeeged Saluatier- B ra, who although he tooke it not, yet hee ſpoiled a great country, and left it deſolate, by reaſon of the couardize of Don Pero Fernandes, who was Gouernor in theſe parts, who would neuer ſhew himſelfe to make head againſt the King of Portugall, for that hee had beene bread vp a Page in his court: wherefore the Portugall army hauing ſpoiled the countrie of Galicia at their pleaſures, they returned without any incounter.

The Moores were ioyfull ſpectators of theſe wartes betwixt the father in law and ſon, ſo as they did ſtrictly entertaine the truce which they had made with the King of Caſtille: and for the better confirmation thereof, there came a great Ambaſſage into Caſtile, from Albohiçen the Miralmumin of Maroc, the chiefe whereof were two Alfaquins or Doctors of Mahumets ſect, of great reputation, who preſented vnto King D. Alphon- C ſo Barbary horſes, rich ſwords, cloath of gold and of precious ſilke, Oſtriges, Falcons and other beaſts, who hauing receiued an honourable reward, and obtained confirmation of the truce, with reparation of ſome exceſſe which had beene committed amongſt the garriſons of the frontiers, they returned well ſatisfied, but ſoone after the Moore changed aduice and councell, hearing (to their great griefe) that there had beene a truce concluded betwixt the two Kings of Caſtile and Portugal. This truce was treated and made by the dilligence of the great Maiſter of Rhodes, and the Archbiſhop of Rheims Ambaſſador for France, it was concluded with the King of Caſtile in the towne of Merida, about the end of the yeere 1337. or in the beginning of the next.

Death of Ximene de Luna Archbiſhop of Toledo.

During this war betwixt Caſtile and Portugal, D. Ximenes de Luna Archbiſhop of D
Toledo died, in whoſe place the Chapter did chooſe (but through the Kings fauour, who had written) D. Gil Aluares of Cuenca, otherwiſe called D. Gil Carrillo of Albornoz a councellor of Eſtate to King D. Alphonſo, and Archdeacon of Calatraua, in the ſame church, a man of great vertue amongſt the Spaniards, who for his wiſdome and iudgement, did in time merit to be a Cardinal of Rome, with the title of Saint Clement, Biſhop of Sabina, and Apoſtolike Legat in Italy, the Romaine Sea beeing then reſident in Auignon. During which dignity he did many things for the good of the church: and amongſt other monuments and teſtimonies which remaine of him at this day, there is the Colledge of Saint Clement in the city of Bolonia, the which they commonly call the E

The Rector of this Colledge hath ciuil and criminal iuriſdiction, and is not ſubiect to the Legat, nor to any other Magiſtrat of the city, the Colledge enioying as ample preuiledges as any knights or gentlemen there. About the end of the yeere 1337. was founded the towne of Alegria of Dulanci, two Leagues from Victoria, in the Prouince of Alaua, of many villages there about, the which obtained from the King the preuiledges, and lawes of the Realme, whereby the Inhabitants ſhould gouerne themſelues, and market euery Monday, with liberty to chooſe their owne Iudges. 19 The newes of a truce betwixt the Kings of Caſtille and Portugal, beeing vnder- Moores.
B ſtood at Granado, and from thence ſent to Maroc, at ſuch time as King Albohaçen had ſurmounted all warres and difficulties in Affrike, theſe Mooriſh Kings had a deſire to fill Spaine with fire and murther, beeing thruſt on by two contrary paſſions, the one of feare, to be firſt ſet vpon by the King of Caſtille, who was now freed from his inteſtine wars: the other of hope, that their armes ſhould be as ſucceſsful againſt the Chriſtians of Europe, as they had beene againſt the babarous Affricans: for King Albohaçen hauing not long before called troupes out of Spaine, which had followed Abomelic his ſonne, lying then idle on this ſide the ſeas, whereas all was quiet: and beeing aſſiſted by the forces of Granado, ſent into Affrike by King Ioſeph, hee had lately depriued Botexeſin,
C who raigned in Tremeſſen, both of Kingdome and life, and had vnited vnto his crowne the Realme of Sojumenca: ſo as beeing growne as haughty in courage, as powerful in Siegneuries and ſubiects, he had no leſſe conceptions, then to reſtore the ancient glorie of the Miralmumins his Predeceſſors in Spaine, and wholy to expell the Chriſtians. Beſides the reſpect of religion did much incourage him, holding it not onely honourable, but alſo conſcientious, to aduance Mahumets ſect by armes, according to his Doctrine: wherefore hauing by the aduice of his Alfaquins and Alcaides concluded this warre, hee beganne to giue order that his troupes ſhould march towards the Straight, and paſſe by little and litle to Algezire, and other places of Granado, making a Magazin for victuals, armes, engins and other munition for the warre, at Tanger; whereof the D Chriſtians Princes were preſently aduertiſed by their Gouernors of forts vpon that frontier, and of King Abomelics paſſage and returne into Spaine, and of the preparations which both he and Ioſeph King of Granado made: infallible arguments that they would ſoone make open warres, as it happened in the beginning of the yeere 1338. D. Alphonſo King of Caſtile ſeeing this burthen ready to fall vpon him, fore caſt all meanes how to beare it: hee made Orders and taxes vpon victuals, and cut off the Spaniards ſuperfluities in apparels and other pompes: hee ſent his ſea-army into the Straights, to ſtop the Moores paſſage: hee obtained from Pope Benedict pardons and Indulgences for all thoſe that ſhould contribute to this warre: hee aſſigned places for the ſouldiers Rendez vous: hee leauied footmen, artiſans and pioners: and in generall hee prouided for E all things which hee thought neceſſarie for the warres: but aboue all hee pacefied the troubles growne betwixt D. Pedro King of Arragon, and Donna Leonora his Mother in law. In all which buſineſſes, the Archbiſhop of Rheims, Ambaſſador for France in Caſtile, laboured with great affection, and to the end there ſhould bee no thing defectiue for the wel gouerning of the common weale, the Prelats and Maſters of the Orders made diligent ſearch among them that were their ſuffragans and dependants: ſo as D. Ruis Peres Maiſter of the Order of Alcantara was depoſed by D. Iohn Nugnes maſter of Calatraua, who had iuriſdiction ouer him, and power to doe it. Yet amideſt al theſe Cares, the King did not forget the loue of D. Leonora of Guzman, whoſe brother called Don Alphonſo Melendez of Guzman, was by him made maiſter of the Order of the holy knights of Saint Iames. The yeere 1339. beeing come, hee went towards Seuile, where An. 1339.
F was the Rendez vous, for all his troupes, both horſe and foote, ſo as hauing in few daies gathered together a great and well ordred army, hee entred the territories of Antequera & Archidona, the which he ſpoiled running vp to Ronda, frō whence he was forced to retire to Seuile for want of victuals, where he ſpent the reſt of the ſpring to diſtribute the forts & places vpon the frontiers vnto captaines, making D. Gonzales Nugno, or as others

the Chriſtian army had made into their country, went to field by two ſeueral waies, the Infant Abomelic (who had great numbers of light horſe) by Medina Sidonia, whoſe territory he ſpoiled, and Ioſeph King of Granado entred by Silos, which place belonging vnto the knights of Saint Iames and well manned, hee beſeeged, and battred furiouſly, but Moores raiſed from the ſiege of Silos. it was not onely brauely defended by the garriſon but their campe was aſſaulted by the Caſtillan army, and they forced to diſlodge by D. Alphonſo Melendez de Guzman who was the Leader, not without great diſhonor and loſſe to the King of the Moores: who at the ſame time was ſtript of the victuals of his army, which he cauſed to bee conducted to B Priegos, by the Gouernor D. Gonzalo Martines, who carried the prey to Alcaudette.
The gallies of Caſtille being ioyned to them of Arragon, held King Abomelic as it were beſeeged in Algezire, lying in the ſtraight; taking from him all hope of ſuccours, either of men or victuals from Affrike: wherevpon the Moores beeing aduertiſed that in Lebrixa was one of the ſtore-houſes for the Chriſtian army, thought they might well ſur-priſe it: wherevpon they ſent about one thouſand fiue hundred horſe among the Oliue trees of Xeres (where they tooke a great booty) but they foũd that D. Fernand Puerto Carrero, gouernor of Tariffe, was entred a little before with a good number of ſouldiars; wherefore their deſeigne beeing diſapointed, they turned towards Arcos, where they ſpoiled, and carried away great ſtore of cattaile, whereof the Inhabitants within Seuile C being aduertiſed, they went with their city ſtandard to field, and beeing ioyned to the Maiſter of Alcantara, to D. Aluar Perez of Guzman, to D. Pero Ponce of Leon (who went out of Arcos) and others, they came and incountred theſe forragers vnlooked for, whom they charged ſo furiouſly, as they put them to rout, and recouered all the prey.
King Abomelic continuing the ſpoile about Xeres, marcht with three thouſand and fiue hundred horſe which he had reſerued, and a great number of foot towards Alcala de los Ganzules, and beſeeged it, beeing ignorant of the defeat of his men. The victorious Chriſtians, hauing ioyned with Fernand Gonçales d' Aguilar, who had ſome horſe, and being alſo fortefied by them of Eccia, marcht that way, and charged this army of Moores haſtely purſued, had no meanes to get to horſe, but fell amongſt the footmen, who fled and were hardly followed: ſo as in the end, not to be knowne, hee caſt himſelfe amongſt returned ioyfully to Xeres. The Kings body was afterwards found, neere vnto a brooke whether he had crept (as it was likely) to quench the burning thirſt, which doth commō- E ly afflict ſuch as are wounded, hauing loſt much bloud. King Albohaçen his father being aduertiſed of this pittifull accident, was inflamed with wrath, and deſire of reueng, make-ing al poſſible ſpeed to paſſe into Spaine.

did much incenſe the King; wherefore being come to Madrid, hee ſent to the Maiſter to come preſently vnto him. D. Gonzal who was fully aduertiſed why hee was ſent for, and knowing how dangerous the King was to them hee did not like, obeyed not: but thruſt on by diſtruſt, hee left his ſeruice, and debauching many of his knights, hee acquainted F himſelfe with the Moores, and beganne to make practiſes in Granado. The King bee-ing aduertiſed of his reuolt, returned ſodainely, and had meanes (before hee could diſ-lodge) to beſeege him in a towne called Valence, belonging to the Order of Alcantara, whereas D. Gonçale defended himſelfe vnto the end, and would neuer harken to any

A In the end, not able to hold it any longer, hee offred to yeeld vnto the Kings mercy, but it was too late: for the place was forced, and he taken and put to death and his body condemned and burnt as a Traitor by the Kings ſentence. Such as had followed his party, and held other places yeelded. A man in truth worthy of a more honorable death, who beſides many generous acts, and worthy ſeruices done vnto the crowne of Caſtille, had beene in the two aboue mentioned victories and adorned the Temples of the towne where he was forced, with the ſtandards and enſignes hee had taken from the Moores. D. Nugno Chamiço was choſen in his place.

Ieoffrey Giralbert Admiral of Arragon, who kept the Sraight with the gallies of Arragon, being landed vpon the ſhoare nere to Algezire, had an incounter with the Moores, Moores.
B by whom he was vanquiſhed, and ſlaine with an arrow, wherevpon the army returned into Arragon, that of Caſtille remayning at the paſſage, the which conſiſted onely of three and thirtie gallies, and ſome few ſhips, to weake a force to ſtoppe the Moores paſſage out of Affrike: ſo as about three thouſand Genets paſt preſently into Algezire, without any let, and beganne to ouerrunne the country about Arcos, Xeres and Medina Sidonia, gathering together a great prey: but thinking to put it into Algezire, they were forced to leaue it by the way, being charged by the horſemen which went out of Xeres, who ſlue many vpon the place, amongſt which was Bontui, a famous captaine of the Moores.

King Alhohaçen had cauſed a great number of veſſels of al ſorts to be made ready, both
C in the ports of Spaine and Affrike, meaning to carry into Spaine one of the greateſt armies that euer went out of Affrike, to ſtop whoſe paſſage, King Alphonſo was il prouided: and as he was diſtruſtfull, and of a ſtrange humour, and many times vniuſt vnto his beſt ſeruants, hee complained of Don Alphonſo Ieoffrey Tenorio his Admiral, ſaying that hee ſlept, and ſuffred the Moores to paſſe and repaſſe at their pleaſure, the which was not true: for the Admirall did his duety with thoſe few Gallies hee had, and did often take foiſts and other veſſels which did houer about thoſe coaſtes, and ſhips laden with victuals which came out of Affrike into Spaine: namely from Centa to Algezire; the which notwithſtanding did not ſatisfie the King, who would exact ſome great effect of neceſſity: wherefore hee thruſt the Admirall into deſpaire, the which was

and other veſſels to paſſe his horſemen, victuals, armes, engines and other equipage of warre, neere to a hundred and foure ſcore ſailes, as wel of his owne, as of the Kings of Granado, hee went with this mighty army towards Spaine, where it was eaſie to land, finding no reſiſtance, whereat King D. Alphonſo, who was at Seuile was much incenſed, blaming his Admiral inceſſantly of cowardiſe and treachery, the which hee tooke ſo greeuouſly, as he reſolued raſhly to goe and charge the Moores at what price ſoeuer: and hauing drawne thoſe few Gallies and Ships he had out of Saint Lucar, into the o-
E pen ſea, he preſented himſelfe before Algezire, prouoking the enemie to battaile, who going out of Algezire and Gibraltar, farre more in number then the Chriſtian Gallies, there was a fierce and cruel battaile, the end whereof was the whole loſſe of the Caſtillan army, whereof there were but fiue gallies ſaued, the which recouered the neere port of Tariffe, and ſome few ſhips, which eſcaped by fauour of the winde and current, ſayling towards Carthagena. The Admirall was ſlaine in this conflict, ſaying, that the King ſhould know he was neither Coward nor Traitor: but it was a raſh attempt in him, to hazard ſo ſmall a fleete againſt ſo great an armie, who ſhould haue conſidred, that by the loſſe of a battaile hee gaue the whole commande of the ſea vnto the enemy. Deſeat of the Caſtillan army and death of the Admirall.
F Thus this Admirall thinking to preſerue his honor, which hee might well haue warranted by the reaſons of warre, which diſallow all great hazards, but in extremity, hee did more blemiſh it. This loſſe which happened to Don Alphonſo King of Caſtille, partly by his owne bitterneſſe, and vniuſt rigour to his faithfull ſeruant, did much afflict him, ſo as hee was forced to ſeeke ſpeedie meanes to repaire ſo great a ruine: for the Moores army inſolent of this victory, and knowing that there were no forces at ſea able to make head againſt them, vaunted that they would beſeege Seuile: wherefore the King A of Caſtille was forced to conuert the truce which hee had made with the King of Portugall to a peace, and to conſent that D. Conſtance Manuel ſhould marry with Don Pedro Infant of Portugall, whoſe wife D. Blanche beeing fallne into a Palſey, was put away by him. By meanes of this peace, and at the inſtance of the Queene Donna Maria, daughter to the King of Portugal, hee promiſed to lend all his ſhippes of warre to the King of Caſtille, the which ſtayied not long before they arriued at Seuile, when as the King gaue order to rigge out fifteene gallies of his owne, and twelue ſhips, of the which hee gaue the charge vnto Don Alphonſo Ortiz Calderon, Prior of Saint Iohn.

In the meane time King Albohacens army paſt, the Moores Gallies and Ships neuer ceaſing for a long time, to tranſport horſe and foote, victualles and munition for B the warre, which they had prepared, the which was as great and fearefull as any had beene ſeene, for they write in their Hiſtories that this Arabian King had gathered together all the forces hee could from the ſhoare of the Weſterne Atlantike ſea, vnto Egipt, hauing by the conqueſt of the Realmes of Tremeſſen and Sojumença, ſo extended the bounds of his Empire as there was not any King or Potentat in all the length of Affrike, which was not his ſubiect, or ſtrictly allied vnto him: ſo as the Spaniſh authors ſay, that hee brought into Spaine aboue ſeuenty thouſand horſe; and foure hundred thouſand foote, the Arabians and Affricans comming from all part vpon the newes of this great expedition, by the preachings and perſwaſions of the Alfaquins, Doctors and Prieſts of their law, who were ſent through out all the regions of Affrike, by King Alboacen, to the end that ſuch, as ſpoile and gaine (the common end C of warre) could not moue, might bee perſwaded to take armes for religions cauſe. This great multitude of Infidels, were neere fiue monthes in paſſing, hauing at this paſſage, beſides the Gallies of Maroc and Granado, thoſe of the Kings of Tunes and Bugie, whereof hee of Tunes was father in law to Alboacen, and their common landings were Algezire and Gibraltar.

Great preparation of war made by King Alboacen againſt Spaine.

It behooued King D. Alphonſo to ſtudie how hee ſhould reſiſt ſo great a power, the which did wonderfully trouble him: yet beeing a Prince of a great courrage, hee prouided for many things ſpeedely, which were of great importance for the warre. And doubting that the Moores firſt attempt would bee againſt Tariffe, hee manned it with a good garriſon of old ſouldiars, and gaue the charge thereof to Iohn Alphonſo of Benauides, furniſhing the place with all things neceſſarie to maintaine a ſeege: wherein hee was not deceiued, for it was preſently inueſted by the enemie, King Albeaçen beeing in perſon in the armie. Experience hath often taught, that multitudes giue no victory; for beſides that God will therein ſhew a teſtimony, that it is hee alone, without the force of mans arme, which rayſeth and pulles downe Kingdomes and ſtates; there are ſo many naturall and humaine reaſons, which doe concurre with this point of religion, as there is no cauſe to call it in queſtion. The confuſion, diſorder, diſobedience, mutinies, hunger, diſeaſes, the infinit carriages and lets of baggage, iealouſies betwixt commanders, and diuerſity of nations, the negligence and raſh confidence which Kings ground vpon their great numbers of men, are inſeparable miſcheeſes to great armies, the E which haue moſt commonly ruined them, but haue alwaies made them vnprofitable and a burthen, to them that haue lead them. So it happened to King Alboaçen in this voiage: for as ſoone as hee had landed this infinite multitude of Arabians and other Nations, preſuming that there was not any Chriſtian in Spaine, that would dare to preſent himſelfe before ſo great a power, and that hee ſhould preſently ſee himſelfe Maiſter of all the townes of Andaluſia: beſides hee thought hee had no cauſe to feare any impeachment at ſea, the two armies of Caſtille and Arragon hauing beene defeated: ſo as all ſmall veſſels of burthen might paſſe ſafely from Spaine to Affrike, and furniſh his campe with victualls, if hee ſhould haue any neede, whereupon hee preſently diſarmed all his Gallies, and drew them into the Ports, hauing no other F thought but to make warre by land, but it fell out otherwiſe: for there was not any pettie place vpon the frontiers of Andaluſia but held good: ſo as being forced to attend his prouiſions for ſo great an army from Affrike, for that the countrie of Granado could

Armies vnprofitable by their too great multitudes.

A could not ſupply it, he found himſelfe (being at the ſeege of Tariffe) in great want of victuals, being eaſie for the gallies of Caſtile and Portugal, to ſpoile all paſſengers which brought munition from the ports of Affricke into Spaine: wherefore he repented himſelf much of this enterpriſe, and would gladly haue found ſome meanes to haue retired honorably.

At that time Don Iohn Martines de Leyua arriued at Seuile, returning from Pope Benedict who kept at Auignon: from whom he brought pardons and full indulgences, to ſuch as ſhould croſſe themſelues for this warre againſt the Infidels, or otherwiſe employ themſelues or their goods for the aduancement thereof, with an eſpeciall charge and commiſſion to Don Gil Carillo of Albornoz, Arch-biſhop of Toledo, to publiſh this Croiſado,
B making him to that end Legate of the Apoſtolike ſea. The army before Tariffe being oppreſt with famine, King Alboacen gaue Don Iohn Alphonſo of Benauides, the Gouernor, to vnderſtand, that he had ſome matters to treat of with him for the good of the king his maſter, and therefore he ſhould ſend ſome vnto him, to conferre with him. The Gouernour hauing receiued hoſtages, ſent two Gentlemen vnto him: but beeing aduertiſed at the ſame inſtant that the gallies of Caſtile and Portugall had beene all caſt away by tempeſt vppon the coaſt, ſo as the ſea beeing free, victuals began to come aboundantly from Affricke vnto the campe: when as theſe Knights came vnto king Alboacen, hee ſayd nothing of conſequence vnto them, but was deſirous againe to continue the warre, ſending backe theſe meſſengers, and retiring his hoſtages. Then did they make a furious batterie, with C all kinds of engines vſuall in thoſe times, againſt the which the beſeeged rampared themſelues, and made a gallant defence. King D. Alphonſo hauing called to Seuile, the Noblemen of his Councell, and the chiefe men among his ſubiects, ſitting in his royall throne with great maieſtie, holding in his right hand the ſword, wherewith hee had beene girt in Saint Iames Church of Gallicia, when he was made Knight, and in his left hand the Crowne, wherewith he had beene crowned in the cittie of Bourgos: he ſpake grauely vnto them of the preſent eſtate of his affaires, and the danger wherein the Chriſtian realms of Spaine then were, by the importune malice, and impiety of the Arabians, their ancient enemies, coniured together at that time from the Eaſt vnto the Weſt, to glut their implacable thirſt with the bloud of Spaniards: againſt whoſe forces, without all doubt, in D time, Spaine ſhould not be able to reſiſt, many of their beſt men hauing beene conſumed by the factions and diuiſions which had raigned among them, whereby Spaine had waſted her ſelfe by her owne armes, and withall the ill ſucceſſe of his armies at ſea, brought twiſe to nothing: ſo as for ſo dangerous a miſchiefe, there was need of an extraordinarie remedie, the honour of the name of Chriſtians, the Crowne of Caſtile, and their liberties, liues, and goods, beeing then in queſtion: wherein he had need of good and faithfull Councell, and for that cauſe had called them together, praying God to put into their harts and vnderſtandings, what was fit for the honor and increaſe of his Crowne, and the Common-weale. Wherupon many different opinions hauing beene propounded, all in E the end concluded, that they muſt rayſe the ſeege from before Tariffe: for the effecting whereof they muſt find meanes to ioyne the forces of Portugall, Arragon and Caſtile together, for the which they began preſently to giue order. The Queene of Caſtile got a promiſe from Don Alphonſo King of Portugall her father, to ayde the king her husband with all his forces, whereuppon there was an enterview of the two kings, at Irumegna, a towne in Portugall.

D. Alphonſos ſpeech to his Councell.

The king of Caſtile ſent to encourage them of Tariffe, giuing them hope of ſpeedie ſuccours: forbidding them expreſly not to ſally foorth vpon the enemy, for that the loſſe of one man did more import them, then an hundred to King Alboacen: he obtained a new army at ſea from the king of Arragon, (the which was commanded by the Prior of Saint F Iohn, who had eſcaped in the tempeſt) to ioyne with thoſe few gallies which he had yet left: and preſently after the king of Portugall came in perſon to Seuile, beeing accompanied with all the flower of his Nobility, and the beſt ſouldiers of his country. They leauied men in all parts of Spaine both foot and horſe, which enrolled themſelues for this religious warre, but eſpecially out of Biſcay, Alaua, and Guipuſcoa, which bee the beſt footmen of Spaine, the which were commanded by Don Pero Nugnes de Guzman, their Lord foote, and 14000. horſe, with which forces the two kings of Caſtile and Portugal, reſolued to offer battell vnto the enemy which was before Tariffe, beeing farre more mighty then they, hauing beſides the great number of horſe and foote which he brought out of Affricke, ioyned vnto him the forces of Granado, the which conſiſted of 7000. horſe, and a great multitude of foot. Aſſoone as the Chriſtian army began to march, Alboacen king Skirmiſh at the paſſage of the riuer of Salado of Maroc, and Ioſeph king of Granado, ſent Albohamar Infant of Maroc with 2000. horſe to keepe the paſſage of the riuer of Salado, which runnes betwixt Pegna du Cerf, and Tariffe, the which were defeated by a thouſand horſe and 4000. foot, which the King of Caſtile had ſent to put themſelues into Tariffe, the which they effected happily, after this ex- B ploit, through fauour of the night, the Mooriſh kings hauing already raiſed their ſeege, burnt their engines of batterie, and retired their army into a place of aduantage, called Alfaneque. Theſe troups were the bands of D. Henry and D. Tello, children aduowed of Caſtile, the which were led by wiſe and expert Captaines.

The day after this defeat the two armies preſented themſelues vppon the bankes of the riuer of Salado, which the Chriſtians meant to paſſe, and ſo they did, but with great reſiſtance and difficultie: yet Gonçalo Ruis de la Vega, and his brother Garcilaço, who marched in the head of the army, aſſured the paſſage for the reſt, repulſing the Mores, who defended it valiantly, when as the Chriſtians were all paſt without breaking, they found the great ſquadrons of the Moores in Order, ready to fight, ſo as in an inſtant they ioyned, and were ſo mingled, as the kings themſelues on either ſide, ſparing not their owne per- C ſons, and performing the duties as well of ſouldiers, as of Generals of armies, were many times found in danger: and their obſtinacie was ſo great in the fight, as the Arch-biſhop of Toledo was faine (partly by intreaties, and partly by force) to draw the king of Caſtile out of the preſſe, where he had the fore-part of his ſaddle ſhot through with an arrow: a dangerous blow, if it had lighted a little higher, the which might haue made the king-domes of Spaine a prey vnto the Mores, by the loſſe of a battell, which doth commonly follow the death of the Generall. But God diſpoſed otherwiſe, according to his mercy to the Chriſtians: for the Moores beeing rather hindred then helped by their multitudes, might haue ſlaine more, and it may be haue extinguiſhed the name of Moores in Spaine, if they had pourſued the diſordered enemies, who fled one ouer another, and not buſied themſelues at the ſpoyle, eſpecially the footmen. The camp remayning free to the Chriſtians, as they gathered the ſpoyles together, there were found among the dead, one of the king of Marocs wiues, called Fatima, daughter to the king of Tunes, of the race of the Almohades, and three other Ladies. Among the priſoners Albohamar ſonne to king Alboacen, and his nephewes Aboham and Alboali, it may be children to Alboali, who had beene king of Sojumenca, two of the kings daughters, and other Moores of noate. The Kings of Maroc and Granado eſcaped by flight, and retired to diuers places. Alboacen ap- E prehending, that by this defeate his reputation and honour would bee much blemiſhed, and thereby the fidelitie of his ſubiects ſhaken, fearing leaſt a ſonne of his called Abderramen, whom he had left at Maroc, ſhould ſeaze vppon the kingdome, he paſt the ſame

This battell wonne by the Chriſtians the eight and twentith of October, in the yeare 1340. is rightly paralelled to that of Muradal or Tholouſa, by the which the Moores loſt the command of Spaine, ſome 128. yeares before: for thereby the great deſſeins of the king of Maroc were diſapppointed, hauing promiſed vnto himſelfe the conqueſt of all Spaine, ſo as after that time the warre grew more eaſie and light. This victorie Superſtitious acknowledgements of ſo great a victory was honoured and renowned by many religious and ciuill acts among the Spaniards:
for beſides that during the conflict, the name of Saint Iames, (who was held Patron and F Protector of Spaine) did ſownd (as they ſay) in the ayre, and that Don *Alphonſo Gon-

A put in practiſe (according to the doctrine of thoſe times) in the campe, and in all other places whether that newes came, thankes were giuen vnto God for ſo great a grace, and great demonſtrations of ioy made throughout all the townes. D. Alphonſo King of Caſtile, the day after the battell entred into Tariffe, and cauſed the breaches to bee repayred, commending and rewarding the Captaines and ſouldiers which had carried themſelues valiantly in the ſeege. Hauing afterwards viewed the enemies ſpoiles, the king of Caſtile did diſtribute it, according to euery mans merits.

The king of Portugall would not haue any thing, but certaine furnitures and caparaſons for horſes, and ſwords richly wrought after the Moreſco faſhion: but the King of Caſtile his ſonne-in-law gaue him a priſoner, a Moore of the bloud royall, one of the B ſonnes of Alboali, who had beene king of Sojumenca. Thus the two kings, father-in-law, and ſonne-in-law, parted, very well ſatisfied one of another. To acknowledge the grace which God had done vnto the Chriſtians, by ſo great a victorie, the king of Caſtile took this courſe, he ſent Iohn Martines de Leyua, to Pope Benedict, then reſiding at Auignon, with his royall Standard, which had beene carried in the battell, accompanied with foure and twenty of the chiefe Enſignes which he had taken from the Moores, the which were borne by ſo many Moores. Moreouer, he ſent him an hundred horſe richly appointed, euery one hauing a ſword and a target hanging at his ſaddle pommell, and were led by ſo many Moores. With theſe horſes he ſent his owne, on the which hee was mounted the day of the battell, couered with the royall armes of Caſtile and Leon: and moreouer, ma-
C ny rich Iewels, and other ſingularities, which things were preſented vnto the Pope with great ceremony and pompe, and receiued with no leſſe honour and ſolemnity by the Pope and Cardinals. And the more to honour this act, the Pope the ſame day did ſing a pontificall Maſſe, and did preach, much commending the king of Caſtile, and to reward him, he powred foorth his ſpirituall treaſures, granting him ſtore of Indulgences, with the which Iohn Martines de Leyua returned, beeing well recompenced.

Some Authors write, that the victuallers, carters, pioners, merchants, Lackies, and others of baſe quality in the Chriſtians campe, falling vppon the baggage, whileſt the ſouldiers were in fight, had taken great ſpoiles of gold, ſiluer, and other riches, and that the
D king being aduertiſed thereof, was perſwaded not to ſuffer men, which had not beene in the battell, nor aduentured their liues, to enioy the booties which were due vnto ſouldiers: wherefore meaning to follow this aduice, he forced many to bring backe that which they had taken: but the greater number eſcaped, who fearing to be diſpoſſeſt of that which they had gotten, beeing all their fortunes, left Caſtile, and went into Nauarre, Arragon, France and other countries, with ſuch ſtore of double duckets, as the price of gold was fallen a ſixt part, and all merchandize much riſen.

20 In this warre were furniſhed twenty gallies of Cattelogne, by Don Pedro king of Arragon. Arragon, and eight by him of Majorca. The King Don Pedro was not there in perſon, neither did he ſend any forces by land, by reaſon of his owne affaires and domeſticke deſ-
E ſeignes, which he did plot to the preiudice of his ſubiect. A violent Prince, proud, diſdainfull, and full of reuenge. Don Iames King of Majorca his couſin and brother-in law, was forced in the citty of Barcelona, the yeare before the defeate of the Moores at Salado, to do him homage for the Ilands and other Segneuries which he held vppon the Mayne, as to his Soueraigne, cauſing him to kneele before him, whereuppon this Prince retired himſelfe in a great rage to Perpignan: from whence ſoone after he was forced to returne to Court, and to accompany the king Don Pedro vnto Auignon, whither he went to viſit the Pope, where it happened that theſe Kings walking through the towne together, a ſeruant of the King of Majorcas, doing ſome ſeruice vnto his maſter indiſcreetly, hee did ſo mooue the King Don Pedro, as he was ready to draw his ſword, and to ſtrike the king of Majorca himſelfe, which was the beginning of their quarrels, the which continued long F and violent. Qualities of the King D. Pedro.

The arriuall and entrie of the king Don Pedro into Auignon, was very honorable, for at the paſſage of the riuer of Durance, he was met and receiued by two and twenty Cardinals, and entred with the king of Majorca into the towne, betwixt Cardinall Neapoleon of Vrſins, and he of Cominges: but the next day (after he had ſhewed his ſpleene againſt his his brother in law, it may be moued with ſome ſower anſwer which the Pope had giuen him) he retired to Villa-noua diſcontented. The chiefe man which then ſerued him in his moſt important affaires, was Nicholas of Ionuille, a French man, who was Earle of Terra-noua in the Kingdome of Naples, and had maried Marguerite daughter to the Admirall Roger of Loria. This man was aduanced in the place of D. Pedro Earle of Ribagorça, the Kings vncle, who was giuen more to a contemplatiue life, then to worldly affaires: for the which, notwithſtanding he had had long and bitter iarres with D. Pedro de Luna, Archbiſhop of Sarragoſſa, who was deſirous to gouerne, and to mannage the affaires of the Realme: but their contention had beene ended by the aduauncement of this third, and they were reconciled at the marriage of D. Lope de Luna, the ſonne of Artal, and nephew to the Archbiſhop, and D. Violant the Kings aunt, and ſiſter to the Earle of Ribagorça, who was vidow to Philip Deſpote of Romania, and ſonne to Philip Prince of Tarentum, the which were celebrated at Lerida, and from whence they went to Auignon. The King D. Pedro beeing returned from this voyage, hee commenced a criminall Proceſſe againſt the King of Maiorca, for that he cauſed money to be coyned in the Towne of Perpignan, and he cauſed him to bee cited to appeare before the Eſtates then aſſembled at Barcelona, not much troubling himſelfe that the French king (carrying himſelfe as Soueraigne of Montpellier, and other lands belonging to the King of Maiorca, on this ſide the Pyrenees) had ſeized vpon the forts and caſtles of all theſe places. The King of Maiorca not appearing, his totall ruine was reſolued by the King, the which followed as we ſhall hereafter ſhew.

Eſtate of Sardinia. At that time ſuch was the Eſtate of Sardinia: Caillery, Aquafredda, Iojoſaguarda, Quirro, Caſtelorguilleux, Gallicelli, Caſtel Pedreſio, Faba Oſolia, Saſſeri, and la Baſtide of Sorria, were held by Arragon garriſons: Marian Iudge of Arborea, had beene newly made Earle of Gothian by the king, Iohn Marquis of Maleſpine, and the Earles of Donoratico were friends to the kings of Arragon: but in Italy the Piſans, the Genouois, and with them Luquin Vicount, (who then ruled at Milan) had made a league, and conſpired to chaſe the Arragonois out of Sardinia, where they alſo had their partiſans and intelligences: for beſides other factions, the family of Doria was then diuided into foure factions. Theſe things did trouble the king D. Pedro amidſt his enterpriſes, at ſuch time as hee ſought the ruine of D. Iames King of Maiorca, and when hee was ſollicited by Hugh Cortingo, Petra Allerata, and Loupe Cinerca, chiefe men of the Iland of Corſica, to vndertake the conqueſt thereof, whereof the Biſhop of Aleria was the miniſter and ambaſſadour: and euen then when it was moſt needful to haue ſent his gallies to the Streight, in fauor of the k. of Caſtile, and for the common intereſt of all the Chriſtian Princes of Spaine.

Portugal. Before the yeare 1340. paſt, the Infant D. Pedro of Portugall had a ſonne by his new ſpouſe D. Conſtance Manuel, whome he had married at Ebora, with a dowrie of 300000. doublons, and many rich iewels, and this Infant was named D. Fernand or Ferdinand, who was king of Portugall after the Grandfather and father.

Caſtile. 21 In the yeare 1341. D. Alphonſo king of Caſtile hauing called a Parlament of all his Realmes at Herrena in Extremadura, there were great ſummes of mony giuen him, his ſubiects ſeeing that he employed it profitably, for the defence and increaſe of the crowne: from thence he came to Madrid, where he gaue Order for all that was neceſſarie for the warre, and appointed the Rendez-vous for his troupes at Cordoua, from whence he ſent them of Seuile and Cordoua to make incurſions, attending the reſt of his forces: he made a ſhew to go to Malaga, the which put the Moores into great feare: but hee marched to Alcala of Bencayde, vppon the arriuall of thoſe troupes which he expected, the which he found vnfurniſhed, for the king of Granado did confidently beleeue, that he would haue led his armie to Malaga: This place after ſome weake reſiſtance yeelded, vpon condition that the Inhabitants ſhould haue their liues ſaued: Moclin was taken by the diligence of D. Alphonſo Fernandes Cornel. There was ſome ouerture of a truce made in the behalfe of the king of Granado, but without any concluſion, for that the king of Caſtile would not haue king Aboacen comprehended: Priegos was alſo taken by compoſition: the like happened to Sarrabuey, being preſt by Martin Fernandes Puerto Carrero. D. Alphonſo Melendez de Guzman, maſter of S. Iames, did alſo win the caſtel of Benamexir: other places, as Rute, and

A and the tower of Matrera were alſo forced: then winter approching, the king left good garriſons in his townes, and the gard of the ſea to Giles Bocanegra, a Geneuois with fortie gallies, and other ſhips, and then he came to Vailledolit, where he aſſigned the Eſtates at Burgos, at the which the ſeege of Algezire beeing propounded, there was granted vnto him an Impoſition, called Alcauala, which was the twentith part of all merchandize, that ſhould be ſold within the Realme. Thus as the king deſſeigned the ſeege of Algezire, his Admiral Giles Bocanegra hauing ſurprized twelue gallies of Granado in the port of Builon, he burnt foure, ſunke two, and carried away the other ſixe. The king of Portugall ſent ten of his gallies to ioyne with them of Caſtile, which were in the port of Xatares, being commanded by Charles Peçano or Pecagno. In the meane time many of the Moores
B gallies aſſembled at Ceuta, the which they ſayd, exceeded the number of 80. which threatened to paſſe into Spaine with great forces to reuenge their former loſſes. The king of Caſtile aduertiſed herof, came to Seuile, where by the way he vnderſtood that the Mores army was come out of Affricke into Spaine, and that they were entred into the mouth of the riuer of Guadamecil with great numbers of ſouldiers, victuals, and other prouiſions, the which they had landed, but it was ſuddenly beſeeged by the gallies of Caſtile and Portugal, to whoſe ſuccor came 13. gallies of Algezire, the which were fought with all by part of the Chriſtian army, who ſunke foure of them, two were taken, and the reſt ran on ground. Being returned to their companions, who had ſhut vp the Moores army in the mouth of the riuer, there was a furious battell giuen, where as the Chriſtians had the bet-
C ter, and the Moores loſt 25. of their gallies. This done, the Portugal Admirall returned being ſent for by the king his maſter: he came to kiſſe the king of Caſtiles hands at Xeres, who did him great honour, and gaue him letters in teſtimony of his vertue to the King of Portugal his maſter, intreating him to ſend him backe againe with his gallies. But the army at ſea was nothing weakened hereby, for at the ſame time that the gallies of Portugal departed there arriued 20. from Arragon, of the which D. Pearo of Moncada was Generall, who in their way had incountred and vanquiſhed 13. gallies of the Moores, whereof they carried away foure, two were broken againſt the ſhore, and the reſt ſaued themſelues at Velez in Affricke. The king came to Xatares, and being himſelf deſirous to diſcouer the country of Algezire, and the ſituation of the towne, he went abord a gally, and houered
D along the coaſt, and by the gulph, finding the country very pleaſant: wherefore hee grew more deſirous to beſeege that fort: and being returned to Seuile, and giuen order for all things neceſſarie for ſuch an enterpriſe, he came and inueſted it both by ſea and land, in the month of Auguſt 1342. hauing not yet all his forces together, but onely 4000. foot: An. 1342. and 2600. horſe, with his ſea army of Caſtile and Arragon. In Algezire they made accompt, that there were at the leaſt 800. horſe, and 12000. foote Moores, all archers, and Croſſe-bow men, who did much annoy the Chriſtians, by their continuall ſallies and skirmiſhes, but aſſoone as the king of Caſtile had taken a fort, called Carthagena, lying betwixt Algezire and Gibraltar, they preſented themſelues more warily. A Moore taken in E this caſtell, beeing brought vnto the king to diſcouer the ſtate of the towne, was ſo tranſported with a deſperate furie, as had not his Guard beene, and others that were neere vnto the Kings perſon, he had ſlaine him. Matters ſtanding on theſe tearmes, the king of Arragon reuoked his army, for that he had need thereof againſt the king of Maiorca, the which did ſomewhat incomodate the ſeege: and at the ſame time the king had another cauſe of griefe, for the death of D. Alphonſo Melendez de Guzman, maſter of S. Iames: in whoſe place D. Frederic the kings baſe ſonne was choſen in the campe. There arriued daily at the campe great numbers of men from diuers forrain countries, to ſerue againſt the Infidels: by reaſon whereof, and fore-ſeeing that this ſeege would bee difficult and long, King D. Alphonſo intreated the Chriſtian Princes of France and Portugal, and the Pope
F himſelfe to lend him mony. The French king aſſiſted him with 50000. Crownes, which were made ouer to Genoa. Whilſt they lye before Algezire, Ioſeph King of Granado hauing gathered together 6000. horſe, which he had in his country, with 2000. Affricans, being in garriſon at Ronda, hee ouer-ran the country as far as Eccia, where hauing ſpoyled all, he came to Palma, which he entred without any great difficulty, putting all the Chriſtians hee found in it to the ſword, then packing vppe his baggage, hee returned with all

Victories at ſea of the Chriſtians againſt the Moores.

ſpeed to Granado, fearing to be charged by the Garriſons and Commons there-abouts, A who began to make a head. There was a More with one eye taken in the camp, who came from Caſtellar, and was ſent to kill the king of Caſtile, as hee himſelfe confeſſed, for the which he was executed. This yeare about Nouember, there arriued ten gallies, ſent by the king of Arragon, and commanded by Mathew Mercier of Valence: the like number came from Portugal, and ioyned with the army, but within three weekes they returned, and no man knew the reaſon, yet the ſeege was not ſtayed, nor the batterie diſcontinued before Algezire: Inigo Lopes of Ozorco, who had charge of the Engines, vſing great diligence.

An. 1343. This was one of the longeſt ſeeges we read of in Spaine, without any intermiſſion of Winter or other ſeaſon. The yeare 1343. beeing come, the king of Granado entred a- B gaine into Andaluſia, hee recouered and razed the Caſtle of Benamexir, and ſpoyled the Towne of Eſtepa, but hee could not ſtay there: for that the Caſtle held good, and yet during all theſe incurſions, this Mooriſh king did ſollicite King Don Alphonſo to come to ſome truce, offering the like conditions, whereunto he and his Predeceſſors had beene formerly bound, but for that he would not leaue the league and friendſhip of the King of Maroc, the King of Caſtile would not hearken to any treatie: although hee vnderſtood, that king Alboacen was at Ceuta, and that he made great preparation to come and raiſe the ſeege of Algezire, wherein he was ſtayed by the iealouſie hee had of his ſonne Alderramen, leaſt hee ſhould make himſelfe King of Maroc in his abſence, whoſe head hee was in the end forced to cut off, hauing to that end ſent Haſcar his Alguazil, or Prouoſt to Maroc, who by promiſes and good words, lulled this ſonne aſleepe, beeing impatient C in his ambition, and ſo executed his charge. The Moores of Ronda and Malaga, beeing two thouſand horſe, and as many foot, came running towards Eccia, not knowing that the king had ſent a great troupe of horſe into thoſe marches, to hinder their courſes: yet they forraged the countrie, and tooke their way home-wards, but Fernand Gonçales of Aguilar cut off their paſſage in the night, at a riuer called de las Yeguas, and charged them ſo furiouſly at the breake of day, as notwithſtanding any reſiſtance, they abandoned their prey, and were put to route, leauing aboue ſixe hundred of their men ſlaine and taken, and three hundred horſe, which the Chriſtians caried away. There were a good number of horſe paſt alreadie out of Affricke, ſo as the king of Granado ioyning them to the forces of his countrie, hee might put an army to field, able to preſent battell to them that D were at the ſeege before Algezire, their forces being then ſome-what diuided, for that king Don Alphonſo had (as we haue ſayd) ſent a good part of his horſe-men towards Eccia, Carmona, Marchena, Vtrera, Aguilar, and other places: but beeing either feareſull, by reaſon of former loſſes, or he expected greater ſuccours from Affricke, hee deferred it very happily for the king of Caſtile, and beganne to practiſe a truce, whereunto King Don Alphonſo made ſhew to incline, protracting the time, vntill the comming of his horſe, whome hee had ſent for with all ſpeed vnto the campe, the which beeing come, there were ſo many difficulties propounded by him, as nothing was concluded.

The King of Maroc beeing vpon the Affricke ſhoare with a great army, hee ſollicited E him of Granado to giue battaile, offering to ſend him part of his troupes, if he were not of ſufficient ſtrength. The King of Granado excuſed himſelfe, for that both their forces vnited together, were not able to reſiſt the fury of the Chriſtians before Tariffe: wherfore he aduiſed & intreated him to paſſe in perſon, and to bring with him all the forces he had, but there was no meanes to perſwade the king of Maroc to paſſe the ſtreight: ſo as the ſeege continued, where there daily arriued Princes and Knights from France, England & other places: there is ſpeciall mention made of a Duke of Lancaſter, and an Earle of Salisbury Engliſh men, of Gaſton Earle of Foix, and his brother Roger Regnaud, whom ſome call Bernard Vicount of Caſtelbon, and eſpecially of Philip King of Nauarre, whoſe hiſtory we haue need to returne vnto.

Nauarre 22 This Prince hauing his reſidence for the moſt part in France, employing himſelf F vertuouſly for the defence of that realm againſt the Engliſh, who contended for it againſt Philip of Valois then raigning: his country of Nauar being gouerned in the meane time by Lieutenants, or Viceroys French-men, whereof wee haue named ſome. And in theſe

times

A times mention is made of one Regnaud Pons, and of one William Brahe, Gouernors, in whoſe times the lawes of Duel were much practiſed in Nauarre, as well among the Nobility, as others, who decided their controuerſies and quarrels by combat. The wars betwixt the French and Engliſh beeing ſomewhat appeaſed about the yeare 1343, more for want of meanes to make warre, and for need of reſt then otherwiſe: Philip king of Nauarre obtayned leaue to come and viſit his countrie, and if it were conuenient to ſee the ſeege of Algezire, whereof there was ſo great brute throughout all Chriſtendome. This deſire increaſed in him, beeing in Nauarre, and the rather for that hee vnderſtood there ſhould be a battaile, as it was likely, and that the king of Caſtile did reſolutely attend it. Wherefore king Philip inuited many of his friends, and leauied men as well in Nauarre, E as in France, giuing order for the ſhipping of munition and victuals in the ports of Guipuſcoa, and ſo marched on, hauing giuen aduice of all vnto king D. Alphonſo, leading with him only an hundred horſe, and three hundred foot, which were ready about him, giuing order for the reſt to follow. There was great honor done him in all the townes of Caſtile, where he paſt, the king hauing ſo commanded, and he arriued at Seuile about the Spring, whither the king of Caſtile ſent Ambaſſadours to welcome him, and conduct him to Xeres vppon the frontier, whether many Noblemen, and ſouldiers ſhould come to accompanie him, as well to do him honour, as for the ſafetie of his perſon, for that the Moores Armie lay incamped vpon the Riuer of Guadiana.

Thus the king of Nauarre was conducted vnto Xeres, and from thence to the campe,
C with all the ſhewes of friendſhip and amity that could bee deſired: The king went foorth to meete him, beeing attended on by many great and worthie perſonages Caſtillans and ſtrangers, French, Engliſh, Germaines, and other Nations. The King of Caſtile did ſuch honour to the King of Nauarre, as hee would not determine of any matter of conſequence, without calling him to councell, neither heare nor anſwer any Ambaſſadors but in his preſence. The King of Nauarre likewiſe for his part ſhewed himſelfe very deſirous to pleaſe him.

There were many skirmiſhes at that time, in the which the Nauarrois and Gaſcons carried themſelues very valiantly: notwithſtanding mention is made by the Hiſtories of D Spayne, of a great oportunitie loſt of giuing the Moores a notable route, by the default of Gaſton Earle of Foix, who that day had the leading of the Nauarrois and Gaſcons, but they ſpeake of it doubtfully, as a thing vncertaine, and it may be without any iuſt ground, adding withall, that the Earle for ſhame demanded his conge, pretending certaine reaſons that hee could not ſtay, as well for that his ſouldiers were vnpayed, as for the neede they might haue of him in France, neither could the king of Nauarre, or hee of Caſtile (who offered him all contentment) ſtay him by any intreaties or perſwaſions. Finally, (according to the Spaniſh Authors) hee departed with a good troupe of Knights and ſouldiers, leading his brother with him: but being at Seuile, hee died, which ſhewes that ſickneſſe was the cauſe of his retreate, or rather the wounds which hee had receiued in a
E furious skirmiſh, which he maintained againſt the Moores which ſallied out of Algezire, in the which our French Hiſtories affirme that he was ſlaine. He was father to Gaſton Phebus, of whom mention ſhall be made hereafter. Philip king of Nauarre fell alſo ſicke, with other Noblemen, which grew by the intemperature of the ayre of Andaluſia, beeing too violent for the French, who changed nothing of their accuſtomed manner of lyuing, being in a different climate. The king of Nauarres ſickneſſe was ſuch, as hee was aduiſed to cauſe himſelfe to be tranſported into France, ſo as he was forced to take leaue of the king of Caſtile, who neglected no good office to comfort him: but beeing come to Xeres, his ſickneſſe ſo increaſed, as he was forced to ſtay, and dyed there in September 1343. He had raigned about 15. yeares and fiue months in Nauarre. His body was carried to Pampelona, and there interred in the Cathedrall church: whereſoeuer his body paſt through the F Realme of Caſtile, there were great ceremonies done, and ſhewes of mourning, by commandement from king D. Alphonſo. The Spaniſh Authors (who flatter not the French) write, that this infirmity increaſed by griefe, for ſome errors which the French (which followed him) had committed in an ambuſh which had bin layd for the Moore, where by their too great haſt they loſt a goodly oportunity to defeat a great number.

Death of Don Philip king of Nauarre.

The Engliſh Noble-men beeing alſo called home by their king left the campe: and ſo as Authors report, king D. Alphonſo remained alone with his owne ſubiects, and ſuch of Portugal and Arragon, as hee had entertayned: the which may well ſeeme to bee written by Spaniards, that they alone might haue the honour of the taking and winning of Algezire. A

Caſtile. 23 After the retreat of theſe ſtrangers, the king was much troubled for many reſpects: for beſides that he was left weake, his treaſures were ſpent, by reaſon of his exceeding charge, and the rewards hee was forced to giue to ſuch as came to ſerue him from forraine countries: for beſides his land army which he muſt furniſh with all things neceſſarie, he was forced to entertaine the gallies of Genoa, Portugal and Arragon, that hee might be maſter of the ſea: the which they could hardly do, for that the enemy was ſtrong who ſoone after paſt out of Affricke, with ſixty gallies Moores, and many other veſſels, landing many horſe and foot, with great ſtore of victuals at Eſtepona, whom they might eaſily haue put into Algezire, where they began to want, if they had beene men of reſolution: for beſides that the king of Caſtiles army was not equall in ſtrength, it was then diſperſed in diuers parts. With this new ſupply the Moores might muſter 12000. horſe, an infinit number of foote. King D. Alphonſo got ſuccours and money from the French king, the Pope, and other Princes his friends, and from the Prelates, townes, and priuate men of his realme, who lent him willingly what they could ſpare: ſo as hee ſtayed the Genouois, who would haue beene gone, and contented both them and others, with great wiſedome and good husbandry. B C

Portugal. The king of Caſtile, notwithſtanding his affaires of war, did not forget any thing that might ſerue to better the Eſtate of his Prouinces, building and peopling new townes, as Monreal vpon Deua a riuer in Guipuſcoa, and Playſance, vpon the ſame riuer, the which he peopled with men out of the valley of Marquina, granting them the rights and priuiledges of Logrogno, and aſſigning their bounds and limits.

Theſe things paſt in the yeare 1343. in the which there hapned at Lisbon, the chiefe city of Portugall, great earth-quakes which ruined many goodly buildings, to the great terror of the inhabitants: and in this accident dyed the Admirall of Portugall.

Caſtile. The aduerſe armies in Andaluſia, were continually in skirmiſh and light incounters, but Ioſeph King of Granado would by no meanes yeeld to a battel, notwithſtanding the great ſupplies he had from Ceuta, and that he had with him a ſon of king Alboacens, called Hali, with many other great perſonages Moores, but deſired rather to trie if he could get king Alphonſo to yeeld vnto a truce: wherefore he ſent two Ambaſſadors vnto him, who had beene formerly employed, to whom the king of Caſtile ſeemed to giue a willing eare: by whome there was added vnto the conditions of the former accords, that king Alboacen ſhould pay him for the charge of this ſeege, 300000. doublons of gold. Theſe conditions being imparted vnto king Ioſeph, with a ſuſpenſion of armes, he preſently paſt ouer to Ceuta, to conferre with Alboacen. But in his return, he was ſet vpon (notwithſtanding the aſſurance giuen him by king Alphonſo) by a gally of Genoa, thinking to take the 300000. doublons with the king, but the kings gally being well armed, defended it ſelfe, and ſo eſcaped, whereof king Ioſeph made great complaints vnto the king of Caſtile, who without doubt would haue ſunke the Genouois gallie with the Captaine, if he could haue taken it, but he had gotten to ſea, fearing to be puniſhed, and ſo retired to Genoa. The treaties of truce being troubled by reaſon of this infidelity of the Genouois, the Mores army which was at Gibraltar, aduanced vnto the riuer of Palmons, halfe a league from the Chriſtians campe: where their fore-runners incountring the two armies which followed, had like to haue come to a generall battell, but the Moores retired firſt, hauing loſt ſome men. Their whole deſire was to victuall Algezire, where they vnderſtood, that all things wanted, and that many ſmall veſſels, laden with victuals, had beene taken at ſea, ſeeking by day or night to enter into it, through fauour of the wind or current: for the Chriſtians gallies were exceeding watchfull. But they preſented themſelues ſo often by land, making ſhew that they would fight, and watched their oportunitie ſo by ſea, as fiue Veſſels of Ceuta had meanes to enter, and to refreſh the beſeeged with ſome victuals, and other neceſſarie prouiſions, whereof the Captaine was a Moore, called Muça, who beeing diſcharged, returned D E F

A returned to Ceuta without loſſe, reporting vnto King Alboacen the great neceſſitie of the beſeeged. King Alphonſo, was much troubled hereat, but the eſtate of the beſeeged beeing hereby a little eaſed, was not much bettered: for theſe victuals laſted not long, conſidering their multitude of people, and their great extremitie, and the Princes of the Moores ſeeing, that in the end they muſt either hazard a battaile, which they did much feare, hauing ſo often (to their coſt) tryed the Chriſtians valour, or looſe the place, which had beene long and obſtinately beſeeged.

The king of Granado, with the aduice of Alboacen, did reuiue the treatie of truce, and the conditions of former accords; which were, that he ſhould be vaſſal to the king of Caſtile, and ſhould pay him tribute: and moreouer, that obtayning a truce for fifteene
B yeares, (wherein king Alboacen ſhould be comprehended) the towne of Algezire ſhould be yeelded vnto him, and that the Moores which were within it, ſhould haue liberty to depart with their goods whither they pleaſed: the which after long deliberation, was concluded. But they cut off fiue yeares of the time of the truce, the which was made but for ten yeares. King Alphonſo had a deſire to ſee a young Prince a Moore, that was within it, he was ſonne to Abomelic, but his Gouernour would not ſuffer him, ſaying, as hee caried him away, that the King of Caſtile had no reaſon to ſee an Infant, whome he depriued of his Inheritance.

Thus ended this ſeege, hauing continued nineteene moneths, during the which there were many ſharpe and furious incounters, whereof ſome might be accompted battailes:
C they within the towne made fifteene great ſallies the twelue firſt moneths, where as many valiant men of either ſide were ſlaine. About the end of this ſeege, there had bene ſent out of Arragon Iames Eſcriuain, and Mathew Mercer Captaines, with twenty gallies, who wonne great honour there. The king entred into Algezire in great pompe, where hauing planted many of his Enſignes vppon the towers, the great Meſgide was purified and hallowed with great ceremonies, the which was named Saint Maries of the Palme. The wals and rampiers beeing repayred, and the houſes and land diſtributed to new dwellers, the king came to Seuile, from whence hee ſent two daughters of King Alboacens, which had beene taken at the battaile of Tariffe, cauſing them to be honourably conducted into Affricke, and richly attired: wherewith the Mooriſh king was ſo pleaſed, as he could not ſuf-
D ficiently commend his bountie and courteſie; who hauing royally rewarded the Ambaſſadours, which did accompany theſe Princeſſes, hee ſent vnto the King of Caſtile a rich preſent of pretious ſtones, ſilkes, armes, horſes, lyons, and other beaſts, infinite perfumes, and whatſoeuer hee thought rare, the which did much confirme the league of friendſhip betwixt them: but it happened that Alboacen within few dayes after, beeing ſet vppon and incountred by one of his ſonnes called Alboanen, who had rebelled againſt him, and abandoning the duty of a ſonne, depriued him of the kingdome of Fez, whereby the king of Caſtile entred into a new iealouſie of warre, this vſurping ſonne not reſpecting the truce made with his father. Alboacen king of Marocco diſpoſſeſſed by his ſonne.

This Alboanen did not onely take from his father the Realme of Fez, but alſo all that Moores.
E hee held in Spaine, as Ronde, Zachara, Gibraltar, Ximena, Marbella, Eſtepona, Caſtillar and others. But whileſt the Moores moleſted one another, the King of Caſtile and his ſubiects had ſome reſt, whereof they had great need, by reaſon of their continuall toyle, and great expences at the ſeege of Algezire.

In the meane time the king of Caſtile ſeeing that the quarrels betwixt Don Pedro king Arragon.
of Arragon, and his brethren D. Fernand and D. Iohn, borne of D. Leonora of Caſtile his ſiſter, continued ſtill, he ſought to reconcile them, ſending Diego Garcia of Toledo to that end, who laboured much, but in vaine. Beeing there, there was a marriage treated of, betwixt D. Fernand Manuel, ſonne to D. Iohn Manuel, and D. Ieanne of Arragon, daughter F to Don Raymond Berenger, Earle of Prages, Vncle to the King Don Pedro. The allyance and amitie of Arragon had beene very auayleable to Don Iohn Manuel, the which hee could not forget, although the King of Caſtile were not much pleaſed therewith.

24 During the ſeege of Algezire, the king Don Pedro ſought to ruine D. Iames king of Majorca, his couſin and brother-in-lawe, by force and all other vnworthie meanes, ſeeking to make him odious by falſe accuſations, where as force could not preuaile. Hauing drawne him to Barcelona, vppon hope of a reconciliation, hee charged him in open aſſembly, that he had fraudulently ſought to carrie him, with his brother Don Iames Earle of Vrgel, and their Vncle Don Pedro Earle of Ribagorça, into Majorca, and there to detayne them priſoners, vntill that he were releaſed from the oath of fidelitie, and acknowledgement of Soueraigntie, which hee and his Predeceſſors had made vnto the Kings of Arragon: and in this diſcontent and feare, he ſent him away, retayning notwithſtanding his wife Donna Conſtance, who was his ſiſter: and without any long delay, the King Don Pedro ſent Arnauld Erillo, and William Bellera to ouer-runne the Country of Roſſillon, and other lands belonging to the King of Majorca, lying neere vnto Cattelogne, and to ſeaze vppon the places of ſtrength, the Princes and Princeſſes of his bloud and his allyes employing themſelues in vaine to pacifie them. But ſuch was his hatred and inſatiable deſire of greatneſſe, as hee proclaimed open warre againſt this poore king of Majorca, weake in meanes, and it may be, in courage, to make head againſt ſo mighty a king, and ſo obſtinate an enemie.

And at that time Don Pedro of Moncado was recalled with his Gallies from the Streights, as wee haue ſayd, who hauing increaſed his army with many other veſſels rigged out vppon the coaſts of Cattelogne and Valence, hee came to Palomera, a hauen in the Iland of Majorca, with an hundred and ſixe ſayles, where hee landed many horſe and foote, the king beeing there in perſon, who before his departure, had coloured this enterpriſe with a pretext of Fellonie and Rebellion, pronouncing a ſentence againſt the King Don Iames, in an aſſembly of Noblemen and Princes at Barcelona, and confiſcating his goods. In this army was Don Pedro of Arragon, Earle of Ampurias and Ribagorça, the kings Vncle, holding the place of Seneſhall and chiefe of Armes: Don Pedro of Arragon Lord of Xerica newly reconciled, Don Blaſco of Alagon, who carried the Standard royall: Don Iohn Ximenes of Vrreé, Don Philip of Caſtro, D. Alphonſo Roger of Loria, brother to Don Pedro of Xerica, Galuan and Raymond Angleçole, Acart Murio, Arnauld Erillo, Gonçal Diaz of Arenos, Iohn Fernandes of Luna, Artal of Foſſes, Michel Perez Zapate, Iourdain Vrries, Sancho Peres Pomar, with other Noblemen and Captaines. Againſt theſe forces the king of Majorca had leauied three hundred horſe and fifteene thouſand foote, but he was betrayed and abandoned, and forced to flie, and quit the Iland: ſo as the king Don Pedro ſeazed thereon without fighting, and was receiued into the citty of Majorca, whereof Don Arnold Erillo was made Gouernour, and Gillebert Centilla Captaine of the ſouldiers that were there left in garriſon. The Iland of Minorca made no greater reſiſtance, and that of Yuiça leſſe. Minorca was giuen in gouernment to Gillebert Ceruera, and Yuiça to Martin Arbes. Theſe Ilands ſubdued, the king returned to Barcelona, from whence he preſently marched into the Countie of Roſſillon, with his whole army, whither the Cardinall of Rhodez, the Popes Legat, came vnto him, to aduiſe him to deſiſt from armes: who could get no other anſwer, but that the king of Majorca ſhould come and yeeld himſelfe to his will. During this warre, there was borne at Ceruera, in the territorie of Lerida in Cattelogne, a monſtrous child, hauing two heads and foure legges, whoſe father and mother ſeeking to conceale it, buried it aliue, but beeing diſcouered in this attempt, they were puniſhed, as murtherers of their child.

Maiorca conquered by the king of Arragon.

Monſter borne in Cattelogne ſlaine by the parents, and they puniſhed.

There were great tumults and ſeditions at that time in Arragon, betwixt many Noblemen, contending by armes for their poſſeſſions, ſo as the king commanded that D. Athon of Foſſes ſhould be apprehended and puniſhed, to terrifie others, he alſo cauſed his reuenues and lands to be ſeazed on, from the which he did appeale vnto the Magiſtrate of the Iuſtice of Arragon, which was then in the hands of Garci Fernandes of Caſtro, wherupon there grew great contention: for the kings learned Councel pretended that the authority of the Iuſtice of Arragon did not extend out of the aſſembly of the Eſtates, and that this Magiſtrate was there onely a Iudge of controuerſies, which did riſe againſt the king, being not lawfull for him out of the Eſtates, to make himſelfe Iudge of any controuerſie againſt his royall Maieſty, but in ſutes of ſtate, and condition of perſons, or in cauſes whereas the king is called for a warrant, or in complaints which the people may make againſt the kings Officers.

The

A The king therefore commanded, (for that Garci Fernandes of Caſtro, Iuſtice of Arragon, was allyed to Athon of Foſſes) that Michel Perez Zapate, Lieutenant generall of Arragon in the kings abſence, ſhould put Athon in priſon, but finding himſelfe too weake, for that Athon was ſupported by many ſeditious perſons, and had the countenance of diuers great men his kinſmen and friends, he had recourſe vnto the Iurates of Sarragoſſa, according to the cuſtome of his anceſtors, enioyning them to fore-ſee, that the Eſtate receiued no preiudice, and that Iuſtice ſhould not be forced. Submiſſion of the king of Majorca diſpoſſeſt

The warre of Roſſillon continued, neither would the king D. Pedro yeeld for any interceſſion the Pope could make, perſiſting ſtill, that the king Don Iames (who was diſpoſſeſt of Majorca) ſhould come and ſubmit himſelfe vnto him, without any condition. The B towne of Elne yeelded vnto him. In the end Arnold Biſhop of Aux, the Popes Nuncio, did mediate, that the King of Majorca ſhould come and yeeld himſelfe into the hands of the king D. Pedro, and deliuer him his forts, vpon aſſurance that they ſhould not attempt any thing againſt his perſon, nor put him in priſon: the which beeing granted, D. Iames king of Majorca, vpon the aſſurance of D. Pedro of Xerica, came to Elne, and caſting himſelfe at the king of Arragons feet, he ſubmitted himſelfe to his clemencie, beſeeching him to haue regard vnto his ranke and dignity, to ſuffer him to iuſtifie himſelfe, and that he would be pleaſed to ſue ciuilly againſt him: and howſoeuer, at the leaſt, preſerue vnto his Nephewes, children to his brother D. Fernand, their right vnto the realme of Majorca, and other lands, and cauſe the towne of Perpignan to be deliuered vnto him. The king
C D. Pedro blinded with hatred and choller, reiected all theſe requeſts after a ſtrange and inſolent manner, and being entred into Perpignan, he cauſed a Decree to be publiſhed, by the which he did confiſcate the Iland of Majorca, and all the lands of the king Don Iames, vniting them inſeparably to the Crowne of Arragon: which decree he cauſed to be ſet vp at euery corner. This poore Prince being thus intreated, he left the county of Roſſillon, and retired himſelfe to Berga, a place aſſigned him for his aboad, vntill that his aduerſary ſhould giue order for his entertainment. The king D. Pedro (after theſe ſeuere and vniuſt proceedings) returned to Barcelona, where he entred armed, as triumphing for a victory gotten of ſome great enemy. Beeing there in counſell, he aſſigned 10000. liuers of Decree againſt the king Don Iames. A thouſand pound ſterling.
D penſion for the king D. Iames diſpoſſeſt, vntil he had giuen him lands and reuenues out of Spaine: remitting vnto him his rights of Montpellier, and other places on this ſide the Pyrenees, alreadie in his poſſeſſion.

Theſe things beeing ſignified vnto him by Don Pedro of Moncado, Philip Boillo, and Garcia of Loris, hee reiected them all, ſaying: That he had rather liue baniſhed in a ſtrange Country, and ſuffer all the miſeries in the world, then to yeeld to ſo great an iniuſtice, or allow of ſo vnworthie conditions, impoſed vppon him by a King which was his kinſman. Whereuppon the King Don Pedro renewed the warre, that hee might either take him, or chaſe him out of the Kingdome.

This miſerable Prince deſtitute and quite ſtript of all meanes, and abandoned of his
E friends, had the courage to defie Don Pedro of Xerica, accuſing him of diſloyaltie, for that hee had promiſed him many things (perſwading him to come to Elne) which had not beene kept: but Don Pedro was abſolued by the king, who declared that hee had not fayled in any thing he had promiſed: ſo as Don Iames ſometimes King of Majorca, fruſtrate of all hope, was forced to retire into the Countie of Cerdagne, hoping to hold thoſe Lands by the fauour and ſupport of Geoffrey Eſtandart a French-man, Gouernour of Puicerdan, and other Segneuries on this ſide the mountaines: but beeing deceiued and forſaken of all, hee was forced to flie, and to paſſe the mountaines in Nouember, the Winter beeing exceeding ſharpe: ſo as vppon mount Pimorent, which diuides the Contie of Cerdagne from Gaſconie, hee was like to haue dyed with the extremitie of cold, where hee fell into ſuch a paſſion of griefe, as he was readie to haue ſlaine himſelfe. This
F vſage did D. Iames the king of Majorca receiue of his brother-in-law, Don Pedro king of Arragon, who was at that time againe ſollicited to attempt the conqueſt of Corſica, whereunto he yeelded, and ſent ſome gallies to the port of Boniface, this yeare 1344. hauing intelligence, and a ſecret league with William Roncaual, Rowland Ornan, Henry Cortingo, and others of the chiefe of the Iland.

Caſtile. In the yeare 1345. D. Alphonſo King of Caſtile, gaue order for the building of the new A 1345. towne of S. Ander, called Heybar, and a league from thence of the towne of Marquine, called alſo Helgoybar, which he peopled with the inhabitants of the villages of that countrie, giuing them lawes and priuiledges according to the iuriſdiction of Logrogne.

An. 1346. 25 The yeare following 1346. a donation was made by Pope Clement the 6. reſident in Auignon, to D. Lewis de la Cerde, ſonne to the Infant D. Alphonſo, of the fortunate Ilands or Canaries, vpon condition that he ſhould conquer them, and cauſe the Goſpell to be preached there: to this end he came into Arragon, and there began to prepare an army at ſea, wherein he was much aſſiſted and fauoured by the king D. Pedro: but we find not that he paſt into the Ilands, and to ſpeake truly, it would haue beene diſtaſtfull vnto B the king of Caſtile, in whoſe Streight theſe Ilands are ſituated: yet this D. Lewis held the title of Prince of the fortunate Ilands. D. Iohn Manuel (who had neuer loued the king of Caſtile from his heart) was glad of theſe petty diſcontentments, by fauour whereof hee ſpread abroad falſe reports and aduertiſements, to draw the two kings of Caſtile and Arragon into warre, but what he could not do by his practiſes, occaſion wrought, at the treaty of marriage which the king of Caſtile would make betwixt D. Fernand of Arragon his nephew, ſonne to his ſiſter D. Leonora, and D. Eluira Infanta of Portugal, who is by ſome called alſo Leonora, by reaſon whereof king D. Alphonſo, and D. Leonora his ſiſter had an interview at Tordelaguna: which put the king D. Pedro into ſuch a iealouſie, being
this marriage, he reſolued to demand the Infanta of Portugal for himſelfe, for the which he ſent his ambaſſadors. The king of Caſtile beeing much mooued, that hee of Arragon did thus ſeeke to croſſe him, ſent Don Iohn Alphonſo of Albuquerque into Portugal, to hinder the concluſion of this marriage, but hee arriued too late, for the ambaſſadour of Arragon had ſo negotiated, as all was concluded: whereat the king Don Alphonſo was much offended.

Arragon. 26 This D. Pedro king of Arragon had in his time many wiues, the firſt was D. Maria Infanta of Nauarre, daughter to king Philip of Eureux, by whom he had D. Conſtance Queene of Sicily, wife to D. Frederic the ſecond. D. Ieanne married afterwards to D. Iohn Earle of Ampurias, and one ſonne, who died as ſoone as he was borne, and the mother D fiue dayes after, in the yere 1347. To his 2. wife he had this Infant of Portugall: to his third he tooke D. Leonora, ſome call her D. Conſtance, daughter to Frederick the 2. King of Sicily, by whom he had D. Iohn his ſucceſſor in the Realme: D. Martin Earle of Xerica and Luna, and Duke of Momblanc, and firſt Conſtable of Arragon, (who by the death of his elder brother, was alſo King of Arragon) and D. Leonora, which was wife to D. Iohn Infant of Caſtile, afterwards king, the firſt of that name of Caſtile and Leon. Beſides theſe great Princeſſes, the King Don Pedro, being old and a widower, fell in loue with a ſubiect of his owne of a meane family called Sibile, a widow, borne at Forcia in the territorie of Ampurias, and married her, of whom he had D. Izabella, who was Counteſſe of Vrgel, and wife to Don Iames. Theſe were the marriages of the king Don Pedro, who raigning E cruelly and couetouſly, incenſed the Eſtates and Nobilitie of his Realmes of Arragon and Valence againſt him, whereas the ſubiects made Leagues againſt their Prince, which did in a manner ruine and confound that Eſtate, King Don Alphonſo not forgetting to make vſe of that occaſion, to be reuenged of the wrong and iniurie which hee pretended had beene done him, in diſappointing the mariage of his Nephew Don Fernand with the Infanta of Portugall.

The King Don Pedro hauing no ſonnes at the conſummation of this ſecond marriage, ſought to haue an oath taken to D. Conſtance, his eldeſt daughter, heire to the Realme of Arragon, and other lands depending and annexed after his deceaſe, the which was cauſe of great ſeditions: for Don Iohn, Earle of Vrgel, the kings brother, gouerning the F
Realme then as Gouernour, or Lieutenant generall, oppoſed himſelfe violently: by reaſon whereof the King (who was violent and rough in all his actions) chaſed him away, and tooke from him his publike charge: then hauing emancipated Donna Conſtance his daughter, hee made and inſtituted her Gouerneſſe, or Regent of the Realme, to make her way to the ſucceſſion, there beeing preſent at this act, and his principall

Coun-

A councellors, D. Huges Biſhop of Vic, D. Pedro Thouſio maiſter of Monteſa, D. Pedro of Xerica viceroy of Valence, Pedro Fenouillet, Audemar Mouſſet, Gonçaluo Diaz of Arenos, & Gaceran de Belpuccio. D. Pedro the Kings vncle, Earle of Ampurias, tooke that oth to his Princeſſe in the name of the Eſtates, vpon condition, that if it were found the hereditarie right did belong vnto D. Iames, the oth ſhould be voide. D. Iames ſeeing himſelfe diſapointed, ſtirred vp troubles in the country of Valence: hee had recourſe to the vnion of Arragon, to retaine his dignity of Gouernor of the Realme: hee made a league with his brethren D. Fernand and D. Iohn ſonnes to D. Leonora of Caſtile, and with the King of Caſtile himſelfe, and diſquieted al Arragon.

The diſpoſſeſt King of Majorca hearing of theſe tumults, would bee an actor, and B came neere vnto Majorca, with certaine gallies of France and Genoa, whereof Charles Grimaldi was General, but as misfortune did ſtill accompany him hee effected nothing of worth in thoſe Iſlands nor vpon the coaſt of Cattelogne, whether hee afterwards came, and was repulſt by the King himſelfe. By the aduice of Bernard of Cabrera, who was then held a man of great wildome and iudgement, he made his vncle D. Pedro, Earle of Ampurias, chiefe of his councel, and ſeeking by all meanes to catch his rebels, or to diuide their league, hee wrought ſo as the Earle of Vrgel his brother came vnto him, whom hee reſtored to his dignity of Gouernor of the realme, but it continued not many daies, for he died preſently, not without ſuſpition to haue beene poyſoned. Being at an aſſemblie of the Eſtates at Saragoſſa, he granted them all they demaunded, and re-
C nued the contract made by King Alphonſo the third, with the vnion of Arragon, by the which ſixteene caſtles were put into the power of the vnion, with liberty to deliuer them to whom they would, if the King ſhould infringe the accord.

An. 1347. Marriage of the King D. Pedro with the Infant of Portugal.

This yeere of our Lord 1347. during theſe troubles the Kings marriage was conſomated with the Infanta of Portugal, the which were very mournful, for that in a ſhort ſpace the Kings men receiued two notable routs by the rebels, the one neere vnto Xatiua, where there died on the Kings part Andrew William the Secretarie, Lieutenant to the Viceroy of Valence, and his ſonne: the other neere vnto Valence, in the which Gonçal Diaz of Arnos, and Pedro Mugnon captaines of the Kings men loſt their liues. So as D the King, who in the meane time kept at Moruiedro, in a manner beſeeged, was much perplexed, and not knowing what to reſolue, he ſuffred himſelfe to bee perſwaded to enter into the city of Valence, where hee found himſelfe entangled in the mutinies of the citizens, who reſpected and honoured him ſo little, as notwithſtanding his preſence, they ſpoiled and murthered one an other, after a pittiful manner. The Noble men and captaines holding his party, were then fortefied in Daroca, whereof the chiefe were D. Pedro of Xerica, D. Lope of Luna, D. Blaſco of Alagon, D. Pedro Fernandes of Ixar, D. Thomas Cornel, D. Iohn Ximenes of Vrrea, and D. Iohn Martines of Luna.

Defeat of the Kings men.

Valencians ſeditious.

The Rebels were fauored and aſſiſted vnder-hand, by D. Alphonſo King of Caſtile, who ſuffred them to make great leauies of ſouldiars in his countries, for the loue hee bare vn-
E to the ſonnes of his ſiſter D. Leonora, Douager of Arragon: and D. Fernand the eldeſt had alreadie lead many bands of Caſtillans to Valence, and D. Iohn his brother prepared to paſſe into Arragon with other troupes, to be the generall of that warre, the which the Arragonois demaunded: yet by reaſon of the complaints made by the King D. Pedro, who ſaid that the league betwixt Caſtile and Arragon, was broken by King D. Alphonſo, ſollyciting all his friends and priuat councellors, eſpecially Queene Mary his wife, and D. Leonora of Guzman, his beſt beloued, to diſſwade the King from this enterpriſe, laying before him the conſequence of this rebellion, there were ſent by the King of Caſtille, and by his ſiſter the Queene D. Leonora, into Arragon D. Fernando Perez Puerto Carrero, and to Valence Lope Perez of Fonſeca, to treat of the meanes to paceſie theſe troubles.

King of Caſtile ſauors the rebels againſt the King of Arragon.

F The King D. Pedro promiſed great matters to his brethren, and deſired nothing more then to haue the Caſtillan troupes called home by their King: but notwithſtanding any likelihood of an accord, they drew what ſuccors they would from Caſtile: wherefore King D. Alphonſo beeing importuned by the King D. Pedro, and diſcontented with theſe ſeditions, beeing alſo mooued with a deſire he had to ſee the Queene D. Leonora his

his ſiſter and her children aſſured in their Eſtates, which had been left them by the deceaſed King D. Iames, and by diuers other paſſions, he could take no better reſolution, then to ſhew himſelfe a common friend: and for that hee could not well hinder the credit which his Nephewes had in Caſtille for the leauying of men, hee alſo ſuffred the King of Arragon to leauy horſemen for his money, entertayning Aluar Garcia of Albornoz, who brought him aboue ſixe hundred Caſtillan horſemen. With theſe forces and others of his ſubiects, who fauoured his violences, hee came to battaile with the Rebels of Valence and Saragoſſa, beſeeging Epila, being commanded by his brother D. Fernand, whom he put to rout betwixt the riuer of Xalon and Epila, where the Infant D. Fernand was taken priſoner: but his good fortune was, to fall into the hands of the Caſtillan horſemen, who being loath hee ſhould come into the power of the incenſed King D. Pedro, ſent him ſpeedily into Caſtille, to King D. Alphonſo his vncle. In this battaile died Iohn Ximenes of Vrrea, the chiefe fauourer of the vnion, Gombald Tramaſſet, Symon Perez Pina, and Galuan Angleſole.

Rebels defeated by the king D. Pedro.

After this defeat there was a firme League made betwixt Caſtile and Arragon, by the treaty of a marriage of one of the King D. Pedros daughters, with D. Henry, ſon aduowed to the King of Caſtile: and there were conditions propounded for Queene Leonor and her children; that the King of Arragon ſhould ſuffer them to enioy their goods and Eſtates freely, and that the Gouernment of Arragon ſhould bee giuen to the Infants D. Fernand and D. Iohn, and that the King ſhould not proceed againſt the confederats of Valence, againſt whom he was more incenſed then againſt the reſt. The King D. Pedro would not grant the gouernment of Arragon to his brethren, nor pardon his rebels, but deſired the King of Caſtile to aſſiſt him with horſe-men, that hee might puniſh them by armes: and in regard of the marriage, he would haue D. Henry inueſted in the country of Murcia, with the title of a King: otherwiſe he ſhould not marry his daughter. Theſe difficult and diſtaſtfull treaties to either partie, were ſpent in diſputes, without any concluſion.

The defeat of the confederats army at Epila, did ſo terrefie them of Saragoſſa, as many men of marke went out of the Realme, others ſent vnto the King to ſue for their liues: ſo as that great city whoſe forces had beene fearefull to the Kings of Arragon, was then made ſubiect with the whole realme: for the King hauing called there an aſſembly of the Eſtates, ſuch as he pleaſed, hee wreſted away the popular lawes, and the preuiledges of the vnion, namely thoſe of King D. Alphonſo the third, and the confirmation which he himſelfe had made was diſanulled, and new Articles made againſt the ſeditious: many that were culpable, were condemned to die, and their goods confiſcate. Thus the rights and preuiledges gotten ſeditiouſly by armes, were loſt againe by armes. There the iuriſdiction of the Gouernor of the realme was alſo reformed, a dignity neere vnto that of the King, the which hauing to that time beene held by Princes, or great perſonages, with great abuſe, corruption and libertie, for that it had beene an ancient cuſtome, vſed in Arragon, not to call ſuch men in queſtion for their faults, but ciuily, beeing exempt from condemnation of death, priſon or baniſhment. It was then decreed, that from thenceforth that dignity ſhould not bee giuen to Princes, nor to any one that were to powerful aboue the reſt, but to ſimple knights: to the end that if they did commit any fraude or abuſe, or did violate the Lawes and publike liberty, they might make their criminall proceſſe, and take away their liues, if the caſe ſo required. The iuriſdiction of the iuſtice Major of Arragon, was there alſo lymited: that is, he ſhould haue authority to ſuppreſſe the vniuſt decrees of the Kings officers, and the raſh attempts, and actions of mighty men, with all publike force, and maintaine iuſtice betwixt great and ſmal: and it was decreed, that this Magiſtrat ſhould not be giuen by the peoples ſuffrages, nor at the appetite of the Plebeians, to men of baſe condition, but to knights, which ſhould be named by the King.

Reformation of the Gouernors iuriſdiction.

Lymitation of the iuriſdiction of the iuſtice Maior of Arragon.

Saragoſſa being ſubdued, the King led his army againſt them of Valence, who perſiſted in their rebellion. The Valentians in the beginning thought to be able to reſiſt and there were ſome incounters betwixt them and the Kings men: but being often beaten, and repulſt with loſſe, they reſolued in the end to yeeld the city, the which the king (being Valence ſubdued.

ſharpe

A ſharpe and ſeuere by nature) would haue razed, plowed vp, and the place ſowen with ſault, in hatred of the inſolencies and contempt of which the Valentians had vſed againſt him: yet he was diuerted from this cruell intent, by the Noblemen that were about him, and his wrath was appeaſed, by the puniſhment of Iohn Ruis Corellia, Raymond Scorne, Iames Romanin, and Ponce of Solier, men of noble families, who were put to death, and others that were more lightly puniſhed.

Such was the end of the reuolts and tumults of Arragon and Valence: During the which the Iſland of Sardynia was likewiſe in a combuſtion, entertained by the Geneuois, hauing lands there, namely by Mathew, Nicoloſio, Iohn Anthony & Iulian Doria, by whoſe ſuppert the Sardiniens did riſe, and ſpoiled the countries which held the Arragon party. Reuolts in Sardynia.

B D. William of Ceruillon was then Gouernor for the King D. Pedro in that Iſland, who thinking to repaire the harme which the rebels had done, was defeated and ſlaine neere to Baſtide, which the enemies did beſeege: wherefore D. Rambaud of Corbera was ſent in his place, and Ponce Santa paz for Generall of the Arragon gallies. Theſe were more fortunate then Ceruillon had beene: for D. Rambaud raiſed the ſeege from before Saſſeri, and recouered many places: wherein he was faithfully aſſiſted by Marian, Iudge of Arborea, and by Iohn his brother, and ſo preſt the faction of Doria, which was contrarie to the Arragonois, as he freed the Iſland: the which miniſtred occaſion vnto the common weale of Genoa, to breake the peace which they had with the King of Arragon: Iohn Murta was then Duke of Genoa, beeing in the yeere of our Lord 1348. An. 1348.

C wherefore they of the family of Doria, with the helpe and ſupport they had from the common weale of Genoa, beſeeged Saſſeri againe, and gaue a rout to Hugues Corbera, brother to the Gouernor D. Rambaud, who was then abſent, for he was come into Cattelogne to makes new leauies of ſouldiars; ſo as the affaires of Sardinia were in greater combuſtion then euer.

D. Rambaud returning to his Gouernment, with ſome gallies and good numbers of ſouldiars of Cattelogne, he toucht at the Iſland of Majorca, euen as there was a battaile ready to be giuen betwixt the Arragonois and the diſpoſſeſt King D. Iames, who hauing armed many veſſels vpon the coaſts of Prouence and Languedoc, and giuen the leading thereof to Charles of Grimaldi Lord of Monaco, had landed in the Iſland of Majorca, Laſt attempt of D. Iames King of Majorca.

D being reſolute either to recouer thoſe Iſlands or to die: to make head, againſt him (beſides the care of D. Gilibert Ruillia, Gouernor for the King D. Pedro, in the Iſlands of Majorca and Minorca) D. Ponce of Moncade Admiral of Arragon, laying a ſide his voyage of Sicile, whether he was going, had alſo landed in Majorca, ſo as there were in armes, for the King of Arragon, the day of this battaile, comprehending D. Rambauds forces, eight hundred horſe, and about twenty thouſand foote: who ioyning with the King D. Iames men, defeated them, after a long & cruel fight with great ſlaughter; whereas the King Don Iames (a Prince alwaies vnfortunate in his enterpriſes) loſt his life: his ſonne, called alſo D. Iames, being a priſoner, and ſore wounded: wherefore the King D. Iames King of Majorca ſlaine.

E Don Pedro by this victory held the conqueſt of that Iſland from that time without any contradiction, notwithſtanding that hee had gotten it by tyranie and iniuſtice. A little before the death of this laſt King of Majorca, he had ſold to Philip of Valois the French King, all the intereſt hee had to Montpellier and other lands on this ſide the Pyrenee mountaines, whereupon the King of Arragon ſent D. Pedro Fenouillet Lord of Liſle and Cagnette, in Ambaſſage into France, to tranſact with king Philip for theſe rights, who agreed that the ſale thereof, made by the deceaſed king of Majorca, ſhould bee good, vpon condition, that what the French king had not yet paied of the price, ſhould bee deliuered to the king of Arragon: and then did they treat of a marriage betwixt D. Conſtance, daughter to the king D. Pedro, and Lewis Earle of Aniou, Grand-

F child to king Philip, to ballance by this alliance the fauours which Don Fernand and Don Iohn, brethren to the king Don Pedro, might haue in France, who pretended (beſides their portions and rights which were kept from them in Arragon, by the king their brother) that after him the ſucceſſion of the crowne did belong to D. Fernand, and not to D. Conſtance, to whom the king her father would haue it fall. But this marriage tooke no effect.

Caſtille.

27 Comming to the affaires which paſt at that time in Caſtile, after the pacification of the troubles of Arragon, we finde that King D. Alphonſo ſpent his time in peopling of his townes and country: amongſt others he peopled the towne of Sumaya in Guipuſcoa otherwiſe called Villa Grana of Sumaya, and gaue it the preuiledges of Saint Sebaſtian, whether there appellations goe, and from thence to the court. And his realm of Caſtile being in reaſonable good quiet, ſeeing ſuch as profeſſed armes (whereof Caſtile and his other countries did abound) ſeeke all occaſions to imploy their armes, medling, more then hee deſired, with the factions and mutinies of his Neighbors: being alſo duly aduertiſed of that which had paſt in Affrike, and of the little loue which the new King of Fez bare him, who held many places of importance in Spaine, he held it neceſſary to make an expedition againſt the Infidels: for it is a difficult thing to keepe great Kingdomes full of people in peace, eſpecially after long pactiſe of warre, but they will diſquiet both ſpirituall and temporall at home, if they bee not imployed abroade: ſo as armes hath this vnhappineſſe, that after they are once taken, they cannot be laied downe without great and difficult labour, and that many times ſucceeds ill.

About this time, which was in the yeere of our Lord 1348. Don Garcia Lope Maiſter of the Calatraua, beeing accuſed of many diſorders, retired into Arragon. Being cited to appeere perſonally before the King of Caſtile, and abſent, hee was condemned and degraded for his contumacy, and ſo died; in whoſe place the Knights of Calatraua in Arragon, proceeded in Arragon, contrary to the lawes and rules of their Order.

The Caſtillans of Calatraua, did alſo chooſe one; ſo as this Schiſme was like to haue bread ſome great diſorder, if by the mediation of the Pope, and the Kings of Caſtile and Arragon, the parties had not referred it to Don Pedro King of Arragon who decreed; That the Maiſter choſen at Calatraua ſhould ſtand, and that any one which held that dignity dying, the election of his ſucceſſor ſhould not bee made any where elſe, but in the couent of Calatraua.

This Maiſter confirmed, was called Don Iohn Nugnes of Prado, who they ſayd was Baſtard vnto D. Blanche, the King of Portugals aunte, and Abbeſſe of Huelgas neere Burgos. To Don Iohn Fernandes his competitor, was left the Commanderie of Alcaniz, with the title of great Commander, yet ſubiect to the Maiſter of Calatraua. The approbation of theſe Maiſters, beeing choſen, belongs to the Abbots of the Order of Ciſteaux. Amideſt theſe tumults King Don Alphonſo reſolued for to raiſe an armie to beſeege Gibraltar, thinking that during the ſeditions betwixt the Arabian Kings, father and ſonne in Affrike, it could not bee releeued: and therefore hauing ſo fit an occaſion offred him, hee made no difficulty to bee the firſt in armes, pretending that hee did not breake the truce, ſeeing that this place and others in Spaine, were held by Albomen, with whom hee had not any treaty: For the mannaging and conduct of this warre, which was of no ſmall conſequence, hee aſſembled the generall Eſtates of all his realmes in the towne of Alcala of Henares, where (beſides the Noblemen and Deputies accuſtomed to come in former aſſemblies) many Townes and Commonalties were newly called, and receiued to giue their voices, and to haue a place in ſuch aſſemblies. For vntil that time, the people and townes, which are called by the Toledans, beiond the mountaines, as Caſtile the old, Gallicia, Aſturia and the neighbour countries, were thoſe which did commonly aſſiſt, and did contribute and beare the charges, as beeing moſt retired from the diſcomodities of the warre: but now at this time, they of Toledo, Andaluſia and ſuch like, were alſo called by the King, for his intent was, to demaund the ſubſidie called Alcauala throughout his whole Realme. This aſſembly and many others which were made in after times, did for the moſt part conſiſt of good townes, who ſent their Deputies: but ſince they found that multitude bred confuſion, and therefore there were eighteene principall places choſen, which ſhould haue voices, and places in aſſemblies, that is, ſixteene cities and two townes. Spaine, as we haue ſaid in the diſcription thereof, is in a manner diuided in the mideſt by the mountaine called in old time Idubeda the which at this preſent hath diuerſe names. By reaſon whereof they diſtinguiſh the people at this day to thoſe of this ſide and the other ſide the mountaines. On this ſide, wee will call the Toledans, and the neighbour Prouinces: on the other Places in the realme of Caſtile hauing voice in the Eſtates.

A other ſide, ſhall bee thoſe of Burgos. Therefore on this ſide the mountaines, they call at this day, to the Eſtates of Spaine, for the Prouince of Toledo, the city of Toledo, Cuenca, Guadalajara, and Madrid: and for the other Prouinces, Seuile, Granado, Murcia, Cordoua and Iaen. Beyond the mountaines for the Straight of Caſtille, Burgos, Soria, Segobia, Auila and Vailledolit: and for that of Leon, the city of Leon, Salamanca, Zamora, and Toro. Theſe are the eighteene places which ſend their Deputies to the Eſtates, among the which Burgos, Leon, Granado, Seuile, Cordoua, Murcia, Iaen and Toledo (townes which haue beene ſeates of Kingdomes) haue their places aſſigned, and hold ranke: the reſt take their places, as it happens, and their Deputies ſpeake as they ſit: as for the citty of Toledo in this aſſembly at Alcala of Henares, it contended for prece-
B dence with that of Burgos, alleadging many reaſons, not altogether friuolous. Firſt the greatneſſe of the city, and great numbers of people and Nobility inhabiting there, next the ſeat of the Archbiſhop and Primat, the ſtatelineſſe of the Church, the Prelate whereof was high Chancellor of all the Realmes ſubiect to Caſtille: and moreouer offring to their conſideration, the antiquity of the foundation of that city, which had beene the head during the Gothes raigne, not onely of all that is contained within the two ſeas, and the Pyrenees, but alſo of Gotike Gaule, which at this day wee call Languedoc, ſo many councels celebrated there, and that ſence the Arabians had become Maiſters of Spaine, it had beene a royal ſeat, hauing had many Kings, which did exceed all the Potentats Moores of Spaine, in power and riches except him of Cordoua. God hauing
C ſince of his grace ſuffred Chriſtian Princes to conquer it, ſhe alone amongſt all the cities of Spaine, had beene honoured with an Imperiall title, by reaſon whereof, and many other preuileges there produced, they maintained the precedence to belong vnto her. Burgos on the other ſide maintained that ſhe was the capitall city, & the ancient ſeat of the Princes of Caſtile, which was the title their Kings carried: that from Caſtile & Leon did grow the conqueſts of the reſt of the Realmes of Spaine, and that ſhee was called the royal city; but their chiefe ground was, that time out of minde, ſhee had had the firſt place and voice in ſuch aſſemblies. Vpon theſe differences, the Noblemen fell into factions, as their paſſions did tranſport them, or as they had their Siegneuries and houſes lying in the territory and iuriſdiction of the one or the other citie. King D. Alphonſo
D vſing therein wiſe aduiſe, hauing taken the knowledge of this cauſe vnto himſelfe, he pronounced thus: I ſpeake (ſayd he) for them of Toledo, and ſay, the city of Toledo will doe as it ſhall pleaſe the King. Let Burgos ſpeake now. This manner of decreeing contented both parties, for it ſeemed to them of Toledo, that the King hauing made himſelfe, as it were, their Attorney, had ſpoken firſt in the behalfe of their city. And they of Burgos holding that the Kings words did nothing preiudice their pretenſions, ſeeing they ſpake before the other Deputies, they ſurceaſed for the voice. Concerning their ranke and precedence, the King deſyring to preſerue the ſeate to Burgos, and Toledo refuſing to ſit vnder her, the King ordained, that from thenceforth the Deputie of To-
E ledo ſhould not ſit vpon the ſame banke with the other Deputies, but oppoſite vnto them, yet not in the ſame ranke: which order is obſerued at this day in the generall aſſemblies of the Eſtates of Caſtile. The firſt voice kept for the city of Burgos, was the cauſe the King obtained the ſubſidie of Alcauala, which hee required of all his ſubiects: for Burgos paied it already, and therefore did not contradict it: whereas if Toledo (which had not borne this impoſition) had ſpoken firſt, ſhee had oppoſed herſelfe, as ſhe did, and incourraged other townes to doe the like by her example. All in the end yeelded vnto it, hauing heard the reaſons which mooued the King to demaund it, and the neede hee had for the good of the Realme, and the maintenance of the warre againſt the Moores.

Alcauala an Impoſition.

The aſſembly at Alcala of Henares beeing diſſolued, and the King hauing gathered
F together great ſtore of treaſor, by the ſpeedie obedience of his ſubiects, hee beganne to diſcharge ſome of his debts, and to retire many precious iewels which had beene pawned, hee ordred iuſtice, and in the end applied his minde wholy to this ſeege, which hee ment to lay to Gibraltar, and to prouide for al things neceſſary both by ſea and land, ſeeing that the time and the oportunity of the Moores ſeditions in Affrike, did inuite him,

him. The towne of Gibraltar had beene greatly fortefied by the Moores, ſince the time they had taken it from the Chriſtians: ſo as the enterpriſe was no leſſe difficulte then that of Algezire. But there was this aduantage, they did not ſo much feare any ſuccors from Affrike, as if the affaires of the Arabian Moores had beene quiet: notwithſtanding to prouide for all euents, he ſent Velaſco Martinez Alcaide or Prouoſt of the court, to the King of Arragon in Ambaſſage, and with him Alphonſo Gonçales of Gallego: to confirme the alliance and friendſhip betwixt them, and to reuiue the treaty of marriage betwixt his ſonne D. Henry, and one of the Infants of Arragon: but his chiefe deſeigne was, to demaund ten gallies to keepe the ſtraight. The King D. Pedro anſwered the Ambaſſadors, that he would ſend an Ambaſſador expreſly vnto the King of Caſtile their maiſter, the which he did.

Arragon. King D. Alphonſo was already before Gibraltar, when as the Ambaſſador came to him from Arragon. There was an end made of the differences of the Queene D. Leonora, and the Infants D. Fernand and D. Iohn whom the King Don Pedro ſhould ſuffer peaceably to enioy that which had beene aſſigned him by the deceaſed King, as well in dowry, as in portion: and if it ſhould happen that after that time they ſhould moue any troubles in Arragon, that King D. Alphonſo ſhould not giue them, nor ſuffer to bee giuen them any aide or ſuccors. Nothing was concluded in regard of the marriage, for that the King Don Pedro required, that Don Henry ſhould bee inueſted in many Townes and Prouinces, which was not conuenient for the King of Caſtile to giue. For ſuccors, the King D. Pedro ſent foure of his gallies, to ioyne with them that were in the Straight, whereof Raymond of Villanoua was captaine, being manned with foure hundred crosbow men.

Caſtile. The towne of Gibraltar was furiouſly battred, with all ſorts of Engins, and defended very valiantly, the garriſon beeing very ſtrong, and conſiſting of the beſt ſouldiars that were amongſt the Moores, who made many ſallies vpon the Chriſtians, in the which were ſlaine their beſt men of either ſide; and moreouer King D. Alphonſo's campe was much annoyed by the courſes of the Neighbour garriſons, and by the King of Granados horſe men, who had the gard of thoſe places which the Moores held in Spaine. This ſeege hauing continued ſome monthes, the plague fell into the Chriſtians campe, yet the King beeing obſtinate in his reſolution, would not diſlodge: for hee knew that the Moores, being deſtitute of ſuccors could not long reſiſt, but muſt bee either forced, or yeeld. Beeing in this reſolution, it pleaſed God that hee himſelfe was ſtrooken with the plague whereof hee died in the campe, in the yeere of our Lord 1350. the nine and thirtith yeere of his age, and the eight and thirtith of his raigne. Some haue written that hee died not of the plague, but of poyſon, the which was giuen him by the Moores practiſes. This accident was the cauſe of remooving the ſeege of Gibraltar.

Death of king D. Alphonſo.

Nauarre. A little before D. Ieanne Queene of Nauarre, widow to King Philip of Eureux, died at Conflans in France, who had gouerned her Realme, whereof ſhee was proprietary, after the deceaſe of her husband, with good diſcretion, and yet ſhee had ſome ſubiects not very tractable, who ſought nothing but quarrels. There were ſtill riots committed by them vpon the frontiers of Nauarre, namely by the Inhabitants of Sangueſſe and the Arragonois, notwithſtanding all which, yet could ſhee wiſely entertaine the alliance and peace with D. Pedro King of Arragon her ſonne in law, yea after the death of Queene Donna Maria, her daughter: ſo as during her life, the King D. Pedro endured all the Inſolencies of the Nauarrois, who ſome times made roades farre into his countrie, not ſeeming to take knowledge thereof, for the honour and reſpect hee bare vnto his mother in law, neither did hee make any complaints, nor was mooued, as hee ought to haue beene, for that the Eſtates of Arragon, and others beeing rebelled againſt him for the cauſes aboue mentioned, many made their retreat into Nauarre, from whence they drew aſſiſtance of armes, victuals and other things, to make warre againſt him.

Death of Iean Queene of Nauarre.

It is credible that the King of Arragon ſhewed himſelfe patient in theſe things, that he might not diſapoint other deſſeignes of greater importance: for knowing that Ieanne Queene of Nauarre was much honoured in France, hee entertained her friendſhip,

to

A to the end that by her meanes he might haue King Philip of Valois more fauourable vnto him, who was incenſed againſt him for D. Iames of Majorca. This Lady laboured ſo, as ſhee entertained peace betwixt them, and confirmed againe the alliance paſt, by a treatie of marriage, which ſhe propounded, betwixt Charles, Grand-child to King Philip, and one of the daughters of the King Don Pedro; and of her daughter Donna Maria.

This Princeſſe being come into France with Charles and Philip her ſonnes, to diſpoſe of her lands and eſtates which ſhe had there, hauing left Iohn of Conflans, Lord of Dampierre, Marſhal of Champagne, for Gouernor in Nauarre, ſhe died at the end of the yeere 1349. fiue yeeres after the deceaſe of her husband, hauing held the Realme of Na-
B uarre about two and twenty yeeres, counting ſince the death of King Charles the Faire: to whom ſucceeded her ſonne Charles, who was ſurnamed the Bad.

D. Pedro the firſt and ſole of that name, ſurnamed the cruel, the foureteenth King of Caſtile, and fiue and thirtith of Leon.

E THe beginning of the raigne of D. Pedro, ſonne to D. Alphonſo of Caſtile, was in the yeere 1350. in the which Pope Clement the ſixth ordained that the Iubile which they had beene accuſtomed to celebrate (yet without any ground) euery hundred yeere amongſt Chriſtians, ſhould from that time be kept from fifty, to fifty yeeres, after the manner of the Iewes. D. Pedro was at Seuile with the Queene his mother, when the King his father died, where his obſequies being made, they conſulted for the ordring the Eſtate of the new Kings houſe, and the affaires of the Kingdome. D. Leonora of Guzman, her children, kinsfolkes and friends being in great perplexity, at the death of King D. Alphonſo, retired themſelues into diuerſe parts of the realme. 1 An. 1350.

This yong King being but fifteene yeeres old began his raigne with cruelty, in which vice he continued his whole life, but to his coſt. D. Leonora being ſollicited by ſome Knights to come to Seuile, ſhe came, vpon their faith, but ſhe was preſently apprehended and put in priſon, to ſatisfie the rage of iealouſie of Queene Mary the Kings mother, wherevpon D. Henry Earle of Franſtamare, and ſome of his brethren, children to this F Lady, thought to fortefie themſelues in Algezire, but they were ſet vpon, and forced to flie, ſome into Portugal, ſome elſe-where: againſt whom the King was more incenſed then before, for the marriage which followed betwixt D. Henry Earle of Franſtamare, and D. Ieanne Manuel, daughter to D. Iohn Manuel one of the mightieſt Princes in Spaine, next vnto the King, to which marriage the King D. Pedro himſelfe aſpired. D.Pedro King of Caſtile cruel. Leonor of Guzman the deceaſed Queene miſtreſs of the King her husband.

Quarrels touching the ſucceſſor to the crowne of Caſtile.

This being accompliſhed, the married couple were forced to flie into the Aſturi'as, to A auoide the Kings fury, who the ſame firſt yeere, being fallne into a great ſickneſſe, and almoſt abandoned by the Phyſitions hee deſcouered the hearts and diſpoſition of the Princes and Noblemen of his Realme, by the quarrels they entred into for the ſucceſſor to the crowne, thinking the King would die: Some being of opinion to call D. Fernand of Arragon, Marquiſſe of Tortoſe, Nephew to the deceaſed King, ſonne to D. Leonora his ſiſter: others giuing their voice to D. Iohn Nugnes of Lara, Lord of Biſcay, iſſued by the mothers line from the bloud royal of Caſtile: of which party were D. Alphonſo Fer- nand Cornel, and Garſilaço de la Vega: the contrary party was held by D. Iohn Alphonſo of Albuquerque, a Knight of great credit with the Queene mother. The Kings reco- B uery ended this controuerſie, touching him that ſhould ſucceed to the crowne, but it gaue beginning and force to the factions and inſolencies which followed; for D. Iohn

Hatred betwixt D. Iohn Nugnes de Lara and D. Iohn Alphonſo of Albuquerque.

Nugnes de Lara being gone from court, in a great rage againſt the Lord of Albuquerque, for ſome byting words caſt forth in their controuerſies during the Kings ſickneſſe, the cares of this young and ill experienced King (cholerike by nature, and inclyned to reuenge) were filled with the reports of ſuch as gouerned him, wherevpon hee was ſo incenſed againſt this houſe of Lara, their friends and adherents, as it was euident that hee ſought but an oportunity to doe them ſome miſchiefe.

The death of D. Iohn Nugnes, which followed ſoone after in the towne of Burgos, C made his aduerſaries deſeignes more eaſie: he left for ſucceſſor to his Siegneuries (which were great) one ſonne, but two yeeres old, called D. Nugno de Lara. And at the ſame time D. Fernand Manuel, Lord of Villena died alſo, leauing one onely daughter, named D. Blanch, who died alſo ſoone after. Theſe deathes did much content D. Iohn Alphon- ſo of Albuquerque, for that hee was freed from great emulators and aduerſaries which hated his authority, and the familiarity he had with the King, who preferred him before all the Princes and Noblemen of Caſtile. The King was aduiſed by his councell, to ſeize vpon theſe young pupils, and of their lands, according to which hee went towards Burgos, cauſing D. Leonora of Guzman to be brought after him, whom hee ſent with a good gard to priſon to Talauera. Being at Henera, the importunities of his mother Donna Maria, were ſuch, as he was forced to deliuer vnto her this poore impriſo- D ned Lady, who with a womaniſh and boundleſſe rage, cauſed her to bee cruelly murthe-red, in reuenge that ſhe had many times defrauded her of the amorous imbracings of the King her husband, and preſently ſhee begged all her goods; an act which was nothing royal, and which did redownd to the great contempt of the deceaſed King Don Alphonſo: Since which time, and by reaſon of this murther, the towne of Talauera was and is called, de la Reyna, or of the Queene. The King D. Pedro did this being yong and ill aduiſed. Being come to Burgos, at his firſt arriual, he cauſed Garſilaço de la Vega to be ſlaine in his owne lodging: and afterwards there were alſo diſpatcht Alphonſo Garcia Ca- margo, Fernandes of Medina, and Alphonſo Fernandes, Secretary or Notary, a Burgeois of that city, al for the quarrels betwixt the Lord of Albuquerque and the houſe of Lara. A E Lady of honor called D. Mencia, wife to Martin Ruis of Abendagno, Gouerneſſe to the yong Infant Nugno de Lara, Lord of Biſcay, hearing of theſe cruel executions of the new King, tranſported the Infant from Paredes de Naua in Biſcay, leaſt the King ſhould do it ſome harme. The King hearing thereof, purſued them himſelfe, vnto the bridge of Larra, where vnderſtanding that the Gouerneſſe and the Nurce had recouered the town of Vermejo, he returned to Burgos, and reſolued to make war againſt the Biſcayns, ſo as within few daies he ſent Ruis Diaz of Rojas to beſeege Oroſco, the which Iohn of Aben-

Noblemen murthered by the commandement of the King D. Pedro.

A King D. Alphonſo father to this King: and the third D. Maria was married into France twiſe, firſt to the Earle of Eſtampes, and next to Charles of Valois Earle of Alençon, brother to King Philip the ſixth, or as ſome hold, his brothers ſonne. Of the firſt bed ſhee had one ſonne, who was Earle of Eſtampes; and of the ſecond foure, whereof the one was Earle of Alençon, named Peter, the ſecond whom they called Robert Earle of Perch: and the two other of the church. This Lady Mary did afterwards contend, in the time of King Henry the ſecond, for the Siegneuries of Biſcay, as we ſhal ſhew: at the time of the death of this yong Lord D. Nugno de Lara, there were in this houſe, beſides the Siegneury of Biſcay, the townes of Saint Gadee, Loçoya, Egliſe, Salouer, Font Burvene, Berçoſo, Cibico of the tower, Galez, Paredez of Naua, Villallon, Cuenca of Tamarit, Melgar of
B the frontier, Barzon. Moral of the Queene, Aquilar del Campo, Caleruegos, Beluer, St. Iames de la Puebla by Salamanca, Oropeça, the field of Arrannelo and other townes; beſides theſe great Siegneuries, the houſe of Lara & Lords of Biſcay, had this prerogatiue, alwaies to lead the foreward in armies, whereas the King was in perſon. In aſſemblies of the Eſtates, the Lords of Lara were general Attorneies, or Deputies for the Nobility by an eſpecial preuiledge, and often times they did carry the ſtandard royal. Beſides theſe things, Don Iohn Nugnes de Lara laſt deceaſed, held by reaſon of his marriage, the townes of Lerma, Villa-franca in the mountaines of Oca, Buſto, Amejugo, Balorcanos, Tor de Blanco & other places, beſides the rights of Linager which he had, as chiefe of the houſe of Lara, and Lord of Biſcay, to the lands called Beetrias. They were certaine lands,
C and paſſages of the country ſo named, hauing this preuiledge from all antiquity, to chooſe what Lord they pleaſed out of the nobility, of what lynage or family ſoeuer, to command ouer them, and to defend them: and among them there were ſome that might change their Lord 7. times a day, if they pleaſed: others hauing the like power to change their Lord, were yet bound to chooſe of the ſame family to thoſe that were firſt recommended: ſo as they were rights purchaſed to families, many ſuch prerogatiues had the Lords of Biſcay, and of Lara. The liberties of theſe lands called Beetries, the King D. Pedro ſought to aboliſh, at the Eſtates aſſembled 1351. and the 2. of his raigne at Vailledolit.

3 Before he came to the ſaid Eſtates, he was viſited by Charls King of Nauar, & as they did ſympathiſe wel in nature and diſpoſition, they made great ſhewes of loue, and gaue
D royal preſents one vnto an other. After this enterview, the King D. Pedro came to Vailledolit, from whence Iohn of Ruelas Biſhop of Burgos, & Aluar Garcia of Albornoz, were ſent Ambaſſadors into France, to treat of a marriage betwixt the king, and Blanch daughter to Peter duke of Bourbon, whoſe elder ſiſter Ieanne, was married to Charls the Daulphin, ſon to king Iohn, then raigning in France, the marriage was concluded, but vnfortunate was the iſſue, as wil appeere. D. Pedro hauing begun his raigne by ſuch violences, he abated nothing in the continuance: for the aſſembly of Vailledolit being ended, hearing that D. Alphonſo Cornel was diſcontented with thoſe things which he had done, and that he fortified himſelfe in his town of Aguilar in Andaluſia: and on the other ſide D. Tello, E one of the children of D. Leonora with his brother D. Henry, fortefied, the one at Arande of Duero, the other at Gijon, he went againſt them in perſon, & firſt beſeeged Gijon. Be-in at this ſeege, he fel in loue with a gentlewoman, attending vpon D. Iſabella of Meneſes, wife to D. Iohn Alphonſo of Albuquerque, her name was D. Maria of Padilla: ſhe was ſmal of ſtature, but exceeding faire and pleaſing, with whom he was ſo far in loue, as notwithſtanding he attended the comming of his new ſpouſe out of France, yet muſt he ſatisfie his luſt with this, imploying therein not only D. Iohn Alphonſo of Albuquerque his mignon, but euen an vncle of the gentlewomans, her mothers brother, called Iohn Fernandes of Hineſtroça, who managed the buſineſſe ſo wel, as he brought her, & deliuered her vnto him at Sahagun, very tractable. Gijon yeelded, and D. Henry retired, ſo as the army
F was led againſt D. Tellos country, who was retired into Arragon: but by the meanes of the King of Arragon, their peace was concluded, betwixt the Ambaſſadors of theſe two Princes, at Soria, with ſhew that it would continue: wherefore there was not any one more to ſubdue, but D. Alphonſo Fernand Cornel, for the which the troupes had marched towards Andaluſia, and he was beſeeged in Aguilar, where he was wel fortefied, but what can one knight doe (how powerfull ſoeuer) againſt the power of a King; the place was taken, and Alponſo being retired into a tower, he yeelded to D. Diego Gomes of Toledo, whoſe great friend he had beene, hoping that by his meanes he ſhould obtaine his life, or that his goods ſhould be preſerued for his children. As they led him priſoner, he met with D. Iohn Alphonſo of Albuquerque, who ſaid vnto him, that he wondred how he, who had ſhewed himſelfe ſo braue a knight, had vndertaken ſo fooliſh an enterpriſe. To whom he anſwered, That it was the cuſtome of Caſtile, to make men and to vndoe them ſodainely. D. Alphonſo had beene at the taking and death of D. Gonçalo Martines of Ouiedo, maiſter of Alcantara. During the raigne of King D. Alphonſo: and the ſame day and month that he was ſlaine by the father, this man was put to death by the commandment of the ſon, and with him were alſo executed D. Pedro Cornel, his couſin, Iohn Alphonſo Carillo, Iuanes of Biedma, Iohn Gonçales of Aſa, and Ponce Diaz of Queſada. The wals of Aquilar were ruined, & the goods of D. Alphonſo Cornel confiſked, & giuen by the King to diuers: among other D. Maria of Padilla, the Kings miſtres, being deliuered in the city of Cordoua of a daughter, whom they named D. Beatrix, the King gaue her the townes of Montalban, Capilla, Burguillos, Mondejar and Ioncos: of this confiſcation Pedro Suarez of Toledo had Bolano. To his brother Diego Gomes was giuen Caſarubios of the mountaine, and to Inigo Lopes of Oroſco, Torija.

Aquilar taken and the vnworthy death of D. Alphonſo Fernand Cornel.

An. 1353. Theſe things happened in the 1353. to the great diſcontentment of many, who did much eſteeme the vertue of D. Alphonſo Fernandes Cornel. The King came afterwards to Torrijos in the country of Toledo, where running at a Tourney, he was hurt in the right hand, by the which he loſt ſuch aboundance of bloud as he was in danger of his life, for they could finde no meanes to ſtanch it. Being in this cure, he was aduertiſed of the arriuall of Blanch of Bourbon his ſpowſe at Vailledolit, being accompanied by the Vicont of Narbone, and many other Noblemen and Knights of France, who had beene receiued with great ſhewes of ioy by D Maria the Queene mother: but the King was wonderfully troubled, for he was ſo tranſported with the alurements of D. Maria of Padilla, as hee was amazed at theſe newes, as if hee had beene ſtrooke with a flaſh of lightning, and would gladly that they had neuer ſpoake of marrying him; yet he muſt of force goe to Vailledolit, to celebrate the marriage, and to perſwade him therevnto, D. Iohn Alphonſo of Albuquerque returned happely out of Portugal, whether he had beene ſent, and without him, who gouerned all, the King had not diſlodged. D. Iohn Alphonſo brought with him from Portugal, D. Iohn de la Cerde, ſonne to D. Lewis, who was ſonne in law to D. Alphonſo Fernandes Cornel, and came out of Affrike, whether he had retired himſelfe, during the diſſentions and ciuil warres of Caſtile, and had conducted ſome enterpriſes happely for King Alboanen againſt Albohaçen his father. Bringing letters of fauour and recommendation from the King of Portugal, this Prince was receiued into grace, by the King, but he gaue him not any part of his father in lawes goods. In Spaine they report a ſtrange caſe of D. Maria Cornel his wife. That hauing ſome prouocations of deſire in her husbands abſence, ſhe quencht her luſt by death, thruſting vp burning fire brands into her body. Before the Kings going to Vailledolit, he made an accord with his brethren D. Henry and D. Tello, who were come in armes, and wel accompanied to Cigales, and then he went to celebrate his marriage much againſt his will, but perſwaded therevnto by D. Iohn Alphonſo of Albuquerque, who deſired to ſee the King to haue a lawfull heire, and was in ſome iealouſie of his owne authority, fearing leaſt the kinſmen of D. Maria of Padilla, whom he himſelfe had giuen vnto the King, ſhould get before him in the gouernment of the affaires, as it was likely.

The third day after the marriage, notwithſtanding any perſwaſions or intreaties, which D. Maria the Queene mother, and D. Leonora Queene Dowager of Arragon, his aunt, he left his new bride, a young Princeſſe of 18. yeeres of age, and went with all ſpeed to Montalban, nere vnto Toledo, to viſit Donna Maria of Padilla, by whom he was inchanted. This vnworthy part of the Kings, did much trouble the whole court, eſpecially D. Iohn Alphonſo of Albuquerque, who finding by ſome ſignes that the King was not pleaſed with him by reaſon of this marriage, hee durſt not to follow him, but retired to his houſes. Don Fernand and D. Iohn, Infants of Arragon, with many other knights followed him. He tooke D. Maria of Padilla from Montalban, & brought her to Toledo.

The King D. Pedro quits his new ſpouſe three daies after his marriage.

Thoſe

A Theſe that were about him preuayled ſo by their intreaties, as he returned to Vailledolit to his wife, but he ſtayed but two dayes, and went away againe leauing the Lady much perplexed at theſe ſtrange courſes.

The Queene D. Blanche retired with the Queene-mother to Tordeſillas, and the king returned to D. Mary of Padilla, who entertained the hatred and diſlike which the king had of his wife, that ſhee alone might enioy him. It is written by Diego of Valera, that among all the precious iewels which the Queene had brought out of France, there was a rich girdle, which ſhe preſented to the king her husband, the which D. Mary of Padilla hauing in her power, ſhe found out a Iew, a Magitian, which did inchant it, ſo as when the king would put it on, beeing amazed, and demanding what Prodigie it might be, his mi-

Girdle inchanted.

B nions (who were allyed to his concubine) anſwered, that they were the goodly preſents which this French Gentlewoman had brought him. Whereupon he was much incenſed againſt this poore Lady. In the meane time D. Tello, the kings baſe brother, married D. Ieanne, the eldeſt daugher of D. Iohn Nugnes de Lara deceaſed: whereuppon by this marriage he became Lord of Biſcay, and of the other places and lands aboue-mentioned, the which did much offend the king, cauſing him to grow into a greater furie and rage againſt him and the reſt then before, whereof the ſharpeſt effects were againſt them that reprooued his leud life, and the indignities he did vnto the Queene his wife: whom for ſpite, hee cauſed to be led to Areualo with a guard, and vnder the cuſtodie of Don Pedro Gudiel, Biſhop of Segobia, and a Bourgeſſe of Toledo, in whome he truſted (his name was Tello

C Palomochio) as a priſoner, and began to diſplace all the Officers of her houſe, and al others which had beene aduanced by the fauor of D. Iohn Alphonſo of Albuquerque: hee tooke away the Office of Chamberlaine from Guttiere Fernandes of Toledo, and gaue it to Diego Garcia of Padilla, brother to his Miſtris: that of Cup-bearer, which Iohn Rodrigues of Viedma held, was giuen to Aluar Garcia of Albornoz: the allowance of diet was taken from Guttiere Gomes of Toledo, and giuen to Pero Gonçales of Mendoça, a great Lord in Alaua, from whence are deſcended the Dukes of Infantazgo. In Seuile the king did alſo change many of the chiefe Officers of the Realme, which had beene aduanced by the fauour and councell of Don Iohn Alphonſo of Albuquerque, giuing them to others that were recommended by Diego Garcia of Padilla, and Iohn Fernandes of Hineſtroça: name-

D ly, he tooke the gouernment of the frontier from Don Garcia Fernandes Manriquez, and aduanced Fernand Perez Puerto Carrero.

Thus the king altered things within his Realme, & forced the greateſt to humble themſelues, and to ſue vnto the kinſfolkes and fauorites of Donna Maria of Padilla, hating all them deadly that did but tell him, that he ought to loue Donna Blanche the Queene his wife, and liue Chriſtian-like and honeſtly with her: as Don Gil Carillo of Albornoz, Archbiſhop of Toledo, had ſought to do, who beeing of his councell, and a Prelate of great dignitie in Spaine, had preſumed to reprehend his diſordered life in that behalfe: but hee tooke it in ſo ill part, as this reuerent man was forced to abandon all the liuing hee had in

Arch-biſhop of Toledo forced to leaue Spaine

E Spaine, and retire to Auignon to Pope Clement, by whoſe ſucceſſor Innocent the ſixth, who came to the Popedome that yeare 1353. he was made Cardinall, and in his life-time they proceeded to a new election in the Arch biſhoppricke of Toledo, and Primacie of Spaine, putting in his place one Don Blaiſe.

This King made himſelfe to be feared, and ſo much hated of all the Noblemen of his Realme, as euery man made choice of a party, and ſought how to aſſure himſelfe from his fury and violence. Don Iohn Nugnes of Prado, Maſter of Calatraua, a friend to Don Iohn Alphonſo of Abuquerque, retired into Arragon, to the Commanderie of Alcaniz: but the king who had a deſire to haue him in his power, ſought all meanes, lawfull and vnlawfull to aſſure him, ſo as he made him come vppon his faith and promiſe, that he ſhould

F haue no harme. This good Knight, who found himſelfe guiltleſſe of any crime, but that he had beene a friend to the Lord of Albuquerque, came into Caſtile, to the towne of Almagro, but he was preſently beſeeged by the kings commandement, by Don Iohn de la Cerda, and by Peter Nugnes of Godoy, who notwithſtanding did ſecretly aduice him to returne into Arragon, before that the king (who was gone out of Seuile to come thither) were arriued: the which he would not do, ſaying, That he found his conſcience free from all

all rebellion, and that he had no cauſe to feare to put himſelfe into the kings mercy: but it ſucceeded ill for him. The king beeing come the maſter came vnto him, and caſt himſelfe at his feet, intreating him to receiue him in his iuſtifications: but this cruell Prince refuſing to heare him him, depriued him inſtantly of the Maſter-ſhip of Calatraua, the which he gaue to Diego Garcia of Padilla, and commaunded that he ſhould bee carried priſoner to the caſtell of Maqueda, whereas Stephen Domingo of Auila commanded: and there within few dayes after he was murthered by Diego Lopes of Portas, ſeruant to Diego Garcia of Padilla; whereof the king would haue excuſed himſelfe, ſaying, That it was done without his commandement: but it appeared ſufficiently that he was not diſcontented there-with. Going from Almagro the king came before the towne of Medellin, belonging to the Lord of Albuquerque, whereas Diego Gomes of Silua, a Knight of Galicia, commanded: the towne yeelded, fearing the kings furie, and ſoone after the caſtle, the which the king in diſdaine of the Lord of Albuquerque, cauſed to be inſtantly razed: after which hee led his army before Albuquerque, the which was held in the name of their Lord, by Martin Alphonſo Botello, a Gentleman of Portugall, and vnder him commanded Peter Eſteuanez Carpintero, Commander maior of Calatraua. The King hauing ſummoned them to yeeld the place; vppon refuſall, he proclaymed them Rebels, whereof the Portugall, (who was not his ſubiect) made no accompt. The Commander excuſed himſelfe, ſaying, That the place was not in his power. Wherefore he paſt on towards Cobdeſera, another place belonging to Don Iohn Alphonſo, the which he could not take, ſo as after ſome skirmiſhes he left Don Henry Earle of Tranſtamare, and Don Frederic Maſter of S. Iames, his breethren, who followed him againſt their wils, and he came to Caceres. Afterwards he reſolued to ſend ambaſſadors into Portugall, whither the Lord of Albuquerque was retired, to demand him of the king of Portugall as his ſubiect and a rebell: but the king of Portugall excuſed himſelfe, and ſought to bring D. Iohn Alphonſo of Albuquerque again into fauour: but it tooke no effect: for D. Iohn Alphonſo entred into league with the Erle of Tranſtamare, who was one of theſe Ambaſſadours, and with Don Frederic Maſter of Saint Iames, and they proceeded ſo farre, as beeing thruſt on with hatred and diſdaine of their king, they ſought to perſwade D. Pedro, Infant of Portugall, to ioyne with them, promiſing to make him king of Caſtile, ſhewing him that hee had a title; beeing Nephew or Grand-child to King Sancho the Braue, ſonne to his daughter Donna Beatrix. But the king Don Alphonſo his father croſt this proiect, and would not ſuffer his ſonne to ingage himſelfe in this enterpriſe.

The more to haue modeſtie in contempt, and to ouerthrow all diuine and humane lawes, the king Don Pedro, in the yeare 1354. without any diſpenſation from the Pope, but onely aſſiſted by two biſhops his owne creatures, Sancho of Auila, and Iohn of Salamanca, cauſed himſelfe by their ſentence to bee ſeparated from the Queen Donna Blanche, and in the towne of Cuellar, hee married a Ladie, widow to Don Diego of Haro, called Donna Ieanne of Caſtro, daughter to Don Pedro of Caſtro, of whoſe exquiſite beauty hee was much enamoured: hauing married her, hee had newes of this league made by his breethren with Don Iohn Alphonſo of Albuquerque, wherefore hee went from Cuellar, and gaue this Lady her laſt adiew, who retired to Duegnas, where ſhee paſt her dayes, hauing brought the King a ſonne, who was named Iohn, and cauſing herſelfe to be ſtyled Queene of Caſtile and Leon. To oppoſe himſelfe againſt this new conſpirade, the king beeing come to Caſtro Xeris, he made the marriage of the Infant Don Iohn of Arragon his couſin, with Donna Izabella, the ſecond daughter of the deceaſed Don Iohn Nugnes of Lara. And for that hee vnderſtood that Don Tello his brother followed the partie of Don Henry and Don Frederic his other breethren, he would haue Don Iohn of Arragon take vppon him the title of Lord of Biſcay. From thence he paſt to Toro, leauing Donna Maria of Padilla at Caſtro Xeris, beeing readie to be deliuered of a daughter which was named Donna Conſtance, future wife to the Duke of Lancaſter an Engliſhman. The Confederates were fortified by Don Fernand of Caſtro, brother to Donna Ieanne, married, and ſuddenly abandoned by the King, in hatred of the contempt of his ſiſter.

Second marriage of King D. Pedro his firſt wife yet liuing

E F

This king ſeeing that ſo many great perſonages rebelled againſt him, imputing all the cauſe

A cauſe of this miſchiefe vnto his wife the Queene Donna Blanche, he cauſed her to bee taken out of the caſtell of Areualo, and conducted to Toledo, Don Iohn Fernandes of Hineſtroça, Vncle to Donna Maria of Padilla, hauing taken the charge thereof. This pore Princeſſe ſeeing her ſelfe in her enemies hands, and attending nothing but death from her cruell husband, as ſoone as ſhe was entred into the cittie of Toledo, ſhee intreated them to lead her directly vnto the great Church, vnder color of deuotion, the which was granted her: but beeing once entred, ſhe would not go foorth, but challenged the priuiledge of the place, ſo as preſently all the cittie of Toledo ſhewed themſelues for her, euery one pittying her vnworthie vſage: wherefore Don Iohn Fernandes of Hineſtroça, durſt not attempt to force her, but returned vnto the king, beeing at Segure de la Sierre, whither
B he was come to make warre againſt Don Frederic Maſter of Saint Iames. At this newes the king came in a furie to Ocagne, and there in the place of Don Frederic, Maſter of S. Iames, hee created D. Iohn Garcia of Padilla, Lord of Villagera, brother to his miſtris D. Maria of Padilla, the firſt of all the Maſters of S. Iames that was married. In the mean time the Inhabitants of Toledo in generall, reſolued to keepe the Queene within their towne, from all violence, and not to receiue the king, vntill he were reconciled, and did promiſe to lead an honeſt life with her. As the incenſed King thought to be reuenged of all theſe things, he found himſelf abandoned by many Noblemen of his trayne, among the which were the Infants of Arragon his couſins, and Don Lopes Sanches of Abendagno, great commander of Caſtile, who beeing diſcontented with his exceſſe, as well in the courſe of C his life, as in the gouernement of his Realme, and at his ill vſage of the Nobility, they ioyned with his brethren, and with the citty of Toledo, and all thoſe of Andaluſia, and other Noblemen and Communalties, who altogether made petition vnto the King, beſeeching him, that for his owne honour, and the publike good, he would leaue the company of Donna Maria of Padilla, and liue with the Queene Donna Blanche his wife, as God had commanded him, and common honeſtie required: and that he ſhould gouerne his realm by the good and faithfull councell of good men.

Maſter of S. Iames married

Donna Leonora his aunt, Queene Dowager of Arragon, preſented this petition vnto him, the reuerence of this Lady gaue the confederates hope to obtayne ſomething, but ſhe laboured in vaine: for the king was ſo much incenſed againſt the confederates,
D and on the other ſide did ſo doate on D. Maria of Padilla, as he made no accompt of this admonition: ſo as the whole Realme was in combuſtion, and the Princes, with others of their faction, came to Medina del campo, whereon they ſeazed. There Don Iohn Alphonſo of Albuquerque was poiſoned by an Italian Phiſition called Paul Romain, beeing hired thereunto by the king. He was Grand-child to Don Denis King of Portugal: within few dayes after there were aboue ſeuen thouſand horſe at Medina del campo, holding the Q. D. Blanches party: and the confederates preſented a new petition vnto the king, who had taken his way to Toro, and the chiefe of them ſpake vnto him about Tejadillo, neere vnto Toro, beeing fifty Knights in field of either ſide, but they preuayled nothing: for the king
E leauing all, went to Vruegna, where Donna Maria of Padilla was, to bee merry with her. Queene Mary the kings mother receiued the Confederates into Toro, and wrought ſo, as ſhe drew the king thither, where they began to make a kind of accord, and to diſpoſe of the Offices of the kings houſe, and of Gouernments and places, diſplacing ſome, and aduancing others, as they thought good: and namely, they diſappointed all them of Padilla, and their adherents: the which the king ratified, but againſt his will, as it appeared ſoone after: for he made a diſpatch from Tordeſillas, to Don Pedro Infant of Arragon, Earle of Ampurias, who gouerned the country of Arragon, the King his Nephew beeing then in Cattelogne, by the which he complayned of that his ſubiects had forced him vnto: intreating him by the bond of their allyance to be his friend: and thereupon he came
F to Segobia, in the beginning of the yeare 1355. and from thence to Burgos, where hee called a generall aſſembly of the Eſtates, in the which hee complayned greatly of the Queene his mother, and of the Princes and Noblemen confederates, ſaying, that they had detayned him priſoner in the citty of Toro, and had forced him to do many things againſt his will and dignitie: demanding mony from his ſubiects, that hee might make war againſt them, and puniſh them according to their merits, the which he obtained. the end of the Eſtates he came to Medina del campo, where he cauſed to bee ſlaine in his owne lodging, one day in the holy weeke, Peter Ruis of Villega, Gouernor generall of the frontier of Caſtile, and Sancho Ruis of Rojas: and cauſed many to be put in priſon. Returning to Toro, he had an incounter with Don Henries men, who went to ioyne with Don Frederic his brother at Talauera, from whence they after marched to Toledo, and had meanes to enter, although their comming was not pleaſing to all the Cittizens, beeing the meanes to draw a warre uppon them, as it happened, for that the king followed them ſoone after, and entred as it were by force, conſtrayning them to depart. This was a meanes for him to haue the Queene his wife in his power, who was poorely defended by the diuided Toledains, ſo as ſhee was ſent to the caſtle of Siguença. The king cauſed about foure and twenty Burgeſſes to be executed in the cittie by Iuſtice, who had taken the Queenes part too openly: among the which a Gold-ſmith, about 80. yeares old, beeing condemned, and ready to be executed, his ſonne, a young man of eighteen yeares of age, preſented himſelfe, who (mooued with pietie and a filiall loue) beſought the king to do him the grace, not to ſuffer his father to end the dayes of his old age after that manner, offering to ſuffer death for him. The king (who had no royall part in him) accepted the condition, and cauſed this young innocent man to be executed, who in regard of his pietie did merit to ſaue his fathers life, and to liue himſelfe with honour and reward due to ſo great vertue: the name of this yong man through the negligence of Writers, is ſuppreſt. After theſe diſhonorable exploites, the king went to Cuenca, which held for Queene Blanche, but he could not take it: whereupon he marched againſt Toro, and brought all the warre into the territories of Leon and Biſcay, where his men were twiſe defeated, by D. Tello, and Iohn of Abendagno, with the death and impriſonment of many. The K being before Toro, he had newes of the death of Don Iohn Garcia of Padilla, brother to Donna Maria, his miſtris, being choſen maſter of S. Iames, againſt his brother Don Frederic, whereat he was much grieued.

Pietty of a ſon ill rewarded by D. Pedro.

During this heauines, there came vnto the campe, William Biſhop of Bolonia, Cardinall of Saint Marie in Coſmedin, Legate to Pope Innocent the ſixth, beeing ſent to pacifie the troubles of Caſtile, and to reconcile the King and Queene: but he loſt his labor, and obtayned nothing of him, but that hee procured the deliuerance of Peter Barroſo, a Doctor of the Lawes, and biſhop of Siguença, who was priſoner, for that he had held the Queenes party. The king wrought ſo, partly by force, and partly by parlees and promiſes, as hee was ſuffered to enter into Toro, vppon condition that hee ſhould not kill any man: the which he promiſed, and kept according to his faith: for he was no ſooner entred but he cauſed to be ſlaine within the caſtell, in the preſence of the Queene his mother, Peter Stephen Carpinter, Maſter of Calatraua, Ruis Gonçales of Caſtagneda, Martin Alphonſo Tello, and Alphonſo Telles, the which Queene Mary did ſo abhorre, as ſhee ſwounded, and was in danger of death: and ſoone after, not able to endure the ſight of her ſons cruelties, ſhe demanded leaue to retire into Portugall to her father king D. Alphonſo, who cauſed her to be ſlayne ſoone after, for that ſhee liued vnchaſt with Don Martin Telles. The King Don Pedro did alſo cauſe to be ſlaine in Toro, Gomes Manriques of Orihuela, Diego Perez of Godoy, Alphonſo Gomes, great Commander of Calatraua, and many others.

Queen mother vnchaſt.

The knights which defended the towne of Cuenca hearing of theſe bloudie executions left Caſtile, and retired into Arragon: others which held other places, diſtruſting their ſtrength, abandoned them, and paſt into France: wherefore the king thinking himſelfe now in a manner a conqueror, tranſported with a tyrannous hatred againſt the Nobility of his Realme, yea againſt his owne bloud, he reſolued to roote them out one after another, not truſting in any one of them. Hauing beſeeged Palençuela, he watched an oportunity to kill the two Infants of Arragon his couſins, Don Frederic his brother, who was partly reconciled, and Don Iohn de la Cerde: but by reaſon of the abſence of Don Tello, his brother (whom he would catch in the ſame net) he deferred it: and the better to ſurprize him, he made ſhew to pardon him, and Don Iohn of Abendagno alſo, and to remit all that was paſt. This Don Iohn of Abendagno was one of the chiefe Knights of Biſcay, and without whoſe aduiſe Don Tello, Lord of Biſcay, did not any thing. Notwithſtanding

A as the fauours of great men are vncertaine and wauering, Don Tello enuying him, for that he was rich, and welbeloued in the countrie, cauſed him to bee ſlaine awhile after in the towne of Bilboa. Palençuela being taken by compoſition, the king Don Pedro made a tourney at Tordeſillas, where he had reſolued to murther Don Frederic his brother, and others: notwithſtanding hauing by the ſame treaſon, cauſed two other Knights to bee ſlaine, the one of Toledo, the other of Vailledolit, he thought it ſufficient for this time, and deferred this execution vntill another oportunitie.

D. Tello Lord of Biſcay cauſeth D. John of Abendagno to be murthered.

Don Henry who was in the Aſturia's, ſeeing that all were brought vnder, and reconciled vnto the king, he demanded leaue afarre off, and obtained it (for hee would not truſt the king but vpon good termes) and went to ſerue the French king. Paſſing by the mountaines of Aſturia, he eſcaped many ambuſhes which the king had layd for him, notwithſtanding his aſſurance giuen, but he was ordayned to better fortune: wherefore beeing come into Biſcay, and hauing there conferred with Don Tello his brother, hee imbarked and landed at Rochel, from whence he went to Paris to King Iohn then raigning, who receiued him, and honoured him much. The king of Arragon was aduertiſed of all theſe troubles and alterations, beeing then reſident at Perpignan, for the which he was not ſorie. At that time there raigned three bad kings in Spaine, this Don Pedro king of Caſtile, Don Pedro of Arragon, and Don Charles of Nauarre, violent Princes, who whileſt they liued, did continually afflict both themſelues and their ſubiects, by tyrannies: ſo as they purchaſed the ſurnames of Bad and Cruell. 4.

Charles the ſecond of that name, and the thirtith king of Nauarre.

5. LEauing the Eſtate of Caſtile at this time ſomewhat quiet, we will returne to the affaires of Nauarre, the which we left at the death of Donna Ieanne, wife to King Philip of Eureux: to whome of three ſonnes, Charles, Philip, and Lewis: Charles the eldeſt ſucceeded to the Crowne of Nauarre; who was ſurnamed the bad, by reaſon of the troubles D he cauſed, as well on this ſide, as beyond the Pyrenée mountaines, and of his ſtrange diſpoſition. Beeing called by the three Eſtates of the Realme, hee came in the yeare 1350. and was crowned in the cittie of Pampelona, in an aſſembly made to that end after the manner of his Predeceſſors, ſwearing to obſerue the lawes and liberties of the country. His coronation was accompanied with ſome bountie to the Cathedrall church of Pampelona, to the which among other things, he gaue a great croſſe of ſiluer, enameled with Flower de Luces azure. Nauarre

During his coronation, ſome of his people mutined, pretending a breach of their priuiledges, whome the king did puniſh ſo ſeuerely, cauſing many to be hanged, and to bee executed by other cruell puniſhments, as the cure farre exceeded the diſeaſe. With the E like violence he afflicted the Nobility of Nauarre, ſo as they decayed greatly: and he ſhewed himſelfe in all his actions inconſtant, wauering, and light of beleefe: If hee had any good in him, it was a certaine reſpect he bare to Clergie men, and to ſchollers. At his coming the king of Arragon ſent a Secretarie of his vnto him, called Peter of Tarrega, to confirme the League which was betwixt theſe two Realmes: and ſoone after hee ſent him another ambaſſage, by Don Lope Earle of Luna, and Don Iohn Fernandes of Heredia, Caſtellan of Amposta, for a more ample confirmation of the league and allyance betwixt them two: propounding vnto the king of Nauarre an allyance by marriage, to the end he might hold the kingdomes of Nauarre and Arragon well vnited, for the king of Arragon F feared much, leaſt Don Pedro king of Caſtile, (who was a violent, dangerous, and faithleſſe Prince) ſhould breake the peace that was betwixt the two Realmes, imbracing the quarrels of the Queene dowager of Arragon and of her children, and ſhould ioyne with Nauarre, by ſome allyance which might be preiudiciall vnto him. Hereuppon the Ambaſſadors propounded a marriage betwixt Don Charles king of Nauarre, and one of the daughters of the king of Sicily, who was of the houſe of Arragon. And for that it was bruted, Manners of K. Charles the 2.

bruted, that the king of Caſtile (who had not then concluded a marriage with Blanche of Bourbon) pretended to marrie Blanche of Nauarre, ſiſter to this King Charles, and widdow to Philip of Valois the French king, he was intreated to hinder it. King Charles who had a deſire, and was councelled to take a wife in France, excuſed himſelfe from marrying with Sicile, aſſuring the king of Arragon, that the Queen Dowager of France would not marrie any more: for it had beene a cuſtome long obſerued in France, that the Queenes remayning widowes, how young ſoeuer, did not marrie againe: finally, hee concluded with the Ambaſſadours of an interview betwixt the king of Arragon and him: but before it could be effected, Don Pedro king of Caſtile (who had beene aduertiſed of all which had paſt betwixt the King Don Charles, and the ambaſſadours of Arragon) wrought ſo as he drew the King of Nauarre to Bourgos, where there was great embracings, and rich preſents giuen of either ſide, in the yeare 1351. as we haue ſayd. At this enterview was Philip brother to king Charles. Beeing returned into Nauarre, and hauing many great deſſeigns in his head, hee made preparation to paſſe into France: Whereof the King of Arragon beeing aduertiſed, he ſent to ſummon him of his promiſe, that they ſhould meete together, whereunto he yeelded, aſſigning the place at Momblanc, where by the ſame meanes he ſhould viſit, paſſing by Hueſca, his Neeces D. Conſtance and D. Ieanne, Infants of Arragon. Then the King Don Charles tooke his way towards France, leading with him his two breethren, Don Philip and Don Lewis. The enterview of theſe Princes at Momblanc, made them no better friends, neither did they conclude that which D. Pedro king of Arragon did expect.

Enterview betwixt the kings of Arragon and Caſtile.

The king of Nauarre beeing come into France, he beganne to make claime to many things, for beſides the Earledomes of Champagne and Brie, which he pretended to belong vnto him, hee made a title to the Duchie of Bourgongue, by reaſon of his mother Queene Ieanne, iſſued from that houſe of Bourgogne by her mother, with many other claimes, wherein king Iohn had no intent to do him right, finding it ſo by his Councell.

He had for his chief aduerſarie another Charles or Iohn, according to the French Hiſtories, who was Conſtable of France, of the houſe of Caſtile, Earle of Angouleſme, ſonne to Don Alphonſo de la Cerde, of whome wee haue often made mention, whereby there were great inſolencies, murthers, and rebellions committed throughout the Realme of France, as we will touch briefly in paſſing, for that theſe quarrels belong rather to the Hiſtorie of France then Spaine.

The king of Nauarre beeing in theſe pourſuites, by the courſe of Iuſtice, before the Eſtates of France, and the Courts of Parlament, King Iohn thinking to pacifie him, and to make him more tractable, gaue him one of his daughters in marriage, and in recompence of his demands, gaue him Mante and Meulan: but this did not abate his pride, but wrought a contrarie effect. This Princeſſe called Ieanne, was the onely wife of King Charles of Nauarre, who had a great and a noble iſſue by her. Charles was the firſt borne of this marriage, who was king after his father Philip, who dyed young, Peter who was Earle of Mortaing in Normandie. Moreouer, they had theſe daughters following, Mary who was Counteſſe of Denia, married to Don Alphonſo of Arragon, Blanche who died at the age of thirteene yeares, and Ieanne future Ducheſſe of Brittaine, and after that Queene of England.

Genealogie of Nauarre.

Of the Earle of Mortaing, ſome Hiſtories ſay, is iſſued one ſonne named Peter of Peralta, who was Conſtable of Nauarre, the ſtemme of the Marquis of Falſes, yet by the feminine line, who are alſo Earles of Saint Eſteuan. Before the marriage of King Charles hee had a baſtard ſonne, called Don Leon of Nauarre, or Lyonel, from whome are deſcended the Marquiſes of Cortes, Marſhals of Nauarre, begotten of a Gentlewoman of the houſe of Euçe. Of him was borne Don Philip, the firſt of that line, Marſhall of Nauarre; of Don Philip was borne Don Pedro; of him Don Philip and Don Pedro brethren: of Don Pedro another Don Pedro, all ſucceſſiuely Marſhals of Nauarre. In this laſt Don Pedro fayled the Maſculine line of D. Lyonel: for hee left onely one daughter, called Donna Hieronyma of Nauarre, who was firſt wife to Don Iohn of Benauides, a Caſtillian Knight, who was alſo Marſhall of Nauarre in regard of her: and to her ſecond

A cond husband ſhee had Don Martin of Corduba and Velaſco, Earle of Alcaudete, who was in our time Marſhall of Nauarre. This is the poſterity of the bloud royall of Nauar, deſcended of this king Charles, who pourſuing with all violence his rights againſt the French King, who held the Duchie of Bourgongne and other lands, which had beene the patrimony of his Predeceſſors, he had for aduerſary (as we haue ſayd) Charles of Spaine: and ſuch was the hatred betwixt them, by reaſon of theſe pretenſions, as in the end all France was ſet on fire with ciuill wars, and the Engliſh were drawne in by the king of Nauarre, who was ſupported by them: who to be reuenged of his enemy D. Charles of Spain, Conſtable and Earle of Angouleſme, both being then in Normandy, he cauſed him to be ſurprized in the night in the towne of Aigle, and murthered in his bed, by the hands of D. B Rodrigo of Vriz, D. Iohn Ramir of Arrellan, D. Corbaran of Leet, the Barrons of Garro and Antiede, and other Knights and ſouldiers of Nauarre. Hee was ſo farre from diſſembling this fact, as he confeſſed it, and did iuſtifie it to be done by his commandement, and that he had iuſtly ſlaine him: whereat the king, and the whole court were much troubled, ſeing the great impudencie of the king of Nauarre, the which was entertayned by many within the Realme which did adhere vnto him, beſides the league he had with the Engliſh, to the which he alſo ſought to draw D. Pedro king of Arragon, who notwithſtanding would not heare of it, for that he was allyed to the French king, whoſe friendſhip he reſolued to entertaine. To preuent the miſchiefes which might grow by ſuch furies, King Iohn was forced to diſſemble, and by promiſe of impunity, gifts, and yeelding of townes and pla- C ces, according to the demands and pretenſions of the King of Nauarre, ſeeke to break the league which he had treated with the Engliſh, yea giuing him the Duke of Aniou his ſon in hoſtage, to draw him to Court, where being come, the king made a ſhew that he wold arraigne him, but it prooued a ieaſt: for hauing cauſed him to come before him on his knees, and to craue pardon, he patdoned him the Conſtables murther, and all that he had committed againſt the Crowne of France and his authoritie, Queene Blanche, widow to K. Philip, his ſiſter, and Qneene Ieane his wife beeing interceſſors for him: but this reconciliation was ſoone troubled: for the king of Nauarre thinking that the French king had rather diſſembled his diſpleaſure, then forgotten it, did not quit the allyances which he had made to the preiudice of France, but did ſtil intertaine ſecret practiſes both within and without D the Realme: and as he was turbulent, and euer full of iealouſie and diſtruſt, King Iohn hauing called the Eſtates of his Realme, and ſhewed the neceſſities of war, demanding mony for the leuie of 30000. men, the King of Nauar ſought to hinder this ſubuention, and did contradict it with all his power: notwithſtanding it was granted. King Iohn being wonderfully incenſed at the King of Nauars impudency and pride, who in ſtead of aſſiſting him, like a good ſon-in-law, who had beene newly abſolued by him from ſo great a crime, ſhewed himſelfe a violent aduerſarie to his deſſeins, he ſought a fit occaſion to puniſh him, the which fell out opportunely in the city of Rouan, at the reception of the Daulphin Charles in Normandy, who had beene newly aduanced to that Duchie; whither came the E Noblemen of the countrie, namely, the king of Nauarre, as Earle of Eureux, a member of the Dutchie, where as he with many others were ſurprized: the King was ſent priſoner ro the caſtle of Alleux in Pallueil, and ſome Noblemen were executed, as you may read at large in the French Hiſtorie.

King Iohn had aduertiſed Don Pedro King of Arragon, of all thoſe proceedings, that he might ſee he had done nothing lightly, beeing a reaſonable thing, that Kings, how ſoueraigne ſoeuer, ſhould iuſtifie their actions, and to make them apparent, elſe they were to be reputed Tyrants, and to be hated of all the world, as violent and vniuſt. Gaſton Phebus then Earle of Foix, who had married Agnes, ſiſter to the king of Nauarre, was more diſcontented then any other at his impriſonment, who paſſing into Spaine, ſought to incenſe Don Pedro King of Arragon his brother-in-law, and to procure him to declare F himſelfe enemy to King Iohn, if he did not releaſe the King of Nauar, but the king D. Pedro wold not yeeld vnto it: for he held the friendſhip of France to be a firm ſupport for his Eſtates: beſides he ſtil feared a war betwixt him and D. Pedro; yet he promiſed to be an interceſſor for him to k. Iohn, and to intreat him to ſhew his clemency, & to intreat his priſoner without paſſion, but by the courſe of Iuſtice, & moreouer not to exact all his right of him,

6 D. Pedro king of Arragon, being reaſonably quiet within his realm, by the laſt accord made in the fauor, & by the perſwaſion of D. Alphonſo king of Caſtile, at the camp of Gibraltar, with his mother-in-law D. Leonora dowager of Arragon and her children, D. Fernand and Don Iohn: gaue himſelfe to ſome reformation of politicke things, and in the yeare 1350. he aboliſhed the vſe of Cæſars Æra, according to the which they did accompt the yeares, and did date their contracts and letters, gouerning all their negotiations in Arragon after the ancient manner of Spaine, commanding from thence-foorth to follow the computation of yeares taken from the Natiuity of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt. This manner of computation by Æra, had bin brought in by the ancient Spaniards, to gratifie Auguſtus Cæſar, accompting their yeres from that time that they made a diuiſion of the world with Mark Anthony and Lepidus. Spaine among other Prouinces of Europe, was fallen to him alone, which was the 4. yeare of his Empire, and 38. yeares before the Natiuity of our Lord. The yeare 1351. following, D. Iohn his ſon beeing borne at Perpignan, of his third wife, D. Leonora of Sicile, or Conſtance according to ſome, hee inſtantly made him duke of Girone, & called him Prince of Girone, which title the eldeſt ſon of Arragon hath ſince caried, and gaue him to be bred vp to Bernard of Cabrera, one of his moſt truſty Councellers. Moreouer, he would haue the Eſtates ſweare vnto this Infant, in the towne of Perpignan, as heire preſumptiue of the Crowne: but he was diuerted from this deſſeine by the perſwaſions of D. Pedro of Xerica, D. Iohn Fernandes of Heredia, Prior of S. Iohn, and of D. Iohn Lopes of Seſebio Iuſtice of Arragon: who aduertiſed him, that the oath accuſtomed to be made to kings children, and to kings themſelues, was alwaies firſt done in Arragon, and in the city of Sarragoſſa, and that to breake this order without vrgent occaſion, could not but breed confuſions. The ambaſſadors of Iohn the French king, came to him to Perpignan, who treated againe of a marriage betwixt Lewis of France duke of Aniou, and Ieanne 2. daughter to the king D. Pedro, the which took no better effect, then the other which had bin treated for D. Conſtance the eldeſt. There came alſo vnto this K. ambaſſadors from the Venetians and Geneuois, who were at great wars among themſelues, either of them affecting his fauor, but he inclined moſt to the common weale of Genoa, as the moſt profitable for his affaires, eſpecially in regard of the Iland of Sardinia: but by the perſwaſion of D. Bernard of Cabrera, laying before him the ancient hatred of the Geneuois againſt the Cattelans, & their many trecheries of their cittizens againſt the crown of Arragon, he made a league with the Venetians, & in their fauor armed againſt the Geneuois, commanding Ponce of S. Paix, Generall of the Cattelan army, to go into Sicily with 26. gallies well armed, the which he did, to whom there afterwards ioyned 20. Venetian gallies, in the port of Meſſina, commanded by Pancrace Iuſtinian. The Geneuois for their parts had rigged out 65. gallies, whereof Perin of Grimaldi was Generall: who being paſt a litle before, ſayling towards Conſtantinople: (againſt the walles of which citty the common-weale of Genoa held the town of Pera) were followed by the Arragonois and Venetian armie, beeing increaſed, beſides the gallies of Iuſtinian, by 16. other Venetian

A gallies, commanded by Nicholas Piçan: and of 4. of Valence, whereof Ripol a Cattelan had the charge: and moreouer of 9. gallies of John Paleologue, Emperour of Conſtantinople then raigning. The two armies coming to fight in the ſtreight of the Boſphore of Thrace, the Cattelans and Venetians had the victory, but very bloudy: for they loſt 14. gallies, yet moſt of the ſoldiers were ſaued. Ponce of S. Paix, chiefe of the Cattelans, with the toyle he had endured that day (and it may be by ſome wounds he had receiued) dyed ſoone after at Conſtantinople: Ricol was ſlaine in the fight. Pancrace Iuſtinian dyed alſo at Conſtantinople of the wounds he had receiued, and there dyed many other Gentlemen and Venetian ſoldiers during the conflict. As for the Geneuois, there were 24. gallies taken or ſunke, with all their burthens: the reſt of the Cattelans hauing repaired 11. gallies which remayned of their fleet, able to ſerue (for the reſt were ſo broken as they were altogether vnprofitable) mette at Negrepont, whereas 12. gallies of Cattelogne and Valencia, ſent for a ſupply by the King D. Pedro, did alſo enter: and there they alſo ioyned with the reſt of the Venetian gallies. Theſe two States being perſwaded by the Pope & Chriſtian Princes to make a peace, the king of Arragon in the end remayned an enemy to Genoa, for notwithſtanding all the perſwaſions of the Popes Nuncio, he ſtil anſwered, that he would haue no friendſhip with the common weale, vnleſſe they would quit vnto him the Iland of Corſica, and that their ſouldiers ſhould diſlodge out of Sardinia. To croſſe this peace betwixt the Venetians and Genouois, the king D. Pedro ſent Raymondus Lullius, in ambaſ-

C ſage vnto Venice, he was ſon or kinſman to him that was the greateſt Philoſopher of his age. This was in the yeare 1352, in the which the Prince D. Iohn, the kings ſon, was ſworne heire, and ſucceſſor to the realme in the city of Saragoſſa, after the accuſtomed manner.

The Prince D. John ſworne heire preſumptiue.

There were ciuill warres, with ſtrange and trecherous reuolts at that time in Sardynia, where as the Geneuois held Alguer, and the caſtle Genouois, with whom many Sardinians ioyned, and Marian Iudge of Arborea (a great fauorer, vntill that time of the Arragon name in that Iland) with others, whom they ſuſpected not, fel from the king D. Pedro: ſo as D. Rambaud of Corbera the Gouernor, could hardly reſiſt ſo great a fury, to whome there arriued D. Stephen of Arragon, ſon to William Duke of Athens, being ſent by the K. D. Pedro with gallies and ſoldiers: and in the yeare 1353. D. Bernard of Cabrera was ſent

D with 45. veſſels called Vxeres: who hauing ioyned with 20. Venetian gallies, whereof Nicholas Piſan was chief, they came to fight with an army of Genouois, led by Anthony Grimaldi, in the view of Alguer, where as the Genouois were defeated, with the loſſe of 35. gallies, and aboue 3000. priſoners: wherupon Alguer was then abandoned by the Dorian faction, of which family Fabian Roſſo, (found among the priſoners) was beheaded, for that he did rebell vpon euery occaſion. This rigour vſed to Fabian, did ſo incenſe him againſt the Arragonois, as hauing perſwaded them of Alguer to a new rebellion, and in ſteade of Iudge of Arborea, he cauſed himſelfe to be called king of Sardinia; which title he tooke at the inſtigation of Timbor of Rocabertin his wife, beeing deſirous aboue all the women of her time to be called Queene. D. Bernard of Cabrera did afterwards giue a defeat at land,

E to the reuolted Sardinians, neere vnto Cailleri, in a Bourg called Quarto: & hauing manned the fort of Cailleri, the town of Saſſeri, & other places, he returned into Cattelogne; leauing the gard of the Iland to D Rambaud of Corbera, and ouer the ſoldiers Count Arnaud of Pallars, who being preſt by the Sardinians, and the Genoa faction, were ſoone after ſomwhat fortified by 500. archers, 80. men at armes, and 20. light horſe, which D. Michel Peres Zapate, an old experienced Captaine, brought vnto them. The K. being much incenſed againſt the Genouois, who hee knew were aſſiſted by Iohn Archb. and Duke of Milan, hee held his reputation to bee ſo ingaged in this war of Sardinia, as hee reſolued to paſſe into that Iland in perſon, and to lead ſuch forces, as he might both root out all his enemies, and inuade Corſica, which he ſtill demanded for the price of any peace that was

F propounded vnto him with that common-weale by the Pope and other Chriſtian Potentates. He came with this deſſein to Barcelona, where in the yeare 1354. he cauſed the ſtandard royal to be diſplayed; a ſigne, that a royall army ſhould go to ſea. Zachary Contarin Ambaſſadour of Venice, did preſſe him to this expedition, for the which there were inrolled a thouſand men at armes, fiue hundred Genets or light horſe-men, and ten thouſand foote, all vnder the command of Don Bernard of Cabrera, who in this warre held the place of Seneſhall, which was that which we call Conſtable: and hee had in like manner the generall command ouer the gallies and ſhippes. The king left his Vncle Don Pedro Earle of Ribagorça and Ampurias, Regent or Gouernour in his abſence, and parting from Roſes with twenty great ſhippes, fiue Gallies, and many other veſſels, hee arriued in a port called Comte, three miles from Alguer in Sardynia, but with great difficultie by reaſon of the torment. There paſſed in his companie Iohn Graille, Captall of Buch, with many other Noblemen ſtrangers, and of his owne ſubiects, Don Lope of Luna, whome hee had made Earle of Luna, for his merits and good ſeruices: Philip of Caſtro, Iohn Ximenes of Vrrea, Iohn Martines of Luna, Fernand Ruis of Thauſt, Blaſco Fernandes of Heredia, Lope Gorrea, Don Stephano of Arragon, ſonne to the Duke of Athenes, Don Pedro of Xerica, Gilbert Scintilla, Olpho Prochita, Alphonſo Roger of Loria, Pedro Maza, Raymond Ruiſeco, Gisbert of Caſtelet, Mathew Mercier, Gonçal of Caſteluis, Pedro Lopes Otecia: moreouer, Don Hugues Vicount of Cardona, Bernardin of Cabrera, ſonne to Bernard, Andrew Vicount of Cannet, Othon of Moncade, Roger Bernard Vicount of Caſtelbon, Don Fernand of Heredia, Don Arnaud Roger, and Raymond of Palliars, Artal of Foſſes, William Bellera, Bernard Cruillia the elder, and Bernard Cruillia the younger, the firſt famous for the warres of Italy, the other newly come from beeing a page, Ponce Fenouillet, Francis Ceruia, Galcerand of Pinos, Galuian Angleſole, with other Noblemen, Arragonois, Cattelans, and Valencians, whereof ſome had charge of men, the reſt followed the kings Cornet.

Marian (who cauſed himſelfe to be called King of Sardynia)) hearing of this great preparation, and fearing due puniſhment, ſent vnto the king, as he was readie to imbarke, to offer him all obedience, and to deliuer him the places which hee had taken, with a good ſumme of money: but the king paſt on. At his arriuall he found the enemies had taken the towne of Egliſe, a ſtrong place, and of importance, but the caſtell had beene defended and preſerued. This caſtell and that of Cailleri, Ioieuſegard, Aquafredda, the towne of Saſſeri, and the caſtell, with thoſe of Oria and Oſoli, were the forts which held for the Arragonois in the Iland. The ſeege was layd to Alguer, and that place was furiouſly battered and aſſaulted: to diuert which ſeege, there were ten gallies of Genoa, which ſhewed themſelues at ſea, and Marian with Mathew D'Oria vppon the land, hauing in his companie two thouſand horſe, and fifteene thouſand foote, who ſtriued in vaine: for Alguer Alguer taken. yeelded, notwithſtanding that the king fell ſicke, and his armie was grieuouſly afflicted with the plague, and Marian had no other fruites of his paines, but the taking of the caſtell of Quitra. Marian was allyed to Don Pedro of Xerica, the which diſappointed many good exploits, many conditions of peace beeing often propounded, whereunto the king was often drawne and inclined. During this ſeege there came thirty Venetian Gallies, to ioyne with the army of Arragon: and thither did Abrahim King of Tunes and Bugie, ſend an ambaſſage to the king D. Pedro to conclude a peace with him, in conſideration of a tribute of 2000. doublons, which he promiſed to pay him yearely. After the yeelding of Alguer, the king of Arragon paſt to Cailleri, where hauing called the Eſtates of Sardynia, at the leaſt from thoſe places which held his party, hee condemned Gerard Earle of Donoratico, as the motiue and fauourer of Marians rebellion: ſo as the famous family of Donoratico was extinct in Sardinia. Thoſe of Maleſpine were in like manner forced to retire to Nice, and other lands which they had in Prouence, and to leaue the Iland. Marian kept the field for a time, and had many light incounters with the kings men: but in the end by the intreatie of his friends, he obtayned a peace, excuſing his rebellion vpon the kings Peace in Sardinia. ſeuerity, and the vniuſt proceedings of his miniſters: and for that during theſe wars of Sardinia, the Pope had reconciled the two common-weales of Venice and Genoa, who had made him vmper of their controuerſies, the king ſhewed himſelfe more plyable to treate of peace with the Genouois, for the which he was wonderfull importuned by the Princes. Matters ſtanding vpon theſe termes, D. Pedro returned into Spaine, and from thence paſt to Auignon, where as the Pope propounded, that he ſhould leaue the Iland of Corſica in the Genouois hand, to enioy it quietly, vpon condition they ſhould hold it of the kings of Arragon, and do them homage for it, and paying him rent, the which the king yeelded vnto: but he demanded an exceſſiue tribute, that is, 50000. florins of gold euery yeare.

The

A The Geneuois reiecting this burthen, as too grieuous, did ſhew, that they had right to that Iland, aboue two hundred yeares before, by donations made vnto them by the Popes. The Duke of Milan dealt alſo in theſe treaties, and pretended the lands of Galluri in Sardynia, by hereditarie right, as deſcending from the daughter of Nino Iudge of Galluri, of the familie of Viſcontez.

All theſe controuerſies were left vndecided, neither could the Pope, nor other Mediators bring the parties to any concluſion: and vppon theſe occaſions the Iland of Sardynia was againe troubled with ſeditions and reuolts, whereof Matthew D'Oria was the chiefe author, who did alſo ingage Marian Iudge of Arborea. Whileſt the king was in Arragon, he made Denia an Earledome, to the which he did aduance D. Alphonſo of Ar-
B ragon, ſon to D. Pedro Earle of Ribagorça, and likewiſe Vich, the which he gaue to Don Bernardin of Cabrera, ſon to Don Bernard. After his returne into Spaine, the treatie of peace betwixt him and the Common-weale of Genoua was againe debated before the Pope, by the Ambaſſadours of both parties: but all came to nothing: wherefore the tumults increaſing in Sardynia, and Mathew D'Oria hauing forced the caſtell of Oria, the king ſent D. Gilbert Chintilla thither with what forces he could, and entred into a cruell war againſt Caſtile in the yeare 1356. the cauſe whereof was as followeth.

7 Don Pedro king of Caſtile beeing at ſome peace with his ſubiects, and ſoiourning in the cittie of Seuile, he went one day to Saint Lucar of Barameda, to ſee the fiſhing of Thuns, which is very plentifull in thoſe parts: where it happened, that as the army of Ar-
C ragon (conſiſting of ten gallies and ſome other veſſels) commanded by Francis Perillos, paſt along that Coaſt, to go into France, in fauour of King Iohn, againſt the Engliſh, they met with two ſhips of Genoa laden with oyles, which the gallies had purſued, and taken in the port of Saint Lucar: whereuppon the king of Caſtile (who was vppon the place) gaue the Admirall of Arragon to vnderſtand, that that prize was an injurie done vnto him, and therfore he ſhold reſtore the ſhips, with their ladings and furniture: wherof the Admirall Perillos made no accompt, ſaying, that they were ſhippes belonging to the enemies of his king: and the Arragon Authors ſay, that Perillos entred euen into the mouth of Guadalquibir, and their made prey of all he found: whereat the king of Caſtile beeing moued, he cauſed all the Cattelan ſhippes and Merchants to bee arreſted within D his Realme, and ſeazed vppon all their goods and merchandiſe. And as he was cholericke and furious, not reſpecting peace, truce, league nor allyance whatſoeuer, hee ſent to denounce warre againſt the Arragonois, and began to put it in execution. Notwithſtanding that he offered to recompence vnto the Merchants, whome his Admirall had ſpoyled, and to make all other honeſt ſatisfactions accuſtomed betwixt Prince and Prince.

Caſtile and Arragon.

All this preuayled not: for about the end of the yeare 1356. hee ſent troups of horſe and foote to ſpoyle the territories of Valence, towards Murcia, and alſo of Molina, thruſt on by ſome about him, who were deſirous of ſtirres, thinking to aſſure and increaſe their Eſtates by the meanes of forraine warres: ſo as the king of Arragon found himſelfe ſud-
E denly engaged in a dangerous warre againſt a mighty enemy: to preuent the which, hee drew vnto him Lewis brother to the King of Nauarre, Gouernour of that Countrie, and had from thence ſuch ſuccours, as the Eſtate of their affaires could well beare: wherein Lewis ſhewed himſelfe ſo diſcreet and wiſe, as the King of Caſtile held him a neuter betwixt both parties. Moreouer, he called vnto him out of France, Henry Earle of Tranſtamara, baſe brother to the king of Caſtile, and much hated by him, who made himſelfe Vaſſall to the Crown of Arragon, and had from the King the lands of Villegraſſe, Montblanc, and others in Cattelogne, Arragon, and Valence, doing fealtie and homage: yea in a manner all that had beene held by Donna Leonora the Queene Dowager, and her children Don Fernand, and Don Iohn of Arragon, and was made Commander of the men of warre for the defence of the frontiers againſt Caſtile: which made the king of F Caſtile to come into Arragon in perſon, with greater forces, and to make warre with all violence and extremity, where hee tooke Bordalua and Embite, and ſo preſt Taraſſone with the force of armes, as hee forced the Inhabitants to ſurrender and yeeld the place without oppoſition, vppon condition that they might retire to Tudele a towne of Nauarre.

An. 1356.

Entrance of the king of Caſtile in Arragon.

Beſides this he tooke Alcala of Firuela, Verrejon, and the caſtell of los Fajos, hauing in his armie nine thouſand horſe, and a great number of foote, againſt the which forces the Arragonois durſt not preſent themſelues: wherefore he marched as farre as hee pleaſed, and then returned to Taraſſone. There by the meanes and induſtrie of Cardinall William, the Popes Legate, there was a truce concluded for a yeare: whereuppon he took his way towards Seuile. Beeing yet at Taraſſone, he had newes that Don Iohn de la Cerde, and D. Aluar Perez of Guzman were reuolted from him, and had taken the party of Arragon, and that at that inſtant they had beene charged, and defeated by his men in Andaluſia, and Don Iohn de la Cerde taken, whome he commanded to bee ſlaine before his arriuall: then being come to Seuile, he ſpent the reſt of the yeare to prepare an armie at ſea for the future warre: for his intent was not to conclude a peace, neither would he yeeld the citie of Taraſſone into the Legats hands, according to the capitulations, nor performe any part of that which had beene treated, notwithſtanding that the king of Arragon had performed all on his part: whereuppon the Legate beeing at Tudele, in Saint Maries church he propounded a ſentence of Excommunication againſt Don Pedro King of Caſtile, and did interdict his Realme, in the preſence of the Biſhops of Cominges and Tarraſſone, and the Ambaſſadors of Caſtile and Arragon, the which put the king of Caſtile into a greater furie. The Legate beeing at Hueſca, publiſhed the Decree and Cenſure againſt the King of Caſtile and his Realme, by the which, beſides that which hath beene ſpoken, he was condemned in an hundred Markes of ſiluer to the Sea of Rome: and defence made to Lewis brother to the king of Nauarre, to the kings of England and Portugall, to all Chriſtian Princes, yea and to thoſe that did in any ſort belong by conſanguinitie to this excommunicated king, not to conuerſe with him, nor to giue him ayde nor ſuccours. Then was the Infant Don Fernand of Arragon perſwaded by ſome Noblemen of Arragon, to meete with Don Pedro king of Arragon his brother, in a valley, couered with trees, where they had a long and friendly diſcourſe ſo as the Infant returned, full of promiſes and hopes.

D. Iohn de la Cerd ſlaine by the kings commandement.

The Captaine of Taraſſone for the king of Caſtile, called Gonçal Gonçales Luſio, was alſo drawne by the perſwaſions of Suero Garcia of Toledo, who was fled into Arragon, ſonne to Garci Suero, to yeeld vp that place to the King of Arragon, vppon promiſe of fortie thouſand Florins, the which he did ſoone after execute. And for that the effects of the King of Caſtiles bad inclination appeared daily, there was a League made betwixt the King of Maroc and hee of Arragon to the preiudice of Caſtile, and Don Tello of Caſtile, and the Earle of Luna, entred with an armie towards Soria, where they ſpoiled the Countrie.

Thus theſe two Kings Don Pedro King of Caſtile, and Don Pedro king of Arragon, wilfull, cholericke, and madde, fell againe into a cruell and pernitious warre, to the ineſtimable prejudice of their ſubiects, and ſhame and diſhonor to the name of Chriſtians.

Whileſt the King lay idle in Andaluſia, beeing too much giuen to women, he courted Donna Aldonça Cornel, daughter to the deceaſed Don Alphonſo Fernandes Cornel, whom he had cauſed to be ſlain, and wife to D. Aluar Perez of Guzman, his rebell: but yet he did not forget D. Maria of Padilla. Beſides this vice, hee continued his cruelty againſt the Nobility: for that yeare 1358. he cauſed his brother D. Frederic Maſter of S. Iames, to be ſlain in the town of Carmona, being newly come out of Murcia, where hee had in his name recouered Iumilla, from the Arragonois who had taken it. There was alſo ſlaine by his commandement Sancho Ruis of Rojas: at Cordoua he alſo put to death Peter Cabrera, Fernand Alphonſo of Gates: and at Salamanca Alphonſo Geoffrey Tenorio: at Toro Alphonſo Peres Fermoſino: and in the caſtell of Moja, Garci Mendez of Toledo: and moreouer he cauſed Lope Sanches of Abendagno, great Commander of Caſtile, to bee put to death, and others in diuers places according to his humour and diſcontentment: yet ſeeking to couer theſe executions with a cloake of Iuſtice, publiſhing declarations, containing the crimes of ſuch as he had put to death, although it were apparent that they were but reuenges, for that all, or the moſt part of them had not approued his exceſſe, or had in ſome ſort oppoſed themſelues.

An. 1358. D. Frederic the kings brother and other Noblemen put to death.

In which murthers he employed two, who were much fauored by him, who afterwards fell

A fell into the ſame misfortune, for a recompence of their good ſeruices; as it happened to his couſin D. Iohn of Arragon, ſonne to the Queene D. Leonora, who being an actor in the death of D. Fredric maiſter of Saint Iames, did willingly follow the King in a voiage he made into Biſcay, to diſpoſſe D. Tello his other brother of that Lordſhip, and to kill him. The King being ſodainely arriued at Aguilar del Campo, he had ſurprized D. Tello being a hunting, and not dreaming of his comming, had he not beene aduertiſed by a Squire of his, called Guttiere Guerra; but through this aduertiſment he eſcaped and retired to Vermeo, the chiefe towne of Biſcay, where getting into a fiſher boate, he ſaued himſelfe at Saint Iohn de Luz, and from thence retired to Bayone. He was not farre at ſea before the King came to Vermeo, who hearing that he was diſlodged, he beganne to B purſue him by ſea, and went as farre as Legueytio, but deſcouering nothing (and the ſea withall beginning to grow high) hee returned, and carried away priſoner D. Ieanne of Lara, wife to D. Tello; Inheritrix of Biſcay. The King being at Vermeo, D. Iohn of Arragon, who had married D. Iſabella of Lara the other ſiſter, beſought him to grant him that Lordſhip, ſeeing that D. Tello had ſhewed himſelfe contumacious, his wife being alſo priſoner, & that he had married the other ſiſter: to whom the King anſwered cunningly, that hee would haue the Biſcains aſſemble in the towne of Guernica, according to their ancient preuiledges, and there chooſe their Lord, and that for his part he would labour to haue him choſen; the which did ſatisfie D. Iohn for the preſent.

D. Ieanne of Lara Lady of Biſcay priſoner.

In the meane time the King did let the chiefe of the aſſembly vnderſtand, that when
C they were together, and the King ſhould propound vnto them for to chooſe D. Iohn of Arragon, they ſhould all cry out, that they would haue no other Lord, then the King himſelfe, and his ſucceſſors Kings, the which they did, as they had beene enioyned: ſo as D Iohn of Arragon found himſelfe fruſtrate of his hopes. This generall aſſembly of Biſcay, is called in the countrie language, Batçaar, which is as much to ſay, as an aſſembly of ancients. The King being come from Guernica to Bilbao, hee ſent for D. Iohn of Arragon to his lodging, and there commanded he ſhould be ſlaine in his preſence, and his body to be caſt out at the window which looked into the court (the which was ful of people) and crying with a loude voice: Behold your Lord of Biſcay who demaunded
D you: then he cauſed him to be carried to Burgos, and there to be caſt into the riuer, and would not ſuffer him to be buried: and for that his mother D. Leonora Dowager of Arragon, and his wife D. Iſabella, were greeued for this cruel act he cauſed them to be ſhut vp priſoners in the caſtle of Caſtro Xeris. This was the reward of Iohn of Arragon, who had, to pleaſe a tyrant, conſented to the death of many great perſonages, yea his neere kinſmen.

D. Iohn of Arragon ſlaine in the Kings loaging and in his preſence.

The King being come to Vailledolit, he had reſolued to ſacrifice ſome in that towne: but hearing that D. Henry of caſtile, Earle of Tranſtamara, and D. Fernand of Arragon, brother to D. Iohn, did ouerrunne the countries of Soria, and Almajan, and that of Murcia, he did forbeare, and hauing put great garriſons into the places about Soria, he came E to Seuile, being reſolued to doe all acts of hoſtility both by land and ſea againſt the King of Arragon. He had made ready eighteene gallies with the which and great forces by land, he came and beſeeged Guardamar, and tooke it: and for that it did belong to the Infant D. Fernand, he burnt the towne, but he could not take the caſtle. But ſodainely a violent winde tooke his gallies vpon that coaſt, ſo as ſixteene of them ranne on ground: yet he returned againe into Murcia, and was nothing amazed thereat (for he was of a proude and haughty ſpirit) but cauſed many other gallies to be built at Seuile, and commanded that all the ſhips in Galicia, Biſcay and Guipuſcoa, ſhould come thether in the beginning of the yeere 1359. to inuade the Realmes of Valence, Cattelogne and Arragon.

An. 1359.

During theſe exploits of warre, D. Pedro King of Arragon charged him of Caſtille
F with diſloyaltie and treaſon before the Pope, and challenged him by Bernard Gaiſeran of Pinos, to whom the King of Arragon would haue giuen the title of King of Majorca, that he might be equal in quality to the King of Caſtile, but this was a mocquery. This yeere was married D. Iſabel daughter to the vnfortunate Don Iames King of Majorca, to Iohn Marquis of Montferrat, to whom the King of Arragon gaue fifty thouſand florins florins in dowry, vpon condition that ſhe ſhould renounce all her fathers rights, and ſo ſhe did. The King of Arragon being then at Saragoſſa, he renued and confirmed to the Nobility of that city, whom they call Ermunios, the preuiledge they haue not to goe to the warres, but when the King is in perſon ready to giue battaile, or to aſſaile ſome place, and declared that if any one of theſe preuiledged perſons had followed him beyond theſe limitations, that it ſhould be no preiudice to their rights. There he gaue the charge of the warre, for the preſeruation of the country, to the Archbiſhop of Saragoſſa. Whileſt that the confederate Noblemen of Caſtile, together with the Arragonois, did ruine and burne the country of Alaua; the King of Caſtile led a great power by land againſt Arragon, by the way of Almaçan, where he tooke Negaſta and Torrijo. During this warre D. Henry Earle of Tranſtamara had a ſonne by his wife in the towne of Epila (the which at this daie belongs to the Earle of Arande) who was called Iohn, and raigned in Caſtile. Cardinal William being no longer fit to make a peace betwixt theſe two Princes, the Pope ſent Cardinal Guy of Bolonia, Biſhop of Portuenſe, this yeere of our Lord 1359. who preuailed as little as the other, but by his diligence and importunate purſute he incenſed the King of Caſtile more againſt the houſe of Arragon, and his rage proceeded ſo farre, as he condemned all the Knights of Caſtile that were in Arragon by proclamation: he cauſed the Queene D. Leonora his aunt to bee cruelly murthered, being widow to D. Alphonſo King of Arragon: and hauing cauſed D. Ieanne of Lara, the Lady of Biſcay, to bee tranſported to the caſtle of Almodouar del Rio, and from thence to Seuile, he there alſo cauſed her to be murthered: ſuch was the diuiliſh fury of this monſter, who being once moued vpon any ſubiect, diſcharged his rage vpon al that came into his fantaſie: He did the like vnto D. Iſabella of Lara, widow to D. Iohn of Arragon, to whom by the death of her elder ſiſter, leauing no children, the Siegneurie of Biſcay did belong, but ſhee died not by the ſword, but by poiſon, which this tyrant cauſed to be giuen her. In theſe Ladies was extinct the ſucceſſion of the ancient Lords of Biſcay.

Cruelty more then deuiliſh of D. Pedro King of Caſtile.

The ſeaſon being fit for nauigation, the King of Caſtile went out of Seuile, or Saint Lucar, with foure ſcore ſhips, and one and forty gallies, and ſailed towards the coaſt of Valence and Cattelogne; he ruined the towne of Guardamar, and the caſtle againe, and preſented himſelfe in view of Barcelona: but the army of Arragon, which was but of forty foiſts and gallies hindred him from ſtaying at any place vpon the coaſt, and skyrmiſhing often with him, they forced him to bend towards Iuiza, and to way anchor in haſt from thence, and to ſaile towards Alicant and Carthagena, and in the end to retire himſelfe, hauing with this great preparation done nothing of import. The King of Arragon was in the meane time in the Iſland of Majorca, being aduiſed not to be in his army at ſea. The gallies of Caſtille retired to Seuile, and the ſhips of Guipuſcoa, Biſcay and Galicia, returned into their countries: as for the King of Caſtile, he went to Tordeſillas to viſit Donna Maria of Padilla.

The coaſt of Cattelogne and Valence was this yeere ill prouided of ſhips of warre: for that the King of Arragon was forced to entertaine many gallies continually in the Iſland of Sardynia, beeing ſtill ſubiect to reuolts, and moreouer he had ſent a good number into Sicile, to aide the King D. Frederic his ſon in law, againſt whom Ieanne Queene of Naples made warre.

D. Pedro alone of that name, the eight King of Portugal.

Portugal. 8 DOn Pedro ſurnamed the Iuſticer raigned in Portugal, who had ſucceeded his father D. Alphonſo the fourth, deceaſed in the yeere of our Lord 1357. Hee was about ſeuen and thirtie yeeres old when hee beganne to raigne, and therefore being ripe in yeeres, and of a good Iudgement he gouerned his realme with great equity, ſo as he purchaſed the name of Iuſticer, and was much vnlike in manners to the other two Kings of his

A his time, and of the ſame name. This King (his father being yet lyuing) was married to Blanch, daughter to D. Pedro King of Caſtile, ſonne to D. Sancho, who falling into a palſey, was left by him, and then he married D. Conſtance Manuel, daughter to D. Iohn Manuel, by whom he had theſe children following. D. Lewis, who liued little, D. Fernand, who raigned, Donna Maria, married in the life of D. Alphonſo her Grandfather, to D. Fernand Infant of Arragon, ſonne to the King D. Alphonſo, by his ſecond wife D. Leonora of Caſtile. D. Conſtance dying in the yeere of our Lord 1345. he married Donna Agnes of Caſtro, a gentlewoman which had followed her, and with whom they ſayd he had familiar acquaintance during her life, for ſhe was exceeding faire & amiable. The Infant

B D. Pedro (although ſhe were ſomewhat allied vnto him, and had chriſtened his ſon D. Lewis) maried her ſecretly, for feare of his father, in 1354. hauing enioyed her many yeeres, and the witneſſes of this matrimoniall promiſe, were D. Gil Biſhop of Guardia, and Stephen Louat Maiſter of his Wardrop, whom he commanded to keepe it ſecret. By her D. Pedro had three ſonnes: D. Alphonſo, who died in France, D. Iohn and D. Denis, who were afterwards expelled by their brother D. Fernand then raigning, and died in Caſtile. Of this Lady Donna Agnes, was alſo borne one daughter, called Donna Beatrix, who was married to D. Sancho Earle of Albuquerque, baſe ſonne to D. Alphonſo the thirteenth King of Caſtile. This clandeſtine marriage being vnknowne to the King D. Alphonſo, father to D. Pedro, and yet his loues knowne and blamed by all men, it was trea-

C ted of to marry him with ſome Princeſſe, but hee would not heare of it: wherefore the King tooke a cruell reſolution to kill D. Agnes de Caſtro, thinking he ſhould not otherwiſe withdraw his ſonnes loue. Being come to this effect to Coimbra where this faire Lady remained, whileſt that the Infant D. Pedro was a hunting, he cauſed her to be ſlaine by three of his gard, which were Diego Lopes Pacheco, Peter Cuello, and Aluar Gonçales, who did this execution in the old pallace of Saint Clare. This death being in the yeere of our Lord 1355. made the Infant rebel againſt his father, who with the aide of many of his friends, entred the country betwixt Duero and Minio, where he committed great ſpoile, and had done more, if many great perſonages had not labored happely to reconcile them. After that he loued an other Lady, called D. Thereſa Gallega, by whom hee

D had one ſonne, called Iohn, in the yeere 1357. He was firſt Maiſter of the Knights of Auiz, and afterwards King after D. Fernand his brother, and the ſame yeere 1357. died king D. Alphonſo the braue.

9 D. Pedros priuat marriage with Donna Agnes of Caſtro.

Cruel maſſaker of D. Agnes of Caſtro wife to the Infant D. Pedro.

D. Pedro being come to the crowne, he ſhewed himſelfe a iuſt Prince, obſeruing aboue all things the lawes and ordinances made by his father, for the ordring of his houſe and traine, the Officers whereof were expreſly forbidden not to moleſt his ſubiects, eſpecially puruoiers, nor to take any prouiſion for his houſe, before they had paied the price which the ſeller demanded, vpon great penalties, yea death in ſome caſes. Hearing that aduocates did multiply ſutes, and that of one they often made many, he diſcharged them all throughout his realme, and impoſed great puniſhments vpon Iudges that

E ſhould ſuffer themſelues to be corrupted with money or otherwiſe, yea loſſe of life, and confiſcation of their goods: he made many lawes for the ſhortning of ſutes, appointing fit men for Iudges: cauſing his ordonances to be executed with all rigor. Hee appointed great puniſhments for light offences, and if any one told him that he was to ſeuere, he anſwered, that it was the meanes to reforme vice, and that it was pleaſing vnto God; for if the wicked were not kept in awe with the feare of death, they would neuer bee reſtrained with leſſer puniſhments; Finally to haue the good liue in peace, it was neceſſary to puniſh the bad ſeuerely. As ſoone as the pleaders had made their demaunds, and pertinent anſweres giuen, they were preſently diſpatched if it might be: If by any trickes and deuiſes matters were delaied, the offenders were puniſhed, that is, the poore by the

F whip, and the rich by great fines: by reaſon whereof his realme floriſhed in peace and aboundance of all things, and he was honoured and beloued of his ſubiects as much as any Prince lyuing. Hee had often in his mouth the ſaying of the Emperour Titus. That he held that day loſt, wherein hee had not done good to ſome one. Hee did not greeue to be himſelfe in perſon at the deciding of cauſes, and did often aſſiſt at the examination and torturing of criminal perſons; he did ſo hate malefactors, as hee did often times riſe from the table to haue them puniſhed, yea he tooke ſuch pleaſure to doe iuſtice, as he cauſed to be borne before him, or did carry himſelfe, a whip or rod wherewith offenders ſhould be puniſhed, to the end he might cauſe himſelfe to be feared, and Iuſtice more reſpected, ſo as to many this ſeuerity ſeemed to approch neere vnto cruelty: Moreouer he was carefull to diſpatch all ſorts of buſineſſe, with great breuity, eſpecially if a ſtranger came into his court, he commanded he ſhould be preſently diſpatched, to the end hee ſhould not conſume himſelfe in charges. With his royal vertues, hee loued hunting, dauncing and Ladies, and all other ſports, but not with ſuch exceſſe as the other Kings of Spaine of his time, neither was he free from deſire of reuenge, mixt with ſome infidelity: for his father being once dead, he affected nothing more then to reuenge the death of his beſt beloued D. Agnes of Caſtro, wherefore knowing that Diego Lopes Pacheco, Peter Cuello and Aluar Gonçales, who had ſlaine her, were in Caſtile, hee made an accord with his Nephew D. Pedro King of Caſtile, to deliuer vnto him in exchange, ſome Caſtillan Knights, who to flie the fury of this tyrant, were retired into Portugal, vnder his protection, ſo as they made this diſhonorable exchange, when as theſe three men were brought to Saint Iren, whereas the King was, hee would inſtantly haue them put to ſundry torments, but the Noblemen which were about him diſſwaded him: yet could he not forbeare to vſe outragious ſpeeches, yea hee ſtrooke Peter Cuello on the face, and notwithſtanding that they excuſed themſelues vpon the commaundement of the King his father, yet hee condemned them to cruel deaths. Peter Cuello and Aluar Gonçales, were executed firſt before the court gate, cauſing the one to bee opened by the breſt, and the other by the backe, to pul out their hearts. Diego Lopes Pacheco appointed to the ſame death had the hap to eſcape, flying in a pilgrimes weed into Caſtile, where he lay concealed vntil that Don Henry came vnto the crowne, whom hee ſerued, and was much beloued of him. They ſay he was the ſtem of the houſe of Pacheco in Caſtille, which gaue beginning to the Marquis of Villena, and Dukes of Eſcalona.

His diligence and equity.

His delights.

Deſire of reuenge moues the King of Portugal to betray them that were retired vnto his protection.

Family of Pacheco in Caſtile.

This cruel example ſhalbe followed by one more commendable; this King D. Pedro beeing in Lisbone, where they had made him a ſtately entry, and ordained a Tourney whereas many Knights both Portugals and ſtrangers did runne: hauing beene aduertiſed that a Knights wife of the city, called Alphonſo Andre abandoned her ſelfe to an other, he watched that day (which he held fit to execute ſuch vnlawful loues) theſe adulterers in ſuch ſort, as he ſurprized them together, the gentlewomans husband being in armes at the liſts with the reſt in the new ſtreet; who without making bruit, or ſuffring any to aduertiſe the husband of the wrong his wife had done him, hee cauſed her to bee burnt, and her adulterer to be ſlaine. If he deſcouered any baude, namely of ſuch as vnder collour of deuotion enter into houſes, to carry meſſages, or which vſe charmes, or giue loue drinkes, and ſuch like, he did puniſh them ſeuerely. He was like to haue ſlaine his Admiral in that towne, for that hee had imploied a woman of that trade, but hee fled and ſo eſcaped his fury, but hee cauſed the woman to be burnt. In the country of Vera he cauſed a married man to bee hanged, hauing children by his wife, for that hee had forced her beeing a maide, before hee had married her. If he puniſhed ſecular men ſeuerely, hee did no more ſpare prieſts and monkes, yea and prelats if they offended. Wherevpon being giuen to vnderſtand, that hee ſhould ſend them to their ſuperior Iudges, he anſwered, that ſo he did: for hauing once cauſed them to bee hanged, they went directly before God, who was the head Iudge of al, and did the laſt Iuſtice. Knowing that the biſhop of Porto, where hee then was, liued looſely with a married woman of that towne he ſent for him, ſeeming that he would confer with him of ſome buſineſſes. The biſhop being come, he cauſed euery one to depart the chamber, & hauing ſhut the doore, he began to purſue the biſhop, & handled him in ſuch ſort, as if ſome which ſtaied in the chamber, had not taken him out of his hands, he had ſlaine him. He was more ſeuere to his houſhold ſeruants then to any other: he cauſed a Secretary to be ſlaine, hauing taken money without the priuity of his Treſorer. This we read of the maners and cuſtomes of this king, who ſpared himſelfe ſometimes: as for the ſtately buildings which he left, they hold that the bridge and towne of Lima are of his foundation: he cauſed Santa Maria of Charneça to be built; he indowed the Monaſtery of Alcouaça with ſixe Chaplains, and appoin-

appointed ordinary maſſes: to which monaſtery his ſonne Fernand did afterwards giue the towne of Paredes, in the country of Leyra. Hee was bountifull and courteous to them that did him ſeruice, to whom hee gaue many guifts, and was accuſtomed euery yeere to put a hundred markes of ſiluer into plate, to giue for new yeeres guifts: he augmented the wages and penſions of the gentlemen of his houſe, and other ſeruants; hee honoured the Nobility that liued wel, and loued vertue, whereof he gaue good teſtimony when as hee made his good ſeruant D. Iohn Alphonſo Tello Earle of Barcellos, with ſuch pompe, as the like hath not been ſeene in Portugal in any age, for he had that night from the Monaſtery of Saint Dominike, which was in the place del Ruſio, vnto the place called Limonero whereas the Kings palace ſtood, fiue thouſand men holding fiue thouſand torches, by the light whereof they might ſee many tables couered with bread, meat and wine, whereas euery man might eate and drinke that liſt. And the King himſelfe laying aſide his royal ranke and grauity, led daunces through the city, and by his example the people, both of the city, and ſtrangers, which came thether by water, ſhewed al ſignes of ioy, to honour this new Earle. They ſay that this King taking delight to heare a ſiluer trumpet ſound, would then haue a deſire to daunce, and oftentimes when he could not ſleepe, he would goe out of his palace in the night, and haue daunces in the towne, whether his ſubiects came willingly, and did practiſe it much for the loue of him. This King hauing held the Realme ſome ſpace, hee would make a publike declaration, in a great aſſembly of Noblemen, what Donna Agnes of Caſtro had beene vnto him, and produced D. Gil Biſhop of Guardia, and Stephen Lonat Maiſter of his Wardrop, for witneſſes of their promiſes of marriage, who being publikely examined, did ſweare that D. Agnes had beene lawful wife to D. Pedro then Infant of Portugal and diſpenſations were ſhewed, which D. Pedro had obtained, for affinity, or other lets which might hinder this marriage, whereof a Regiſter was kept in the publike acts: and it was ordained that the children borne of this Lady ſhould bee called Infants of Portugal: her body, or beanes were tranſported from Coimbra, where they had beene buried, to the Monaſtery of Alcouaça, with royal pompe, & laied in a rich tomble of white marbe, whereon her Image was ſet carrying a crowne like a Queene.

Declaration of the ſecret mariage betwixt the King D. Pedro and D. Agnes of Caſtro.

11 Such was the Eſtate of Portugal, about the time of the warres betwixt the Kings of Caſtile and Arragon, and whileſt that D. Charles King of Nauarre was held priſoner in France, by the Daulphin his brother in law, in ſafe keeping, yet hee found meanes to eſcape, by the helpe of his brother Philip, and of Iohn Pinquignac, Gouernor of Arthois, with other Frenchmen, beeing accompanied by D. Roderike of Vrriz, D. Corbaran of Leet, D. Charles of Artieda, D. Fernando of Ayana, and by the Baron of Garro, who drew him out of the caſtle of Aleux in Palueil, where hee had beene priſoner eighteene monthes, which place they ſcaled by night, and ſlue the captaine and gard. This act was much commended, eſpecially in Nauarre: and in memory of this good ſeruice done vnto the King, the names of thoſe Knights were regiſtred in the chamber of accounts for the Realme of Nauarre. What paſt afterwards betwixt the Daulphin, and the King of Nauarre in France, I leaue it to the French Hiſtory, to the which it doth properly belong. After the returne of Iohn the French King from priſon in England, Charles King of Nauarre beeing reconciled to him and to the Daulphin his ſonne, hee went into his Realme of Nauarre, hauing had by his wife Queene Ieanne, one ſonne, in the towne of Mante, who was alſo called Charles, and ſucceeded him in the Realme.

Nauarre.

12 In the meane time the warre continued betwixt Caſtile and Arragon, and moreouer the King of Caſtile, as if he would ſcorne all the world, and ſhew himſelfe an enemy to all he encountred, had broken with the Venetians, and taken one of their ſhips, when as he was before Barcelona with his ſea army: and not content herewith hee had appointed twenty gallies to gard the Straight, and to take twelue other Venetian ſhips, in their returne, which had paſt into Flanders, but hee was deceiued: for the ſhips comming in conſort with a good gale, and helpt by the flood, they paſt almoſt vndeſcouered. Soone after the King had newes that his men had beene defeated neere vnto Moncayo, in the fields of Arauiana, by the Arragonois (where as in old time the ſeuen ſonnes of Lara had beene ſlaine) being led by D. Henry and D. Tello of Caſtile brethren, Caſtillans defeated.

D.Pedro of Luna, D.Iohn Martines of Luna, and D.Iohn Fernandes of Heredia, who being accompanied with eight hundred horſe Arragonois, defeated one thouſand and two hundred Caſtillans.

In this encounter died D.Iohn Fernandes of Hineſtroça, gouernor of that frontier for the King of Caſtile, vncle to Donna Maria of Padilla, D.Fernand Garces Duzio, D.Pedro Ruis Oſorio, Gomes Suares of Figueroa, great Commander of Saint Iames: and there were taken priſoners, D.Inigo Lopes Oroſco, D.Fernand Ruis of Villaloba, D.Iohn Gomes of Bahabou, D. Hurtado Diaz of Mendoça, and D. Diego Sancho Porras, all renowned Knights of Caſtile, whereat the King was much moued, but his griefe was moderated by a new ſonne, which Donna Maria of Padilla brought him, in the yeere of our Lord 1360. who was named D.Alphonſo, by reaſon whereof he came preſently to Tordeſillas. Being afterwards returned to Seuile, he cauſed D. Garci Aluares of Toledo to be created maiſter of Saint Iames, a Knight which had done him great ſeruices, both in the warre againſt Arragon, and in the ſeditions of Caſtille, to whom, beſides this dignity, hee gaue the office of Majordomo, or high Steward to his ſonne D.Alphonſo. This yeere continuing his cruelties, he cauſed two other of his brethren to be ſlaine, ſonnes to D. Leonora of Guzman, D.Iohn, and D.Pedro, hauing kept them long priſoners in the towne of Carmona; and they ſay, that hee diſpatched them, for that hee doubted they would bee no more faithful nor obedient vnto him, then their other three brethren. D.Iohn was ſcarce thirteene yeeres old, and D. Pedro but foureteene. The victorie which the Arragonois had gotten vnder the conduct of D.Henry Earle of Tranſtamara, made the King of Caſtille more tractable in the negotiation of a peace, wherein Cardinal Guy of Bologne the Popes Legat laboured, who in the end drew the Deputies of theſe two Kings to meet in the city of Tudelo, in the realme of Nauarre, wherewith King Charles was very well ſatisfied.

D Pedro murthers two other of his brethren.

Thether came for the King of Caſtile, Guttieres Fernandes of Toledo, and for the King of Arragon, D. Bernard of Cabrera, chiefe councellor of State, and Admiral of Arragon; who together with the Legat, did conferre, and diſpute long of the meanes to make a peace, but they could not conclude any thing. And there being alſo aſſembled by the Legats care, in the towne of Sangueſſa, D. Iohn Alphonſo of Majorca, Chancellor of the priuy ſeale for the King of Caſtile, and the ſame Admiral of Arragon for the King his Maiſter, they effected as little as at Tudelo. Whereupon the King of Caſtile beeing aduertiſed that his brother D. Henry would enter into Caſtile, ſeeing they could not conclude a peace, he came to Leon, where hee would haue ſlaine D. Pedro Nugnes of Guzman, and ſome other Knights, which had left him, but they eſcaped: yet hee tooke Pero Aluarez Oſorio in Villaniebla, as hee was at the table with Diego Garcia of Padilla, maiſter of Calatraua. Comming afterwards to Burgos, he cauſed Diego Arias Maldonado the Archdeacon to be ſlaine, for that hee had receiued letters from his brother D. Henry of Tranſtamara.

Murthers committed by the King of Caſtile without reſpect of order or quality.

D.Henry with the army of Arragon, entred by Rioja, and tooke great ſpoiles from the Iewes inhabiting there, but eſpecially at Nagera: he alſo tooke the towne of Haro, and came as farre as Pancoruo, where he vnderſtood that the King of Caſtile came to encounter him, and was at Birbieſca, ſo as D.Henry retired to Nagera. The King of Caſtile paſſing by Griſalena, Pancoruo, Ameiugo, and Maranda of Ebro, he came to Saint Dominike de la Calçada, and then to Açofra. Here a religious man of the towne of Saint Dominike preſented himſelfe vnto him, and told him, that Saint Dominike had reuealed vnto him, and enioyned him to tell him, that if hee did not take good heed of D.Henry his brother, hee ſhould die by his hand. The King cauſed this religious man to be apprehended, and carefully examined, to finde out whether that which hee had ſaid had beene ſuggeſted vnto him by ſome one, or that it were a reuelation. The Monke maintained that Saint Dominike had reuealed it vnto him, and perſiſted in this anſwere, being often examined: But the King did not regard it, and for a reward of his prediction (the which he found in the end to be true) he cauſed him to be burned. There were many skirmiſhes about Nagera, betwixt the Arragonois and Caſtillans, whereas the Caſtillans had the better, being ſtil the more in number: but the King of Caſtile beeing not come come with ſufficient prouiſion to beſeege townes, leauing Nagera, and Cont Henry, hee returned to Saint Dominike, and from thence paſt by Logrogno. But the Legat, who alwaies treated a peace, procured a ceſſation of armes in thoſe quarters, ſo as D. Henry returned into Arragon by Nauarre: The King alſo tooke the way to Seuile, where beeing arriued he found that they had taken at ſea the General of the gallies which the King of Arragon had ſent into Barbary, to aide the King of Tremeſſen: his name was Mathew Mercier, whoſe head hee cauſed to bee cut off: there were foure gallies alſo taken with him. He alſo put to death there Men Rodrigues Tenorio, Fortun Sanches Calderon, Fernand Gudiel of Toledo: they were thoſe Knights, which being retired into Portugal had beene deliuered to the King of Caſtile, in exchange, by the king of Portugal, as hath bin mentioned. He alſo put to death D. Pero Nugnes of Guzman, who could not auoide his owne misfortune, and ſoone after in the towne of Alfaro, he cut off the head of D. Guttiere Fernand of Toledo, for that hee ſpake his minde too freely in matters which did concerne the good of State, and for the zeale he had to his honour and ſeruice: he cauſed as much to bee done to Gomes Carillo of Albornoz, beeing in a galley. Thus this ill aduiſed King tooke a delight to ſhed the bloud of his Nobility, neither did hee forbeare prelats, for if hee ſlue them not, he chaſed them out of his Realme with ignominy, and loſſe of their goods: but in the end his exceſſe procured the iuſt indignation of his ſubiects againſt him, which made him looſe both Realme and life. Hauing as wee haue ſaied, put to death D. Guttiere Fernandes of Toledo, hee bent his fury againſt his brother D. Blaſco Archbiſhop of Toledo, but hee durſt not dip his hands in his bloud, for that hee was of the Eccleſiaſticall iuriſdiction: wherefore hee ſent Mathew Fernandes Chancellor of his priuy ſeale to Toledo, to commaund him in his name to depart his country, and to retire into Portugal: the which this prelat was forced to doe in ſuch haſt, as hee had no leiſure to take any of his ſtuffe, but went as hee was appareled, without companie, or any commoditie for his voiage. And the ſame daie that hee departed, the King came to Toledo, the which did much afflict all thoſe that had the gouernment of the towne.

Knights of Caſtile executed.

The Archbiſhop came to Coimbra in Portugal, where ſoone after hee ended his daies in the Monaſtery of Saint Dominike, with an example of notable patience, from whence his body, by the Kings permiſſion, was carried to Toledo, and there interred. Don Gomes Manrique was choſen Archbiſhop of Toledo in his place, and Primate of Spaine, beeing numbred for the three ſcore and one Prelat, or according vnto ſome three ſcore and two of that Church.

Samuel Leui a Iew, high Treaſorer, was committed to priſon in Toledo, by the Kings commandement, with all his kindred, who were carried to Seuile, where he cauſed them to bee put to death, after they had beene cruelly tortured, to make them confeſſe where their goods were; of whoſe confiſcation the King got aboue foure hundred and three ſcore thouſand doublons of gold, and foure thouſand markes of ſiluer, beſides many rich iewels and ſilkes. Beeing in that city in the yeere of our Lord 1361. the King had an intent for to make warre againſt the Moores, but hee deferred it for a time, beeing preſt by that of Arragon: for about that time the treatie was effected, which had beene long before practiſed with Gonçal Gonçales Luſio, Gouernor of Taraſſone, which place hee deliuered to the King of Arragon, and had the florins aboue mentioned in recompence: And moreouer hee married with Violant daughter to Don Ximenes of Vrrea, and to Donna Eluira Cornel, with the Lands of Biote, Face and Aſinios in dowrie. Don Pedro Ximenes of Sampero was put in garriſon into Taraſſone. The warre betwixt theſe Potentates after ſome ſmall exploites, was in the end concluded by a peace, which the Cardinall aboue named did mediate at Deça. By the which the Caſtillans which were retired into Arragon, had their Conge, and reſtitution of places was promiſed of either part, for the performance whereof hoſtages were deliuered to the King of Nauarre, or to his brother Lewis then viceroy in Nauarre.

A large ſpoile of a Iew condemned.

An. 1361.

Taraſſone yeelded by practiſe.

This peace laſted not long; for the King of Caſtile beeing incenſed that the Cardinal, by the Apoſtolike authoritie, had diſanulled the ſentences which hee had giuen againſt his brother D. Henry, and other Noblemen and Knights of Caſtile, hee brake it ſoone after.

An. 1361. And this yeere 1361. to the end he might not forget any thing that might proue himſelf inhumaine aboue all men, he cauſed his wife D. Blanche of Bourbon to be ſlaine, beeing kept in priſon at Medina Sidonia, but it was by poiſon, whoſe body was afterwards carried away by the French, who vpon this occaſion entred into Caſtile, in fauour of the Earle D. Henry, and ſhe was buried at Tudela in Nauarre. Soone after the death of this miſerable Princeſſe, Donna Maria of Padilla died at Seuile, by whom the King had one ſonne, called D. Alphonſo, and three daughters, D. Beatrix, D. Conſtance, and D. Iſabel: the King did her royall honours, and afterwards declared that hee had married her, producing witneſſes of great authority. They ſay that ſhe by her wiſdome and diſcreet perſwaſions, did many times diuert the King from great effuſions of bloud. This King D. Pedro had by an other Lady, called D. Iſabel, two other ſonnes, D. Sancho and D. Diego, who are interred in the Monaſtery of Saint Dominike the Royall at Toledo. And moreouer being fallne in loue with a gentlewoman which did ſerue Queene Mary his mother, called Donna Thereſa of Ayala, beeing exceeding faire, and not able to winne her but by a promiſe of marriage, hee plighted his faith vnto her, and had by her one daughter, called Donna Maria: notwithſtanding this Donna Thereſa became a Nunne, in the Monaſtery of Saint Dominike: thus did the King D. Pedro in all ſorts abuſe the lawes. The King of Caſtile (before he would aſſaile him of Arragon) had a great deſire to fall vpon the Moores of Granado, who were then in great combuſtion amongſt themſelues, and who had fauored the Arragon partie, during the laſt warres.

Murther of Queene Blanch by the commandement of the King of Caſtile her husband.

Moores. 13 To ſhew their Eſtate, wee ſay that after the death of King D. Alphonſo before Gibraltar, they had peace with Caſtile, for that the King D. Pedro following his priuat paſſions, and thirſting after the bloud of his Nobility, yea and his owne, hee was continually buſie, killing and murthering men and women of all ſorts and degrees throughout his Realme, not regarding the warre againſt the Moores, but made a truce with Ioſeph King of Granado. This King had ſome time after receiued D. Iohn de la Cerde, ſonne to D. Lewis, into Granado, being ſonne in law to D. Alphonſo Fernandes Cornel, and had giuen him meanes to paſſe into Affrike, where hee was an actor in the vnnaturall and bloudy quarrels betwixt Albohacen King of Maroc, and his ſonne Alboanen, taking the ſonnes part againſt the father: where hee made proofe of his vertue and valour, giuing a notable defeat vnto King Albohacen, and hee had beene happie if hee had not gone from thence into Spaine, where hee ended his daies miſerably. King Ioſeph thinking to bee at peace within his Realme, found himſelfe plunged in ſedition and conſpiracies made againſt him by his owne ſubiects, whereof an vncle of his called Mahomad, or Mahumet was the chiefe, who beeing deſirous to raigne, cauſed him to bee ſlaine, in the yeere of our Lord 1354. the one and twentith of his reigne, and of the Arabians ſeuen hundred thirty and ſeuen.

Mahomad Lagus the eight King of Granado.

THis Mahomad or Mahumet, ſurnamed Lagus, which is as much to ſay, as the old, ſucceeded, by this murther, in the Kingdom of Granado: he was brother to King Iſmael, of whom wee haue made mention, and ſonne to Ferrachen Gouernor of Malaga, and held his Eſtate with great trouble and difficulty: for beſides that the Arabians are by nature inconſtant, and enemies to reſt, it was then the cuſtome in Granado, and hath alwaies beene, that the Kings haue beene inſtituted, maintained, or reiected at the will of the knights Granadins, and of ſome gouernors of chiefe places, as of Malaga, Almery, Baſa and Guadix, ſome times rayſing one, ſome times an other, and reiecting and killing them according to their paſſions and priuate intereſts.

This

A This King Mahomad already old, beeing in poſſeſſion of the Realme of Granado, hee entertained the friendſhip of Don Pedro King of Caſtile, whom hee furniſhed with foure gallies well appointed, to ioyne vnto his army, when as he went in perſon before Barcelona. as we haue ſaid. But it happened, that in the yeere 1360. ſome Knights and captaines Moores, finding themſelues ill intreated and little fauored by King Mahomad the old, they had intelligence with an other Mahumet, called Vermeil, or Aben Alhamar, who deſcended (as hee ſaid) from the firſt Kings of Granado, and wrought ſo with the aide of the children of Ozmin, and eſpecially with him who was called Ezdriz Aben Balua, as being ſeized vpon the fort and caſtle of Alhambra, they chaſed away Mahumet the Old, and raiſed Vermeil in his place, ſo called for that his face was very red: and
B they did not onely diſpoſſeſſe Lagus of the city of Granado, but of moſt of the ſtrong places of the country, to the which they were the more imbouldned, ſeeing D. Pedro King of Caſtile very buſie in the warres Arragon.

The King thus diſpoſſeſt retired to Ronda, then held by the King of Maroc, or Fez, and there kept himſelfe for a time: ſo as at that time in the country of Granado, there raigned three Kings Moores: that is this King diſpoſſeſſed, who held yet ſome places, King Mahumet Aben Alhamar, and Alboanen King of Fez, who alſo enioyed ſome townes in Andaluſia. King Vermeil fearing that his aduerſary Mahumet the Old, would finde aide in Caſtile, to bee reſtored, and finding himſelfe vnable to reſiſt the King D. Pedro, he ioyned with Arragon, and ſought friendſhip and ſupport there, the which hee ob-
C tained: ſo as when the Arragonois preſt their enemies in Caſtile, the king of the Moores ran into Andaluſia, and the country of Murcia. Notwithſtanding Mahumet the Vermeil ſought afterwards to aſſure himſelfe of the King of Caſtile, by ſome accord, from whom he obtained a truce, and they were friends in ſhew: but the King D. Pedro concealed his ſpleene vntill a fit oportunity, as one that did neuer forget an iniury. The Moore (being wel informed of his diſpoſition) did not greatly truſt him, and therefore hee ſought to draw Alboanen King of Maroc into a league, whereof the Affrican King excuſed himſelf, for that hee was in league with the King of Caſtile, and much bound vnto him, neither could the King of Granados perſwaſions preuaile, that ioyning with him, and the King of D Arragon, they might ſoone ruine the King of Caſtile: but nothing could alter the King of Maroc, but he continued firme in the friendſhip of Caſtile, from whence he had been aided with ſome gallies and ſoldiers in his conqueſts, and warre againſt his father: and withall he aduertiſed the King D. Pedro of all theſe practiſes, who for theſe conſiderations was the more eaſily perſwaded to make a peace with Arragon, to the end hee might puniſh him of Granado, againſt whom he beganne to raiſe an army in the yeere 1361. to which end he came to Seuile. King Mahumet Aben Alhamar ſeeing theſe preparations, did alſo prouide for his part, but he was preuented by the King of Caſtile, who hauing ſent for the diſpoſſeſſed King, and drawne him to Seuile, made an accord with him, that whatſoeuer either of them ſhould take in the Realme of Granado ſhould re-
E maine to the taker: Theſe two Princes, D. Pedro of Caſtile, and Mahumet the Old of Granado came and beſeeged Antequera, but they could not take it: wherefore they began to ouerrunne the champian country of Granado, thinking that many of the horſemen Moores would come and ioyne with them, and take part with King Mahumet the Old, but it ſucceded otherwiſe: for the army of Granado ſtood firme at the bridge of Vilollos, and came couragiouſly to incounter the Caſtillans, yet with diſaduantage and loſſe.

The Chriſtians purſuing the victory came to the bridge of Pinos, with the ſame hope that the Granadins would reuolt, but they made no ſhew of it: wherefore the King D. Pedro returned with his army to Alcala of Benzaide. At this retreat the Moores of King Mahumet the Vermeil tooke courage, ſo as there parted from their campe about
F ſix hundred horſe and two thouſand foot, who did ouerrun the gouernment of Caçorla, ſackt Peal of Heſero, tooke many priſoners, and brought away a great number of cattel: but as they returned with this prey they were incountred about Linueça by Diego Garcia of Padilla, Maiſter of Calatraua, Don Henry Henriques Gouernor of the frontier, and Men Roderiques of Biedma, captaine of the Biſhoprike or territory of Iaen, who put them them to rout, killing and taking many of them, the reſt ſaued themſelues in the rockes. A

An. 1362. The yeere following 1362. the Chriſtians, incouraged which this victory, entred the Moores country, and preſented themſelues before Guadix, where there were ſix hundred horſe Moores, and about foure thouſand foot, which King Vermeil had lodged there, being aduertiſed of the Chriſtians deſeigne. Theſe Moores kept themſelues cloſe, making no ſhew nor offring to ſally forth, ſo as the Chriſtians, thinking the garriſon to be weake, diuided their forces, leading a part of them towards the valley of Alhama: which the Moores diſcouering, they ſallied forth vpon the remainder, and defeated them eaſily, where (among others) D. Diego Garcia of Padilla maiſter of Calatraua, was taken priſoner, who being led to Granado, was not onely wel entertained by King Mahumet Aben Alhamar, but alſo ſet at liberty without ranſom, and preſented with many rich guifts: the King deſiring to make him his friend, and by his meanes to purchaſe ſome fauor with the King of Caſtile, and the Noblemen of his court; among the which D. Diego Garcia (as brother to Donna Maria of Padilla, and vncle to the children which the King D. Pedro had had) was in great credit and authority. Being returned into Caſtile, the King was glad of his liberty, but he did not much eſteeme the bounty of the Mooriſh King: for D. Pedro was cruell and implacable by nature, and reproched the maiſter, that by his indiſcretion he had beene the cauſe of the route of his men, and of his owne impriſonment. The King entred afterwards in perſon into the country of Granado, and tooke Iſnaiar, Ciſnaiar, Ambra, Benamexir and Zagra, and then returned vnto Seuile: but King Mahumet the Vermeil brought his army preſently to Zagra, and aſſaulted it in ſuch ſort, as Fernand of Gadillo, captaine of the garriſon, was forced to leaue it: whereat the King D. Pedro was ſo moued, as (notwithſtanding that he had defended it as much as he could and ought, according to the reaſons of warre) he cauſed his head to bee cut off: and to reſtraine the Moores, he returned inſtantly into their country, where he tooke Hardeles, Turon, Cueuas and other caſtles: king Mahumet the old being alſo in field. As this warre was long, and hard for the Granadins to maintaine, againſt ſo great a power as that of Caſtile: ſo it began to be troubleſome to moſt of the knights Moores: ſo as in Granado, and in the court, there was nothing to be heard but murmuring, & words of diſcontent; wherevpon King Vermeil grew very doubtful of his ſubiects, who obiected continually, that, for the quarrel of two men, the townes and forts of the realme were made a prey vnto the Chriſtians. King Vermeil being in this perplexity, and fearing leaſt they ſhould recal his competitor Mahumet the old, and that he ſhould be ignominiouſly chaſed away, or ſlaine, was aduiſed by his chiefe and moſt confident friends (eſpecially by Ezdriz Aben Balua who had greatly fauored him in getting the crowne) to quit Granado, and to retire himſelfe to his enemy the king of Caſtile, thinking, that hauing ſhewed himſelf liberal & courteous vnto Diego Garcia of Padilla, he ſhould alſo finde ſome fauor in the court, and (at all euents) that the King of Caſtile would be glad to be Iudge and arbitrator betwixt him and Mahumet the old; and that this aſſurance and confidence which he ſhewed, comming to yeeld himſelfe vnto him, would auaile him ſomething. This was a fooliſh and E raſh reſolution of his, knowing what a monſter in nature the King D. Pedro was, how greedy he was of reuenge, and how glad to ſhed bloud. This il-aduiſed king came to preſent himſelfe with foure hundred horſe, and about twenty hundred foot, before Baena, where as D. Guttiere Gomes of Toledo Prior of Saint Iohn commanded, who wondring much at this vnexpected chance did accompany him vnto the court at Seuile, where as the king D. Pedro receiued him very gratiouſly at his arriual, and heard the oration that was made vnto him in this kings behalfe quietly, tending that hee would be pleaſed to take knowledge of the affection which had moued him to come and yeeld himſelfe vnto him, grounded vpon the remembrance that his anceſtors had beene vaſſals to the king of Caſtile, the which he would neuer haue contradicted, had not the fauour which F he had ſeene done vnto his aduerſary Mahumet Lagus, or the old, driuen him into diſtruſt: notwithſtanding hauing in the end conſidered that hee ſhould finde equity and iuſtice in the king D. Pedro, not willing to perſiſt (for his part) in any rebellion, he had reſolued to come and yeeld himſelfe vnto him, and to referre vnto his good iudgement, the controuerſies which were betwixt him and his aduerſary, to the end that hee might determine Chriſtians defeated by the Moores.

Rigour of the King D. Pedro.

A determine them according vnto reaſon: That as for himſelfe, beeing of the blond of the firſt Kings of Granado, whoſe royall ſeat the race of Farrachen had vſurped, he thought he had done nothing againſt the duty of a man of honour, to haue ſought to recouer his Grand-fathers Kingdome, beſeeching him to haue regard thereof: and if he ſhould finde it good to depriue him of his crown (the which he could not beleeue) hee beſought him to giue him, and his, meanes to paſſe into Affrike, into the Moores country. The King D. Pedro made ſhew to heare theſe reaſons without any paſſion, and aſſured him that he would reconcile him with his competitor, cauſing his lodging to be made in the Iewes place of the city of Seuile; but being diſpleaſed with the practiſes
B which he had made to his preiudice, with the Kings of Arragon and Maroc, hee burnt with a deſire to be reuenged. Being afterwards aduertiſed that this King Vermeil had brought many iewels, and great ſtore of gold from Granado, he was ſo farre tranſported with a deſire to ſpoile him of this treaſure, as without any further deliberation, he commanded Martin Lopes of Cordoua, his chamberlaine, to goe and take him priſoner, with all thoſe that were with him, and to put them into the Ataraçana, or Arçenal: then ſeeking an occaſion to diſpatch him, he cauſed his proceſſe to be made, for that he had beene an actor in the death of King Iſmael, brother to King Mahumet the old, and condemned him to die, with ſeuen and thirty other Knights, which were taken with him; according to which ſentence he cauſed him to bee drawne out of the Ataraçana, and the C ſeuen and thirty knights with him, who were led to the field of Tablada, and there executed, in a great aſſembly and concourſe of people from all parts. This miſerable King Mahumet Aben Alhamar, being brought vpon an aſſe, clad in a roabe of ſcarlet, was the laſt which ſuffred: but hee had this conſolation, that D. Pedro himſelfe, was his executioner, who reproching him with the alliance he had had with the King of Arragon, thruſt him through with a launce, at which blow Mahumet cried out in his owne language. Ha Pedro, thou haſt done a poore exploit, and purchaſed a ſhameful triumph this day: afterwards he made an end of him, and cut off his head: This was the ſecond yeere of the raigne of this Moore, and the 745. of the Arabians. King Mahumet Lagus, or the old, being aſſured by this death, returned to Granado, ioyful to be thus freed of his enemy, whoſe head
D the King D. Pedro ſent vnto him: The Granadins receiued him without contradiction, in the yeere 1362. And he to recompence the King of Caſtile for the goodly preſent hee had made him of his Competitors head, deliuered all the Knights and Caſtillans which had beene taken at the incounter of Guadix, without any ranſome. Ezdriz Aben Balua chiefe councellor to King Mahumet Vermeil, remained priſoner with the King of Caſtile, with many others, whereof ſome were redeemed for money; others were exchanged for other priſoners in after times, and ſome died miſerably in priſon. The truce betwixt Caſtile and Granado was renued, and new homage ſworne by Mahumet the Old to the King D. Pedro, paying the tribute which had bin paied to the kings his predeceſſors. Theſe things thus ended, the king of Caſtile ſtaied not long to begin warre againſt Arragō.

E 14 For the effecting whereof, with greater aduantage, he ſought to ingage the king of Nauar in this war, being newly come out of France, into his owne realme, in 1361. much deſired, and well receiued, as one that had beene long abſent. He rewarded the Noblemen and knights, which had ſerued and ſuccored him in his affaires of France, bountifully, among the which the moſt remarkable were, D. Roderigo of Vrris who had for his good ſeruices, the gouernment of the iuriſdictions of Sangueſſe, Olite and Tudelo: The Baron of Garro was recompenced in an other ſort, beeing a wandring knight, and fought imployment in the warres, ſo as being loath to ſtay in Nauarre, hee returned into France. As all things had beene reſonablie quiet in Nauarre vntill that time, there was an occaſion offered to trouble all, by the comming of Inigo Lopes of Orozco, and Arrias Gon-
F çales of Valez, Ambaſſadors for D. Pedro king of Caſtille, who came in their maiſters name, to congratulate king Charles his comming, to ſeeke his friendſhip, and a new league, and to procure an interview of theſe two kings. King Charles was glad of this Ambaſſage, and as hee had alwaies an intent to haue warre with the French King, vntill that hee had reſtored him the lands which hee pretended to bee his, hee did much eſteeme the friendſhip of Caſtile, to make vſe thereof at ſuch a neede. therefore promiſed the Ambaſſadors to come to Soria in Caſtile, and hauing firſt concluded with the Ambaſſadors a kind of peace, he went thether in the yeere 1362. hauing in his company his brother Lewis, Captal of Buche (a great Nobleman of Guienne) the Abbot of Feſcain, and others, as well Nauarrois as French. The King of Caſtile came to the place aſſigned, and receiued him with great demonſtrations of loue, where for the firſt act they confirmed the Articles of peace, conteyning an offenſiue and defenſiue league againſt al men. After ſome daies ſpent in feaſts, ſports and exerciſes of armes, the King of Caſtile hauing inuited the King of Nauarre to a great banquet, he told him, that he had ſome thing to ſay vnto him: wherevpon being retired into a gallery, the King of Caſtile vſed theſe words, in the preſence of D. Garcia Aluarez of Toledo, maiſter of Saint James, Inigo Lopes of Oroſco, Martinianes of Seuile, high treaſorer, Martin Lopes of Cordoua, great Chamberlaine, Mathew Fernandes Chancellor of the priuy ſeale, all of his priuy councel, and of the chiefe Noblemen and Knights which had accompanied King Charles; Brother (ſayd he) ſeeing we haue made an oth to aide one an other againſt our enemies, I will let you vnderſtand, that the peace I haue with the King of Arragon, was made againſt my will, and to the preiudice of mine honour: for Aben Alhamar King of Granado, beeing confederate with him, ſpoiled my country of Andaluſie, which made me yeeld vnto a peace that I might puniſh this Moore: and now that I haue had my reuenge, I am not bound to obſerue this peace, vnleſſe the places which I yeelded vp bee reſtored me againe, and the charges of the warre, cauſed by the King of Arragon, paied: wherefore according to the promiſe which you haue made me, and ſworne, I ſummon you to aide me with your forces, and perſon, in this warre. The King of Nauarre was much amazed at this ſpeech, being thus ſurprized, and knew not what to anſwer: for he preſumed the King of Caſtile had not had any enemies, when he ſware this peace and league. In the end he ſeemed deſirous to doe what the King of Caſtile would haue him but he demaunded time to conferre priuatly with his councellors which attended him, Al were of opinion he ſhould obay the King D. Pedro, elſe it would be dangerous, that being in his power he would doe him ſome affront, being raſh, cruel, and without reſpect: beſides, the country of Nauarre being then vnfurniſhed, and the forces of Caſtile round about them, it was to be feared, that if he ſeemed vnwilling to doe that which he required, with his detention, he would cauſe his men to ouerrunne his country, to the great preiudice both of himſelfe, and the Nauarrois his ſubiects. He beleeued them, and made anſwer to the King of Caſtile, that both himſelfe and his meanes were at his commandment; prouided, that he yeelded the like vnto him, if he receiued any diſcommodity by making himſelfe an enemy to the King of Arragon, his brother in law. The allyance of Caſtile which he ſo much ſought, to make vſe thereof againſt the French, brought him into this error, that he made no difficulty to put himſelfe into the hands of the moſt diſloyall Prince liuing.

Caſtille.

In the peace made betwixt Caſtile and Arragon, there had beene propounded, that D. Pedro King of Caſtile, ſhould marry D. Ieanne ſecond daughter to the King of Arragon: for D. Conſtance the eldeſt had beene married to D. Frederic of Sicile; but the Ambaſſador of Caſtile by his maiſters commandment, made a motion for the marriage betwixt D. Alphonſo ſon to D. Maria of Padilla, and D. Leonora the yongeſt daughter of Arragon, the which was concluded vpō condition, that the king of Caſtile ſhould cauſe his ſon D. Alphonſo to be declared lawful heire of the Realmes of Caſtile, Leon &c. and that he ſhould giue him preſently the Siegneury of Molina, with the towns of Almazan and Medina Celi, whereof D. Garci Aluares of Toledo, maiſter of S^t. Iames, and his high Steward, ſhould be put in poſſeſſion, and that the pretended marriage betwixt the king, and D. Maria of Padilla, ſhold be proued by him to haue bin done after the deceaſe of Queen Blanch: the King of Arragon promiſing for himſelf and his ſucceſſors, that if after the deceaſe of Don Pedro King of Caſtile, there ſhould be any queſtion made vnto D. Alphonſo his ſonne in law, touching the ſucceſſion, he ſhould aide and aſſiſt him with all the forces of Arragon. Don Pedro King of Caſtile, to haue this declaration made, and his ſonne Alphonſo acknowledged for lawful heire, had called the Eſtates to Seuile, and there the fact being propounded by him, it was receiued, & allowed, & future obedience ſworn

Then hauing left Don Garci Alnares of Toledo, Maſter of the knights of Saint Iames, vppon the frontier, he returned to B Seuile.

Peace broken by the Caſtilian with Arragon.

On the other part, the King of Nauarre, becauſe hee would not faile of his promiſe made at Soria, ſent to denounce warre againſt the king of Arragon, his brother-in-law, for that during his affaires and impriſonment in France, he would not ſuccor him: whereunto the king of Arragon offering to ſatisfie him with good reaſons, he would not heare any. Hauing therefore aſſembled his forces, he came to beſeege the towne of Sos, and tooke it; then Saluaterra, running by the vallies of the Pyrenees, vnto the town of Iacca, where as the king of Arragon had placed Peter of Pomar for Gouernor. The king Don Charles being returned into his countrie, he had ſoone after a ſupply of two thouſand
C men at armes ſent him out of Caſtile, which he diſpoſed with his Nauarrois vppon the frontiers of Arragon, whereas they did ſpoyle, burne, and murther. In the meane time the Infant D. Alphonſo of Caſtile, who ſhould haue beene ſonne-in-law to the king of Arragon, dyed. In the yeare 1363. the king of Caſtile doubting that the French would bee reuenged for the death of Queene Blanche of Bourbon, whom he had cauſed to bee poyſoned, after that he had intreated her vnworthily many yeares, ſeeing alſo a peace made betwixt them and the Engliſh, he ſent Ambaſſadors to Edward king of England, and to the Prince of Wales his ſonne, to demand their allyance and friendſhip, the which they willingly granted.

War declared by the K. of Nauar againſt Arragon.

An. 1363.

The king of Arragon vnderſtanding well that the warre which the king of Nauarre
D made againſt him, was forced, he ſought by ſubtill meanes to diuide him from his allyance with Caſtile. And knowing that king Charles had alwaies beene in quarrell with the French king, for the Dutchie of Bourgogne and other lands, he ſent Don Iohn Fernandes of Heredia, in ambaſſage to King Iohn, who being come into Auignon, and hauing had many conferences with the Lords of the French kings Councell, he preuailed ſo much as they were content to referre all controuerſies to the arbitrement of the king of Arragon his Maſter, and to ſixe Cardinals: for which cauſe the kings of Nauarre and Arragon, began from that time to haue ſecret intelligence one with another, to the preiudice of Caſtile. Notwithſtanding the army of Caſtile returning into Arragon, the king of Nauarre ſent his brother Lewis, with many Nauarrois and Gaſcons, among others Don Martin
E Henriques of Lacarra, Standard-bearer of the Realme, and Captal of Buch vnto them. Siege was layed to Tarraçone, and the place taken, in the which was Albert a Knight of S. Iohn. Boria was alſo taken, and Iohn Ximenes of S. Piren, with other Knights which were within it: the caſtle of Vaguena was burnt, with the Captaine which defended it, called Michel Barnabas, whoſe ſonne, carrying the ſame name, was for this cauſe made noble by the king of Arragon, with all his poſteritie, by a decree made by the Body of the State. Cariniena was alſo taken, where as Don Pedro King of Caſtile vſed horrible cruelties vppon the inhabitants; for thoſe that he left aliue, were afflicted with torments more grieuous then death: of ſome he cut off the hands, of others the feete, and of ſome the noſes and eares. Magallon and the Vicount of Iſle which defended it, Teruel, caſtle Habib, Ademus, F Villel, and the towne of Segorue were alſo made ſubiect to the king of Caſtile. Don Pedro Maca was taken in the caſtle of Segorue, and Ximen Doriz at Xerica. After which the K. of Caſtile tooke Mormedro, Almenara, Bugnol, Macaſta, Benaguazil, Alpuche, with many other places and forts, euen to the gates of Valence, where as Don Alphonſo of Arragon, Earle of Denia commanded. There the king of Caſtile and Don Lewis camped, and had many skirmiſhes: but hearing that the king of Arragon, and Don Henry and Don Tello brethren to the king of Caſtile, (beeing baniſhed) came with three thouſand horſe, A to fight with them, they diſlodged, and retired to Moruiedro, refuſing a battell, for that the army of Caſtile was much leſſened, hauing left garriſons in as many places, as they had taken. Don Gil Fernandes of Carauallo, Maſter of Saint Iames of Portugal, was in that army.

Nauarre and Arragon.

After this retreat the Abbot of Feſcan, Legate for the Pope, laboured to make a peace betwixt theſe Princes, and obtained of the king of Caſtile, that D. Lewis of Nauarr ſhould be employed, who went to conferre with the king of Arragon at Burriana, and brought Don Alphonſo of Arragon, Earle of Denia, to the king of Caſtile, being at Moruiedro: he was afterwards made Conſtable of Caſtile, and Marquis of Vilena: with him came Don Bernard of Cabrera with others, but all their indeauours were vaine. For the King of Caſtile would not heare ſpeake of a peace, vnleſſe the king of Arragon would promiſe to kill Don Henry Earle of Tranſtamara, and Don Tello his brethren, with Don Fernand of Arragon, the which he refuſed to do in the beginning, ſeeming to haue horrour of ſo wicked an act, as to betray them which had fledde to him for protection, and had ſerued him: yet afterwards hee made no conſcience thereof, ſeeing himſelfe preſſed, and his countrie ſo ſpoiled by the King of Caſtile, but agreed with the king of Nauarre to kill Don Henry, the which God would not permit; for he had appointed him for the Realme of Caſtile and Leon, and to be an exemplarie ſcourge for the tyrant Don Pedro, who promiſed to giue the towne of Logrogno to Charles king of Nauarre, if he would aſſiſt C him in this murther.

For the effecting hereof, the two kings of Nauarre and Arragon concluded an interview at Sos: King Charles pretending that he would quit the allyance of Caſtile. For aſſurance and guard of the towne, where theſe two kings ſhould meete, there was choſen for Gouernour, Don Iohn Ramires of Areillan, a knight of Nauarre, Chamberlaine to king Charles, who tooke for his Lieutenant his brother Ramir of Areillan, with thirtie men at armes, thirtie Lances, twenty Croſſe-bowes, and other ſouldiers. The kings entred into Sos, either of them with two men: whither Don Henry and Don Tello had bene ſent for to come: Don Henry came accompanied with eight hundred horſe; the which hauing left without the towne, he entred with two more as the kings had done. There en- D tred alſo the Abbot of Feſcan, but ignorant of what was intended againſt Don Henry. The kings hauing treated long of their affaires in ſhew, thinking it a fit time to diſpatch Don Henry, they talked ſecretly with Don Iohn Ramires, perſwading him with great promiſes to execute this murther: but this knight who was noble and vertuous, would neuer yeeld vnto it, ſaying, that he had rather die an hundred times, then to blemiſh his good name with ſo execrable a crime.

The kings ſeeing that their hopes were vaine to make him the miniſter of their treaſon, they knew not what to do, but to diſſemble their enterpriſe, and retire into their countries, impoſing ſilence to D. Iohn Ramires; who merited immortall commendation for this generous act: beſides, that God did greatly honour him afterwards, hauing directed E him into Caſtile, at ſuch time as D. Henry raigned, of whom he was beloued and cheriſhed, and obtained from him the Segneurie of los Cameros. From him are deſcended the Earles of Aguilar of the family of Areillan. This buſineſſe ill attempted, and not able to be executed, was for that time diſſembled. There had paſt many former treaties and accords betwixt this D. Pedro king of Arragon, and his brother D. Fernand Marquis of Tortoſa, to the preiudice of D. Henry, for that they found him deſirous to raigne in Caſtile, of which Realme D. Fernand was the lawfull heire, if D. Pedro the cruell died without children begotten in lawfull matrimony: but the king of Arragon had neuer any intent to do good vnto his brother D. Fernand, nor to procure him any honour and aduancement: but as he was a man full of diſdainfull enuie, and without loue or reſpect of any that did F him ſeruice: ſo he ſpared no man, and diſſembled with all men for his preſent commoditie.

Don Henry who knew him well, could alſo diſſemble for his part, and ſtand vpon his guard: he could handle him ſo cunningly, as by the meanes and forces of Arragon, hee made himſelfe a way to attaine vnto his deſſeignes.

16 Soone

A 16 Soone after there was a new and ſtrict League made with him, whereupon Don Iohn Fernandes of Heredia, and Francis of Perillos, Captaines to the king of Arragon, were ſent with money into France to leuie men.

During theſe treaties and practiſes, there was no ceſſation of armes, at what time it Caſtile.
fell out, that the king tooke foure gallies of Caſtile, their king beeing at Moruiedro, from whence he parted to come into Caſtile, at which time there was a ſonne borne him at Almaçan, of a Lady called Donna Izabella, which ſonne he named Don Sancho: ſoone after returning to the warre, more enraged then euer againſt the king of Arragon, he marched into the countrie of Valence, hauing alwaies in his company Mahomad the Moore, king of Granado; he tooke Alicant, Xixona, Gandie, Oliue, and other places, but hee was in
B danger to haue beene ſuddenly ſurprized, and defeated in his retreat by Don Henry Earle of Tranſtamara, had he not beene aduertiſed by one of Caſtro of Ordiales. Hauing eſcaped this danger, this religious king went in pilgrimage in his ſhirt, with a halter about his necke to a place called our Ladie of Puch.

The king of Caſtile entred many times into Arragon and Valence: neither could the king of Arragon hinder him from forcing of many places, the which he left manned with good garriſons of Caſtillans; and at ſea he had not alwaies the worſt, although the Arragonois were the more expert marriners: from whome the Caſtillans tooke in the yeare 1364. fiue gallies, which were carried to Carthagena, and the captaines, mariners, and ſouldiers (for the moſt part) put to death by the kings commandement.

C 17 The king of Arragon being deſirous to be freed from this war, ſought all meanes Arragon.
by the king of Nauarre, to draw the king of Caſtile to ſome good accord, but it was labour loſt: wherefore the kings of Nauar and Arragon reſolued to make a league betwixt them; for confirmation whereof, they concluded a marriage betwixt the Infant Donna Ieanne ſiſter to king Charles, and Don Iohn Duke of Girone, the heire of Arragon, being then foureteene yeares old. And moreouer, the king of Arragon bound himſelfe to giue lands and reuenues to Don Lewis brother to king Charles, and to prouide him a wife, and to giue fifty thouſand florens to vngage certaine townes, which king Charles had pawned to Gaſton Phebus Earle of Foix his brother-in law, and to intertayne him a certaine number
D of men againſt any enemy whatſoeuer: namely, ſixe hundred horſe-men of the country of Nauarre, if it were againſt Caſtile; but if it were againſt France, then to entertaine him a thouſand, and to ayde him at need with all his forces both by ſea and land: and moreouer he quit vnto him for euer, and to remaine to the Crowne of Nauarre, Saluatierra, and the place called the Terme of Real. For aſſurance of theſe things which were very honorable for the king of Nauarre, he of Arragon promiſed to lay in depoſito the towne of Iacca, Vncaſtilla, Sos, Exea, and Thermael, which ſhould be committed to the fidelitie of Raymond Allemand of Ceruillon, a knight of Arragon, who for this effect ſhould be diſcharged of his oath of homage and vaſſailage, which he ought vnto the king of Arragon; and ſhould ſweare fealty to him of Nauarre, to deliuer him the places put into his hands, if E the aboue-mentioned accord ſhould be broken by the king of Arragon. The king of Nauarre promiſed for his part to quit the allyance of the king of Caſtile, and to make warre againſt him and his children: and for his part he layed in pawne the towne and caſtle of Sangueſſe, Gallipiençó, Vxué, Aybar, Caſeda, Pitellas and Penna, and moreouer the perſon of Arnaud Lord of Luſe, his Chamberlaine, who was much fauoured by him: which articles were ſworne at Vncaſtillo, in the preſence of the Earles of Tranſtamara, Ribagorça, and others, whome the Kings commanded to keepe this league ſecret. It was not ſufficient for theſe two Kings to fortifie themſelues againſt the attempts of the king of Caſtile, for their ſafeties and defence, but they would alſo diuide the Beares skin before they Diuiſion of the Realme of Caſtile before they had conqueredit.
had taken him, ſharing the Realme of Caſtile in ſuch ſort, as the king of Nauarre ſhould haue the cittie of Burgos, with all old Caſtile, all the country of the mountaines of Oca
F vnto the limits of Nauarre, and the Ocean ſea: comprehending therein the Prouinces of Guipuſcoa, Alan, and Biſcay, and moreouer the townes of Soria and Agreda: And for the king of Arragon were aſſigned the Realmes of Toledo and Murcia. They did alſo conſpire the death of Don Pedro king of Caſtile: the king of Arragon offering to him of Nauarre 200000. florens, and the proprietie of the townes and caſtles of Sos, Vncaſtel, Exea and Tiermas, if he ſlue him, or deliuered him priſoner vnto him, and without it hee offered him preſently the cittie of Iacca, with the territorie and vallies. The better to diſſemble theſe practiſes, they ordained that Don Lewis the king of Nauarres brother, ſhould make a roade into Arragon, but he ſhould ſuffer himſelfe to bee taken priſoner by Don Alphonſo Earle of Ribagorça; the which was done: but Lewis of Nauarre was ſoone deliuered, and the king of Nauarre did ſo diſſemble his intentions, as the king of Caſtile could not diſcouer any thing. A

This laſt deſſeigne was thus plotted betwixt the two kings without the priuitie of any man, in regard of Don Henry Earle of Tranſtamara, with whom the king of Arragon had other practiſes. For Don Henry affecting openly the Realme of Caſtile, vppon hope of the fauours which he attended from France, promiſed vnto the king of Arragon, that if he aſſiſted him, he would giue him to hold in Soueraigntie, the ſixth part of the lands hee ſhould conquer by his ayde in Caſtile, whereunto the king of Arragon gaue eare, being alwaies vniuſt vnto his brother Don Fernand, Marquis of Tortoſa, to whom the Realme of Caſtile did belong by right, if Don Pedro the cruell died without lawfull heires. Theſe bargaines were not ſo ſecret, but the Infant Don Fernand had ſome notice thereof, for the which he was ſo tranſported, and made ſuch a ſtirre, as the king of Arragon, and the Earle of Tranſtamara reſolued to diſpatch him, of which councell was Don Bernard of Cabrera, the which was ſoone after executed: for the Infant Don Fernand ſeeing that himſelfe was no more ſecured in Arragon then in Caſtile, and therefore deſiring to retire himſelfe into France, the King of Arragon his brother found meanes to ſtay him, and to kill him in the caſtle of Buriane, in the territorie of Valence. B C

Death of Don Fernand of Arragon.

An. 1363. In the yere 1363. John the French king died, being returned into England, for to deliuer the hoſtages which he had giuen, not being able to enduce the States of the kingdom to accompliſh the capitulations with the Engliſh. Charles King of Nauarre hearing theſe newes, hee made preparation to paſſe into France; to which Realme Charles the fift his brother in-law had ſucceeded, but this warre of Arragon had ſo intangled him, as hee could not: ſo as his affaires proſpered not well on this ſide the Pyreneé mountaines.

An. 1364. King of Navar open enemy to the king of Caſtile. In the yeare 1364. the two kings of Nauarre and Arragon, renewed their league, but with ſome alteration, the King of Nauarre hauing alreadie diſcouered himſelfe an enemy to the king of Caſtile. To this end they met at Sos, where they agreed to continue this warre againſt Caſtile, and that it ſhould not be lawful for the one to make any peace or truce without the conſent of the other. That the king of Nauarre ſhould make no accord with the French king, but he of Arragon ſhould be comprehended. They gaue hoſtages one vnto another for aſſurance of their conuentions. The king of Arragon gaue his ſonne D. Martin, and he of Nauarre a ſon of D. Lewis his brother, and the children of Don Iohn Ramires of Areillan, of Don Martin Henriques, of the Lord of Grammont, of Don Bertrand of Gueuara, Fernand Gil of Aſian, Martin Martines of Oriz, and of Michel Sanches of Vrſua. Theſe articles were ſworne by the chiefe knights and townes of either part: and for that the ſummes of mony promiſed to the king of Nauarre, at the capitulation of Vncaſtello, were much augmented, it was ſayd, that the K. of Arragon ſhold deliuer him 50000. florens preſently in Sos, and for the reſt he ſhould haue deliuered him in pawne the citty of Iacca, Sos, Vncaſtello, Tiermas, and Exea. Another priuat accord was made betwixt the king Don Charles, and Don Henry of Tranſtamara, in whoſe hands the hoſtages ſhould remaine. The king of Nauarre promiſed to enter in perſon into Caſtile, and there to make warre, and to be aſſured of Don Henry, hee would haue in hoſtage for his part, his daughter Donna Leonora, who was afterwards Queene of Nauarre, and a baſe ſonne of his called Don Alphonſo Henriques. The Earle promiſed, that if at any time he ſhould get the realme of Caſtile, he would ſuffer the King of Nauarre to enioy the lands of the ancient patrimonie of Nauarre, vſurped by the Kings of Caſtile, with diuers others. D E F

Arragon. Theſe treaties betwixt the king of Nauarre, and Don Henry Earle of Tranſtamara, were ſecret and vnknowne to the king of Arragon, who gouerned himſelfe for the moſt part, by the aduice of Don Bernard of Cabrera, a wiſe Knight, and of great experience, by whom he was often perſwaded from that which the other would haue him yeeld vnto. for

A the which he was hated by the king of Nauarre, and Don Henry: beſides, beeing a priuie Councellor, and of greateſt authoritie, he was enuied by the other Noblemen of Arragon, who were leſſe fauoured: wherefore theſe Princes beeing againe aſſembled at Almudear, the king of Nauarre, and the Earles of Tranſtamara and Ribagorça, conſpired to deprriue the King of Arragon of this Councellor, and wrought ſo, as they brought him into diſgrace with the king. Don Bernard, beeing aduertiſed that they meant to apprehend him, ſought to retire himſelfe, and flying came into Nauarre to Cârcaſtillo, the inhabitants whereof, ſeeing that he was pourſued by Garci Lopes of Seſe, ſhut their towne gates: but beeing ſummoned by Garci Lopes in the name of the two kings, to deliuer Don

B Bernard, they ſtayed him, attending the kings commandement, who willed them to deliuer him vnto Garci Lopes, who conuayed him to Murillo, where he remayned ſome time in hope to be deliuered: by which he was ſo hated by the king of Nauarre, and Earle of Tranſtamara, as they neuer ceaſed by importune accuſations, vntill they had put him to death.

D. Bernard of Cabrera in diſgrace with his King.

This Bernard of Cabrera had before the yeare 1346. beeing forced to come to Court, and to employ himſelfe in great affaires of State, wherein he was very iudicious, when as (wearie of the world) he had reſolued to become a Monke. The king had cheriſhed and aduanced him, and receiued many good counſels, and profitable ſeruices from him, as well in the ciuill wars within his owne Realme, as in that of Sardinia and Caſtile. But as

C Courtiers, the more they ſeeke the greatneſſe and honour of their Prince, and are by them the more honoured and beloued, are the more ſubiect to enuie, ſo fared it with him; for hauing beene faithfull to the king his maſter, he purchaſed the hatred of all the Princes and Noble-men of the Realme: ſo as when he was taken by the practiſes of the king of Nauarre and Earle of Tranſtamara, there was not any one that did fauour him: but as it were by a common conſpiracie, his proceſſe was made, and the Infant Don Iohn Prince of Girone, whome he had bred vp, made his Iudge, where ſitting in Iuſtice, and hauing for aſſiſtant Dominicke of Cerdagne, chiefe Iuſtice of Arragon, (who by his charge and office ſhould defend the oppreſſed) pronounced ſentence of death againſt this poore decrepite old man.

D They write, that his ſentence being read by Don Berenger Apilia, and Iames Monelia Vice chancelor, he complayned greatly, that he ſhould be condemned without hearing, or in a manner any forme of proceſſe: but Apilia anſwered him, that he ought not to hold it ſtrange, ſeeing that by his owne Councell, that cuſtome had beene brought into Arragon: and that he ſhould remember the proceſſe which was too ſummarily made againſt Iohn Ximenes of Vrrea, and Raymond Marquet, accuſed to haue ſlaine Raymond of S. Vincent; who, by the kings commandement, and in a maner without any forme of proceſſe, had beene put to death. He was led vnto the market place of Sarragoſſa, and there beheaded, and his head was carried vnto the king, beeing at Barcelona. Such rewards many times haue the moſt faithfull Councellors, of their ill aduiſed Princes. Thus miſerably dy-

Bernard beheaded.

E ed one of the greateſt perſonages in nobility, iudgement, and vertue, which had beene of long time in Arragon, who without the king his maſter had executed great matters, and the king without him did neuer any thing of worth. All his goods were confiſcate to the king, whereby he pourchaſed great diſhonor, and rightly, both for his death, and for that of his brother Don Fernand. Bernardin of Cabrera, ſon to Bernard, had married Marguerite of Foix, daughter to the Vicount of Caſtelbon, by Conſtance of Luna, ſiſter to D. Lope, a Lady of the bloud royall of Arragon: for ſhe was daughter to Artal of Luna, and to D. Conſtance Perez, who was daughter to Don Iames Perez, baſe ſonne to the king Don Pedro the third. At that time the Prince Don Iohn did not much exceed fourteene yeares, yet he was employed in great affaires within the Realme, as well for warre as iu-

F ſtice, with a diſpenſation for his age, beeing aſſiſted by Don Pedro Earle of Ribagorça, (who hauing renounced the world in his old age, had taken vppon him the habit of Saint Francis) and moreouer, by Don Pedro of Vrgel, ſonne to the Infant D. Iames the Kings brother, and by the Vicount of Cardona for the warre: and for iuſtice and other affaires of the Realme, he had for his Councellors Berenger Apilia, Bernard Sous, William Guymerand, and Thomas Marzan of Cattelogne.

During

During this laſt warre betwixt Caſtile and Arragon, D. Pedro king of Arragon, preſt by neceſſity, took the reuenues of many benefices, without demanding leaue from the Pope, and the more inconſideratly, ſay they, for that Vrban then raigning, had neuer refuſed him any thing: wherefore he was in great danger to be excommunicated, and deiected from the rights of his Realmes, eſpecially from that of Sardinia, which hee held in fee of the Church: the ſouueraignty whereof many of the Cardinals were of aduice to giue to the Iudge of Arborea. The king for this cauſe ſent his vncle D. Pedro, ſometimes Earle of Ribagorça, and then a Friar, and Gaſpar Tregure, Doctor of the lawes, vnto the Pope: who declared in open Conſiſtorie, That in like neceſsities and miſeries, as the Realm of Arragon was then in, it had bin lawfull for kings, not only to vſe the temporall reuenues, but alſo to lay hands vpon the relicks, and holy veſſell of the Churches: adding, that the Eccleſiaſticall Eſtate was no leſſe bound to the preſeruation of the common-weale, then other Eſtates: and that kings might freely vſe their meanes in ſuch extremities, ſo as he promiſed to make them reſtitution in a conuenient time. Whereupon the Pope conſidering of the cauſe, did not pronounce any ſentence. The Iudge of Arborea, hauing either practiſed the fauour of the Conſiſtory, or elſe moued with a deſire to raigne, attempted thereuppon to make ſharpe warre againſt the Arragonois in Sardinia, a turbulent Iland, which continually bred new matter of charge and loſſe to the kings of Arragon, who had a little before ended all quarels with the Genouois, and by the meanes of Iohn Marquis of Montferrat his allye: but to leaue a marke of puniſhment for the Rebels of Sardinia, he had ſuppreſt the name of Galluri, the which was wont to be one of the members thereof, with the title of a Iudge, ordayning that from thence-foorth that country ſhould bee confuſed, betwixt the Cap of Cailleri and of Lugudori.

Nauarre. To returne vnto the promiſes and capitulations made betwixt the two kings of Nauar and Arragon, there was no due execution thereof, neither were the hoſtages, which had beene promiſed, deliuered: for it is no ordinarie thing in ſuch treaties, to haue deedes follow words, theſe Princes beeing in continuall iealouſie and diſtruſt one of another: wherefore the King of Nauar, receiuing no mony from the king of Arragon, he did not furniſh him with men to oppoſe againſt the army of Caſtile, which was entred into the territories of Valence, beginning withall to thinke of many deſſeins, nothing fauourable for the king of Arragon. If the king of Nauar, hauing deceiued the king of Caſtile, ſought to do the like vnto him of Arragon; the king of Arragon for his part did no leſſe vnto the king of Nauarre: for he had ſent his ambaſſadours into France, who treated a league at Tholouſa, with the Deputies of Charles the fifth the French king, and with Lewis D. of Anjou his brother, by the which the French promiſed to ayde the king of Arragon to conquer the realme of Nauar, and to ſpoile K. Charles, and hauing conquered it, they bound themſelues to furniſh him alwaies with 500. lances, againſt any one that ſhould ſeek to diſpoſſeſſe him. The K. of Arragon promiſed alſo for his part to ayde the French to conquer Guienna, and to expell the Engliſh. Theſe accords were made in the yeare 1364, Charles the fifth the French king, and Charles 2. king of Nauar being enemies. But as they were Frenchmen, and brothers-in-law, they were reconciled afterwards, & concluded a peace: ſo as the king of Arragon loſt his paines, and the allyance which he had ſought in France, ſerued him to no vſe, yet the war continued that yeare betwixt the French, and the partiſans of the K. of Nauar in France: but in the yeare 1365. Queen Ieanne wife to the king of Nauar, made haſt to come to the French Court, to treat a peace betwixt the two kings; wherof the one was her husband, and the other her brother: for the K. of Arragon did importune the French king, to effect the league concluded the yeare before at Tholouſa, eſpecially for the conqueſt of Nauar; for which reaſon he had ſent new ambaſſadours vnto him that yeare. The k. of Nauar being aduertiſed of all theſe things, preſt the Queene his wife to go this iourny, notwithſtanding that ſhe was with child. Her voyage for that time did produce nothing but a good truce, but afterward there was a peace made by the great care of the two Queens, Ieanne wife to the k. of Nauar, and Blanche his ſiſter, & by the dexteritie, iudgement, and wiſedome of Captal of Buch, then priſoner to the French, for the factions of Nauar. The Q. of Nauar being at Eureux in the yeare 1366. ſhe was deliuered of a ſon called Peter, he had the title of Earle of Mortaing: after her vp-riſing ſhe returned into

A into Nauarre, carrying her eldeſt ſon Charles who was but foure yeares old with her, and that which was newly borne.

Theſe kings of Nauar and Arragon, being thus buſied, and irreſolute in their deſſeines, durſt not inuade one another, and in the meane time he of Caſtile purſued the war, with al violence in the country of Valence, and took Orihuela, where there was ſlaine D. Alphonſo Perez of Guzman Lord of S. Lucar, ſon to D. Iohn Alphonſo of Guzman, and grand-child to D. Alphonſo Perez of Guzman the good. To him ſucceeded his brother D. Iohn Alphonſo of Guzman. The Arragonois alſo for their part tooke Moruiedro, for want of victuals, D. Gomes of Porras Prior of S. Iohn the Gouernor, yeelded it, vpon condition, that he and his ſhould be ſafely ſent into Caſtile: yet the Earle D. Henry who was at this ſeege, B preuailed ſo by his honeſt perſwaſions and promiſes, as the Prior was content to ſtay with him, who by that means retained about 600. men, laying before them the fury of D. Pedro K. of Caſtile, who excuſed nothing, and puniſhed as well thoſe which had behaued themſelues valiantly in the yeelding of ſuch places, as thoſe which had ſhewed themſelues baſe and cowards. Theſe were the laſt exploits of war betwixt Arragon and Caſtile. Arragon.

At that time there was brought into Spain the body of the Cardinal of S. Clement ſometimes Archb. of Toledo, & Legat à latere in Italy, who died at Viterbo, hauing gouerned the affairs of the Romane ſea, to the great content of Pope Vrban the 5. who did wonderfully grieue for him, and made all the ſhewes of mourning which Popes are accuſtomed to do at the death of their faithfull friends. This Prelate during his legation, prepared the C Popes acceſſe into the citty of Rome, and was the means to bring the papall ſeate thither againe: for hee ſuppreſt many tyrants in Italy, and brought them to the obedience of the Roman ſea, ſo as Gregory the 11. ſucceſſor to Vrban, came to Rome in the yeare 1366. This Cardinal had ordained by his teſtament, that his body ſhould be buried in the city of Toledo, if it might be ſuffered by the K. D. Pedro then raigning, or his ſucceſſor, the which was executed, and his bones which lay in the towne of Aſſiſi, in the monaſtery of S. Francis, were carried by land to Toledo, many offering to carry the Beere wheron this dead carcas lay, in hope to get pardon of their ſins, for that the Pope had granted vnto them, that ſhold employ themſelues in this ſeruice, the like indulgences as are giuen vnto them that do viſit the churches of S. Peter and S. Paul, at Rome in the yeare of Iubile. Caſtille.

18. Returne of the Popes Court to Rome.

D The time approched when as the King Don Pedro ſhould be puniſhed for his exceſſe and ſerue as a witnes to the world, that the feare of ſubiects, gotten by the cruelty of Princes, is a bad gard for their maieſty, and a weak aſſurance of their Crowns. The death of Q. Blanche of Bourbon, whom the king D. Pedro had poiſoned, after that he had intreated her a long time moſt barbarouſly, miniſtred the occaſion of his ruine: for being for this cauſe odious to all the French, D. Henry, Earle of Tranſtamara, (who was vigilant to embrace all things that might ſerue him to reuenge the death of his mother and brethren, & of ſo many iniuries which hee had receiued of this wretched king) found fauour and helpe in France. And it fell out very fitly, that the wars being ended in France, as well againſt the E Engliſh, and King of Nauarre, as betwixt the Earles of Montfort and Blois, contending for the ſucceſſion of Brittanie: this Realme was then wonderfully ouer-charged with idle ſouldiers, which kept the fields, and committed many ſpoyles and inſolencies, beeing gathered together in ſuch great numbers, French, Engliſh, Brittons, Flemmings, and of other nations intermingled, as they were fearefull to Princes, yea and to the Pope himſelfe reſiding in Auignon: ſo as they demanded but an occaſion of ſome long voyage, to conquer and ſubdue Countries, or to be there defeated, beeing impoſſible without great danger and diſorder, to be otherwiſe ridde of them.

19. Expedition of D. Henry of Caſtile againſt his brother D. Pedro, and his victorie.

Vppon theſe continuall complaints of the impieties and cruelties which Don Pedro King of Caſtile committed daily, beeing alreadie pronounced by the Popes Legate, and confirmed by him, an vtter enemie to God and men: and at the inſtance and pour- F ſute of the king of Arragon, and of Henry Earle of Tranſtamara, Baſtard of Caſtile, who (as ſome write) were come to this effect in perſon, to Auignon; the French King, Pope Vrban, and other Princes, thought good to haue theſe people dealt withall, (whome they commonly called Malandrins) to go and make warre in Spaine againſt Don Pedro ſurnamed the Cruell: and Bertrand of Gueſclin, a valiant and hardy Knight of Malandrins.

Brittany,(who was then a priſoner of war,for the factions of Montfort and Blois)was cho- A ſen to lead them, who for this cauſe was put to ranſome,and deliuered. Bertrand wrought ſo,as theſe companions were willing to follow him: whereupon ſome of their Captaines came to Barcelona, did capitulate, receiued mony, and promiſed to ſerue Don Henry, wherof Bernard Baſtard of Bearne, ſonne to Gaſton Phebus Earle of Foix, was one of the chiefe: which D.Pedro King of Caſtile vnderſtanding,he retired his troupes, and came to Burgos, where he called a generall aſſembly;whither came the Lord of Albret,a knight of Gaſconie well accompanied, who aſſured him for a certaine number of ducats,to draw away a good part of thoſe ſoldiers which D.Henry and the king of Arragon had entertayned, and wrought ſo,as they ſhold abandon them,and come to ſerue him: but it grieued B the king to ſpend his treaſure, which notwithſtanding was very great: wherfore reiecting the Lord of Albrets good counſell,he ſought other prouiſions,which ſerued him to ſmal purpoſe. Theſe men paſt into Spaine,being eſteemed to be 10000. horſe, and an infinite number of foot, beſides thoſe ſouldiers which the Earle and the king of Arragon had: to whome were ioyned many great perſonages,both French and others, among the which the French Hiſtorie names Iohn of Bourbon Earle of March, coſin to the deceaſed queen Blanche of Caſtile, Anthony Lord of Beauieu, Arnold of Andreghen Marſhall of France, Begue of Villenes, Euſtace of Aubercourt, Hugh Caurelee, Gualter Huet, Mathew of Gournay,and Perducas of Albret,who with many other famous men, made this voyage: Bertrand of Gueſclin being chiefe leader of them all, by reaſon of his valour and great ex- C perience. The K.of Arragon with theſe ſuccors did preſently recouer all that the king of Caſtile had taken from him, the Caſtillans hauing abandoned their garriſons. The bodie of the army which D.Henry ſhould lead,was made at Sarragoſſa,from whence they marched directly to Calaotra, and entred without reſiſtance,in the month of March,this yere 1366;D.Henry being receiued by D.Fernand biſhop of that place,and by D.Fernand Sanches of Tobar,vpon condition they ſhould be intreated as friends: for the towne was not ſtrong.There he was ſollicited by D.Alphonſo of Arragon Earle of Denia and Ribagorça, and by the Arragonois, to take vpon him the title of King of Caſtile and Leon, which at the firſt he did refuſe: but being preſt and importuned, in the end he yeelded, ſo as from that time he had more need of a bridle to reſtraine him,then a ſpurre. Being thus proclai- D med king,and hauing aduanced his royall Standard, the Knights which were there preſent, began to demand gifts & recompences in the countrie which they had not yet conquered, but were in good hope, to whome hee gaue contentment with many promiſes. Paſſing on,they tryed Logrogno,which place they found ſtrong,and well manned: wherfore not to loſe time,they marched on,and hauing ſeized vppon Nauarret and Birbieſca, they came to Burgos,whereas the king D.Pedro was, who made all the haſt hee could to diſlodge.The inhabitants ſeing him parting, beſought him not to abandon them,offering him all the mony that was in the towne,and their perſons with great fidelity; but this king being terrified,there was no meanes to ſtay him: and in truth we ſeldome ſee valour and crueltie lodge together: wherefore the inhabitants of Burgos proteſted to prouide for E the ſafety & preſeruation of the citty the beſt they could: ſo as he was forced to quit them of the oath and homage they ought him, and preſently tooke his way to Toledo, where hauing left a good garriſon, he went to Seuile. The inhabitants of Burgos ſeeing themſelues abandoned by their Prince,opened the gates to Don Henry,whom,in the capitulation they made, they called Earle, promiſing to title him king,when he ſhould be entred into the citty.

Mo'andvins paſſe into Spaine.

D Henry takes the title of K. of Caſtile.

Don Henry parting from Birbieſca, ſome eight leagues diſtant from Burgos,hee made his entrie into the citty, to the great contentment of many, who hated the violent diſpoſition of the king D. Pedro: where he cauſed himſelfe to be crowned king of Caſtile and Leon, in the royall Monaſterie of Huelgas, this yeare 1366; and within fiue and twentie F dayes after his coronation,almoſt all the townes of Caſtile and Leon put themſelues vnder his obedience and protection: ſaying,that according to the example and ancient cuſtome of the Gods,they might retire themſelues from a tyrant king, and chuſe another: without hauing any regard vnto the ſucceſſion, nor his family whom they ſhould leaue. Then began D.Henry to diſtribute townes, caſtles, offices and dignities, vnto the Noblemen

A blemen and Knights which had followed him. He gaue to D. Alphonſo Earle of Denia and Ribagorça, the Marquiſate of Villena, the patrimonie of D. Ieanne Manuel his wife: to Bertrand of Gueſclin the Lordſhip of Molina; D. Tello brother to the new king, was maintained in the Segneurie of Biſcay, the inheritance of his deceaſed wife D. Ieanne of Lara, and moreouer he gaue him Aquilar del Campo, and to his other brother D. Sancho, all that which had belonged vnto D. Iohn Alphonſo of Albuquerque, adding thereunto the townes of Haro, Briones, Villorado, Cerezo in Rioja, and the towne of Ledeſma. To other knights hee gaue gifts, and confirmed and augmented the auncient priuiledges of townes which yeelded willingly vnto him. Thinking himſelf now to be in ſure poſſeſſion, B he cauſed his wife D. Ieanne, his ſon D. Iohn, and D. Leonora his daughter, to come out of Arragon into Caſtile: and hauing diſpoſed of the affaires of Burgos, of Caſtile the old, and of Leon, he went to Toledo, where he found ſome oppoſition, yet in the end he was receiued and ſaluted as king: and after the example of this ſtately citie, many other towns of that Realme yeelded vnto him. The King D. Pedro ſeeing himſelfe abandoned, put a great quantitie of money, and other treaſure into a gally, and retired into Portugal: but fearing his couſin D. Fernand, Infant of that Realme, who loued him not, he paſt in great doubt vnto S. Iames in Gallicia, where he cauſed D. Suero of Toledo Archb. of that place, and D. Pedro Aluarez of Toledo, Deane of the ſame church, to be ſlaine, and adding ſacriledge to this murther, he ſpoiled their houſes, and caried away their goods, which was the C chiefe cauſe why he ſlue them. Being doubtfull what to do, he reſolued in the end to go by ſea to Bayone in France: wherefore parting from the Groine with 22. ſhips and one gally, carrying with him his three daughters, Beatrix, Conſtance, and Izabel, hee came to S. Sebaſtians in Guipuſcoa, where he had ſome thouſands of double ducats, and other riches, the which he took with him, and ſet ſayle towards Bayonne. A gally which followed him, in which was Martin Ianes his Treaſurer, with much mony, & other precious things was ſtayed by the Inhabitants of Seuile, which cittie beeing greatly affected vnto D. Henry, put themſelues vnder his obedience, ſoone after the kings departure; and the cittie of Cordoua did the like. So hatefull was the king D. Pedro, and ſo pleaſing was the mild diſpoſition of Don Henry, as in a ſhort time hee found himſelfe King of a great and migh- D tie Kingdome, almoſt without ſtriking ſtroake, the people ſtriuing who ſhould bee firſt receiued.

Beauty of D. Henry the new King.

Flight of the king D. Pedro out of Spaine.

Don Henry being at Seuile, he confirmed the peace with the Kings of Portugall and Granado: but he was deceiued in this proſperitie, being too confident of his new ſubiects, ſo as although he knew well that his enemy was retired to the Engliſh, with great ſtore of treaſure, and that he might well coniecture, that he would draw ſuccors from thence, to trouble him in the poſſeſſion of this Realme newly conquered, yet he diſmiſt his ſtrangers well ſatisfied which were all his force, and retayned onely Bertrand of Gueſclin, and Bernard baſtard of Foix with ſome 1500. horſe French and Engliſh. The country of Gallicia oppoſed it ſelfe moſt againſt D. Henry: that being pacified and ſubdued, he aſſembled E the Eſtates at Burgos, the which (beſides that they did ſweare fidelitie vnto his ſon D. Iohn as heire vnto the Crowne) did grant vnto him the tenth peny of all the merchandize they ſhould ſell within the Realme, and ſo much the more willingly, when as they vnderſtood that the king D. Pedro prepared to returne into Spaine with a great power of Engliſh. D. Henry to gratifie the cittie of Burgos, gaue vnto it in that aſſembly, the towne of Miranda of Ebro, the which did belong to the Church of Burgos, it did alſo ſerue to recompence the towne of Birbieſca, belonging to the citie, which he had giuen to D. Pedro Fernandes of Velaſco his great Chamberlaine. To the Church of Burgos in recompence of Miranda, he gaue a penſion of ſixtie thouſand marauidis, vppon the tenths due from the ſea, to bee employed in the ordinary diſtributions for the ſeruice which is done there day and F night.

Don Dominicke was then Biſhop of Burgos, the eight and twentith Paſtor in number, who obtayned this Biſhoppricke after a manner worthie to be related: for the Chapter beeing diuided and at controuerſie about the election of a new Biſhoppe, after the death of Don Fernand the third who had newly left and abandoned that ſeate, and not able to agree and determine vppon two chiefe perſons propounded in that aſſembly, they concluded to referre the nomination to Dominick, then Chanoine of that Church, A beeing held a man of a good and holy life. This good Chanoine hauing accepted the nomination, bethought himſelfe of a meanes to diſpleaſe neither party: ſaying merily vnto them, that if it were their pleaſures hee ſhould name a Biſhop, hee was of opinion, that himſelfe ſhould be the man, the which he deliuered with ſo good a grace, as the Chapter could not take it ill: wherefore Dominick the Chanoine became preſently Biſhop, hauing neuer before once dreamed to aſpire to that dignitie: and his election was ſoon after confirmed by the Pope. This Biſhop was a good ſeruant to D. Henry. At that time D. Tello brother to Don Henry married a Gentle-woman which was called Donna Ieanne of Lara, as his firſt wife, who was Lady of Biſcay: by reaſon whereof many did beleeue it was B the ſame that was daughter to Don Iohn Nugnes of Lara, who (they ſay) had beene ſlain by the King Don Pedro: and this perſwaſion continued among the people of Biſcay ſome time, being nouriſhed by Don Tello. Donna Ieanne Manuel, wife to Don Henry, was ſent him into Caſtile by Don Pedro king of Arragon, who would that Donna Leonora, Infanta of Arragon, future wife to Don Iohn the eldeſt ſonne of D. Henry, ſhould accompanie her. But before he diſmiſſed them, he cauſed Donna Ieanne Manuel (who intitled her ſelfe Queene of Caſtile and Leon) to ſweare, to do her beſt to cauſe Don Henry her husband, to giue him the citties of Soria and Cuenca, the townes of Molina, and Medina Celi, and the Realme of Murcia, as they had agreed, and hee had promiſed before this Conqueſt. And moreouer, he demanded remburſement of certaine ſummes of mony which hee had C lent him: whereunto Don Henry (who had newes of the armie which was preparing by the Engliſh, in fauour of Don Pedro his competitor) made an honeſt anſwer: for it was reaſonable, ſayd he, to attend the end of this great preparation, which was made againſt him.

Biſhop of Burgos choſen by himſelfe.

Nauarre.

The King of Nauarre in this firſt warre had not ſhewed himſelfe a fauourer to either of theſe contending Princes: but knowing that the King Don Pedro was retired to Bayone, diſpoſſeſſed of his Realme, he came to ſee him, and was there preſent at the accord and promiſes which paſt betwixt Edward Prince of Wales and him. The Princes ſupping together, held this order: the King Don Pedro was on the right hand, and next to him the Prince of Wales, and on the other ſide was the king of Nauar alone: who being returned D into Nauar, he was much ſollicited by Don Henry, to be of his partie, but he was already ingaged by promiſe to Don Pedro king of Caſtile, and to the Prince of Wales, to giue them free paſſage through his countrie. The k. of Arragon aduertiſed of all theſe things, preſt the French king by his ambaſſadors, to make warre againſt the Engliſh, and alſo againſt the king of Nauarre, promiſing to ioyne for his part, to diuert the ſtorme which was comming vppon Don Henry the new king of Caſtile, whom he ought to haue receiued into this league: and in the meane time there was continuall war vppon the frontiers of Arragon and Nauarre. Notwithſtanding theſe things aboue-mentioned, D. Henry did ſo labour the king of Nauar, as he made him forget the promiſes he had made at Bayone, to D. Pedro king of Caſtile, and to the Engliſh, comming to meet with D. Henry at Santa E
Cruz of Campeço, where hee promiſed and ſware to bee of his ſide, and to do his beſt to ſtop the paſſage of the Engliſh army through Nauarre, which would haue auayled him much to breake the deſſeines of the diſpoſſeſſed king: for in the paſſage of the Pyrenee hilles, hee had nothing to fauour him, but the Townes of Saint Sebaſtian and Guetaria in Guipuſcoa.

At theſe promiſes ſollemnly made by the king of Nauarre, vnto Don Henry, there aſſiſted Don Gomes Manrique Arch-biſhop of Toledo, D. Lopes Fernandes of Luna, Arch-biſhop of Sarragoſſa, Don Alphonſo of Arragon, Earle of Denia, and Marquis of Villena, Bertrand of Gueſclin, and many other great perſonages of Caſtile, France, and Arragon. And a league was concluded betwixt the kings of Arragon, Nauarre, and Don Henry, F for their common defence againſt all men. And the king promiſed to be readie with the forces of his countrie, and to be in perſon at the Battaile which they thought would be giuen, for aſſurance whereof there was deliuered into the Arch-biſhops hands of Sarragoſſa the caſtle of Garde, and that of S. Vincent to Bertrand of Gueſclin, and that of Buradon was giuen in gard to D. Iohn Ramires of Areillan.

In

A In recompence of the good offices which D.Henry expected from King Charles, he promiſed to giue him the towne of Logrogno, to him and his for euer. It was likely that D. Henries affaires ſhould ſucceed better then thoſe of Don Pedro, and therefore K. Charles made choice to hold with the ſtronger, as he thought. The diſpoſſeſſed king of Caſtile, and the Prince of Wales vnderſtanding of this league, found it very ſtrange: and the Engliſh being more familiar with the king of Nauarre, he complained much vnto him, and ſought to reduce him to his firſt promiſes, the which he did: making him againe, with the note of great inconſtancie, to quit the party of Don Henry, and of the king of Arragon, in regard that they had promiſed to giue him, beſides Logrogno, the citie of Victoria, which did yet hold for the king Don Pedro: for the which he bound himſelfe by oath, to
B giue them paſſage, and to be in perſon with his troupes, in the battell, in their fauor: excuſing his lightneſſe, for that the Realme of Caſtile did by right belong vnto the King D. Pedro: and withall he had a deſſeine to make vſe of the friendſhip and forces of the Engliſh in the quarrels and pretenſions he had with the French King, who did much trouble his affaires.

The conditions which D. Pedro king of Caſtile made with the Prince of Wales, were theſe: He gaue him from that time the Segneurie of Biſcay, & Caſtro of Ordiales, & promiſed to pay the ſoldiers which he led into Spaine, leauing his three daughters in hoſtage with the Engliſh: he promiſed the citie of Soria to Iohn Chandos, Conſtable in Guienne for the Engliſh, and to many other Noblemen and knights other places and townes in C Caſtile. Vpon theſe accords, being full of good hope, ſeeing they had the king of Nauar their friend, they marched with a great and mighty armie in the Spring-time 1367. to repoſſeſſe the king D. Pedro in his Realme. King Charles whether troubled in conſcience for the oaths which he had ſo often broken, or for ſome other conſideration, would not bee in perſon at this incounter betwixt the king D. Pedro and D. Henry, as hee had promiſed, but vnder colour of going a hunting, he cauſed himſelfe to bee taken priſoner, by a plot and accord made with Olyuer of Manny or Maulny a Britton Knight, who held the caſtle of Borja for Bertrand of Gueſclin, who had it by gift from the king of Arragon, in the which he was ſhut vp: and for that he would not ſhew himſelfe altogether diſloyall, hee left Don Martin Henriques of Lacarra, the maſter of his horſe, and his Standard-bearer, D at Pampelona with three hundred Lances, commanding him to ioyne with the Engliſh armie, and to fight in it.

20. Conditions betwixt D. Pedro and the Prince of Wales

An. 1367.

The Engliſh armie arriued at Cuenca, or Combe of Pampelona, about the beginning of March this yeare 1367. from whence it paſt into Alaua: beſides, the Prince of Wales, and Don Pedro king of Caſtile, there were in it Iohn Duke of Lancaſter, brother to the Prince; D. Iames of Maiorca, ſon to the king Don Iames, who had come for refuge to this Engliſh Prince being at Bourdeaux. Iohn Chandos Conſtable of Guien, Robert Felton great Seneſhall, Richard of Angle, and Stephen of Conſentone Marſhals of Guien: moreouer, the Earle of Armaignac and Albret, who offered and brought to this warre a
E thouſand complet lances of his ſubiects and friends: but they were reduced (to his great griefe) to two hundred by the Prince, beeing ſo aduiſed by ſome other, or of his own proper motion, and for enuy: which vice ſome write did often blemiſh the great vertues that were in him. For euen ſome affirme, that this voyage which he vndertooke into Spaine, was not for charity, nor any loue he bare to the diſpoſſeſſed king D. Pedro, but for that the honor and reputation which Bertrand of Gueſclin had gotten, to haue made D. Henry K. of Caſtile, would not let him ſleepe. Beſides, the aboue named, there did accompanie the Prince of Wales in this expedition, the Earls of Perigort and Cominges, the Vicont of Carmain, Bernard and Perducas of Albret, Captal of Buch, the Lord of Cliſſon, the Seneſhals of Xaintong, Rochel, Querci, Limoſin, Agenois, and Bigorre, with many other Noblemen, and renowned knights of England, Poitou, Brittaine, Gaſconie and other con-
F tries, and among them ſome which had a litle before ſerued D. Henry, vnder the command of Bertrand of Gueſclin: which Gueſclin did not fayle at need, but came to D. Henries army with a good number of Knights and ſouldiers, to ayd him to maintaine his conqueſt.

Caſtile.

Vpon the newes of this mighty army, D. Henry had gathered together all his good ſubiects: ſo as according to the French Authors (it may be exceeding in their computations)

he made accompt to haue 7000. men at arms, 20000. light horſe, and 40000. foot, wher- A of many were armed with ſlings, much feared in thoſe dayes: with theſe forces hee came to incounter his enemie, and lodged betwixt S. Dominike of Calçada and Bagnares, the enemy being camped about Saluatierra, who approching towards Logrogno, he came to Calderan. The Captaines were of opinion, that D. Henry ſhould not fight, but only coaſt the enemy, and keepe him in continuall feare, cutting off their victuals and other commodities, whereby they ſhould be ſoone forced to breake of themſelues: & ſo had the French king aduiſed him to do: but hee (who was a Prince of a great ſpirit, and more reſolute in ſuch actions, then was fit for the head of an Eſtate, and incouraged by ſome ſmall aduan-tage gotten of the fore-runners of the Engliſh, by D. Tello and D. Sancho his breethren, B Prince of Wales writes to D. Henry. who had taken Thomas Felton, a knight, and ſome others) gouerned himſelfe after his own humor; who raiſing his army, came to Nagera, ſeing the Engliſh approch to Nauarret.
From hence the Prince of Wales did write vnto D. Henry, terming him Earle of Tranſta-mara, which letter was full of courteſie and good words, perſwading him to quit the title of King, and to yeeld vnto his brother D. Pedro, the lawfull K. of Caſtile, aſſuring him hee would be a meanes that he ſhould haue a good compoſition: and aboue all, that he ſhold auoid to come to a battell, the euent whereof muſt needes be his ruine, ſeeing they did much exceede them in number, their ſouldiers in valour, and their Captaines in leading.
D. Henry's anſwer. To the which D. Henry made anſwer, that he could not hearken to any accord with him, C who had againſt the law of Nature taken delight to murther ſo many of the bloud royal, and other great perſonages of Caſtile: who had no reſpectiue regard of the lawes of the country, and much leſſe of God, falſifying his oath and promiſes, hauing no other rule in his actions, but his tyrannous paſſions: and with his excuſes, hee gaue many good words in regard of the Prince of Wales, proteſting that he came with griefe to fight, and that he would willingly haue auoyded the effuſion of Chriſtian bloud, which he prepared to ſee.

D. Henry deſe-ted in battell. Theſe Princes being thus diſpoſed, the armies preſented themſelues one before another betwixt Nagera and Nauarret; where they incountred with ſuch fury about Aleçon, neere to the Bourg of Açofra, as after great effuſion of bloud, D. Henries men were put to flight, the diſorder beginning on D. Tellos ſide, and many were taken priſoners by the Engliſh, French, and Nauarrois: againſt ſome of which the K. D. Pedro being incenſed, did D execute his rage, cauſing them to be murthered in his preſence: among others, the firſt maſter of the Knights of S. Bernard, & the laſt alſo, being taken in this defeat, had his head cut off by the kings commandement. It was a military order ſprung vp in Biſcay, to which knights ſhould be aſſigned the lands called Beetries, which lay neere: but it was ſuddenly extinct by reaſon of theſe wars, and by this exceſſe of the King D. Pedro. Many were reconciled by the mediation of the Prince of Wales, of which number was D. Sancho, brother to the Erle D. Henry: others were ſtreightly impriſoned, among which were Bertrand of Gueſclin, Arnold of Andreghen, and Begue of Villaines. D. Henry eſcaped from the battell, and poſting towards Nagera, his horſe being tyred and out of breath, hee met with a Squire of the Prouince of Alaua, called Ruy Fernandes of Goana; who knowing him, E mounted him vpon a good Genet, with the which he came into the K. of Arragons coun-trie, to whom he would not go, remembring the miſeries which follow afflicted Princes fallen from their fortunes, and the ſmall faith that is in friends in ſuch extremities, euery one drawing backe, and ſeeking to excuſe himſelfe vnto the Victor, to pleaſe whom, many times the vnfortunat is deliuered vp to ſacrifice. Wherefore hee paſt the mountaines, D. Pedro of Luna, a knight of Arragon, future Pope. and retired into France, leauing the townes and Noblemen of Caſtile, which had followed his party in great perplexity, with him there retired that D. Pedro of Luna a Cattelan, who of a knight as he was then, carrying armes, became a Clergie man, was a Cardinall, and in the end Pope, during the great Schiſme, which did ſo much trouble the Church of Rome. F

After this great victorie which hapned the third day of Aprill 1367. the king D. Pedro entred in great pompe into Burgos, from whence D. Ieanne Manuel, called Queen of Caſtile, wife to D. Henry, her children, and daughter-in-law, were a little before retired, and fled in all haſt into Arragon, where they were receiued, but not ſo chearefully as before:
for the king of Arragon ſtudied how he might recouer the fauour of Don Pedro King of
Caſtile,

A Caſtile, being therein aſſiſted by the Prince of Wales, and aduiſed to abandon D. Henry, who was vanquiſhed. D. Romero Biſhop of Lerida, D. Pedro Earle of Vrgel, the Vicont of Cardona, D. Iohn Fernandes of Heredia, and others, were of this opinion, who were ſent Ambaſſadors to D. Pedro King of Caſtile: and Raymond Pegnera, and Iames Elfaro went to the Prince of Wales.

Some ſay that the Prince of Wales beginning to deſcouer the ingratitude of D. Pedro King of Caſtile, there was in this Negotiation a plot laid betwixt him and the king of Arragon to diuide the king of Caſtile betwixt them, and to giue ſome part of the booty to the kings of Nauarre and Portugal, and ſo wholy to reiect the tyrant D. Pedro.

The King of Nauarre hearing of the victory which the King of Caſtile had obtained, Nauarre.
B thought it now time to creepe out of his denne, preſſing Oliuer of Maulny to ſet him at liberty: but the difficulty was, this knight would be paied for his good ſeruice, hauing taken the king priſoner. King Charles gaue him D. Pedro his ſecond ſonne in hoſtage, aſſuring him that if he would come to Tudelo, he would giue him all that hee had promiſed, and more. This good knight tooke the Infant D. Pedro, and put him into the caſtle of Borja, deliuered the king, and ſoone after, through his great ſimplicity, followed him to Tudelo: but he was no ſooner arriued, but they layed hold of him, and put him in priſon, vntil that he had yeelded the hoſtage. A brother of his ſhould haue beene taken with him by the kings commandement, but ſeeking to flie away ouer a houſe, hee was ſlaine by them that purſued him. King Charles did write preſently to the king of Arra-
C gon, complayning of the wrong which the Britons (holding the caſtle of Borja and Magallon) had done him, and that they detained and withheld his ſonne, whom hee had beene forced for to giue them in Oſtage, hearing that they ment to carry him into France, the which hee intreated him to preuent, ſetting good gards vpon the paſſages of his country. He ſayd moreouer, that he threatned to inuade his country of Nauarre, relying vpon the ſupport they had of Arragon: wherefore hee intreated him not to giue them forces, nor any aide in ſuch enterpriſes, and not take it ill if hee led an army before Borja, to deliuer his ſonne from priſon. Garci Sanchez Prior of Ronceual, was ſent of this Ambaſſage into Arragon, who not onely executed his charge, but alſo entred into a treaty of marriage betwixt Charles the eldeſt ſonne of Nauarre, and D. Leo-
D nora daughter to the King of Arragon. The King of Arragon who had no need of any enemies, for that he feared the King of Caſtile, cauſed the trouble of Borja to ceaſe, and commanded the Brittons to deliuer the Infant D. Pedro, who beeing carried to Tudelo, Oliuer of Maulny was alſo deliuered. As for the marriage, although the King of Arragon did much deſire it, yet the King of Nauarre, hauing retired his ſonne, did not much care for it, meaning firſt to ſee what ſhould become of the broiles of Caſtile.

Oliuer of Maulny deliuers the King of Nauarre, and remaines priſoner himſelfe.

21 The King D. Pedro the cruell, victorious, but inſolent and treacherous as of cu- Caſtile.
ſtome, could not conteine himſelfe within the bounds of modeſty and reaſon, neither to his ſubiects, nor to ſtrangers, Engliſh, French and others, who had ſeated him in his King-
E dome: There were great controuerſies amongſt them for priſoners and ranſomes, and the ſouldiars pay, yet after much diſputing there was ſome kinde of agreement. D. Pedro King of Caſtile ſent D. Pedro Fernandes Peres of Ayala, with the Deputies of the Prince of Wales, to put them in poſſeſſion of the Lordſhip of Biſcay, and Caſtro of Ordiales, according vnto their accords: but the Biſcains beeing aduertiſed that what the King did, was onely to content the Prince of Wales, and to ſhew that hee had a will to performe his promiſe, but not that he had any meaning to maintaine it: beſides that of their owne diſpoſitions they did abhor the command of ſtrangers, they would neuer receiue theſe Deputies, nor conſent that they ſhould be put in poſſeſſion of their country, which was the cauſe of great troubles. The King ſeeming to bee much diſcontented at theſe difficulties, made a ſollemne oth in the chiefe Church of Burgos, that hee would put the F Prince of Wales in poſſeſſion of the Siegneuries of Biſcay. D. Pedro ſeeing himſelfe reſtored to his Realme, he deſired to know what the deſtynies did promiſe him, and therefore he demanded aduice of a counſellor to the King of Granado, called Aben-Hatin, a great and learned Aſtrologian and Phyloſopher, who ſent him a letter full of learning, ſaying, that hee muſt looke vnto his owne carriage, and how hee gouerned his ſubiects, D Pedro King of Caſtile diſcontents the Engliſh and other ſtrangers.

Holy aduertiſments of a Philoſopher Moore to D. Pedro.

for thereon depended the continuance of his raigne, either long or ſhort, and the continuance of the ſcepter in his family: adding many precepts, the which if hee had duly obſerued, without doubt he had raigned ſecurely in peace: but hee fel into his frenezies and cruelties, the which did ſo eſtrange the hearts of thoſe, which abhorred his forepaſſed tyranies, as his fall muſt needes bee miſerable. Hee parted from Burgos, and went to ſeeke meanes to content the Engliſh, commanding that as ſoone as he ſhould bee out of the city, they ſhould put to death Ruy Ponce Palomeque and ſome others, whom hee had cauſed to be put into the caſtle of Burgos. Being come nere vnto Toledo, he would haue hoſtages of the Inhabitants for his aſſurance, and there hee put to death ſeuenteene of the chiefe of the city; then hee went to Cordoua, from which place he ſent to Seuile, that they ſhould put to death Gil Bocanegra, D. Iohn Ponce of Leon Lord of Marchene, and Alphonſo Aluares of Quadros, with an other called Alphonſo Fernandes: Hee cauſed many to be diſpatched at Cordoua before hee came to Seuile, where beeing arriued, hee cauſed Donna Vrraca Oſorio, mother to D. Iohn Alphonſo of Guzman, to bee ſlaine, and Martin Iames his high treaſorer, taking great delight in his murthers, and reuenges vpon theſe miſerable creatures, for that he had not found them ready to follow his fortune, or for ſome other diſcontentment; forgeting that for ſuch inhumanities and tyranies, he had beene once caſt out of Spaine. He cauſed D. Martin Lopes of Cordoua, maiſter of Calatraua, to be apprehended, and would haue put him to death, but the King of Granado demanded him in guift, and did ſo much, as he ſaued his life. He had done more, if time and meanes had permitted, but God preuented him, for D. Henry ſtayed not long to depriue him both of realme and life.

A Moore more kinde then D. Pedro a Chriſtian King.

After the loſſe of the battaile, D. Henry came into the county of Foix, where beeing well entertained by the Earle, and furniſhed with all things befitting ſuch a knight, hee went to Auignon, whereas Pope Vrbain the fifth did raigne, who did loue, and eſteeme him much, and therefore he receiued him courteouſly, and delt with Lewis Duke of Aniou, brother to the French King, and Gouernor of Languedoc, to giue him meanes to raiſe a new army, to returne into Spaine, whether many friends recalled him, aſſuring him that the cruelties which the King D. Pedro continued, prepared him the way to recouer his good fortune, and that now there was not any difficulty to ſettle him firmely; neither need they feare that D. Pedro ſhould finde fauour or ſuccors with the Engliſh, whom he had defrauded of their pay and recompences promiſe, and ſent home diſcontented. D. Ieanne wife to D. Henry, and his children, finding themſelues not very ſafe in Arragon by reaſon of the friendſhip that was betwixt the King of Arragon, and the Prince of Wales, they had paſt into France, whereas they remained in the caſtle of Perapertuſe, vnto the end of the warre, ſuch was the diligence of D. Henry, and of his friends, as hee obtained from the King fiue thouſand pounds ſtarling in ready money, and liberty to leauy ſouldiars within his Realme. Hee had alſo ſuccors both of money and men from the Duke of Aniou, from Guy Cardinal of Bologne, and other Noblemen of France, beeing incenſed againſt the King D. Pedro, the murtherer of Queene Blanche of Bourbon his wife: notwithſtanding D. Henry found many great difficulties; an ordinary thing for thoſe that are in aduerſity: for the French King feared leaſt the Engliſh ſhould take it ill that he gaue ſuccors vnto their enemy: and to make ſuch a preparation for warre, as was neceſſary, hee had neede of a great maſſe of money, which was the greateſt hindrance of his affaires. Some therevpon write that in one day hee cauſed all the money to be ſeized on, that was in Auignon, in marchants, and Banquers hands, the Pope giuing his conſent, and hee promiſing vpon the faith of a Prince to reſtore it. In the end he had meanes to raiſe a good army, but before he began to march, he had certaine newes that the Prince of Wales was returned into Guienne much diſcontented with the King D. Pedro: and moreouer that all the Prouince of Guipuſcoa, except Saint Sebaſtien and Guetaria, the townes of Biſcay, Segobia, Vailledolit, Palence, Auila, Guadalajara, Salamanca, Medina del Campo, Toro, Almedo, Arenalo, Coca, Madrigal, Carrion, Sepulueda, Aillon, Atienca, Illeſcas with many other forts held his party.

Whileſt that D. Henry prepares to paſſe into Spaine, ſome of the Engliſh and French ſouldiars,

A ſouldiars, returning from the ſeruice of D.Pedro King of Caſtile, by the pace betwixt Nauarre and Arragon, ſpoiling the valleies, they attempted to enter into Iacca. Againſt theſe men the Inhabitants of the country, both Nobles and Commons armed, ſo as after diuerſe skirmiſhes, whereas many were ſlaine of both ſides, theſe ſtrangers beeing aboue fifteene thouſand men, paſt the Pyrenes, and returned into their countries. The King of Arragon, before the Prince of VVales his retreat had ſought by his meanes to recouer Sauueterre, and Real of Rueſte, which the Nauarrois held ſince the warre of Caſtile, but he could not.

As for the King of Nauarre, hee recouered the places which hee had left in depoſito, Nauarre.
B when as he made a league with the King of Arragon, and D. Henry, wherein hee was aſſiſted by D.Pedro King of Caſtile, and through fauour of the victory, which hee had obtained: but yet hee could neither get Logrogno from him, nor the towne of victoria, which he had promiſed him; neither could hee retire out of the hands of D. Iohn Ramires of Areillan (a Knight of honour) the place of Buradon, whereof he had beene choſen Gardien, ſaying, That hee did not follow the fortune, and paſſions of princes, but the equity of the faith, which was promiſed and ſworne. This good Knight had retired himſelfe into Arragon after the battaile loſt, when as D.Henry ſaued himſelfe in France, to whoſe ſeruice he returned ſoone after. Integrity of D. Iohn Ramires of Arcillan.

The Prince of VVales before he went out of Spaine, had practiſed a firme league be- Leagues ful of good number of ſouldiars. As for him of Arragon, he imbraced the league as it ſeemed with great affection, thinking hee could not then doe better, then to ioyne with the victorious King of Caſtile, and the Engliſh. To conclude this league, a day was appointed for the Deputies of all theſe Princes at Tarbes: in the meane time the treachries of D.Pedro King of Caſtile, were ſo hatefull vnto the Prince of VVales, as he returned to Bourdeaux diſcontented. The Deputies of the Kings of Nauarre and Arragon, and of the Prince of VVales, came to Tarbes, at the day appointed, where there alſo arriued ſome from Caſtile. The diſpoſitions of theſe Princes were ſuch, as the King of D Arragon would willingly haue ioyned with D. Henry, if hee had durſt, but hee followed fortune: he of Nauarre was more inclyned to the Prince of VVales, but whatſoeuer it were, euery one ſought to make his proffit of theſe troubles, and to draw ſome thing from Caſtile: the King of Arragon would haue Murcia, and ſome other townes: hee of Nauarre demanded the prouinces of Guipuſcoa, and Alaua, namely Victoria, Saueterre, Treuigno and many townes in Rioja: the Prince of VVales pretended Biſcay, Caſtro of Ordiales, and many other places, all promiſing to bandy themſelues againſt D.Henry, and to ſtop his paſſage into Spaine, if theſe things were performed by D. Pedro: if not they were as ready to enter into league with D. Henry, if hee made them the like promiſes. Thus the Realme of Caſtile was ſet to ſale. On the other ſide King Ed-

E ward, father to the Prince of VVales, and the King of Arragon, had their practiſes apart, to diuide the realme of Caſtile and Leon betwixt them, and to giue ſome part vnto the King of Nauarre. Thus theſe Princes laboured to diuide that betwixt them, which God had appointed for an other, and their propoſitions and diſputes at Tarbes, were ſuch and of ſo many things, as not able to conclude any thing, they referred their aſſembly to Oleron, where they did leſſe.

the Engliſh: and although that the King of Arragon ſought to diuert this paſſage, yet
F D.Henry went his courſe, and by Nauarre alſo, finding not any oppoſition. Hauing paſt the riuer of Ebro with his whole army, marching in the country of Caſtile, hee fell on his knees, and making a croſſe vpon the ſand, hee ſware, that no toile nor misfortune ſhould euer make him goe out of Caſtile. Hee entred into Calaorra without contradiction, the eight and twentith of September, this yeere of our Lord 1367. whether many Knights, Squiers and other men, came vnto him, flying the furie of the King D.Pedro.

Being

Being aſſured of Calaorra, hee came to Logrogno, where hee found great reſiſtance, A wherefore he paſt on by Rioja and Bureba, and came to Burgos, where the Inhabitants receiued him with great affection, and although the caſtle and the Iewes place made ſome reſiſtance, yet he brought them to obedience and tooke within the caſtle D. Iames of Majorca, who defended it. Hee was ſonne to the laſt King of Majorca, and had eſcaped from a hard priſon, where hee had beene long detained in the new caſtle at Barcelona, ſince the yeere of our Lord 1362. then beeing come to Naples, hee had the happe to marrie Queene Ieanne of Naples, whom they called Duke of Calabria, and not King of Naples.

Many townes yeelded vnto Don Henry in fewes daies, and about the beginning of B the yeere of our Lord 1368. he got the city of Leon: wherefore hauing much blemiſhed the name and authority of his aduerſary in old Caſtile, hee marched with his army towards Toledo, which city hee beſeeged making a bridge of wood ouer the riuer of Tayo, to paſſe and repaſſe his army, as occaſion ſhould ſerue. The Inhabitants were deſirous to receiue D. Henry, but for that Don Pedro held many of their men in hoſtage, fearing leaſt hee ſhould kill them, they durſt not declare themſelues. At this ſeege, the French Kings Ambaſſadors preuailed ſo with Don Henry, as hee ſware to compromit the controuerſies which hee had with the King of Arragon, hauing that charge from their maiſter, who deſired to reconcile theſe two Princes: at this promiſe there were preſent Don Pedro of Arragon, the Kings vncle, the Archbiſhop of Toledo, Don C Pedro Fernandes of Velaſco, Fernand Peres of Ayala, Diego Gomes of Toledo, Gonçal-Meſsie of Pont, and others. Don Pedro King of Caſtile hauing fortified and manned the towne of Carmona, parted thence, to come to Eccia, hauing in his company Mahumet King of Granado, called the old, with all the forces of his Realme, conſiſting of ſeuen thouſand horſe, and foure ſcore thouſand foot, whereof twelue thouſand were Croſſe-bowes, or as ſome write thirtie thouſand, to whom the King Don Pedro did ioyne fifteene hundreth horſe, and ſixe thouſand foote, of his ſubiects and partiſans Spaniards; and with this army he came and laied ſeege to Cordoua which had reuolted: but not able to take it, after ſome ſallies and incounters, the Moores returned to Granado, and the King Don Pedro to Seuile. Yet the King of Granado ſtaied not long D before hee returned to Iaen, the which hee tooke and burned, and came againe and camped before Cordoua, but hee diſlodged ſoone, and went towards Vbeda, where hee did as hee had done at Iaen, and making his proffit of theſe reuolts, hee tooke many other places, did great ſpoile in Andaluſia, and carried away an infinite number of Chriſtians priſoners. Whileſt that Don Henry preſt Toledo, the townes of Victoria, Saluatierra, Alaua, and Logrogno, which held for the King Don Pedro, beeing tired with the continuall warre which the Guipuſcoans, and others of their Neighbours (which held Don Henries partie) made againſt them, they yeelded to Charles King of Nauarre.

Army of the King D. Pedro.

Townes in Caſtile yeeld to the King of Nauarre.

In this reddition the King of Nauarre was much aſſiſted by Don Tello, who held E Biſcay, and was then in bad termes with his brother Don Henry. They ſay that the Inhabitants of theſe townes hauing acquainted the King Don Pedro with their neceſſities, intreating him that hee would not take it ill, if they put themſelues into the hands of the King of Nauarre, who was his friend and allie, hee willed them to hold out as long as they could, and when as they ſhould bee no more able to defend themſelues they ſhould rather yeeld to Don Henry his brother, without diuiding themſelues from the crowne of Caſtile, then vnto the King of Nauarre, who would diſmember them from that body: moreouer that hee had no reaſon to gratifie him, for hee had not receiued any aſſured ſuccors from him. But it fell out otherwiſe, and the King of Nauarre was ſeized thereon, who to make money at that time, ſold many preuiledges to the F townes of Nauarre, and among others to the towne of Viana hee ſold the duty called Fouſadera, and ſold them moreouer the place called Agoncillo, and the Borroughs of Vrllicilla, and Lacagurria, with their appurtenances, for a certaine ſum of money, by letters granted at Olite, the ſeuenth of Auguſt, this yeere 1368.

In the meane time D. Henry continued his ſeege to Toledo, the loſſe whereof D. Pedro fearing

A fearing, he reſolued to come and ſuccour it and to raiſe the ſeege. Hauing therefore left D. Sancho and D. Diego, his baſe ſonnes in Carmone, with great ſtore of money and precious ſtones, and a good garriſon, hee marched againſt the beſeegers. Being vpon his march, hee receiued letters from Aben-Hatin the Moore, who foretold him of his approching death: yet for all this he ſtaied not, leading in his army three thouſand horſe, whereof fifteene hundred were Moores, which the King of Granado had ſent him. Being come to Montiel, and there making ſome ſtay, hee was abandoned by many of his men; whereof D. Henry being aduertiſed, hee thought it time to come to his laſt tryall, which of them two ſhould raigne in Caſtile: wherefore he left at the ſeege of Toledo D. Gomes Manriques, Archbiſhop of that city, with moſt of his forces, and he with three
B thouſand horſe went to incounter the King D. Pedro, being reſolued to giue him battaile. He was ouertaken vpon the way in the towne of Orgaz, by Bertrand of Gueſclin, who being newly redeemed from the Engliſh, for tenne thouſand pounds ſtarling, which the French King had paied, came to ſerue him in this conqueſt with ſixe hundred launces. Being fortified with this troupe, D. Henry marched with all ſpeed, and came to Montiel, whereof the King D. Pedro (who had no good ſpies) did not dreame, where as his men making a ſhew of fighting, beeing in tumult and confuſion, (as men ſurprized) they were by the councell of Bertrand of Gueſclin, ſodainely charged with ſuch fury, as they were all put to flight, abandoning their King, who ſeeing himſelfe reduced to that extremity, ſhut himſelfe into the caſtle of Montiel, which ſtands vpon the ſide of a hill, C aboue the towne.

The King D. Pedro foretold his death.

Defeat of the King D. Pedros men.

Martin Lopes of Cordoua, captaine of the men which were within Carmone, was vpon the way to come and ſuccor the King D. Pedro; but hearing of the defeat of thoſe that were with him, and that he was ſhut vp into the caſtle of Montiel, he returned. The Earle D. Henry did preſently caſt a ditch about the towne and caſtle of Montiel, that his prey might not eſcape; but D. Pedro being beſeeged, and in want of all things ſought to corrupt Bertrand of Gueſclin, by the meanes of Men Rodrigues of Sanubria, promiſing him the townes of Soria, Almacan, Atiença, Montagu, Beça and Seron, and moreouer two hundred thouſand doublons of gold, if hee would vndertake to ſet him in D a place of ſafety: whereunto Bertrand ſeeming to conſent, he aduertiſed D. Henry; then hauing giuen an houre and place to Men Rodrigues (who was borne at Tranſtamara) to bring forth the King, he came out of the caſtle in the night, hauing in his company D. Fernand of Caſtro, and D. Diego Gonçales of Ouiedo, and went all armed towards the lodging of Bertrand of Gueſclin, who came to meet him, and ſaid vnto him, that it was time to ſpur; but as he was ready to goe to horſe, hee was ſtaied by ſome that followed Bertrand, and forced to come into his tent, where hee found D. Henry his brother, armed, who at the firſt ſight did not know him; and beeing aduertiſed by them that were about him, that it was the King D. Pedro, his enemy, yet was hee in doubt, for hee had not ſeene him in many yeeres. The King D. Pedro ſeeing himſelfe betraied, tranſported with fu-
E ry, began to cry out aloude, I am, I am in deed D. Pedro. Then D. Henry drawing out his dagger ſtabbed him in the face, the King graſpled with him, and they both fell to the ground, but D. Henry vnderneath; who being helpt by Bertrand of Gueſclin, and others, freed himſelfe, and got the King D. Pedro vnder him, whom he ſlue with his dagger. Thus D. Pedro King of Caſtile ended his daies miſerably, for his exceſſe and tyranies; fulfilling the prediction of the Monke of S^t. Dominike of Calçada, whom he cauſed to be burned, and of the Philoſopher Aben-Hatin. His death was in the yeere 1368. the two and thirtith of March, for the which many blame Bertrand of Gueſclin, as hauing falſified his faith and promiſe to ſet him in a place of ſafety: others diſcharge him, ſaying, that the King D. Pedro deſpayring, came and put himſelfe raſhly into his enemies hands. His body was interred in the Monaſtery of Saint Dominike the Roial at Madrid. Hee had F raigned nineteene yeers, and died beginning the fiue and thirtith of his age.

D. Fernand alone of that name, ninth King of Portugal.

Portugal 23 DVring the warres of the two Princes of Caſtile, brethren, we doe not read that D. Pedro king of Portugal tooke part with either of them. He died in the yeere 1367. the ſeuen and forty of his age, hauing raigned almoſt eleuen yeere. To which Realme ſucceeded D. Fernand his ſonne, being at his coronation ſixe and twentie yeere old, and B ſome monthes, in whom the direct and lawfull line of D. Henry of Beſançon, or of Lorraine, failed, as ſhal appeere. He was preſent in the towne of Eſtremos, when as his father died, and was there acknowledged, and proclaimed King, taking an oth from ſuch of his ſubiects as were then preſent.

Arragon. D. Pedro King of Arragon, hearing the ſucceſſe of D. Henries victory, began to feare him, ſending Francis of Perillos and Iames Elfaro Ambaſſadors into France, who procured an offenciue and defenciue league, the French King promiſing to aide him of Arragon, in his warres of Sardyina, yea and againſt D. Henry, if hee did not referre vnto him the queſtion for the realme of Murcia, and other lands promiſed, as hee had informed him. And for that the warres betwixt the French and Engliſh were reuiued, Francis of C Perillos being held the beſt captaine at ſea in his time, was granted vnto the French king, who entertained him, notwithſtanding that the King of Arragon his maiſter, had great need of him, for the warres of Sardynia, the which was continually entertained, by Marian Iudge of Arborea, who this yeere had taken many places from the Arragonois, and defeated in a ſallie which he made, being beſeeged in the caſtle of Oriſtagno, the army of Arragon, commanded by D. Pedro of Luna and his ſonne, the which did ſo diſquiet the King, as he reſolued to go thether in perſon: but new affaires hindred him, for he was inuaded from the county of Roſſillon by ſome Frenchmen, who notwithſtanding were but vagabond troupes, running vp and downe the country without warrant: and he was alſo kept backe by the controuerſies which he had with the new King of Caſtille: wherefore D he ſent D. Berenger of Carrozo, Earle of Quirra, thether with an army, yet giuing it ſtill out that he ſhould goe thether himſelfe, keeping the Standard royal diſplaied on the top of the caſtle of Barcelona, after the accuſtomed manner, in ſigne that the King would goe to the warre: the which kept theſe ſeditious people ſomewhat in awe. Hee cauſed an Edict to bee publiſhed, by the which hee granted reſpight to all that were indebted, and repeale for baniſhed men that were of Sardynia. Being come to Valence, he made his ſonne D. Martin Seneſhall of Cattelogne, who commanded ouer all armes, vniting vnto that dignity that of the Conſtable of the realme, as well on this ſide, as beyond the ſeas: and then it was decreed, that from that time the children of the Kings or Princes of Arragon ſhould be called to that degree. I Caſtile.

D. Henry ſurnamed the Gratious.

AFter the death of the King D. Pedro, the Realmes of Caſtile and Leon, remained to D. Henry, without any great difficulty. He got by his vertue and mildneſſe, what his brother had loſt by his pride and cruelty. Hee was a friend to the vertuous, nobly minded, bountifull, valiant, and ſtrong of his perſon, although he were but of a ſmall ſtature: He was ſurnamed the liberall, or gratious, by reaſon of the bounty he ſhewed to them that had ſerued him. The greatneſſe and good fortune of this King was ſuſpected vnto the Kings of Nauarre and Arragon, who made a league this yeere, reſtoring one vnto an other certaine townes and caſtles, that is, Arragon deliuered to Nauarre, Herrera of Moncayo: and Nauarre to Arragon Saluaterra and Real, they pacefied the controuerſies which were betwixt them of Sangueſſa and Real, by a definitiue ſentence of Merins and Gouernors of Tudelo and Saragoſſa: Queene Ieanne gouerning the realme of Nauarre, and dealing in all theſe affaires, in the abſence of King Charles her husband, who was gone into France, vpon the reuiuing of the warre betwixt the French and Engliſh, that ſame yeere. Nauarre and Arragon, began then to make many practiſes with the Kings of Portugal and England to diſpoſſeſſe the King D. Henry of his new conqueſt, in the which Carmona in Andaluſia, Zamore and Ciudad Roderigo in Caſtile, with a good part of Galicia, refuſed to obey him, al the reſt acknowledging him for King. For Toledo, as ſoone as D. Pedros death was knowne yeelded: Seuile opened her gates, the caſtle of Montiel was deliuered him, where and in other places, hee foũd great ſtore of treaſure, iewels, ſilks, tapſtries & other rich mouables of the deceaſed king. The townes of Logrogno, Victoria, Saluatierra of Alaua, and S^t. Cruz of Campeço, were yeelded to the king of Nauar. & he of Arragon had ſeized on Molina, Cagnet & Requegna, hauing corrupted Garcia of Vera, and Aluar Ruis of Eſpejo, captains of theſe places. D. Henry ſought to make ſome accord with thẽ of Carmona, demanding fridẽſhip and

Then he cauſed a certaine coine to bee made, called croyſez, of the value of a marauedis, and an other kinde called rials, of the value of foure marauidis. To preuent which inconueniences, the king D. Henry marched with a great army towards Zamore, to beſeege it, but finding it ſtrong and wel manned, he paſt on into Galicia; D. Fernand finding himſelfe inferior, both in number of men, in valour, and in experience of warre, vnto D. Henry, would not attend him, but imbarked, and returned into his country by ſea, leauing a good garriſon in the Groine. An. 1370.

The King D. Henry went to field againſt this Moore, who in paſſing attempted Ciudad Caſtille.

E Majorca, who had beene taken in the caſtle of Burgos, 70000. ducats, paied by Queene Ieanne of Naples his wife. They hold, that Bertrand of Gueſclin and others receiued there aboue ſixe ſcore thouſand doublons, beſides the townes and places which hee gaue them; as to Gueſclin the townes of Soria, Almaçan, Atiença, Montague and Seron, and moreouer the Siegneury of Molina, which the King of Arragon held, that hee might breed a iarre betwixt them. There Bertrand of Gueſclin tooke his leaue, and returned into France, where he was made Conſtable, and managed the warre againſt the Engliſh. The King D. Henry being come into Andaluſia, hee was to arme himſelfe againſt the Moores, againſt them of Carmona, & againſt the gallies of Portugal, who did trouble that coaſt, ſtoping the mouth of the riuer of Guadalquibir, ſo as the towne of Seuile was much anoied. The King was nothing well prouided of gal-

During theſe actions, D. Tello the Kings brother, beeing reconciled, and left by him in Galicia, to make head againſt the Portugals, died, and was buried at Saint Francis of Palencia, the Siegneuries of Biſcay

An. 1371. In the yeere 1371. Carmona was ſtraightly beſeeged, and after many aſſaults, yeelded by D. Martin Lopes of Cordoua, maiſter of Calatraua, vpon certaine conditions. During the ſeege there was ſo furious a ſally made, as they came vnto the Kings tent, where he was in great danger; wherewith being incenſed, and at many other bad offices of this maiſter, he cauſed him to be ſlaine afterwards at Seuile: paſſion ſurmounting the religion of othes and promiſes. There was great ſtore of the deceaſed D. Pedros treaſure, found by the King. And at the time of this ſeege D. Pedro Fernandes of Velaſco, great Chamberlaine to the King, tooke Zamora; and in Galicia many rebels were ſubdued, by D. Pedro Manriques, gouernor general of Caſtile, and D. Pedro Ruis Sarmiento gouernor of Galicia. Portugal 2 This good ſucceſſe made the King of Portugal yeeld to the will of God, who ſhewed plainely that D. Henry muſt raigne: wherefore theſe Princes made a peace at Alcantin, treating a marriage betwixt D. Fernand King of Portugal, and D. Leonora of Caſtile, daughter to the King D. Henry: although it tooke no effect, no more then two others, which D. Fernand had contracted two yeeres before, with the houſe of Arragon: when as this King of Portugal, with thoſe of Arragon, Nauarre and Granado (iealous of the greatneſſe of the new King of Caſtile) had made a league together. For confirmation of this league, the King of Arragon had ſent D. Iohn of Villaragut, and Bernard of Miragle Ambaſſadors to theſe Princes, who being in the court of Portugal, propounded a marriage betwixt the Infant D. Iohn of Arragon, Duke of Girone, and D. Maria ſiſter to the King of Portugal, the which was ſo pleaſing vnto the King D. Fernand, as for a final concluſion thereof, he ſent D. Iohn Alphonſo Tello, Earle of Barcellos, his greateſt fauorit, into Arragon, with a good number of gallies, and many Iewels and rich preſents. C

The Earle treating with the King about this marriage of the Infants, he entred alſo into ſpeech to marry the King D. Fernand his maiſter, with D. Leonora of Arragon, his daughter: wherevnto the King D. Pedro gaue eare, and vpon this hope, their league againſt D. Henry King of Caſtile was the more confirmed: as theſe marriages were for ſome conſiderations delaied, in the end, they were by this peace betwixt Caſtile and Portugal quite broken: and in like ſort that which was concluded at Alcantin, betwixt the King D. Fernand, and D. Leonora of Caſtile, was diſapointed by the diſordred paſſions, wherevnto the King D. Fernand did abandon himſelfe, to enioy D. Leonora Teiles of Meneſes, his owne ſubiect, wife to D. Laurence Vaſco of Acugna, a knight of Portugal, taking her from her husband, and kept her to himſelfe, like vnto Octauius Cæſar, who tooke Liuia, the wife of Tiberius Nero, with whom he was in loue. D

Caſtile. 3 By the peace made betwixt Caſtile and Portugal, the King D. Henry recouered all the townes of Caſtile and Galicia, which had beene held by the Portugal faction. The Eſtates were then aſſembled at Toro, where they were about to make many lawes in this new raigne. Among others, the Iewes and Moores inhabiting in the townes of Caſtile, were enioyned to weare a marke vpon their garments, to diſtinguiſh them from others. About that time, D. Philip of Caſtro, being of the bloud royal of Arragon, was ſlaine by his owne ſubiects, ſtriuing to get the poſſeſſion of the Siegneury of Paredes, belonging to his wife D. Iean ſiſter to the King D. Henry, daughter to D. Leonora of Guzman. Arragon. Vpon the good agreement which was at the time betwixt the French King and him of Arragon, there was a marriage concluded betwixt D. Iohn duke of Girona, and D. Iean of France, daughter to King Philip of Valois, whom he had in his latter daies by Queene Blanch his ſecond wife, daughter to Philip of Eureux King of Nauarre. At that time there was a confederacy made in Cattelogno: al the Nobility of that Prouince taking armes, againſt the Earles of Vrgel and Ampurias, and the Viconts of Cardoua and Caſtlebon; who pretended to be the chiefe and Lords of the Nobility in Cattelogno, and maintainned that all the reſt of the Nobility were their ſubiects: but the King taking the quarrell in hand, ſaid, that the Nobility did not acknowledge any ſuperior but himſelfe, and ſuppreſt their deſeignes. The

A The Arragonois affaires in Sardinia, being almoſt ruined, were ſomewhat repaired by Warre in Sardynia. Brenvenu Graphie, a captaine of ſome Sicilian gallies, who paſſing vpon occaſion along that ſhoare, releeued Cailleri and Alguer, and gaue meanes to the Earle of Quirra, Gouernor for the King of Arragon, to victual Ioyeuſegarde, Aquafredda, Saint Michel and Quirra. Then was Francaleon of Oria brought vnder the King of Arragons obedience, and oppoſed to Marian Iudge of Arborea, who notwithſtanding was ſo fortunate, as had he beene any thing aſſiſted by the Geneuois, hee had quite chaſed the Arragonois out of the Iſland, but that ſtate hauing made a peace with the King of Arragon, they maintained it faithfully, Dominike of Campofregoſo, being Duke of Genoua.

B D. Pedro King of Arragon, thinking his honour much interreſſed if he did not puniſh this Iudge Marian, who troubled him ſo much, entertained a great number of Engliſh, and other ſtrangers, both horſe and foote, to ſend into Sardynia: for the payment of which troupes and other neceſſary charges of this warre, he impoſed great tributs vpon his ſubiects of Arragon, Valence, and Cattelogne, by a decree of the Eſtates, where- Complaint of the Arragonois. with the people found themſelues greuouſly oppreſſed, by reaſon whereof there were complaints and murmuring throughout the whole realme: What a miſerable thing, ſay they, was the guift of this curſed Iſland to our Kings, of this barren and now vnmanured ſoile, bearing no fruite, full of woods and mariſhes, vnder a peſtilent and vnholeſome aire, inhabited by ſauage people, treacherous, and full of vanity, which hath

C conſumed and ſwallowed vp ſo many braue and valiant men of Arragon, and waſted ſo much treaſure? Let the King leaue it with a miſchiefe to the Geneuois for a perpetuall ſubiect of quarrels and warre, both among themſelues, and with their neighbours, and ſo hee ſhall take a large reuenge for the Realme of Arragon, both of them, and of the Sardyniens. Notwithſtanding theſe diſcontentments of the people, the King D. Pedro did what he could to keepe the Iſland.

As for the affaires betwixt Caſtile and Nauarre, the new King D. Henry found many Nauarre. difficulties, by the abſence of the King of Nauarre, Queene Ieanne his wife, who gouerned the country, refuſing to conclude any thing touching the reſtitution of the townes of Logrogno, Saluaterra, Alaua, Victoria, and Santa Cruz of Campeço, vſurped from

D the crowne of Caſtile, for the King D. Charles, knowing ſince the yeere 1370. that the Engliſh and French would fall againe to armes, thinking it a fit occaſion to recouer the lands and rights which hee pretended to bee of his ancient patrimony, and held by the French King, he paſt the mountaines, and went to Cherbourg in Normandy, not once approching neere the court of France, hauing no confidence in his brother in law King Charles the fifth. At his departure hee had left Queene Ieanne his wife Gouerneſſe of his Realme, and for councell hee had giuen her D. Bernard Foucault Biſhop of Pampelone, and D. Iohn Cruſat Deane of Tudele. The townes of Saluaterra and Real, were reſtored by the Queene Gouerneſſe to the King of Arragon, and a league treated with this King, hauing ſent Doctor Iohn Cruzat, with others to Tortoſe.

E Their accords tended to the preiudice of Don Henry King of Caſtile, with whom afterwards the Kings of Portugall and Granado ioyned, as wee haue ſayd, all which things were ratefied and confirmed by the King Don Charles, who was in France: who beeing ſome-what pacefied by the French King, made a peace with him, which continued about fiue yeeres: by reaſon whereof hee prepared himſelfe to returne into Nauarre, in the end of the yeere of our Lord 1372. An. 1372.

Attending whoſe returne, the Queene his wife beeing ſollicited for the townes of Victoria, Saluaterra of Alaua and others, which had yeelded themſelues to the King of Nauarre, could finde no better expedient to content the King Don Henry, then to conſent that Pope Gregorie the eleuenth, who had newly ſucceeded Vrbaine

F the fifth, ſhould bee Iudge of this difference, and that vntill hee had ſent a Cardinall with ſufficient authority to determine, the townes ſhould remaine in the hands of D. Iohn Ramires of Areilan, a Knight of great vertue and eſteeme, who ſhould keepe them in depoſito, in the Popes name.

This the Queene yeelded vnto, to the end the Realme might be in quiet at her huſbands returne: but notwithſtanding this accord the King Don Henry ſought to get theſe places by force: ſo as Saluaterra of Alaua and Saint Croix were reduced vnder A his obedience: but Victoria and Logrogno remained in the cuſtody of D.Iohn Ramires of Areillan. King Charles complained to Pope Gregory the eleuenth, at Auignon, of this exceſſe done by the King D.Henry, then he came with all ſpeed into his Realme of Nauarre, to defend it againſt the army of the King D. Henry, who threatned to enter into his country, if hee did not reſtore him the townes of Logrogno and Victoria. King Charles gaue him to vnderſtand, that ſeeing it had beene agreed to put their controuerſies to compromiſe to the Pope, who had ſent a Legat into Spaine, which was Cardinal Guy of Bologno, Biſhop of Portuenſe, that (for his part) hee was well content hee ſhould determine thereof, the which the King D. Henry did alſo yeeld vnto: wherefore the Legat being come to Saint Dominike, and hauing beene made acquainted with the B rights and pretenſions of both Kings, hee made a peace betwixt them, vpon theſe conditions: That the townes of Logrogno and Victoria, ſhould be reſtored to the King of Caſtille: That the Infant D.Charles, eldeſt ſonne to the King of Nauarre, ſhould take to wife Donna Leonora Infanta of Caſtille, daughter to D. Henry, with a dowry of a hundred thouſand doublons at the celebration of the marriage: and moreouer beſides the ſaid ſumme, King Henry ſhould pay at the ſame time, twenty thouſand doublons to the King of Nauarre, for his charges during the time he had held the ſayd places: That for aſſurance of the accompliſhment of this marriage, the Infant D. Pedro, the younger ſonne of Nauarre, ſhould remaine in hoſtage in Caſtile, in the hands of the C Queene D.Ieanne, vntill that the Infant D.Charles ſhould bee of ſufficient age. Theſe things thus determined, the two Kings met at Briona, where they did confirme what had beene formerly concluded; being come into Nauarre, hee preſently ſent his ſonne D. Charles to bee made ſure to the Infanta D. Leonora, who came to Briona, well accompanied by the chiefeſt Noblemen of Nauarre, where this ceremony was done with great pompe: the townes of Victoria and Logrogno, were reſtored, and after the returne of the Infant D.Charles, D.Pedro his brother was ſent vnto the Queene of Caſtile, to remaine there in hoſtage, according to the accord.

A couenant betwixt Caſtile and Nauarre.

The King of Nauarre hauing giuen order for this buſineſſe, hee examined their actions, which had gouerned his Realme during his abſence; and hauing found that ſome D faults had beene committed by the Biſhop of Pampelone, and the Deane of Tudelo, whom he had left for councellors to the Queene his wife, they fearing to bee puniſhed, abſented themſelues. The Biſhop tooke his way to Rome, where hee arriued ſafely, and there ended the remainder of his daies; but as for the Deane, who ſought to ſaue himſelf in Caſtile, he was purſued, and taken nere vnto Logrogno, and there ſlaine by the Kings commandment. Soone after Queen Iean returned into France, where ſhe liued not long.

4 About the end of this yeere 1373. the King D.Charles and his eldeſt ſonne, came to Madrid to ſee the King D. Henry, whom the King of Nauarre let vnderſtand, that to auoide a great trouble in his affaires, which might grow by the meanes of Edward King of England, and Edward Prince of Wales his ſonne, he ſhould imbrace their friendſhip, E the which he had charge to offer him, vpon conditiõ he ſhould breake the league he had with the French king, their enemy, in regard whereof they promiſed to giue no aide vnto the daughters of the deceaſed King D.Pedro, who were in England, making great ſute vnto King Edward, and to the Prince of Wales, to reſtore them to their fathers Inheritance: and moreouer that Iohn Duke of Lancaſter had married D. Conſtance the one of them, by reaſon whereof he pretended the Realme of Caſtile to belong vnto him, as holding the place of the eldeſt, being declared lawful, and receiued in that quality by the Eſtates of the realme, her ſiſter, D.Beatrix being dead. All which pretenſions ſhould bee relinquiſhed by the Engliſh, if he left the alliance of France, & paied a certaine ſum of money vnto the Prince of Wales, the which the D.Pedro his brother did owe him. The F
King of Nauarre propounded theſe things, as hauing charge from the Engliſh Princes, who were enemies to France, whoſe party he had alwaies held, for the wrongs which hee pretended had beene done him by the French King his brother in law: giuing many reaſons, to induce the King D. Henry to incline to this party: but hee (who held not the crowne of Caſtile of any other after God, but of the French) would not ſhew himſelfe

A vnthankfull, but anſwered reſolutely, that he would neuer quit the friendſhip of France: but if the queſtion were to diſburſe money to content the Engliſh, that he was well content to do it: the which the King of Nauarre ſayd was not ſufficient, and that he muſt of neceſſitie breake the League he had with France; but if he held it not fit to do, hee intreated him not to take in ill part what he had ſayd vnto him, ſeeing he had it in charge from the King of England, to whom he was bound to do all good offices. The king Don Henry thanked him for the paines he had taken, to come ſo farre into Caſtile, ſaying, that he could not take that ill which he had ſpoken, but (for his part) he wold perſiſt in his firſt reſolution: ſo as the King of Nauarre returned into his Realme, and the king Don Henry into Andaluſia.

Don Henry K. of Caſtile perſiſts in the amity of France.

B The king of Nauarre aduertiſed the Engliſh Princes of the anſwer he had receiued, the which did much diſcontent them: for the king of Caſtile did much ballance their affaires, by the ſuccours he gaue by ſea vnto the French, hauing ſent a good number of ſhips of warre, vnder the command of Ambroſe Bocanegra a Genouois, his Admirall, who ſtopped the paſſage in ſuch ſort betwixt France and England, as beſides many ſmall prizes which he had taken, he defeated a fleet of Engliſh, about that time, and tooke ſixe and thirty of their veſſels neere vnto Rochel; by which victorie Rochel came vnder the obedience of the French king, and the greateſt part of the prey and priſoners were carried into Spaine; among the which was the Earle of Pembrooke Generall of the army. Beſides which ſuc-

C cours, the king Don Henry being come from Burgos to Saint Ander, he ſent Don Ruy Diaz of Rojas into the Prouince of Guipuſcoa, to make ready a new army of 40. ſhips, the which he ſent ſoone after vnder the command of the ſame Ruy Diaz to the French K. who came to Rochel, and hauing ioyned with a French Captaine called Iohn Calais, who had about twenty Barkes, all together came and ſet vpon another fleet of Engliſh, whom they likewiſe put to rout, and then Don Ruy Diaz returned a victor into Spaine: ſo as the Engliſh had reaſon to ſeeke to diuide the king of Caſtile, from him of France, and to draw him vnto their partie. Pope Gregorie the eleuenth preſumed to interpoſe his authoritie in theſe Princes quarrels, the which did not pleaſe them. Hauing made an accord betwixt the Kings of Caſtile and Nauarre, he would alſo reconcile the controuerſies that were

D betwixt Caſtile and Arragon, and to this end hee ſent the Cardinall of Cominges into Spaine, who preſt the two Kings to ſend their Deputies to debate their cauſe before him. Don Henry named for his part the biſhop of Burgos, and Don Aluar Garcia of Albornoz Lord Steward of his houſe: the king of Arragon deputed the biſhop of Lerida, and Don Raymond Alamin Cerullon, who agreed that the Colledge of Cardinals ſhould determine this controuerſie. But theſe Princes beeing better aduiſed, that it was not fit their quarels ſhould be decided by the Court of Rome, they tooke a better courſe to agree betwixt themſelues. The towne of Tuy which had for many moneths refuſed to obey D. Henry, now ſubmitted about this peace of Arragon.

But the warre was renewed betwixt Caſtile and Portugal, by reaſon of many prizes ta- Portugal.

Hee contemned theſe marriages, which had beene very beneficiall to himſelfe, and to his Realme of Portugall, to marrie this Ladie, offending God and all good lawes: for he tooke her violently from her husband Laurence Vaſques of Acugna, forcing him to flie into Caſtile, Marriage vnlawful of the king of Portugal, taking away his ſubiects wife.

F where he paſt the remainder of his dayes in exile, carrying commonly hornes of ſiluer on his hat, to witneſſe the luſt and infamy of his Prince; yet ſome, to excuſe this fact, write, that the king cauſed this marriage to be diſſolued by the Popes authoritie, as vnlawfull, by reaſon of the neereneſſe of conſanguinitie: of the which (notwithſtanding) there was iſſued one ſonne, called Aluaro of Acugna. The king was made ſure vnto her in the preſence of the Earle of Barcelos, and a ſiſter of hers, called Don Mary, who had mannaged this this marriage, and to whom the king had imparted his loues. When this marriage was A publiſhed in Lisbone, the inhabitants incenſed (that the king had left ſo profitable and Tumult at Liſbon for the kings mariage. honorable a marriage, as that of Caſtile) began to mutine, and hauing taken Fernand Vaſques of Acugna for their Captaine, they ſent 300. armed men about the kings pallace, and gaue the king to vnderſtand in the behalfe of the citty, that hee ſhould leaue this woman, elſe they would take her, and do vnto her as their Predeceſſors had done to the king D. Sancho Capello in the like caſe. The king fearing the furie of this multitude, anſwered them mildly, that in what they did, they were good ſubiects, being iealous of his honour, and thanked them for their good will: but he let them vnderſtand, that D. Leonora Telles was not his married wife, and intreated them to retire vntill the next day, when he would B talke to them more amply of that buſineſſe, in the Monaſterie of S. Dominicke. This blaſt being blowne ouer, the king parted by night out of Lisbone, and carried D. Leonora Telles with him into the countrie betwixt Duero and Minio: and retiring towards Porto, he lodged neere vnto it in the Monaſterie of Leza, where he married this Lady publikely, not caring how his ſubiects tooke it. He commanded that all men ſhould acknowledge her, and call her Queene, and gaue her the townes of Almadra, Sintra, Torreſuedras, Atogna, Ouiedos, Alanguer, Abrantes, Villa vicioſa, and many other places. All in the end yeelded to it without murmuring, ſeing it was the kings pleaſure, and D. Leonora had the title of Queene giuen her by all men, but by D. Denis the kings brother, who would neuer kiſſe her hand, ſaying, That it was her duty to kiſſe his: whereat the King D. Fernand was C ſo incenſed, as if Don Denis had not retired preſently by the meanes of thoſe that were then preſent, he had ſtab'd him with his dagger: for this cauſe the Infant retired himſelfe for euer after into Caſtile. When as D. Leonora Telles ſaw her ſelfe inſtalled Queene, ſhee made a diligent ſearch who had bin the chiefe motiues of the mutiny at Lisbon, and vnderſtanding that they were of the family of Vaſques of Acugna, ſhe ceaſed not to purſue them with a deadly hatred, vntill ſhe had forced many of them to flie into Caſtile.

Genealogie of Portugal. Of this marriage betwixt the king D. Fernand and D. Leonora Telles iſſued D. Beatrix, who was married to D. Iohn the firſt King of Caſtile, borne at Coimbra, and afterwards a ſon and a daughter who died yong: ſome Authors hold, that they were borne in adulterie, committed by the Queene with D. Iohn Fernandes of Andeiro, a knight of Gallicia, D borne at Corunna. Moreouer the king before this marriage, had a daughter called D. Izabel. The king D. Henry hauing theſe cauſes of diſcontent againſt the king of Portugall, he gaue him to vnderſtand by his ambaſſadors, that he could not take it in good part, that he had retired his rebellious ſubiects, of which he demanded ſome: and moreouer, that he ſhould deliuer the ſhips and merchants of Aſturia, Biſcay, & Guipuſcoa with their goods, which he had taken and ſtayed: whereof the K. D. Fernand made no accompt, wherefore the king of Caſtile prepared to armes. Diego Lope Pacheco a knight of Portugal, was then in Caſtile, who was retired thither, by reaſon of the death of D. Agnes of Caſtro, flying the fury of the king D. Pedro: and had bin ſo fauored by the king D. Henry, as he had got great reuenues & honors. This Knight had left many friends in Portugal, by whoſe means E he was aduertiſed of all that was done in D. Fernands Court: and as he was a moſt affectionat ſeruant to the king of Caſtile, ſo he ſought to draw vnto him all thoſe that were valiant in Portugall: and if any one were perſecuted, he perſwaded him to come into Caſtile, declaring vnto them the bountie of the king D. Henry. He had had intelligence of all that had paſt touching the marriage of D. Leonora Telles, and of the diſcontent betwixt the K. and his brother D. Denis, and them of the houſe of Acugna, and the city of Lisbon: wherfore imbracing theſe occaſions fit for the war, which was like to grow betwixt theſe two kings, Diego Lope Pacheco wrought ſo, as he drew D. Denis to come and put himſelfe vnder the protection of the king D. Henry, & entertayned by all means ſuch Gentlemen as were ill affected to their King, to be reuenged of the wrongs he had done them. Matters beeing F
thus prepared, and the ambaſſador being returned, who had bin ſent to ſummon the king D. Fernand to deliuer the baniſhed men which he had in his Realm, & to make reſtitution of the prizes which had bin taken by him, the king D. Henry entred into Portugal with an War betwixt Caſtile and Portugal. army, and hauing ſent D. Alphonſo his ſon to Coimbra (a caſtle in Gallicia where the baniſhed men had fortified themſelues) the place was taken.

A The king on his ſide ſeized of Almorda, Panel, Cillonico and Linares, and there Don Denis ioyned with him, with other Noblemen of Portugal, who were liberally intreated, and much honoured. Pope Gregorie the eleuenth reſiding in Auignon, hearing of the troubles betwixt theſe two kings, was carefull (like a good paſtor) to ſend a Legat, which was Cardinall Guy of Bologno, with full authoritie to reconcile them. But before that hee could draw the parties to any friendly compoſition, the king Don Henry made a new entrie, tooke Viſeo, and ranne vp the countrie as farre as S. Iren, finding no reſiſtance: for Don Fernand was not ſo able to maintain a quarrell, as he was ready to breed one: wherfore keeping himſelfe within Saint Iren, the king Don Henry had the paſſage free and open to go vnto Lisbone, where he ſpoyled and burnt the lower part of the towne, as the
B new ſtreet, and ſome other places, for that he neither found walles, nor any reſiſtance: the quarter called Sus, held good, being walled in, and well manned; for all the inhabitants were retired thither: during the which, the ſea-armie of Caſtile entred into the mouth of the riuer, which is large and ſpacious, where they did not onely recouer the ſhips of Biſcay, and others which had beene taken; but many veſſelles of all ſorts, which were fit for ſeruice, were carried away by the Caſtillans, and the reſt burnt. In the meane time the Legate laboured what he could to end theſe miſeries, wherein he preuailed ſo much, as hee reduced the two kings to a peace, the which was concluded to the great aduantage of the king of Caſtile; after which the kings met neere vnto Saint Iren, either of them in a barke
C vppon the riuer of Tayo, where they finiſhed their accord and capitulations: among the which there was a marriage concluded betwixt Donna Beatrix, ſiſter to the king D. Fernand, and Don Sancho Earle of Albuquerque, brother to the king of Caſtile, and of Donna Izabella baſe daughter to the king Don Fernand, and Don Alphonſo Earle of Gijon, baſe ſonne to the king Don Henry. The mariage betwixt Don Sancho and Donna Beatrix was celebrated; the places taken were reſtored, the peace was proclaimed, and the king of Caſtile returned into his countrie, leading his daughter-in-law Donna Izabella with him, being but eight yeares old, who was afterwards married to the Earle of Gijon, to his great griefe.

Peace betwixt Caſtile and Portugal.

The quarrels betwixt Caſtile and Arragon, being not well ended, they were forced to come to a new compromiſe, wherein the Duke of Anjou brother to the French king was
D a dealer, but with ſo bad ſucceſſe, as he became enemie to the K. of Arragon. At that time were celebrated the mariages of D. Iohn D. of Girone, the heire of Arragon, and Martha daughter to the Earle of Armaignac, who had fifteene thouſand pounds ſtarling in dowrie: and of Don Martin of Arragon, the kings youngeſt ſonne, with Donna Mary, daughter to Don Lopes Earle of Luna, and Lord of Segorbe. The ſame yeare 1372. Don Pedro king of Arragon finding too late, how eaſie he had beene to beleeue falſe reports, and repenting himſelfe of the vnworthie death of Bernard of Cabrera, hee reſtored his Grand-child Bernardin, ſonne to Bernardin of Cabrera, to all his goods, except the Earldome of Vic, which he kept to himſelfe. The father of this young Nobleman dyed in Caſtile, in the ſeruice of the king Don Henry, notwithſtanding, that hee had ſought his fa-
E thers death. There were this yeare ſeene in Arragon horrible Earthquakes, with the ruins of mountaines about Ribagorça, where as many villages were ouerthrowne, and great multitudes of people periſhed.

Arragon.

In Caſtile the king Don Henry was preſt by Donna Maria of Lara, Counteſſe of Alençon, to do her right for the Lordſhips of Biſcay and Lara: ſhe had many ſons which were all aduanced in France: the firſt was Earle of Alençon, the ſecond of Eſtampes, the third of Perch, and two of the Church. The king Don Henry made anſwer, that ſhe ſhould ſend him two of her ſonnes to remaine in Spaine, and that he would giue the Lordſhip of Biſcay to the one, and that of Lara to the other. He preſumed that ſhe could not do it: all her children being ſo well aduanced in France, and for ſome other reaſons.

F Edward king of England, and his ſonne Iohn Duke of Lancaſter, (who intitled himſelfe King of Caſtile and Leon, in the right of his wife Donna Conſtance, daughter to the king Don Pedro the Cruel) ſent Ambaſſadors to the king of Arragon, in the yeare 1373. to treat a League with him: beeing reſolued to ſend a great army into Caſtile, to conquer that Realme, wherof the Duke of Lancaſter ſhould be Generall, as belonging to his wife: offering offering great conditions to the king of Arragon, if he would adhere to their partie. The A king of Arragon demanded the Realme of Murcia, the townes of Requegna, Otiel, Moya, Cagnete, the citty of Cuenca, and the Segneurie of Molina, with other places vppon the frontier of Caſtile, whereof he held ſome: but hoping he ſhould haue a better compoſition with the king D. Henry, he kept himſelfe betwixt both, being doubtfull what to do, ſo as nothing was concluded for that time with the ambaſſadors of England.

During theſe reuolutions in Spaine in temporall affaires, religion was managed by di-uers ſects of Monkes, eſpecially by the begging Friars of Saint Dominick and Saint Fran- cis, who this yeare incenſed the people againſt a new Order which had riſen in Spaine in the time of the king Don Pedro, through the deuout ignorance of certaine Italians of B Sienna, religious Hermits, who had heard one of their companions, called Friar Thomas,
7. ſay dying, by a Propheticall ſpirit, ſayd they, that within few dayes the holy Ghoſt Order of Saint Ierom in Spain ſhould come into Spaine, and that he had this by reueſation: wherfore all theſe religious men thinking that the holy Ghoſt did not frequent much in Italy in thoſe times, and that it was ſomething which they muſt ſeeke farre off in a ſtrange countrie: they left Italy, and came into the countrie of Toledo, hoping to get the grace of the holy Ghoſt, and therby ſaue their ſoules.

The fame of theſe men being ſpred ouer Spaine, a biſhop of Iaen called D. Alphonſo Pecha, and Don Pero Fernand Pecha his brother, Chamberlaine to the king Don Pedro, Hernando Ianes Chanoine of Toledo, and chiefe Chaplaine of the chappell of the aunci- C ent Kings, with many other Chriſtians, commending the reſolution of theſe Friars, and their ignorance, being deſirous to liue in that contemplation, ioyned with them, leauing Biſhoprickes, Chanonries, Benefices and Eſtates, and chuſing their aboads in caues and woods farre from the ſocietie of men, where they began to liue a wonderfull auſtere life, ſaying, that it was according to the rule of Saint Paul, that they muſt ſuffer many diſcommodities, to liue like Chriſtians, and that it was the meanes to gaine Paradice. This ſect beeing in great eſteeme, the begging Friars began to blame the people for following of theſe men, who had no ſetled Order nor diſcipline among them, and (which did more import) had no approbation from the Pope. For theſe reaſons the inconſtant multitude began to retire themſelues, and to abate much of their deuotion, which theſe good Her- D mits finding, to their great griefe, they tooke councell among themſelues to ſend vnto the Pope, to get authoritie from him for a name, rule, profeſſion, order, and aboade. The meſſengers were Friar Peter Fernandez of Guadajara, and Friar Peter Romaine of their company: who beeing come before the Pope, expoſed their deuotion vnto him, their Approbation of the Order of S. Ierome by the Pope. maner of life, exerciſes in religion, their means and merits, beſeeching him that he would bee pleaſed to approoue their Order and profeſſion, giuing them for Patron the great Doctor Saint Ierome, to whome all were moſt addicted.

The Pope made no difficultie to allow of them, hauing had ſome former information of that which they had ſayd, appointing them to liue vnder the rule of S. Auguſtine, hee preſcribed what manner of garment they ſhould weare, and ſent backe theſe Deputies in- E to Spaine, with Buls, in October, 1373. By this approbation from the Pope, theſe Monkes crept into credit, and did build their firſt conuent in a place called Lupiana, in the Archbiſhoppricke of Toledo, two leagues from Guadalajara, dedicating it to Saint Bartholo- mew, the which was ſince the chiefe of the Order: the Prior of which Monaſterie is Generall of the Order for three yeares, and is bound to reſide in that Monaſterie during his charge. Since by the bountie of the Princes of Spaine, theſe Hermits haue built many Conuents, and haue greatly inlarged their poſſeſſions. Their exerciſe is more in ſinging then ſtudying, the which they do neglect expreſly, to the end they might not be diuerted from their ſimple contemplation, notwithſtanding there haue beene ſome great Prea- F chers found among them, and men of vnderſtanding in great affaires of State.

Returning to politicke worldly affaires, the king D. Henry beeing aduertiſed of the practiſes betwixt the Engliſh and the king of Arragon, he ſought to entertain the hope of compromiſe propounded by the Cardinall Guy of Bologne, who by the Popes commandement, was a mediator to make this peace. In the meane time hee had intelligence with Lewis Duke of Aniou, Gouernor of Languedoc; and concluded, that hee ſhould

A preſſe the Engliſh towards Bayone, and the duke of Aniou vppon the limits of his gouernment, and then hauing ioyned their forces together, they ſhold annoy them all they could in Guienne: for he had intelligence that Iohn Duke of Lancaſter had imparted his enterpriſes, and ioyned his forces with thoſe of Iohn of Montfort Duke of Brittaine, making preparation to enter into Caſtile: the which he thought fit to preuent, and to aſſaile him in Guienne, whileſt that Philip the Hardy, Duke of Bourgongne, and brother to the French king, made warre againſt the Engliſh in Artois and Vermandois: and to this effect the king D. Henry gaue order to rayſe an armie in Rioja. Whileſt that the troupes were leuying, the Court being at Burgos, there fell a quarrell betwixt the ſeruants of D. Sancho Earle of Albuquerque, the kings brother, and them of D. Pedro Gonçales of Mendoça
B for their lodgings, whether the Earle running to pacifie this broyle, (whereof neither hee, nor D. Pedro were guilty) he was thruſt through with a lance and ſlaine, by one that knew him not. The king parting from Burgos, came to Rioja, where hauing muſtred his army, he found 6200. horſe, whereof 1200. were Genets, with the which he paſt to Bayone, being aſſured by the Duke of Aniou, that he would come and ioyne with him. And to keepe the king of Arragon in awe, Don Iames Infant of Majorca, husband to Ieanne Queene of Naples, was come to Narbone with good troupes, threatning to enter into Cattelogne.

8. Preparation of Iohn duke of Lancaſter to warre againſt D. Henry of Caſtile.

The K. D. Henry paſſing by Alaua and Guipuſcoa, entred into the territorie of Bayone,
C where he found no great reſiſtance, for the armie of Engliſh, which had beene hotly purſued by the Duke of Bourgongne, beeing come to Bourdeaux, was much diminiſhed. There he ſtayed ſome dayes for the Duke of Aniou, hauing ſent Pero Fernandes of Velaſco, his Lord Chamberlaine, and Don Iohn Ramires of Areillan, to haſten him: but they found him buſied in taking of townes and caſtels from the Engliſh, ſome by force, ſome by compoſition, ſo as the king Don Henry returned with his army into Spaine, hauing done no great exploite.

D. Henry of Caſtile entres Guienne with an armye againſt the Engliſh.

Paſſing through Guipuſcoa, Don Bertrand of Gueuara, Lord of Ognate, who had done him great ſeruice, made ſute vnto him to giue him the towne of Mondragon, whereof the Inhabitants beeing aduertiſed, they ſent their Deputies to informe the king
D what wrong he ſhould do himſelfe, if hee ſhould alienate ſuch a place from the Crown, the which (beſides the great commerce, by reaſon of the forges of Iron and ſteele, which were continually ſet a worke thereabouts) was a fort of great conſequence, vppon the which there might be many deſſeines made: for the Caſtell (which was then entire) was impregnable: beſeeching him to be an eye witneſſe, and to paſſe by the place, remembring that the Inhabitants of Mondragon had beene alwaies faithfull vnto him, and that during the warres betwixt him, and the King Don Pedro, they had alwayes followed his partie. The king promiſed to paſſe by their towne, wherefore the Inhabitants thereof, and of the countrie thereabouts beganne to make the lower way, which goes from that towne to Ognate, whereas before they were forced to paſſe the mountaine called Bacue, E to the end the King ſhould not be tyred with paſſing ouer it. This paſſage is at this day called Euripide, a corrupted word, in ſted of Erreguevide, the which in that countrie language ſignifies a way for the king.

The King Don Henry hauing viewed the ſituation of the towne and fort, with the commodities thereof; and conſidered of the Inhabitants reaſons, he would not yeeld vnto the petition of Don Bertrand of Gueuara, but he gaue him in recompence the valley of Leniz, with all iuriſdiction, both ciuill and criminall. This valley was wont to depend vppon Mondragon, but then it was taken from it, and the ſayd Bertrand, and his ſucceſſors haue enioyed it for the ſpace of an hundred, foureſcore, and two yeares, or there-abouts, vnto the yeare 1556. when it was vnited vnto the Crowne, by a decree of the Kings Councell
F of Caſtile. The king parting from Mondragon, returned to Burgos, from whence he paſt to Leon, and then to Seuile.

Whileſt that the king of Arragon was attentiue to the warre againſt the Engliſh, the Infant Don Iames of Majorca, husband to the Queene of Naples, entred into Cattelogne with fifteene hundred lances, beeing aſſiſted by the Kings of France and Caſtile, and by the Duke of Aniou, where he did much harme. On the other ſide Bernard baſtard of Foix,

Arragon.

Foix, firſt Duke of Medina Celi, and Geoffrey Rechon, a Knight of Brittanie, Lord of A- A guilar del campo, allyed, and friends to the Infant of Majorca, ſpoyled the countrie of Arragon, by Medina Celi, the which did wonderfully trouble the King of Arragon, and made him ſtudie how hee might ſpeedily end the controuerſies which he had with the king Don Henry.

The Infant Don Iames of Majorca hauing ſpoyled Cattelogne, paſt into Arragon, to do the like: but he was forced to retire for want of victuals, leading his armie into Caſtile, where he fell ſicke and dyed in Almaçan, in the beginning of the yeare 1375. His troupes returned into Gaſconie, with Iohn of Maleſtit, their chiefe leader. In this armie was Icanne of Majorca, Marqueſſe of Montferrat, ſiſter to the deceaſed Don Iames, who B paſt alſo into Gaſconie.

Some were of opinion, that this attempt of the Infant of Majorca, was not without the intelligence of ſome great men of Arragon, who had drawne him into the countrie, whereof the king made diligent informations. At that time there was ſo great a dearth in Arragon, as they were forced to begge a paſſage for corne out of Affricke and Maurita-nia, the which did warrant the country from this inuaſion, more then any reſiſtance that the king D. Pedro could make.

An. 1374. Caſtille. This yeare 1374. the King of Caſtile redeemed from Bertrand of Gueſclin, Conſtable of France, the towne of Soria, and the rights of Molina, which he had giuen him, paying him 240000. doublons, and moreouer he gaue him the Earle of Pembrooke, an Engliſh C man, who was a priſoner, and ſet at 10000. pounds ſterling for his ranſome, and the Lord of Piene for 3400. pounds, with many other knights and Captains Engliſh, or their parti-ſans, as well for this redemption, as for the remainder which was due to him & his troups. And holding alwaies good correſpondencie with the French K. during the war againſt the Engliſh, he ſent him a good armie by ſea, whereof D. Fernand Sanches of Touar was Admirall, the which beeing ioyned vnto the French, did much annoy the Engliſh coaſts.

The practiſes of a peace betwixt Caſtile and Arragon being continued, the ambaſſa-dors of both kings met at Almaçan, whether came the Queene of Caſtile, and her ſonne D. Iohn. There were for Caſtile, the Biſhops of Plaiſance and Palence, and D. Pedro Gon-çales of Mendoça, Lord Steward to the Infant of Caſtile, with his brother D. Iohn Hurta-do of Mendoça Standard-bearer alſo to the Infant, & Pedro Fernandes of Velaſco, Cham-D berlaine to the king. For the king of Arragon came the Archb. of Sarragoſſa, and D. Raymond Alaman Ceruillion, who treated of the differences betwixt the two kings, with great eagerneſſe, in the preſence of the Queene of Caſtile. The king D. Henry demanded, that the Infanta D. Leonora, daughter to D. Pedro king of Arragon, ſhould bee deliuered to the Infant D. Iohn his Son, to whom ſhe was made ſure. The king of Arragon anſwe-red, that the king of Caſtile muſt performe that which he had promiſed and ſworne, when he came firſt out of France into Caſtile, by Arragon, which was to giue him the lands of-ten before mentioned: whereunto he of Caſtile replyed, that he was no more bound, for E that the king of Arragon had beene ſince in League with the Prince of Wales his ene-mie, and had had many treaties with other Princes to his preiudice: Moreouer, that re-turning the ſecond time out of France he had not giuen him free paſſage through Arra-gon. Beſides theſe maine articles, there were others of leſſe conſequence, all which were reconciled by theſe Deputies.

9. Accord betwixt D. Henry King of Caſtile and D. Pedro king of Arragon.

The accord was made the twelfth of Aprill 1374. in the Monaſterie of Saint Francis of Almaçan, as followeth: That the Infanta Donna Leonora of Arragon ſhould bee giuen to the Infant Don Iohn of Caſtile, as his lawfull wife, with a dowrie of two hundred thou-ſand Florens of the coyne of Arragon, which ſumme the king Don Henry ſhould hold for receiued, for the charges which the king of Arragon might haue beene at in the firſt F paſſage which hee made through Arragon into Caſtile. The King of Arragon ſhould reſtore Molina, Almaçan, and other places which he had gotten during the troubles of Spaine: aud to auoyde all future controuerſies betwixt the parties, Don Henry king of Caſtile ſhould pay vnto him of Arragon an hundred and eighty thouſand Florens, at dayes appointed.

For

A For aſſurance whereof the forts of Requegna, Otiel and Moya ſhould be left in depoſito in the hands of the Arch-biſhop of Sarragoſſa, and of Don Raymond Alaman of Ceruillon. Theſe things thus concluded, the King D. Henry came to Soria, with the Queene his wife and children, whither the Infanta D. Leonora of Arragon was ſent: thither alſo came Don Charles Infant of Nauarre, ſo as there were two marriages celebrated in that cittie, betwixt Don Iohn of Caſtile, and D. Leonora of Arragon, and betwixt Don Charles of Nauarre, and D. Leonora of Caſtile, but there was a moneths reſpite betwixt the one and the other. Spaine being at peace within it ſelfe, by theſe accords and allyances made betwixt Caſtile, Arragon, Nauarre, Portugal, and Granado, it were fit to treat of the employments of the Princes and people of thoſe countries, touching arts, ſciences, lawes,
B and ciuill gouernement, but the records of ſuch things are very defectiue. Wee reade briefly, that the king Don Henry appointed companies, which they call Hermandades, which are aſſemblies of Commonalties in the Prouince of Guipuſcoa, where they treat of affaires and negotiations concerning their Princes ſeruice, and the preſeruation of the countrie.

As for the King of Nauarre, who was turbulent and an enemie to reſt, hee forged and Nauarre.
inuented a new quarrell againſt the King Don Henry, vppon the payment of an hundred and fiftie thouſand Doublons which hee had promiſed for the marriage of his daughter Donna Leonora: for the King of Nauarre refuſed an hundred and fiftie thouſand Reals of C ſiluer, which was part of this payment, ſaying, that the king of Caſtile was bound to pay him the ſumme in gold. Theſe Reals remayned long in the towne of Logrogno, and in the end were loſt for the king of Nauarre, by reaſon of the quarrels and tumults which enſued.

The Infant Don Pedro, the ſecond ſonne of Nauar, who had beene in hoſtage, was deliuered. At that time the king of Nauarre was aduertiſed, that Don Rodrigo of Vrris, a knight which had done him great ſeruice in all his affaires both in France and Spaine, had ſecret intelligence with Don Henry, king of Caſtile, who had a deſire to ſeaze on Tudele vppon Ebro, and vppon Caparoçe, notwithſtanding the accords and allyances con- 10 tracted with him. Of which places Don Rodrigo was Gouernor, who beeing ſollicited to Treaſon of D. Rodrigo of Vrris diſcouered and puniſhed by the king of Nauarre.
D this end, had a promiſe from the king Don Henry of a great recompence in Caſtile, and to giue him his owne Neece to wife, beeing daughter to one of his breethren, with other great aduancements: an vſuall thing in Princes, when they ſeeke to draw any one vnto their ſeruice. King Charles informed hereof, was much grieued, for hee loued Don Rodrigo: who to diuert him from this trecherous practiſe, ill befitting a knight of honour, he let him vnderſtand, that he had intelligence of the marriage which hee treated in Caſtile, aduiſing him not to giue eare to it in any ſort, without the conſent of his Councel: this meſſage was deliuered vnto him by Martin of Vrris his brother, and Iohn Renaud Captaine of Tudele, and by Don Sancho of Vrris, one of the kings Councell.

Don Rodrigo thinking that the king was ignorant of his other practiſes, but had only
E ſome intelligence of his marriage, neglected what they had ſayd vnto him, and went on his way, as it were, to be married: beeing come to Pampelona, hee was ſtayed by the kings commandement; where beeing examined vppon the treaſon, and not able to diſproue what was auerred againſt him, hee was condemned to looſe his head, the which was executed, yet ſecretly, to preſerue the honour and eſtimation of his family and kinſfolkes, to whome the bodie was deliuered, and interred by them in the Monaſterie of Saint Auguſtine at Pampelona.

Many other knights of Nauarre were ſo terrified with this death, to whom the carriage and behauiour of king Charles was neither pleaſing nor profitable, as they left their Countrie, and retired themſelues, ſome into Caſtile, ſome into other places, where they were well receiued and entertayned. Such were the effects of the peace and concord be-
F twixt the Princes of Spaine then raigning. This happened in the yeare 1376. when as D. Bernard Foucault Biſhop of Pampelona, dying in Italy there ſucceeded him D. Martin of Salua, a great Doctor in the ciuill and canon Lawes, equalled in that knowledge, yea preferred by the Spaniards to Baldus, who liued in his time. This biſhop was a defender of the eccleſiaſticall rights, & did much good to his church, retiring the lands belonging therto, out of the hands of many lay-men which had vſurped them: namely, thoſe of Villa Toro, A Villa Major and Montreal, with other tythes. This yeare the townes of Pampelona, Puente la Reyna, Gatde, S. Vincent, Arcos, and Saint Iohn of Pie de port, allowed of the marriage betwixt the Infant Don Charles, and D. Leonora of Caſtile, with the oaths and ceremonies vſed in thoſe times, acknowledging for their Prince, and heire to the Crown, the firſt borne ſon of that marriage, the which king Charles did procure, that he might the better confirme the future ſucceſſion.

11. Arragon.

The affaires paſſing after this manner in Spaine, the king of Arragon, who thought himſelfe freed from all troubles by the peace made with Caſtile, and the deceaſe of the Infant D. Iames of Majorca, found himſelfe intangled in new croſſes, and of greater conſe- B
quence then any of the precedent: for D. Ieanne Marqueſſe of Montferrat, ſiſter and heire to the Infant of Majorca, beeing paſt into France, after the deceaſe of her brother, had made ceſſion vnto Lewis Duke of Anjou, the French kings brother, of all the rights which ſhe pretended to the Realme of Majorca, Countie of Roſſillon and Cerdagne, Colibre and Valiſper, which Segneuries the duke pretended to recouer by armes, ſeeing that the king Don Pedro would not come to any friendly compoſition: ſo as he ſtayed onely for the concluſion of a peace, which was treated with the Engliſh, before he entred in hoſtile manner into Cattelogne, with the forces which hee had vnder his charge and iuriſdiction, which were foure thouſand Lances: wherewith the King of Arragon beeing much troubled, he called a generall Aſſembly of the Eſtates of Arragon, Valence, Cattelogne, C Majorca, and his other Dominions and territories, at Monçon, to preuent this warre, which did threaten him.

Ceſſion of the rights of Roſſillon, Cerdagne, &c. to the houſe of Anion.

Iewes and Moores of Spaine bare the extraordinary charges of the warre.

The Eſtates made anſwer vnto the King, who demanded money, that the ſubiect could not contribute any more, beeing ruined by the great charges which they had borne ſome yeares before: and that the ancient cuſtome was, that the Iewes and Moores which were ſubiects to the Kings of Arragon, ſhould beare the extraordinarie charges of the warre, if need required: wherefore he ſhould addreſſe himſelfe vnto thoſe men. At the aſſembly the Vicount of Cardona tooke the title of Earle, by a decree of the Eſtates. The affaires of Sardinia did augment the king of Arragons cares, for all went from bad to worſe, ſo as the Gouernor of Cailleri was driuen to that deſpaire, as hee was readie to ſet fire of the D towne, and to flie away by ſea, being vnable to reſiſt Hugh the ſonne of Marian, the new Iudge of Arborea, his father being lately deceaſed: who ſhewed himſelfe a more violent enemie againſt the Arragonois, then his father had beene: the which was the more to bee feared, for that the Geneuois hauing broken the peace made and confirmed by Iohn Marqueſſe of Montferrat, with the king of Arragon, had entred into the Iland of Sardynia, and ioyning their forces with them of the Iudge, had attempted Pole neere to Cailleri, and done many other acts of hoſtility.

An. 1377.

This yeare 1377. Philip the Hardy, Duke of Bougongne, went in pilgrimage to Saint Iames of Galicia, paſſing, he viſited the king Don Henry at Segobia, who receiued him honorably, and gaue him many rich preſents. About the ſame time D. Gomes Manrique E Arch-biſhop of Toledo being dead, this great and rich liuing was affected by many, by reaſon whereof the Court of Caſtile was diuided into factions, euery one fauouring his kinſman or friend, that aſpired to this dignitie, not to be Miniſters of the word of God, and to inſtruct the people in Chriſtian Religion, but to be worldly great, rich and mighty, companions to Kings, and commanders ouer armies, according to the cuſtome of that age. The King Don Henry did much fauour D. Iohn Garcia Manrique Biſhop of Siguença, whoſe ſiſter D. Iohn Ramires of Areillan had married. Vpon this election, where there were ſo many pretendants, D. Iohn Ramires thinking he had need of the Popes fauor and authoritie, went to Auignon well accompanied with Noblemen, his friends and kinſmen, F but he did not obtaine that which he pretended: for Pope Gregorie the eleuenth then raigning, declared Don Pedro Tenorio Biſhop of Coimbra, Arch-biſhop of Toledo. Thus theſe Pretendants loſt this rich bootie which they expected: much vnlike vnto Don Martin Martines of Calaorra, Arch-deacon of Calatraua, in the church of Toledo, who beeing choſen ſome yeares before by the Chapter, and a generall conſent, to bee Biſhop of Calaorra, hee excuſed himſelfe, and would not accept of this dignitie, which

A is one of the richeſt, and of greateſt iuriſdiction in Spaine, next to Toledo. Don Iohn Ramires of Areillan returning by Cattelogne, hee was deſirous to kiſſe the king of Arragons hands, beeing at Barcelona, whither came the Vicount of Rueda, who in the kings preſence accuſed Don Iohn Ramires of certaine crimes, offering him the combate if hee ſhould deny it: Don Iohn Ramires regarding his honour, accepted of this challenge: for the performance whereof, the King of Arragon aſſigned ninetie dayes, at which time Don Iohn ſhould preſent himſelfe to the combate, or elſe they would proceede againſt him, according to the lawes and orders of combats.

Don Iohn Ramires returned in the meane time into Caſtile, and made relation vnto the B King Don Henry how he had beene challenged, and that he muſt preſent himſelfe in Arragon at the day appointed, whereas his enemie was much fauoured by the king Don Pedro: the which the king of Caſtile hauing well conſidered, and fearing that Don Iohn Ramires (whome he loued dearely for his integritie and vertues) ſhould receiue ſome indignitie, in a countrie where he was not beloued, he reſolued to ſend a gentleman to the King of Arragon, to let him vnderſtand, that no man liuing was better acquainted then himſelfe, with the qualities and conditions of Don Iohn Ramires of Areillan, and how that he had carried himſelfe like a Knight of honour in all his actions, euen when hee was Chamberlaine to the ſame king of Arragon, and employed by him in the warre againſt Don Pedro king of Caſtile: wherefore he intreated him to cauſe this appeale made by the C Vicount to ceale: whereof the King ſeeking to excuſe himſelfe, the Ambaſſador replyed: Sir, ſeeing it is your pleaſure that this combate ſhall be fought, vnderſtand, that the King of Caſtile my Lord is reſolued to ſend at the time you haue appointed three thouſand Lances, to accompanie Don Iohn Ramires, to the end that hee may be no way inferiour, neither for the ſafetie of his perſon, nor for ſupport, vnto his aduerſarie, ſeeing that the quarrell muſt be decided in a ſtrange Countrie, where as the Prince ſhewes himſelfe partiall. The King Don Pedro taking theſe words in ill part, fell into a great diſpute with this Gentleman, who made him a diſcreet anſwer: wherefore fearing that this might kindle a new fire betwixt Caſtile and Arragon, after much conſultation, hee commanded the Vicount to deſiſt from his challenge, declaring that Don Iohn Ramires was a good Knight. Thus paſt the D affaires betwixt Caſtile and Arragon in the yeare 1376.

Ambaſſadors ſpeech to the King of Arragon.

Nauarre. 12. Detention of the Prince of Nauarre.

At which time Don Charles Infant of Nauarre, beeing deſirous to viſite the Court of France, did ſo importune the King his father, as hee got leaue, from the which hee was much diſſwaded by the King of Caſtile his father-in-law, who aſſuredly knew what reaſons the French King had to hate the King of Nauarre. For beſides, that hee had perſwaded him to leaue and abandon the league of France, and to adhere vnto the Engliſh, as wee haue before ſhewed, hee had ſince ingaged and deliuered vnto them the Towne of Cherbourg in Normandy, and entertained many practiſes, to the preiudice and diſcommoditie of France, whereof the French King was particularly aduertiſed.

Notwithſtanding all this, the Infant Don Charles went on his intended and determi-
E ned iourney, preſuming that hee had not offended any way the King his Vncle, and that he would not make any queſtion vnto him, concerning the controuerſies and oppoſitions which were betwixt him and his father: and that whatſoeuer ſhould happen beyond his expectation, hee would retire himſelfe to thoſe places which the king his father had in the confines of Normandie, and not approch neere the Court, without promiſe of aſſurance.

With this reſolution hee left Nauarre, very well attended on with a companie of gentlemen, and men of councell, among the which were Baldwin Belloferant, Captaine of many places in Normandy belonging to the king of Nauarre, the which he held by homage: Iames of Rue, a knight, and Chamberlaine to the king, the Seigneur of Ortubia, F Captaine of the Infants Guard, a Basque by nation, within two leagues of Fontaraby: Peter of Eſtampes, a Doctor of Diuinity, and Councellour to the king, with diuers others. The French king beeing aduertiſed before-hand of this voyage, as ſoone as they were entred into France, he cauſed Iames of Rue to be taken, who was found ſeazed of certaine papers and inſtructions, which did much augment the iealouſie of the French: being put to the racke, he confeſt that the king his maſter had plotted with the Engliſh, and that he had charge to ſay vnto the King of England, that if he wold promiſe the duchy of Guienne to the king of Nauar, and entertaine him 2000. lances, he would make warre againſt the French, and employ all his forces of Nauarre, and of his lands in Normandie and other places: whereupon he was put into ſafe-keeping. The Infant beeing much diſcontented at the taking of this knight, not knowing what he had confeſſed, came to the king at Senlis, hauing a ſafe conduct, and beſought him to deliuer this priſoner: to whom the king anſwered, that he wold not deliuer him, but would cauſe his proceſſe to be made and his fathers alſo, meaning to confiſcate all the lands he had within his kingdome: and moreouer, he commanded him not to depart from Court without leaue. He alſo called Baldwin Belloferant before him, and inioyned him to deliuer into his hands, or of his captaines, all the places and forts which he held for the king of Nauarre: the which Baldwin, not able to auoid, promiſed to do, and tooke an oath: notwithſtanding the king gaue him a guard, vntill he had performed what he had promiſed, Fernand of Ayanes, a knight of Nauarre, and Gouernor for the king of Nauar of his lands in Normandie, was alſo apprehended, with many others, who were ſent to Paris, with Iames of Rue, and Peter of Eſtampes. Thereupon the king did write vnto all Princes and Potentates ſtrangers, touching theſe impriſonments, making great complaints of the king of Nauar his brother-in-law: and ſoone after he began ſharpe war againſt the Nauarrois in Normandie: whereof Philip the Hardy, duke of Bourgongne, the kings brother, Lewis duke of Bourbon, and the conſtable Bertrand of Gueſclin were the chiefe Commanders, who in a ſhort ſpace tooke moſt of the townes and forts which the king of Nauarre held in that countrie, there remaining nothing in a manner but Cherbourg; the which beeing held by the Engliſh, maintained the ſeege 7. moneths, and yet the French could not take it. In the mean time the king cauſed D. Pedro the ſecond ſon of Nauarre, and his daughter Mary to bee taken at Breteuil, whom notwithſtanding he kept in a free priſon, and very honorably. At the ſame time there was a Secretary of the king of Nauars, called Peter of Tertre, taken in the caſtle of Bernay, of whom by tortures they diſcouered many practiſes of the king his maſters. He with Iames of Rue were condemned to die, and their bodies being quartered, were hanged in diuers places entring into the citie of Paris.

Theſe newes heard in Nauarre, the king D. Charles was wonderfully troubled, as well for the impriſonment of his children, as for the loſſe of his countrie, and the Infanta D. Leonora his daughter-in-law, was no leſſe afflicted: and that which did moſt diſquiet him, was, that the king to iuſtifie the impriſonment of his children, had informed all Chriſtian Princes of his actions, and had incenſed them againſt him, eſpecially D. Henry king of Caſtile, againſt whom he had caried himſelfe diſdainfully in all his actions, notwithſtanding the alliances and accords made newly betwixt them. And as he was of a harſh diſpoſition, raſh, and without gouernement, he beganne to contriue many bad deſſeines, to preuent ſuch as he feared: and now he repented the death of Don Rodrigo of Vrris, from whome hee had drawne ſo many good ſeruices, and the baniſhment of many other knights, of whom he had then great need: but he hoped the Engliſh would bee a good ſupport for him at all euents: and vpon this ground he reſolued to ſurprize the towne of Logrogno, which was the Rampier of Caſtile againſt Nauarre, preſuming that he ſhould amaze the king Don Henry by this exploite, if it ſucceeded, or hinder him greatly, and let others vnderſtand that he was not altogether daunted: but ſeeing that the place was well manned, and carefully guarded by Don Pedro Manriques, Gouernor of that frontier, hee ſought to corrupt him with promiſes of great aduancement in Nauarre, and twentie thouſand doublons in hand. Don Pedro who was a faithfull ſeruant to the king of Caſtile his maſter, and withall a Knight of honour, aduertiſed the king Don Henry, who was then at Seuile, of all this practiſe: which newes the king receiued at the inſtant when as the French kings ambaſſadours came to Seuile, to preſſe him to make warre againſt the king of Nauarre: which made the king Don Henry more tractable to yeeld to that which they demanded: writing to Don Pedro, that he ſhould entertaine this bargaine with the king of Nauarre, and that hee ſhould ſeeke to take him in Logrogno, and there to keepe him priſoner.

Deſperate diſpoſition of Charles king of Nauarre.

Don Pedro hauing receiued this anſwer, made all poſſible demonſtrations, that he deſired

A ſired to ſatisfie the king of Nauarre, and appointed him a conuenient time to deliuer him the towne, receiuing part of the double Ducats. In the meane time he drew ſecretly into Logrogno a good ſupply of ſoldiers: and the better to aſſure the execution of this enterprize, without hazard, the king D. Henry cauſed Don Pedro Gonçales of Mendoça, to enter into Nauarret with ſixe hundred Lances, who gaue it out, that he had a quarrell with Don Pedro Manriques.

Matters being thus diſpoſed, there remained nothing but for the King of Nauarre to ſhew his indiſcretion, and to enter into Logrogno: the which he was reſolued to do, ſo blind he was in his deſire, notwithſtanding that all his Councell had diſſwaded him, aſſuring him that Don Pedro was not a Knight that would commit ſuch a trecherie againſt his
B King and Lord: and that of neceſſitie he muſt beleeue he meant to deceiue him; yea they did wholly oppoſe themſelues againſt this enterpriſe, ſhewing him the miſchiefe which would enſue by his breach of peace with the king of Caſtile. Notwithſtanding all this good aduice, King Charles failed not to come at the time appointed to the bridge of Logrogno with foure hundred lances, Martin Henriques carrying the Standard royall. Don Pedro Manriques came foorth to meet him, and drew the kings men into the Town, without any brute, where their lodgings were alreadie made, and expecting to bring in the king, he inuited him very courteouſly: but ſuddenly bethinking himſelfe of the miſchiefe whereinto he runne, and repenting that he had drawne ſo many men into danger, he retired from the bridge towards Viane, telling D. Pedro that he wold not enter for that time
C in perſon, but it ſhould be the next day, and that there were ynough to execute that which they had concluded. This was a happy inſpiration, for if hee had entred, he had neuer returned with libertie nor Crowne. Don Pedro Manriques ſeing that the prey was eſcaped, cauſed all the Nauarrois that were entred, to be ſtript, whereof ſome were ſlaine, and others priſoners; yet many eſcaped, leaping ouer the wals and rampiers by the riuer, and other paſſages which they found: yea Martin Henriques, who carried the Standard, ſeing the alarme, and how they were circumuented, keeping his Standard faſt, hee recouered the bridge, where he was enuironed round about by the enemie, but he defended himſelf very valiantly. In the end ſeeing he had no meanes to make his paſſage, he threw himſelfe
D off the bridge into the riuer, with his Standard, and ſo eſcaped by ſwimming, as the Lord of Oloagui had alſo done, who came vnto the king their Lord, and related the entertaynment they had found at Logrogno: whereat he did not maruaile, as hauing fore-ſeene, though too late, what would ſucceed: notwithſtanding he was much diſcontented, for he had loſt many good men. By this attempt the peace betwixt Caſtile and Nauarre was plainely broken.

The Nauarrois ſpoiled in Logrogno.

The king Don Henry being at Seuile, was aduertiſed of all that had paſt, and diſpatched his ſonne Don Iohn, a Prince in the flower of his age, deſirous of honour and fame, who rayſed an armie, to enter ſuddenly into Nauarre. King Charles beeing aduertiſed of theſe preparations, hauing conſulted with his Eſtates, he paſſed to Bourdeaux, to craue ayde
E of the Engliſh, who had then ſome ſuſpenſion of armes with the French. Richard the 2. being newly come to the Crowne, (the which fell out happily for him) who returned with 600. lances Engliſh and Gaſcons, vnder the command of Thomas Trenet an Engliſhman, and the Seigneur of Berbecin a Gaſcon, to employ them in the war againſt Caſtile, the which was very violent that yeare 1378. The king of Nauar had placed garriſons in all the fronter townes, the Engliſh at Tudele, with their Captain: the Gaſcons at Eſtella: the Segneur of Seres a Nauarrois at S. Vincent: he put other good Captaines into Viane, Arcos, Lerin, Sangueſſa, and other places: the charges of which war were ſo great, as hee waſted all his treaſure, ſo as his ſonne Charles coming to raigne, he found not one ducat in his fathers coffers. Thomas Treuet the Engliſh Captaine, was ſlaine in the towne of Puente la Reyna, by the inhabitants, by reaſon of ſome inſolencies. D Iohn Infant of Caſtile, hauing
F drawne together about 4000. lances, and a number of foot out of Biſcay and Guipuſcoa, entred in arms into Nauar, being accompanied by D. Alphonſo of Arragon, Marquis of Villena, and earle of Denia, D. Alphonſo of Vruegna, D. Pedro Earle of Tranſtamara, Princes of the bloud of Caſtile, D. Ruy Diaz of Rojas, Gouernor of Guipuſcoa, with other Noblemen and Captaines of note.

Exploites of D. Iohn and the Caſtillan armie in Nauar

They made a ſhew to beſeege Saint Vincent, but the place being ſtrong both by nature and art, and well manned, they returned to make a muſter at Logrogno, where as Don Pedro Henriques ioyned with them, and then all together entred into Nauar, where they found not any one in field to make reſiſtance: for king Charles was retired on this ſide the mountaines, and attended the ſucceſſe of the warre at Saint Iohn de Pie de port, ſtanding onely vpon his defence: wherefore the Caſtillans burnt Larraga, Artaxona, with many other places, euen vnto the ports of Pampelona, before which cittie the Caſtillan armie ſtayed a whole moneth, D. Iohn beeing lodged in the village of Gorraiz: during which abode the caſtle of Thiebes was yeelded vnto Don Pedro Manriques, who burnt it: It was a caſtle built by king Thibaud the firſt, as in a place of ſtrength and great ſafetie, they had kept the titles and records of the Realme, all which were now burnt, to the great preiudice of the Common-wealth. Wherefore it is no wonder if many of the antiquities of this Realme be at this day vnknowne. Thoſe which yeelded this fort, were a knight called Berrio, Ruy Diaz of Torres, and Solomon Prouoch, Captaines to King Charles. The Caſtillans finding that they had not forces ſufficient to take Pampelona, they diſlodged and beſeeged Viane; which place they tooke by compoſition, after many incounters, vpon condition the defendants ſhould haue their liues and goods ſaued: Guarde was alſo taken.

Records of Nauarre burnt at Thebes.

Thus the Caſtillans hauing done all the ſpoyle they could in the countrie, Don Iohn reſolued to retire with his armie into Caſtile, before that winter (which approched) ſhould incommodate him. In a certaine incounter which they had with the Gaſcons, Ruy Diaz of Royas was ſlaine, which was the greateſt loſſe the Caſtillans had in this expedition. Don Iohn went to the King Don Henry his father, beeing at Toledo, to whom hee gaue an accompt of that which he had done, and then they came together to Burgos, where there was order giuen for a new army, to returne into Nauarre in the Spring. We find by ſome remembrances of thoſe times, that the king of Nauar, complained much of many knights which had not ſhewed themſelues faithfull in this war, yea hauing bin called home by him from baniſhment, graced and reſtored to their honours and charges: among the which is named Don Ramir Sanches of Aſiayn, and Don Iohn Ramir of Areillan the younger: theſe with ſome more retired themſelues one after another to the king of Caſtile, where they found a kind and gracious reception, in ſtead of the harſhneſſe and rigour of King Charles: ſo as in thoſe dayes the Nobility of Nauarre was much decayed, and in a maner extinct. King Charles beeing on this ſide the mountaines, his Realme was gouerned by Iohn of Freſnay, a knight of France, and his Chamberlaine, who aduertiſed him of this new preparation of warre which was made in Caſtile: whereon hauing duly conſidered, finding himſelfe weake, and without money, and ill ſerued by his owne ſubiects, he reſolued to pacifie the king Don Henry, ſending an Ambaſſadour vnto him to Burgos, to mooue him to ſome accord, the which he did not refuſe, but anſwered, that if he ſent him his Ambaſſadors and Deputies with ſufficient authoritie to treate a peace, that he ſhould not find him vntractable to yeeld to any thing that ſhould bee held reaſonable. Wherefore the king of Nauarre did againe employ D. Ramir Sanches of Aſiayn, and ſent him to Burgos, with the Prior of Ronceuaux, men of learning and authority. Theſe Ambaſſadours were heard by the king Don Henry, and entertayned with great courteſie: where hauing diſcourſed, and ſomewhat debated vppon the articles of the peace, in the end it was concluded, That there ſhould bee a perpetuall amitie ſworne betwixt the kings and Realmes of Caſtile and Nauarre, without binding him of Caſtile to alienate himſelfe in any ſort from the league which he had with the French King. That the ſtrangers, Gaſcons, and Engliſh, ſhould be ſent out of Nauarre: That the townes taken by the King of Caſtile from him of Nauarre, ſhould bee reſtored; That the king of Caſtile ſhould preſently lend twenty thouſand ducats vnto the King of Nauarre, to pay the ſouldiers which were to bee diſmiſſed: for aſſurance whereof, the King Don Henry ſhould keepe the towne of Guarde in pawne: That the king of Nauarre for aſſurance of the entertainement of theſe Articles of peace, and that he ſhould not breake it in any ſort, ſhould leaue twentie ſeuerall places of his Realme of Nauarre in pawne, in the cuſtodie and conſeruance of Don Iohn Ramires of the towne of Areillan, namely, the Caſtle of Eſtella,

A the garriſon whereof ſhould be paied by the King of Nauarre, and that Tudelo ſhould receiue a garriſon of Caſtillans: that Larraga, Miranda and Saint Vincent ſhould bee of the number of thoſe twenty places; the which ſhould bee thus held for tenne yeeres, and that expired, without any breach, all ſhould be reſtored to the King of Nauarre, or his ſucceſſor. Theſe Articles being concluded, and ſworne, the warre ceaſed, to the general good of both Kingdomes.

During the warre betwixt theſe two Princes, there grew troubles in the Church, to the ſcandale of all Chriſtendome, Pope Gregory the eleuenth, had reſtored the papall ſeate to Rome, in the yeere 1376. ſeuenty two yeeres after it had beene diſtracted by Pope Clement the fifth, who had beene crowned at Lions. About two yeeres and foure
F monthes after this returne, Gregory dying at Rome, hee left the conſiſtory of Cardinals in great combuſtion, as well among themſelues, as with the people of Rome, who would haue a Romaine, or at the leaſt an Italian choſen Pope, whereof there followed a moſt dangerous Schiſme, for all the Eſtates of Chriſtendome for many yeeres, were tranſported with paſſion, and not with any zeale of religion: for euen then, and before, there was ſuch corruption, as in the gouernment of Clergy matters, there was nothing but ambition, couetouſneſſe, and deſeignes for temporall commodities: Princes cherriſhing Popes, and Popes being hirelings to Princes, to draw fauour, authority and ſupport one from an other, in their affections. After much contention, Vrbain the ſixth came out of the Conclaue, choſen by ſixteene Cardinals, being before Archbiſhop of Bari, borne
C at Naples, his name was Bartlemew Prignan: whoſe election hauing beene much contradicted by the French Cardinals, then allowed, and ſoone after reiected, in the end fifteene of them (not able to agree well with the Pope) being retired to Naples, through fauor of Queene Ieanne, they entred into the Conclaue, and did chooſe an other Pope, whom they named Clement the ſeuenth, called before Robert Cardinal of Geneua, or as ſome write of Cambray, of the title of the twelue Apoſtles, who retired to Auignon, and there held his ſeat, as Vrbain did at Rome.

Caſtile.

As Princes in acknowledging of theſe Popes, were diuided and carried away with their priuat paſſions, Vrbain the ſixth ſeeing that his competitor was ſupported by the French King, ſent Ambaſſadors to D. Henry King of Caſtile, to ſeeke his fauor, who
D finding him at Cordoua, deliuered vnto him the reaſons iuſtifying the election of Vrbain, and condemning that of Clement, intreating him to beleeue that Vrbaine was the true and lawfull Paſtor, a friend to peace, and deſirous of the good of all Chriſtendome. To theſe words, they added a preſent of three peeces of fine ſcarlet, one for the King, an other for the Queene, and the third for the Infant D. Iohn, giuing preſents alſo, in the Popes name, vnto many noblemen of the court, promiſing the King not to conferre the benifices of Spaine to any other prelats, then to ſuch as were borne in the country. In the end they intreat him to diſclaime the Antipope Clement. The King D. Henry hauing conferred with his councel, Doctors, Diuines, and other
E chiefe men of his Realme, vpon the pretenſions of Vrbain; hee made anſwere vnto the Ambaſſadors, that he would let them vnderſtand his minde at Toledo, whether he was then going, where being arriued, there came Ambaſſadors from the French King, who being heard before he had made anſwere to them of Pope Vrbain, they croſt all: for hauing giuen the King of Caſtile to vnderſtand, that the election of Vrbain was forced, by the importunity of the Romains and the partiality of the Cardinals, and that Clement had beene choſen with the better title as they pretended. King Henry reſolued not to acknowledge any of them for Pope, ſending Doctors into France, to informe themſelues of the matter, and to report vnto him what they ſhould finde, being wonderfully perplexed in minde, not knowing how he ſhould gouerne himſelfe, with a good conſcience, in this Schiſme: but he was ſomewhat pacefied, vpon the determination which F ſhould be made by a General councel, and in the meane time he commaunded that all the money due for Annates, or other proffits, belonging, or accuſtomed to be receiued by the Apoſtolike ſea of Rome, in Spaine, ſhould be laied in Depoſito, vntill it were declared by the Catholike church, who was lawfull Pope, with this anſwere the Ambaſſadors of either part returned: The like reſolution was taken in Arragon, touching this Schiſme.

Caſtile acknowledgeth no Pope.

Schiſme. From Tolledo the King of Caſtile came to Burgos, where a peace with Na- A uarre was concluded, as we haue ſaid: after which the King of Nauarre came to Alfaro, to viſit the Infant D. Iohn of Caſtile, and there he accompliſhed ſome part of the capitulation. The King of Caſtile being come from Burgos to Saint Dominike of Calçada, he was alſo viſited by Charles King of Nauarre, with great ſhewes of loue, of either ſide, and there they finiſhed that which remained of their accord, the which was very preiudicial for the King of Nauarre, reaping the fruits of his turbulent ſpirit, as he had done in France. The King D. Henry neuer parted from Saint Dominike, for he was poiſoned by the treachery of Mahumet the old, King of Granado. This Moore ſeeing that the King of Caſtile was at peace with all other Kings his neighbours, and knowing B him to be warlike, and a great vndertaker, hee was in feare leaſt he ſhould inuade his country of Granado: wherefore he ſent a captaine to his court, ſaying that he was baniſhed. This Moore ſeeming to flie his Princes wrath, came and preſented his ſeruice vnto the King D. Henry, and offred him in guift many pearles and precious ſtones, with other goodly preſents, amongſt the which there was a paire of rich buskins, infected with poiſon, the which were ſo pleaſing vnto the King, as he would preſently put them on: but ſoone after he beganne to finde himſelfe ill, and within few daies died. He commanded his ſonne to entertaine the amity of France, whileſt he liued, and to follow the French in that which concerned the Schiſme of the church. He was interred in the ſame chappell which he himſelfe had cauſed to be built, in the great church of Toledo, C the which ſince hath been augmented with reuenues, by the Archbiſhop D. Alphonſo of Fonſeca, in the time of our fathers, and they cal it the chappel of the laſt Kings. It is worthy obſeruation, that this King hauing alienated from the crowne, many townes and other places, to recompence the ſeruices which he had receiued from Noblemen and Knights of Caſtile, and others, in the conqueſt of the Realme, he put a clauſe in his will, which did afterwards breed many complaints and controuerſies in Caſtile: which was, that ſuch donations made by him ſhould goe vnto the eldeſt, the which is called in Spaine Majorazgos, the which they haue interpreted, as if no collateral heire might inherit them: according to the which in ſuch controuerſies many decrees haue beene made in the Chancery, and the Kings councell, anexing ſuch lands vnto the crowne. D. D Alphonſo biſhop of Carthagena, ſaith, that this King died of the goute, making no mention of any poiſon, whereof it may be this author was ignorant. Being neere his end, he deſired to be attired in the habit of Saint Dominike, and to die in it. He raigned tenne yeeres and two monthes, and was ſix and forty yeeres old.

Granado. If this King of Granado practiſed his death, he did not long enioy this content, for the ſame yeere 1379. the ſame Mahumet called the old, and old in effect, died the nine and twentith yeere of his raigne, and 762. of the Arabians.

D. Iohn firſt of that name, the ſixteenth King of Caſtile, and ſeuen and thirtith of Leon. E

An. 1379. Caſtile. THe happineſſe which did accompany the King D. Henry the ſecond, father to Don Iohn, did not continue in his poſterity: for God, to let men vnderſtand that it is hee which doth raiſe and pul downe at his pleaſure, hauing from nothing aduanced D. Henry to the Scepter of Leon and Caſtile, and confounded the forces of that Realme, allied to the Engliſh and Moores; he did in a manner ouerthrow this greatneſſe in his ſonnes time, by the forces of the petty Eſtate of Portugal, to the which he aduanced a baſtard, without any humaine ſupport; notwithſtanding that the armes of France were ioyned with the forces of Caſtile, as ſhall appeere by the diſcourſe of the Hiſtory. By ſuch examples the mighty are admoniſhed not to truſt in their forces, and the weake not to deſpaire, eſpecially if he be vniuſtly purſued. F

15. Genealogie of Caſtile. D. Iohn who ſucceeded his father D. Henry, deſcended by the mothers ſide, from the Infant D. Fernand de la Cerde, eldeſt ſonne to Don Alphonſo the Philoſopher: for of Don

A Don Fernand came D. Alphonſo and D. Fernand: Of the younger D. Fernand, and of D. Ieanne of Lara, his wife, iſſued D. Blanch, who was married to D. Iohn Manuel (who had had to his firſt wife a Counteſſe of Sauoy) ſonne to D. Manuel, brother to D. Alphonſo the Philoſopher, of which marriage was borne D. Ieanne Manuel, Queene of Caſtile, wife to the King D. Henry, and mother to this King D. Iohn, the firſt of that name, who was two and twenty yeeres old, or there abouts, when he began to raigne: a Prince of a good diſpoſition, and religious, according to the time, but vnſound of his body, and vnfortunate in warre. Diſpoſition of King Iohn.

He was crowned after the example of his Predeceſſors, in Burgos, in the Monaſtery of Sancta Maria de las Huelgas, where to ſolemnize his coronation, did arme aboue a B hundred Knights, which were of Noble families; and gaue many guifts and preuiledges to commonalties, and to priuat perſons, to make his firſt entrance more remarkable and pleaſing: He gaue vnto the city of Burgos the towne of Pancoruo in Bureua: he cauſed Villa-Real of Saint Nicholas of Orio in Guipuſcoa to bee walled in, giuing it the preuiledges of Saint Sebaſtian, with many others. When he was Infant, beeing in poſſeſſion of the Siegneury of Biſcay, hee vnited it for euer vnto the crowne, at his comming to it.

He remembred his fathers charge, to entertaine a ſtrict league of friendſhip with the houſe and crowne of France, the which hee ſent to confirme by his Ambaſſadors: And
C hauing ſent his gallies this yeere of our Lord 1379. in fauour of the French; commanded by D. Fernand Sanches of Touar, they tooke from Iohn of Montfort duke of Brittan, the caſtle of Roche Gaze at Cap de Late, for that hee held the Engliſh party, by a decree of the court of parliament at Paris, and his Dutchy with all his goods declared forfeited to the King, vntill that time the Iewes dwelling in Spaine, had the preuiledge to take knowledge of crimes committed by them of their ſect: but this yeere a Iew, called Ioſeph Pich, dwelling at Seuile, hauing beene ſlaine in the Iewes place at Burgos, being a man of great reputation, for his wealth, and the ſeruices which hee had done vnto the deceaſed King D. Henry, as treaſurer generall, the new King tooke from them this prerogatiue, and forbad them to deale in any crime, where there was murther, cutting off any D Limbe, or effuſion of bloud. In the beginning of his raigne, God gaue him a ſonne, by his wife D. Leonora of Arragon, who ſucceeded him.

As ſoone as the Infant was borne, D. Fernand King of Portugal, who had in the yeere 1378. made his daughter D. Beatrix, ſure vnto D. Frederike duke of Benauent, baſe ſonne to the deceaſed King Henry of Caſtile, by D. Leonora Ponce, repented himſelfe, and ſent vnto the King D. Iohn, intreating him to conſent vnto a marriage betwixt his ſonne newly borne, and his daughter D. Beatrix, with certaine conditions which did nothing diſpleaſe King Iohn, ſo as this other marriage was accorded betwixt them, which proued the fire-band of future warre betwixt Caſtile and Portugal: for among other conditi- 16 ons, theſe two princes made a mutuall donation of their Realmes vnto the ſuruiuor, in Portugal.
E caſe they died without lawfull heires of their bodies, the which was concluded and ſworne in the yeere of our Lord 1380. but it was not executed, for God had otherwiſe decreed. This Infanta D. Beatrix, was daughter to D. Leonora Telles of Meneſes, of An. 1380.

diſpoſition that was faint and weake, could make ſuch vſe of her alurements, as ſhe kept the King her husband alwaies ſubiect, and a ſlaue to her affections: ſo as hee refuſed not any thing that was pleaſing vnto her, forgetting often his ranke and royall dignity. All which had diſliked of her marriage, or had in any ſort diſpleaſed her, were by her practiſes purſued, chaſed away, or vtterly ruined: her friends and kinſmen were aduanced to the F greateſt honours and dignities of the Realme: and as ſhe was cunning in all her actions, ſo ſhe could finde meanes to reconcile vnto her, thoſe who through their greatneſſe, wealth, or alliance within the Realme, ſeemed hard to ruine; binding them vnto her by her bounty and fauours, making them of enemies to become her friends. Shee gaue the gouernment of the caſtle of Lisbon, to her vncle D. Iohn Alphonſo Tello, Earle of Barcelos, Lord Steward of the Kings houſe. She alſo aduanced a brother of his called

Don

Don Iohn Alphonſo Telles, to be Admirall of the Realme: an other brother called D. A Gonçalo Telles, was at her requeſt made Earle of Neyua. To the Earle of Barçelos ſon, ſhe procured the ſuruiuance of his fathers Eſtate, in the ſame county or gouernm the of Barçelos: a brother of hers was made Earle or Gouernor of Viane, and D. Henry her brother in law, Earle of Seaa. To D. Lope Diaz de Soza her Nephew, ſonne to Donna Maria Telles her ſiſter, and to Aluar Diaz de Soza, ſhe cauſed to bee giuen the dignity of great maiſter of Chriſt.

Don Henry of Albuquerque, whoſe ſiſters were married to the brethren of this Queene D. Leonora Telles, was by her fauor maiſter of Saint Iames. She cauſed D. Ieanne Telles of Meneſes her baſtard ſiſter, who was commandereſſe of Sanctos, to be married B to D. Iohn Alphonſo Pimentel, and Bragança to be giuen vnto him: She married D. Agnes Botello, one of her gentlewomen, and her kinſwoman, being of a Noble family to Pero Rodriguez of Fonſeca giuing him the caſtle of Oliuencia: She alſo concluded the marriages of D. Mencia Vaſquez Coutina, with Martin Gonçales of Tuy; and of D. Thereſa of Meyra, with Fernand Gonçales of Soça, giuing vnto the laſt the caſtle of Chaues, and to the other that of Portel: She made D. Atuar Peyre of Caſtro, Caſtellan, Earle or Gouerner of Aroyolos, and procured many fauours and graces for D. Fernand de Caſtro his elder brother.

They ſay, that by her meanes the King on a time ſent a preſent to Iohn Alphonſo of Muxica, beeing in the towne of Ebora, of thirty horſe, thirty armors com- C plete, thirty mulets, thirty pounds of gold, a hundred and thirty markes of ſiluer, and foure mulets laden with tapiſtry, and other rich furniture, adding therevnto, as an hereditarie guift, the towne of Torreſuedras. Such alſo was the fauour ſhee bare vnto Don Fernand of Andeiro a Knight of Galicia, who was come to ſerue the King her huſband, in his laſt warres againſt Caſtile, as beſides that hee was made an Earle, hee had the neereſt place next to her ſelfe, in the Kings fauour: ſo as by his meanes many Gentlemen were gratefied and aduanced in Portugal: and moreouer hee liued in ſuch familiarity, as hee lodged in the ſame lodging with the King and Queene, and did often remaine alone with her a long time, whereat many murmured, and grew iealous: ſaying that their conuerſation was not honeſt, and the Portugois did beleeue, that the D children which ſhee bare, were not the King D. Fernands (a Prince which was vnſound, and of a weake complexion (but begotten by ſtealth by this Earle of Oren. Finally ſhe wrought ſo, as all the dignities, honours and forts of Portugal, were in the hands of her kinſmen, friends and allies.

But to what fury doth the deſire of commaund thruſt a woman vnto? The Portugal authors write, that the Infant Don Iohn, the Kings brother, beeing in loue with Donna Maria Telles of Meneſes, the Queenes ſiſter, who had managed the loue betwixt the King and her, a widow woman, and mother to Don Lope Diaz of Soça, but faire, and pleaſing, hee ſerued her and ſought her loue, the which ſhee could not refuſe, Don Iohn beeing a Knight in the floure of his age, goodly alſo and full of grace: yet E ſhee was thus farre diſcreet, that before ſhee would yeeld to that which hee deſired, hee promiſed to marrie her ſecretly, the which beeing afterwards made knowne vnto the Queene, ſhee was much diſcontented: it may bee deſiring that Don Iohn (who was much beloued of the Portugalls) ſhould marrie Donna Beatrix her daughter: fearing that if the King her husband ſhould die, hee ſhould bee choſen King, and her daughter reiected, or that ſhee her ſelfe did beare him ſome good will, and ſeeing her husband ill diſpoſed, had an intent to marry him, if her husband died, that ſhee mought reigne ſtill: wherefore being tranſported with theſe paſſions, ſhe began to practiſe the death (by a notable cruelty and deteſtable ſtratagemme) of her who had raiſed her vp, conſpiring with Don Iohn Alphonſo Telles her brother, Admirall of Portugall, F to perſwade the Infant Don Iohn, that Donna Maria Telles, who ſaid ſhee was his wife, abandoned her ſelfe to other men, to his great diſhonour, in whom they wrought ſuch an impreſſion, as this ſimple and ill aduiſed Knight, tranſported with extreame iealouſie, came in a morning to Coimbra, where this Lady did remaine, where entring furiouſly into the houſe after that hee had forced her chamber doore, finding

A not any ſignes of that which had beene told him, he ſlue his miſerable wife moſt barbarouſly, who called to God for aide, but in vaine, holding vp her hands to her inraged husband.

This was the reward which Donna Maria Telles of Meneſes had, hauing beene the broker of that vnfortunate marriage, and as it were the Gardien of the Queene Donna Leonoras loues, who not content therewith came to complaine vnto the King of Don Iohn, for the death of her ſiſter, and preuailed ſo, as he was forced to abſent himſelfe from court, and to keepe himſelfe ſecret in places of hard acceſſe, for his ſafety, yet finding not himſelfe well ſecured, he retired into Caſtile: for Gonçal Telles, brother to the deceaſed, and her ſonne D. Lope Diaz de Soſa, the Earle of Barcellos, and his brother the Earle
B of Viana, with other of her kinſfolkes, ſought to kill him, to reuenge the death of Donna Maria. Beſides theſe exceſſes, the Queene Donna Leonora attempted the death of D. Iohn maiſter of Auiz, the King her husbands baſe brother, a Knight of great valour, who had neuer offended her: but only in conceit, that he onely did croſſe her deſeignes. To effect her wicked intent, ſhee cauſed letters to bee counterfetted in the name of the maiſter, and of a gentleman called Gonçalo Vaſques of Azebedo, his couſin and very familiar, beeing of the Kings councell, whom ſhee would alſo draw into this danger. Theſe letters were directed to the King of Caſtile and did treat of matters againſt the ſeruice of the King D. Fernand, whom ſhe did aduertiſe that they had beene ſurprized vpon the frontiers.

Treachery of the Queene D. Leonora against the maiſter of Auiz.

C The King giuing credit to her malice, after that he had taken councell of his wife, and of D. Iohn Fernandes of Andeyro, he commanded that the maiſter of Auiz and Gonçal Vaſques ſhould be apprehended, and put into the tower of the caſtle of Ebora, where they were kept rigorouſly in chaines, the maiſter being ignorant of the cauſe of this his miſery. As for D. Gonçal Vaſques, he remembred that hee had giuen eare vnto his wife, telling him that on a time D. Gonçal Telles the Queenes brother, and D. Iohn Fernand of Andeyro her mignon, entring into her chamber all ſweating, ſhee gaue them a kerchiſe ſhe had vpon her, to wipe themſelues withall; and that D. Iohn Fernandes approching neere vnto her ſpake certaine laſciuious words, which being heard by the wife of Don Gonçal Vaſques, and reported by her vnto her husband, hee was ſo indiſcreet as to tell
D the Queene thereof, aduertiſing the Queene of the Earles ſmal reſpect vnto her, and of his impudency, whereof ſhe, who wiſhed him well, did not ſeeme to care: wherefore D. Gonçal doubted that this was the cauſe of his impriſonment, and that the Queene would diſpatch him before the King ſhould be aduertiſed thereof.

Impriſonment of the maiſter of Auiz and of D. Gonçal Vaſques.

Being thus impriſoned, the Queene did counterfet letters from the King, vnto Vaſco Martines of Merlo, captaine of the caſtle of Ebora, by the which he was commanded to murther theſe two perſonages: but being a diſcreet man, and conſidering the quality of the priſoners, thinking that he muſt not proceed ſo lightly to the execution thereof, hee forbare, vntill he had ſpoken with the King, to whom he went the day after this charge,
E to know if it were his pleaſure, that the maiſter of Auiz and Gonçal Vaſques ſhould bee put to death. The King anſwered that he knew not of it, commanding him not to touch them, and ſo he ſent him backe, enioyning him to kepe it ſecret, and ſoone after he went from Ebora, whereas the Queene remained; who ſeeing that her deſeignes did not ſucceed, ſhe tooke a milder courſe, and ſought to bee reconciled to theſe two perſonages, who were freed from their irons, and within few daies after ſet at liberty. Some time after, the Queene being at maſſe, ſhe cauſed them to come vnto her, ſhewing them the beſt countenance they could deſire, and inuited them to dinner, the which they did vnwillingly accept, fearing ſhe would cauſe them to be poiſoned: yet they did eate in the Queenes lodging, in the company of the Earle of Oren, to whom after dinner, diſcourſing of her rings and iewels, ſhe gaue (in their preſence) a Ring, ſet with a rich ruby, preſ-
F ſing him to take it, although he excuſed himſelfe, to the end ſhe might not forget any thing to be held very impudent.

Amideſt theſe tumults, D. Iſabella the Kings baſtard daughter, who had beene made ſure by the laſt treaty of peace, to D. Alphonſo of Caſtile, Earle of Gijon, baſe ſonne to King Henry, was married at Burgos, whereat the Earle was much greeued: an vnfortunat marriage, marriage, of which there was one ſonne borne, who was called D. Henry. But the marriage which was made betwixt D. Beatrix ſiſter to the King D. Fernand, and D. Sancho Earle of Albuquerque, was bleſſed of God: ſo as a daughter which they had, called D. Leonora, the ſole heire of her fathers great Eſtates, was married to D. Fernand Infant of Caſtile Lord of Lara, and Duke of Pennafiel, ſonne to the King D. Iohn the firſt, then raigning, which D. Fernand came afterwards to be King of Arragon and Sicile. Shee was Queene of theſe realmes, and mother of fiue children, renowned by the Hiſtories of Caſtile and Arragon, of whom we ſhall heereafter make mention. This King Fernand of Portugal being in good peace with his neighbours, conſidering what had happened in the city of Lisbone, in the laſt warre of Caſtile, for want of good walles, he cauſed it to be fortified and walled about from Saint Catherins gate vnto Saint Vincents. And as hee was carefull of this publike worke ſo hee did gratefie the Franciſcan Friars of Saint Iren, cauſing the quier of their church to be built, with other workes of deuotion.

An. 1380. This is all we finde in Hiſtories of the affaires of Portugall, vnto the yeere of our Lord 1380. that the aboue mentioned marriage betwixt Don Henry ſonne to King Iohn the firſt of Caſtile, and Donna Beatrix the daughter of Portugal, was concluded with the aboue named conditions, for the ſucceſſion of the two Realmes, by the ſuruiuance of the two Kings.

Caſtile. About the end of this yeere, Donna Leonora Queene of Caſtile was brought in bed, at Medina del Campo, of her ſonne D. Fernand aboue named, who came to be King of Arragon, as we will ſhew.

18. At that time Spaine was a Neuter, in regard of the obedience which the two Popes pretended, and did affect in the Chriſtian common weale, continuing ſome time in this Neutrality, by reaſon of the diſagreement of the Prelats, who were aſſembled for that cauſe onely, at the inſtance of the Ambaſſadors of the two Popes, Clement and Vrbain: but ſoone after it was declared by a ſentence giuen by the King of Caſtile, and his councell, that his countries ſhould acknowledge Clement the ſeuenth, for Pope, and Chriſts Vicar, he being reſident at Auignon, the King D. Iohn inclyning therein, as in other things to the French. The deuotion of men in Spaine, and other places, in thoſe daies was contrarie to that of more ancient times: for whereas before they thought they could not giue ſufficient to the Clergy, to augment their houſes and reuenues, now euery one ſought to ſpoile them, and to vſurpe their lands and reuenues: whereof the Abbots and Conuents of the Order of Saint Benet in Spaine, hauing complained, they had a notable ſentence by Iudges deputed by the King for that buſineſſe, againſt many Noblemen and Knights which detained their goods: yet they ſtill incroched vpon them all they could.

The King of Caſtile acknowleageth the Pope at Auignon.

An. 1381. In the yeere of our Lord 1381. died D. Ieanne Queene of Caſtile, mother to the King D. Iohn, who through great deuotion had in a manner all her life time carried the habit of Saint Claire, and died in it, and appointed ſhe ſhould be buried in it: A great argument of the religion of that time. She lies at Toledo, in the Chappell of the laſt Kings.

19 Portugal. The peace betwixt the Kings D. Iohn of Caſtile, and D. Fernand of Portugal, was broken, by the bad councell of a Knight, who had beene accuſtomed to bee often ſhut vp with the Queene of Portugall, and was her fauorite, hee was Earle of Oren. To giue ſome collour and beginning to this warre, the King D. Fernand ſent to Iohn Duke of Lancaſter, perſwading him, that as husband to D. Conſtance, daughter to the deceaſed King D. Pedro of Caſtile and Leon, hee ſhould purſue his right which hee pretended to thoſe Realmes. The Engliſh Prince relying vpon the fauour of Portugal, with the conſent and aide of King Richard his Nephew, raiſed a thouſand men at armes, or Launces, and a good number of foote, whereof he gaue the charge to his brother Edmond of Langley, Earle of Cambridge, who led them into Spaine, for that the Duke could not goe in perſon to this warre. The Engliſh army arriued vpon the coaſt of Portugal, whereas the warre was already violent; for the King of Caſtile beeing aduertiſed of this practiſe, had led his army into the country, and taken the towne of Almoyda: And at ſea, euen vpon the arriuall of the Engliſh army, Fernand Sanches of Touar Admirall of Caſtile had taken twenty gallies of Portugal, with their Admirall D. Alphonſo Telles, Earle

A Earle of Barcellos the Queenes brother, the which fell out vnhappily for the King Don Fernand, who beeing ſodainely tranſported with hatred againſt Caſtile, receiued this Prince Edmond, with al ſhewes of loue and royall pompe: and the more to gratefie him, he made a promiſe of a future marriage, betwixt Donna Beatrix his daughter (who had beene twice before contracted) and Edward his ſon, a young child, which hee had had of Donna Iſabella his wife, the third daughter of the deceaſed King Don Pedro of Caſtile, there preſent; yea he made them to marry and lie together, and to confirme this marriage, they performed al accuſtomed ceremonies, except the conſummation, which could not bee, by reaſon of the tender age of both parties, the Bridegroome beeing not full

During their ſtay, the Engliſh (before they were led to the warre) ſpared not the Portugals, but made ſpoile of their goods, as if they had beene in the country of Caſtile: So as the Portugals in ſteed of one warre, found themſelues ingaged betwixt two enemies, hauing the Caſtillans abroad, and the Engliſh within their houſes.

In the yeere of our Lord 1382. the King D. Fernand went to field, with the Earle of Cambridge, and came and lodged his army at Yelbes: On the other ſide the army of Caſtile camped at Badajos, whereas hauing continued ſome daies without any exploite of armes, a peace was concluded, and Donna Beatrix Infanta of Portugall was the fourth time promiſed to Don Fernand the younger ſonne of Don Iohn King of Ca-

In the meane time Donna Leonora Queene of Caſtile died, in the towne of Cuellar, beeing brought in bed of a daughter, which died alſo. The Queenes bodie was carried to Toledo, and interred in the chappell of the laſt Kings. This Princeſſe is honoured for her vpright and good conſcience aboue all the Ladies of her time, whereof ſome authors bring this example: Certaine Iewes deputed from the Sinagogues of them of their ſect, dwelling vpon the Queenes Lands, beeing come for ſome affaires vnto the court, beeing mooued with good will vnto their Ladie, by reaſon of her vertues, and good behauiour, came vnto her Confeſſor beeing an Arragonois, Integrity of the Queene D. Leonora.

D a verie religious man, of a good life, and tould him, that they vnderſtood the Queene had occaſion for to vſe a certaine ſumme of money, and knowing how much the Iewes, dwelling in her countrie, did honour her, they intreated him to let her vnderſtand that ſhee ſhould demaunde what money ſhee pleaſed of their Sinagogues, beeing aſſured it ſhould bee verie willingly furniſhed; and that withall hee ſhould certefie her, that the Iewes deſired to doe her this ſeruice, for that ſince the time ſhee had beene their Ladie ſhee had neuer imployed them. The Confeſſor thinking to bring pleaſing newes vnto the Queene, made report of the Iewes ſpeech, and perſwaded her by all meanes for to make vſe of their kinde offer, aſſuring her that ſhee might take with a good conſcience that which they did willingly preſent vnto her. But the

E Queene anſwered him, that ſhee would neuer doe any ſuch thing, and that God forbidde that ſhee ſhould exact money, or any other thing of any perſon, for the which the King, ſhe or their children might be curſed: And notwithſtanding any reply the religious man could make ſhee would not yeeld vnto it, but willed him for to thanke the Iewes.

Don Fernand King of Portugal, hearing of the death of Donna Leonora Queene of Caſtille, hee beganne to practiſe a fifth marriage for his daughter Donna Beatrix, with the King Don Iohn himſelfe; ſending ſodainely vnto him, beeing then at Pinto, three Leagues from Madrid, to know his minde therein. Æra of Cæſar what it was.

This yeere of our Lord 1383. was held a generall aſſembly of the Eſtates at Segobia. And for that vnto that time they had accounted the yeeres according vnto the Æra of Cæſar, which differed eight and thirty yeeres from the accounts which was then in vſe in other Chriſtian Kingdomes, it was ordained that the Caſtillans ſhould take the beginning of their yeeres from the natiuity of Chriſt: the which was more fit for Chriſtians, then to retaine this memory of Cæſar Auguſtus. This manner of accounting by the Æra had beene long before left in Nauarre and Arragon, but was retained for ſome time in Portugal. The cauſe of this name of Æra is diuerſly related, but the moſt probable is, that the ancients hauing accuſtomed to write theſe wordes. Annus erat Auguſti centeſ. or ſome other number, by abreuiation thus, A. They ſay that the laſt letters which were diſpatched in the court of Caſtile, where the Æra of Cæſar was obſerued, were two preuiledges granted by the King Don Iohn, the one to the towne of Santa Cruz of Ceſtone; the other to Villa Real of Vrrechua, which was in the yeere of our Lord 1421. of the Æra, anſwering to that of our Lord 1383. from the birth of Chriſt. 21 Portugal.

The King Don Iohn, before his departure from Segobia, did celebrat the funerals of his father in law, in which Realme, by an Article made in the treaty of marriage of the Infanta Don Beatrix, Queene of Caſtile, and heire proprietarie thereof, the Queene Donna Leonora Telles her mother ſhould remaine Regent. The chiefe of the Nobilitie of Portugal were of diuerſe humours touching the ſucceſſion of the Realme: for ſome (amongſt which was the maiſter of the Knights of Auiz, baſe brother to the deceaſed King) would maintaine the right of Donna Beatrix, and called Don Iohn King of Caſtile her husband, to come and take poſſeſſion of the Realme, which did belong vnto him: others did abhorre the Caſtillans commaund, and could not endure that Portugal ſhould bee vnited to Caſtile. The King Don Iohn ſollicited by many letters and meſſages to come into Portugall tooke aduice of his councell, whether hee ſhould enter in hoſtile manner, or peaceably. The worſt councell was followed by him, which was, force: Wherefore he ſpeedily gathered together al the forces hee could, and firſt of all hee ſtaied Don Iohn of Portugall, one of the brethren of the deceaſed King Don Fernand, who hauing retired himſelfe out of Portugal, by reaſon of the murther of Donna Maria Telles of Meneſes, and the mallice of the Queene Donna Leonora, had ſerued the crowne of Caſtile faithfully. But fearing leaſt hee ſhould cauſe ſome troubles in Portugal, hee cauſed him to bee put priſoner in the caſtle of Toledo, from whence hee was afterwardes remooued to Almonacid, three leagues from the citie. Hee alſo cauſed Don Alphonſo Earle of Gijon to bee impriſoned, who ſtirred vppe ſeditions in Caſtile: and then with thoſe ſmall forces which hee had, hee marched to La Garde, where hee was receiued by the Biſhop of that place; but the captaine of the fort would not acknowledge him, knowing the diuerſe diſpoſitions of the Nobilitie, and vnderſtanding all the troubles which had happened at Lisbone ſince the Kings death. Diſpoſition of the Nobiemen of Portugal.

King of Caſtile enters armed into Portugal, and is not well received.

The Queene widowe did reſide in this chiefe Cittie of the Realme, beeing aſſiſted by Don Henry Manuel, Earle of Sintra, Vncle to the deceaſed King by the mothers ſide; by Don Iohn Maiſter of Auiz, and others which did fauour the Queene Donna Beatrix, and

At Ebora the heads of the multitude were Vincent Ianes a Taylor, and one called Gonçill Ianes, who committed ſtrange inſolencies, as it is the cuſtome of a mutinous multitude. Amongſt others, knowing that the Abbeſſe of Saint Benet was allied to the Queene Donna Leonora, they entred into her Church and pulled her from the Altar, holding that which keepes the Hoſte in her armes, imploring in vaine the aide thereof, and the mercie of the commons, and ſo drew her into the market-place, where they murthered her moſt cruelly.

The Portugall authors write, that in that cittie, a little ſemall Infant beeing in the

D cradell, in the houſe of one Stephen Ianes, did riſe three times out of her ſwadling clothes, and ſtretching out the armes, cried, Portugal, Portugal, for the King Don Iohn; the which was then ambiguous, but afterwardes (by reaſon of the euent) was applied to the maiſter of Auiz, who was alſo called Don Iohn. The King of Caſtile beeing aduertiſed of all theſe diſorders, went to Saint Iren, to his mother in law, about the beginning of the yeere of our Lord 1384. where to free her ſelfe from trouble and daunger, and to gratefie the King her ſonne in law, ſhee yeelded vnto him all the right ſhee had to the Gouernment of the Realme. Hether came many Noblemen and Gentlemen holding the partie of the King Don Iohn, to doe him homage: who by this good be-

E ginning conceiued great hope that all would ſucceed well and wiſhfully, and that hee ſhould reſtore his mother in law to her dignity. Don Iohn of Portugall maiſter of Auiz, a young Prince, but vertuous, hauing beene prouoked by the diſhoneſt conuerſation of the Queene Donna Leonora, with the Earle of Oren, to take armes, knowing the nature of this woman, by former experience, with the hazard of his life; hee would no more fall into her power, but aſpired to the regencie of the Realme, and wholy to depriue both her and the King D. Iohn her ſonne in law of all gouernment.

D. Iohn maiſter of Auiz aſpires to the gouernment of Portugal.

In this deſeigne hee found ſuch fauour and ſupport of the Nobility and townes, who had long deteſted the manners of the Queene, and the deceaſed King her huſband, as hee had meanes to reſiſt the attempts of the King of Caſtile, and to make himſelfe a way to the crowne. And to make the name of Caſtile more odious to them who deſired not the vnion of theſe two Realmes, he cauſed a ſtandard to be made, in the which was painted D. Iohn of Portugall his brother, a priſoner, ſtanding at a grate in the Caſtle of Toledo, cauſing it to bee diſplaied in the city of Lisbone, in view of all the people, who were alreadie mutined, which made them to arme with great reſolution againſt the forces of Caſtile, who ſoone after came and preſented themſelues before the city, in which army there were one thouſand launces complete, and great ſtore of foote led by D. Pedro Fernandes Cap de Vache maiſter of Saint Iames, Don Pero Fernandes de Valaſco, Chamberlaine to the King, and D. Iohn Pero Ruis Sarmiento Gouernor of Galicia, and ſoone after the King came thether in perſon: where they laied ſeege, and planted their batteries, but without any great effect, for the beſeeged made no ſallies.

Lisbone beſeeged by the Caſtilians.

In the meane time they of Ebora, who were of this rebellious faction, receiued into their towne Don Nugno Alnares Pereira, a valiant captaine, being but foure and twenty yeeres old, vnder whoſe conduct they came and affronted D. Iohn Alphonſo of Guzman, Earle of Niebla, D. Diego Gomes maiſter of Alcantara, and D. Fernand Sanches of Touar high Admirall of Caſtile, beeing ſent by the King D. Iohn with great troupes againſt them, but they put them to rout, and ſlue the maiſter of Alcantara, and many men of marke. The King hearing of theſe newes, ſent ſupplies with D. Iohn Pero Ruis Sarmiento, Gouernor of Galicia, to whom they of Ebora, with their captaine D. Nugno Aluarez, preſented battaile againe courragiouſly, but they retired themſelues, fearing the like ſhould happen vnto them as had done to their companions, and came vnto the King, who thinking that hee might ſeize vpon Coimbra without any contradiction, in the caſtle whereof was Gonçal Telles, Earle of Neyua the Queenes brother, and Gonçal Mendez of Vaſconcello, her vncle, hee marched thether, leading with him D. Beatrix his wife, and the Queene Donna Leonora: but the Caſtillans name was ſo hatefull vnto the Portugals, with the behauiour of the widow Queene, as they were not only kept out of the towne, but alſo they of the caſtle ſhot at them, whereas the King and Queenes were in great daunger of their liues.

Caſtillans defeated by them of Ebora.

The King Don Iohn beeing diſcontented with the Queene Donna Leonora, for that her neereſt kinſmen holding the fort of Coimbra, had ſo ſhamefully repulſed him, hee grew iealous that ſhee had ſome intelligence with them: wherefore hee cauſed her to bee taken, and ſent into Caſtile to the caſtle of Tordeſillas, from whence ſhee neuer returned more into Portugall, yet ſhee by commaundement from him was ſerued and honoured there as a Queene, and dying was buried at Vailedolit, in the Monaſtery of the religious of the Order of the Merced. The King beeing returned to the campe before Lisbone, hee preſt it all hee could, both by water and land, but by reaſon of the infection which crept into his campe, and the comming of the ſea armie of Portugal, which approched neere vnto the city, together with the reſolution of the beſeeged, who then made many ſallies vpon the Caſtillans, hee aduanced little. There were ſome propoſitions of an accord made; but Don Iohn maiſter of the Auiz beeing reſolute to haue the ſole gouernment of the Realme of Portugal, and Algarbe, vntill that the King of Caſtile had children by Donna Beatrix his wife, there was nothing concluded.

King Iohn and the Queenes of Caſtile and Portugal repulſt from Coimbra.

The Infant Don Charles, heire of Nauarre, came to the King Don Iohn at this ſeege, to aide and fortefie the King his brother in law: but the plague continuing with great loſſe of the Nobility, which died miſerably at this ſeege, the King Don Iohn was conſtrained to riſe and to returne into Caſtile, hauing put good garriſons into thoſe places which had receiued him. The loſſe of his men in this voiage was very great, and therefore hee had reaſon to giue ſome reſt vnto the remainders, and prepare for the raiſing of a great army for the next yeere.

22 Nauarre.

Before wee returne into Portugall, it is expedient to make mention of the affaires of Nauarre, and ſhew how the Infant Don Charles (who came newly to the campe before Lisbone) was deliuered, whom wee had left priſoner in France. During the life of Charles the fifth, the French King, there was no meanes of reconciliation betwixt him, and his brother in law Charles King of Nauarre, wherefore his ſonne Charles continued priſoner vnto the Kings death, which happened in the yeere of our Lord 1380. leauing his ſonne Charles the ſixth of that name, ſucceſſor to the Realme, beeing young and vnder the gouernment of Iohn duke of Berry, and Philip duke of Bourgondie his vncles, who ſhewed themſelues ſo oppoſite to the King of Nauarres purſutes, for his reconciliation and the deliuery of his ſonne, which made them

A them reſolue to poiſon them both, wherefore hauing found an Engliſhman, fit for his intent, they ſent him to the French court with poiſon, to kill theſe princes, promiſing him many great rewardes, if hee did effect it giuing him alſo good ſtore of gold in preſent.

Deteſtable enterpriſe of King Charles the bad.

This Engliſh man did what hee could, to execute his charge, but his often comming and going into the dukes kitchins, beeing alſo an Engliſhman, made him to bee ſuſpected: ſo as beeing taken with his poulder, and hauing confeſſed that hee was ſent to kill the dukes of Berry and Bourgongne, for that they oppoſed themſelues againſt the deliuerie of the Infant of Nauarre, hee was beheaded. This errour did very much

B diſpleaſe Charles King of Nauarre not knowing by what meanes to recouer his ſonne.

During the Kings diſcontent, there fell out a quarrell betwixt Fillot of Gramont, Lord of Gramont, on this ſides the mountaines, and Don Ramir Sanches of Aſiayn, for matters concerning their Princes ſeruice: Don Ramir was accuſed by the Lord of Gramont, to haue attempted againſt the Kings owne perſon: ſo as comming to the triall of armes, by the order of Iudges, deputed by the King, and theſe Knights appering to fight at the day appointed, the importunity of the kinſmen and friends of either ſide was ſuch, as the combate was ſtaied, and they both remained at the Kings pleaſure, who cauſed them to bee put in priſon, the Lord of Gramont in the caſtle of Saint Iohn of Pie de Port, and the other in Tafalla. The Lord of Aſiayn hauing

C beene ſome ſpace priſoner in this towne, beeing garded by certaine ſouldiars Picards, hee found meanes to corrupt them, ſo as hee ſeized vpon the captaine of the caſtle, and the place it ſelfe.

This accident beeing bruted through the towne, the Inhabitants went preſentlie to armes and beſeeged the caſtle, the which by the treaſon of one of thoſe ſouldiars which had betraied the captaine and the place, was recouered, with Don Ramir Sanches of Aſiayn, and his confederates, whoſe head the King, as well for this, as for many other former offences, cauſed to bee cut off, and forfeited his goods, and the ſouldiars were euery one executed that had aſſiſted him to ſeize vpon the fort, or caſtle of Tafalla. As for Fillot of Gramont hee continued three yeeres in priſon, and then

In the meane time the King Don Charles beeing in great care for the detention of his ſonne in France, hee cauſed Don Iohn King of Caſtile to bee ſollicited by Donna Leonora his daughter in law, who was retired into Caſtile to the King her brother, who was ſtrictly allied and a friend to the French, to bee a meadiator for the deliuery of the Infant Don Charles. The King of Caſtile deſirous to gratefie his ſiſter, imployed his beſt meanes to the young French King and his Gouernors, and did ſo importune them by meſſages, letters and Ambaſſages, as they ſet the Infant Don Charles of Nauarre at libertie. As for Don Pedro his younger brother, and Donna Maria his ſiſter, they had beene releaſed before. Don Charles ſoone after his deliuery hee

E went into Nauarre, to the great content of all the Nauarrois. It was a great hatred and mallice in the King Don Charles the Father, for to attempt ſuch a wickedneſſe againſt the princes of France, who ſhewed their generoſitie, in conſenting to the deliuerie of the Infant, who was not guilty of his fathers offence, who in all his actions was of ſo ſower a diſpoſition, as hee could not purſue his rights, nor treat of any affaires with other princes, but in choller, and diſdaine: and whereas he could not obtaine and bring to paſſe what hee pretended, hee had recourſe to ſyniſter and vnlawfull practiſes, deſiring to reuenge himſelfe of thoſe that did him any iniury, by what meanes ſoeuer.

Diſpoſition of D. Charles King of Nauarre.

Hee had one ſiſter called Donna Agnes, married vnto Gaſton Earle of Foix, called

F Phebus, who for the wrongs hee had done vnto her husband, was verie ill intreated by him, ſo as ſhee was forced to leaue his companie, and to retire into Nauarre, who was ſoone after followed by a ſonne ſhee had by him, called Gaſton, where both beeing receiued, and honoured by King Charles, conferring often with his ſiſter of her husbands bad vſage, hee conceiued ſuch a hatred againſt the Earle Gaſton, as hee drew young Gaſton their ſonne to poiſon his father and gaue him a venimous poulder to that end, telling him that it was a remedy to make him change the hatred hee bare him and his mother, into loue. This young Nobleman beeing ſimple and ill aduiſed beleeuing what the King his vncle had ſaid vnto him, he returned into Foix, to his father, with an intent to ſeaſon him ſome meate with this poulder, but hee could not ſo play his part, but caſting the poulder into the meate, it was perceiued by the cookes, or otherwiſe diſcouered: wherefore the Earle commanded his ſonne and onely heire to bee taken, cauſing him to die miſerably in priſon, ſo as after him hee left none but baſtards, which did not ſucceed in the Earledome of Foix: one of them was Bernard, who ſerued Henry the ſecond King of Caſtile, in the conqueſt of the realme againſt the King D. Pedro, and was rewarded by him, and endowed with lands and Eſtates in Caſtile, from whom deſcended the dukes of Medina Celi, or Zelim, who by the mothers ſide belong to the bloud of Caſtile, according to the order which followeth.

Miſerable death of young Gaſton of Foix.

Beginning of the houſe of Celi or Zelim.

D. Fernand de la Cerde, eldeſt ſonne to D. Alphonſo the Wiſe, or the Philoſopher, left two ſons, D. Alphonſo and D. Fernand: of D. Alphonſo, married into France, came D. Lewis Earle of Clermont, and D. Charles, or Iohn, according vnto ſome, Conſtable of France, and Earle of Angouleſme. D. Lewis Earle of Clermont married in Andaluſia, Don Leonora of Guzman, daughter to D. Alphonſo Peres of Guzman, and was Lord of Hulua, and of Port Sancta Maria, and other lands in the right of his wife: of which marriage iſſued Don Lewis, Don Iohn, and Donna Iſabella de la Cerde. This Donna Iſabella was by the King Don Henry the ſecond, being ſetled in the realme of Caſtile, married to Bernard baſtard of Foix, and had in dowry Medina Celi, with the title of an Earle; of them came D. Gaſton, ſurnamed de la Cerde, leauing the name of the houſe of Foix, and Bern. Hee was the ſecond Earle of Medina Celi, and married Donna Mencia of Mendoça, daughter to Don Pedro Gonçales of Mendoça, a great Nobleman in Alaua: by her hee had one ſonne called Don Lewis, who was the third Earle of Medina Celi, and married with Donna Iean Sarmiento, daughter to Diego Peres Sarmiento, from whom came Don Gaſton de la Cerde the ſecond, and forth Earle of Medina Celi, who married Donna Leonora of Mendoça, daughter to Don Inigo Lopes of Mendoça, Marquis of Sentillana, from whom deſcended Don Lewis which ſucceeded him in the Earldome, in whoſe time it was made a Dutchy, D. Lewis married Donna Anna of Nauarre and Arragon, baſe daughter to D. Charles, Infant of Nauarre and Arragon. This is the Genealogy of the houſe of the dukes of Medina Celi.

King Charles a Leaper.

Such, as wee haue ſayd, were the actions of Charles King of Nauarre, whom in the end God ſtrooke with a Leaproſie, which made him to leaue all care of the affaires of this world, and to giue himſelfe to workes of piety, according to the manner of thoſe times, which was to build chappels, to ordaine Maſſes and Anniuerſaries for his deceaſed parents, and to adde rents and giue entertainement to Clergy men and Prieſts which did the ſeruice: but aboue all hee labored to liue in peace with Chriſtian Princes.

The Infant Charles beeing come into Nauarre about the beginning of the warre betwixt Caſtile and Portugal, the King Don Iohn demaunded ſome ſupplies of ſouldiars out of Nauarre, to lead with him, whereunto the King of Nauarre conſented willingly, remembring the good Offices hee had done with the French for his ſonnes liberty, whom hee ſent well accompanied to this warre, beeing vnable to goe in perſon, by reaſon of his indiſpoſition. The Infant made ſome ſtay with his wife Donna Leonora, who was in Caſtile, and then paſſing on, hee came to the King beeing incamped before Lisbone, where hee ſtaied not long, the King Don Iohn beeing forced to raiſe the ſeege by reaſon of the plague which ruined his armie, and returne into Caſtile, as wee haue ſaid, diſmiſſing the Infant his brother in law, with all loue and content.

23. Portugal.

Affaires of the King of Caſtile ſucceed well in Portugal.

The yeere 1385. beeing come, the King D. Iohn preparing to returne into Portugall, hauing alreadie ſent ſome ſhips and gallies againſt Lisbone, hee had newes that the ſouldiars which hee had left in Saint Iren, had defeated ſome troupes of Portugal, whoſe leaders were the maiſter of the Knights of Chriſtus, and the Prior of Saint Iohn, by reaſon of which victorie, many places within the Realme had planted the Standard of Caſtile.

A Caſtile: wherefore he made all the haſt he could to enter into Portugall, beeing loth to let ſlip this occaſion. Before his departure, he propounded in councell to put his brother the Earle of Gijon to death: but he was perſwaded by many graue reaſons and examples to forbeare.

Don Iohn Maſter of Auiz, a baſtard, the firſt of that name, and tenth in number, choſen King of Portugal.

IN Portugal his aduerſaries loſt no time, but prouided for all that was neceſſarie for a future warre: for the better managing whereof, they were of aduiſe to chooſe one, who ſhould haue ſoueraigne authoritie among the reſt: for the effecting whereof, the Noblemen and Knights of the Realme, who reiected the gouernement of Caſtile (among the which the moſt eminent were, Don Iohn Maſter of Auiz, and Don Nugno Aluarez Pereira) aſſembled in the cittie of Coimbra, and there held a kind of Parliament, whither alſo came the Deputies of the townes of their partie: there it was debated whether they C ſhould chooſe a Regent or a King. Many were of opinion they ſhould chooſe a king, and gaue their voices, ſome to Don Iohn Maſter of Auiz, baſe ſonne to the king Don Pedro: others ſayd, it was more reaſonable to make Don Iohn lawfull ſonne to the king Don Pedro, king, who was priſoner in Caſtile.

Aſſembly in Portugal for the election of a king.

Many conſidering the wrong they did therein to the Queene D. Beatrix, were of opinion, that it was better to ſeeke ſome good accord with Don Iohn king of Caſtile her husband: whereunto ſome did oppoſe, ſaying, that the Queene D. Leonora Telles de Meneſes could not be lawfull wife to king Fernand, hauing taken her by force from her huſband Laurence Vaſques of Acugna: and therefore D. Beatrix was no more legitimate then the Maſter of Auiz, and that being both baſe, it were better to acknowledge him for king, D then her: that as for the Infant D. Iohn a lawfull ſon, to whom the crowne of Portugal did rightly belong, that his deliuerie was vncertaine, and therefore they muſt not ſtand vpon it, the Portugals hauing then need of a free king, to oppoſe himſelfe againſt the attempts of Caſtile who ſought to oppreſſe them. This opinion preuailed, and they all conſented to chooſe D. Iohn Maſter of Auiz, for king of Portugal, and ſo he was proclaimed eighteene moneths after the interregne, in the Monaſterie of Saint Francis of Coimbra, in Aprill, this yeare 1385. the people crying out, that it was that king which was prophecied by the Infant at Ebora, whereof mention was made.

D. Iohn Maſter of Auiz choſen king of Portugal.

This king is called by the Portugals (of happie memorie) for that he freed the country from the Caſtillans, whoſe gouernement was exceeding hatefull vnto them: he was alſo E ſurnamed the Baſtard, for that the king D. Pedro begat him out of marriage. He ſhewed a great courage and generoſitie in the reception of this great charge, to defend a Realme diuided, againſt the power of the king of Caſtile, being allyed to France and Nauarre: but a Royaltie, and the liberty of his country, did ſufficiently requite the perill and danger which he did vndergo. The king D. Iohn being aduertiſed of that which the Portugals had done at the Eſtates at Coimbra, he ſent D. Pedro Tenorio Archbiſhop of Toledo, a Portugal borne, with ſome troupes, to retaine in their fidelitie ſuch as followed his party in Portugall. This Prelate entring the countrie by Viſeo, made a miſerable ſpoile where hee paſt, for which he ſmarted ſoone after, beeing incountred and defeated by the Portugals nere to Troncoço. On the other ſide, the inhabitants of Algarbe, following the new kings F partie, had ſeazed vpon the towne of Mertola, and as they battered the caſtle, they were ſuddenly charged by them of Seuile, and put to flight: the leader was D. Aluar Perez of Guzman, Gouernor of that city, a yong Nobleman of 18. years of age: and in a manner at the ſame inſtant the Caſtillans tooke a great quantitie of victuals and munition, which they of Yelbes and Eſtremos kept in Ronchez. The king of Caſtile reſoluing to beſeege Lisbon againe, had prepared many veſſels both for war, and to carrie victuals, the which came came neere vnto Lisbon, and kept the mouth of the riuer, ſo as no man could go in, or A come out from Lisbone. All this did not daunt the new king of Portugal, but hauing Exploits of the new king of Portugal. ſpeedily aſſembled his forces, he went to aſſaile Guimaranes, the which was valiantly defended by Arias Gomes of Silua a Portugal,, who was affected to the king of Caſtile, yet it was yeelded vppon a good compoſition: after which he tooke the cittie of Braga, pont de Liuan, with other places and forts.

Whileſt theſe things paſt in Portugal, the king of Caſtile, burning with deſire to ſee himſelfe king of this other Realme, made great preparations, and notwithſtanding that his Councellors vppon his returne into Portugal were of diuers opinions, yet he yeelded to thoſe that perſwaded him to enter: wherefore leauing Donna Beatrix his wife at Auila, B he marched towards Portugall, and layed ſeege to Cillorico de la vera, where during his ſtay, conſidering the doubtfull euents of warre, eſpecially againſt Rebels, the vſurpers of Realmes, who ſhew themſelues alwaies violent, hee made his will, and ſent it to the Arch-biſhop of Toledo to keepe, by the which hee ordayned many things, the which ſhall be ſpecified in the life of his ſonne and ſucceſſour Don Henry, which bred much trouble within the Realme, for that hee gaue out, whileſt he liued, and after the making of this will, that he meant to alter many things, and yet he made no other will, whereof the chiefe witneſſes were Don Pedro of Arragon, ſonne to D. Alphonſo the firſt Conſtable of Caſtile, and Marquis of Villena, D. Iohn cap de Vaca Biſhop of Coimbra, Peter Gonçales of Mendoça, Lord Steward of the kings houſe, Diego Gomes Manrique great Gouernour of C Caſtile, Pedro Lopes of Ayala, Standard-bearer of the Order of the Band, with Tello Gonçales Palomeque, and other men of marke. The Caſtle of Cillorico was taken, from whence the armie marched towards Coimbra, burning all the villages thereabouts, and ſo paſſing on by Leyra, they came and camped at Soria, whereas a meſſenger ſent by Don Nugno Aluarez Pereira newly created Conſtable of Portugal, came vnto the king, intreating him in his maſters name, to auoyd the battell, which ſhould be ſoone preſented vnto him, and that it might be there would be meanes to come to ſome good accord, if it were earneſtly ſought.

This was but the Conſtables pollicie, to ſtay the king of Caſtile, for that the king of Portugalls armie was not ſtrong enough to encounter their enemies: whereunto the king D made a gracious anſwer. The new king of Portugal was in Arbantes very penſiue, ſeeing himſelfe much inferiour to his enemie, who beſides the Caſtillans, which were in great numbers, had many Noblemen of Portugal in his armie, the which beeing within a league and a halfe of that of Portugal, there were many things propounded, to end their quarrels without a battell, but they were all without effect: for the king of Caſtile finding himſelfe ſtrong, had a deſire to fight, promiſing vnto himſelfe all aduantages, and yet his captaines were of another opinion; and among others, Monſieur de Rie, Chamberlaine to the French king, and his ambaſſador with the King of Caſtile, a Gentleman 70. yeres old, and a captaine of great experience, ſaying, that his men were wearie, and it was late, and that the Portugall army, in the which were 2200. men at armes, and 10000. foote, were E camped in a place of ſtrength: from whence, if he would haue patience, hee ſhould ſee them ſoone diſlodg for want of victuals, beeing aduertiſed that they had not any meate, but for that night: that vppon their diſlodging he ſhould haue better oportunitie to fight with them: & if they went to affront them in the place where they were, it was likely they ſhould reape more ſhame then honor. But notwithſtanding all theſe reaſons, hee would Battel of Aliubarot and the Caſtillans defeated. needes fight: wherefore the Caſtillans hauing put their armie in battell, they were receiued courageouſly by the Portugals, along the mountaines of Maos, in the fields nere vnto the village of Aljubarot, where at the firſt charge, notwithſtanding all the indeauour of the Portugall fore-ward, they gaue ground to the Caſtillans: but the new king of Portugal flying thither with his ſquadron, not onely fortified his men, but alſo charging the F enemie with great courage (who thought they had won all, and fought without order, & careleſly) he brake them, and put them to a ſhamefull flight with great ſlaughter, the king of Caſtile himſelf being in danger, who fled 11. leagues that night vnto S. Iren, where he arriued at the breake of day in great perplexity, and then recouering the ſea-ſhoare, hee cauſed himſelfe to be carryed to Seuile.

Polydore

A Polydore Virgil in his Hiſtorie of England, failes in the diſcourſe of this battell, ſaying, that Edmond Earle of Cambridge was there with good troupes of Engliſh for the new king of Portugal againſt him of Caſtile, and giues the honour of the battell to the Engliſh: but it appeares by all the Spaniſh Writers, (more credible in matters of Spaine then ſtrangers) that the comming of the Earle of Cambridge into Portugall was not at that time, but in the life of king Fernand. Neither were there any French troupes for the king of Caſtile, as ſome Authors make mention. Vpon the place of battell there was an Hermitage built to S. George, who is held to be the patron and protector of Portugal, as alſo of Arragon, as S. Iames is of Caſtile: and this victorie is more celebrated by the Portugals, then any they euer had: for that by reaſon thereof they were freed from the ſub-

B iection of Caſtile: it is called the battell of Aljubarote, or of S. George. In this battell there dyed many Noblemen of Caſtile; and among others Don Pedro of Arragon, ſonne to the Conſtable of Caſtile, D. Iohn of Caſtile, Lord of Aguilar del campo, ſon to D. Tello, L. of Biſcay, D. Fernand of Caſtile, a yong Prince, ſon to D. Sancho, Earle of Albuquerque, Peter Dias Damas Prior of S. Iohn, D. Diego Manrique, Gouernor generall of the fronter of Caſtile, D. Pedro of Mendoça, a Lord Steward of the king of Caſtiles houſe, Don Iohn Fernandes of Touar high Admiral, D. Diego Gomes Sarmiento Gouernor of Galicia, Pedro Carillo Marſhall of Caſtile, D. Aluar Gonçales of Sandoual, and his brother Fernand Gonçales, D. Iohn Ramir of Areillan, Iohn Ortiz of Cueua, Gonçalo of Cerbantes, Ruy Braue, and Fernand Carillo: and of the Portugals following the partie of Caſtile, D. Iohn Alphonſo

C Sello, Admirall of Portugall, brother to the Queene D. Leonora, D. Pero Aluarez Pereira, Maſter of the Order of Calatraua, and his brother D. Diego Aluarez Pereira, brothers to D. Nugno Aluarez Conſtable of Portugal, Gonçal Vaſques of Azeuedo, with Aluar Gonçales his ſonne, and others. There dyed alſo in this defeate Monſieur de Riè Ambaſſador for the French king, and his Chamberlaine. Great was the ſpoile of the Caſtillans campe, & many priſoners caryed away by the Portugals, who hung vp their enſignes & other ſpoils for trophees in the Monaſterie of Alcouaça, and in the chiefe church at Braga, and at the Carmes at Lisbon, the which were afterwards founded by the Conſtable D. Nugno Aluarez Pereira, and among others the royal Standard of Caſtile was taken. As for thoſe which

D eſcaped the battell, ſome gathered themſelues together in S. Iren, and ſome of them recouered Caſtile, as well as they could. They of S. Iren hauing paſt the riuer of Tayo, with D. Gonçal Nugnes of Guzman, Maſter of Alcantara, (who was ſince made Maſter of the Calatraua) they ioyned with the forces of Nauarre and France, which the Infant Don Charles of Nauarre brought to the king of Caſtile his brother-in-law, but too late: wherfore they returned all together into Caſtile, hauing made all the ſpoile they could in the Realme of Portugal: the which by this battel of Aljubarote remained aſſured for the king Don Iohn the tenth in number, and the firſt of that name, hauing attained to that royall dignitie, to the which in the beginning he did not aſpire, and that with the conſent of the Nobilitie and States of the countrie.

F SVCH as are to rule ouer Nations, and eſpecially where there is great ſtore of Nobility, muſt be carefull how to gouerne their affections, leſt by their too great libertie they force their ſubiects, either in regard of their honours, or for their iuſt defence to haue recourſe to armes. For it is often ſeene when a warre is kindled, and that they which are tearmed Rebels, haue gotten any aduantage, they do no longer containe themſelues within the bounds which at the firſt they had propounded, but they proceed, and ſeeke a totall change of the Eſtate, thinking they cannot be otherwiſe aſſured:

aſſured: or that the ſuperior whom they would make their equall (which is the true effect of armes) can euer be a true and perfect friend. Such are chiefly poſſeſſed with this iealouſie and diſtruſt, as are to contend with men that are giuen to reuenge, and of baſe diſpoſitions, as women and effeminate perſons, who ſeeke to maintaine their exceſſe by the name and credit of a Soueraigne degree wherin they are placed, thinking that this greatneſſe doth purchaſe them a priuiledge in any thing they do, and giue authoritie to their cruelties and impieties, wherin they pleaſe themſelues, although they be many times deceiued. It is moſt certaine, and verified by infinit examples, that neither force, nor greatneſſe can auayle a Prince, whoſe bad life makes him hatefull to his ſubiects. And on the other ſide, there is no ſuch guard, as the loue of ſubiects, the which is conceiued by the opinion of vertue. Opinion followes the effects: and therefore a Prince ſhould be alwaies carefull what opinion men ſhould haue of him, and remember ſtill the precept of the wiſe: That a man muſt be alwaies ſuch as he would be eſteemed. If he be giuen to iniuſtice and voluptuouſneſſe, with the oppreſſion and ruine of his ſubiects, let him aſſure himſelfe, that good men wil hate and deteſt him and his actions, and eſtrange themſelues from him: ſo as he ſhall remaine ingaged among flatterers, where many times he is ſmothered, but at the leaſt he is for euer infamous. The name of Rebell is iuſtly deteſted, but the common people iudge by the euents, and the wiſe and well-aduiſed according to the cauſes.

And there is nothing more certaine, whatſoeuer the flatterers of Court ſay, that neuer any Conſpiracie againſt a ſoueraigne Magiſtrate was durable, or could take roote, if the hearts of the ſubiects were not formerly diſtracted by the Princes owne guilt and exceſſe. But if it pleaſeth God to ſtirre vp ſome noble courage, who imbraceth the publike cauſe, then ſhall a tyrant hardly auoid his due puniſhment, whereof Spaine affoords vs aſſured proofes in Don Pedro King of Caſtile, and D. Leonora Telles of Meneſes, widow to king Fernand, and Regent of Portugall, who by her vnchaſtneſſe and tyrannie, as we haue formerly related, ruined her ſelfe, and did fruſtrate Donna Beatrix her daughter of that Crowne, ſetting it vppon the head of Don Iohn the Baſtard, Maſter of the Order of the Knights of Auiz her enemie, who had no lawfull right, and (it may bee) neither thought nor hoped to attayne vnto it, but when hee ſaw himſelfe armed and followed.

1 Portugal.

This King notwithſtanding his victorie, was alwayes called the Maſter of Auiz, by the Caſtillans, who would not aduow him for king, to the preiudice of their Queene Donna Beatrix: and the king D. Iohn his aduerſarie intitled himſelfe king of Caſtile, Leon, Portugal, Toledo, Gallicia, Seuile, Cordoua, Murcia, Iaen, Algarue, Algezire, and Lord of Lara, Biſcay and Molina, ſome few daies after this great victorie wonne by the Portugals. S. Iren yeelded, with all that countrie, there remaining not any place on this ſide the mountaines, that held for the king of Caſtile. At Saint Iren D. Nugno Aluarez of Pereira Conſtable of Portugall, was made Earle of Oren, in recompence of his valour and faithfull ſeruice: and the new king D. Iohn vſed great bounty vnto all the Caſtillans that were priſoners, ſending them home free without any ranſome. After that time, leauing the conduct of the warre to his Conſtable, he employed his time in workes of pietie, and giuing thankes to God for the victorie which he had giuen him, that is, he went in pilgrimage on foote to Saint Mary of Oliuera of Guimaranes, which is foure daies iourney from S. Iren. In the meane time the Conſtable paſſing Guadiana, entred into Caſtile with two thouſand lances, comprehending the light horſe and genets, and good troupes of foote, where he got another victorie againſt the Caſtillans: whereof the king his maſter was aduertiſed being at Porto; who to reward the Conſtable, and to incourage him to do better, he gaue him the title of Earle of Barcelos. This Conſtable, beſides that hee had in him the chiefe parts and ornament which make Nobility, hee was iſſued from one of the nobleſt families in Portugal: for his father Don Aluar Gonçales had beene Prior of S. Iohn, or of Crato, as the Portugals ſay, being at the battaile of Salado or Tariffa, wonne againſt the Moores, in the yeare 1340. by the kings D. Alphonſo the 12. of Caſtile, and D. Alphonſo the fourth of Portugal, he founded our Ladies Church of Fleur de Roſe, and the ſtrong caſtle of Ameyra, with the pallace of Bonjardin.

Liberalitie of the new king of Portugal.

This

A This Prior beſides many other children (for ſome ſay he had 32.) had this Don Nugno Alnarez of Pereira, Conſtable of Portugal, a great and famous Captaine, the founder of the houſe and ſtate of Bragance: whoſe mother was called Heira Gonçales of Caruahal, he being borne in the yeare 1360. At the age of ſeuenteene yeares he married the widow of Vaſco Gonçales Baroſſo, a chiefe Nobleman in Portugal: of which mariage beſides two ſonnes which dyed young, iſſued one daughter named D. Beatrix, who was heire to her fathers Eſtate, and was married to D. Alphonſo of Portugal, baſe ſonne to this king Don Iohn, who was borne whileſt he was Maſter of Auiz, of a miſtris of his called D. Agnes, ſhe being afterwards made commandreſſe of Santos. This Conſtables Grandfather was D. Gonçalo Pereira, Arch-biſhop of Braga, a Prelate of a royall magnificence in his manner of liuing, and exceeding bountifull. The Conſtable hauing charge to continue the war, whileſt that the King D. Iohn was otherwiſe employed touching the gouernement of the realme, he paſt into the Prouinces beyond the mountaines, where hee reduced to the new kings obedience, Chaues, Bragance, Almeyda, and other places, which held yet for the Queene D. Beatrix, and her husband the king of Caſtile, ſo as there remayned few which were not made ſubiect, and brought vnder the iuriſdiction of Don Iohn king of Portugal.

But for that ſuch quarrels are not determined by one or two victories gotten by the weaker, againſt one more mighty, the new king duly conſidering all this, and with good counſell, thought it neceſſarie, that D. Iohn king of Caſtile ſhould be quite ruined, that he might the better maintaine his new conqueſt, and to this end he called the Engliſh with the pretext of apparent right: for as we haue ſayd, the Duke of Lancaſter, Vncle to king Richard the ſecond then raigning, hauing married D. Conſtance daughter to the deceaſed king D. Pedro of Caſtile, pretending that the Realmes of Caſtile and Leon did belong to him, and carried the title and armes. Wherefore Ambaſſadors were ſent vnto him, to ſummon him to come into Spaine, with aſſurance and promiſe, that he ſhould be aſſiſted with all the forces and meanes of Portugal, proteſting that if he let ſlip this goodly occaſion, beſides the loſſe, he ſhould reape diſhonor, and be ſcorned of all the world. On the other ſide, D. Iohn king of Caſtile, hauing beene viſited by the Infant of Nauarre, who came expreſly to Seuile, and receiued letters from Pope Clement at Auignon, full of conſolation, he came to Vailledolit, and there held a generall aſſembly of the Eſtates of his Realmes, from whence he ſent Ambaſſadors to Charles the ſixth the French king, intreating him to ſend him ſuccours to recouer his Realms of Portugal and Algarbe, his wiues patrimonie, which were detayned from him by a baſtard rebell. Thus theſe two princes called in ſtrangers to the preiudice of Spaine.

Iohn King of Portugal cals the Engliſh into Spaine.

D. Iohn King of Caſtile cals in the French.

The Duke of Lancaſter paſſed into Portugal with fifteene hundred Lances, and as many Archers on foot: and Lewis Duke of Bourbon the kings Vncle, was ſent out of France with two thouſand Lances in fauour of D Iohn king of Caſtile. The Engliſh armie running along the coaſt of Galicia, tooke ſixe gallies of Caſtile, and came to the Groine on Saint Iames day, in the yeare 1386. In the meane time the king of Portugal had led his armie into Caſtile, and beſeeged the towne of Coria, but could not take it. It was then that he ſayd, He had need of the good Knights of the round table, to which hee was anſwered by Men Rodrigues of Vaſconcellos, that they had alſo need of a king Arthur, who could diſtinguiſh and reward good Knights: the which the king D. Iohn turned to a ieaſt and would not ſeeme to be touched.

At this ſeege hee had newes, that the Duke of Lancaſters armie was landed: wherefore hee preſently diſlodged, and came to receiue and entertaine them at pont du Maure, neere vnto the Towne of Porto: The Duke had brought with him his wife Donna Conſtance of Caſtile, and two daughters, the one by her, whoſe name was Katherine, the other by his firſt wife, called Philippe. At this enterview, a marriage was treated betwixt the King Don Iohn and that Ladie Philippe, who was then deliuered into the hand of the King, her future husband, and ſoone after they were married, with ſuch pompe as conforted with their perſons and dignities.

Hauing conſulted concerning the warre, they beganne to ſpoyle the Countrie of Galicia, where they took ſome places: but the heat of the plague, which conſumed both the countrie people, and the Engliſh armie ſtayed the courſe of theſe conqueſts. The King of Caſtile had fortified and manned the cittie of Leon, Benauent, and other places in Gallicia with good Garriſons, vntill he went to field, vppon the comming of thoſe ſuccours which hee expected from France and Nauarre. In the meane time hee cauſed the Duke of Lancaſter to bee dealt withall about an Accord, but hee continued conſtant in his demands to haue the Realmes of Caſtile and Leon: Whereuppon the King ſent Ambaſſadours vnto him, to let him vnderſtand publikely, that hee ſhould content himſelfe with that which hee had done, and not to vexe the Countrie any more: and that if hee pretended any wrong were done vnto him by him, hee defied him to the combate, man to man, and hee that vanquiſhed ſhould bee King of Caſtile: but vnder hand the Ambaſſadours had charge to propound other conditions vnto him, whereuppon they came to treate of a marriage betwixt the Infant Don Henry of Caſtile, and Catherine the Dukes daughter, by Donna Conſtance, with many offers, which were not accepted, at the leaſt it did not then appeare ſo: for the Portugals hauing ioyned with the Engliſh armie, they marched farther into the territories and iuriſdictions of Leon, in the yeare 1387. and beſeeged Benauent in vaine, they paſſed by Villalobos, Pialas, and Valderas, the which they took: from whence returning by Ciudad Roderigo, they retired into Portugal, wanting victuals, and beeing preſſed with the plague: and moreouer they had newes that the French ſupplies had paſſed Nauarre, and were entring into Caſtile: the which aduanced the concluſion of a peace betwixt the King of Caſtile, and the Duke of Lancaſter, the which was made at Troncoſo with theſe conditions:

An. 1387.

Accord betwixt the king of Caſtile and the Duke of Lancaſter.

That the Infant Don Henry the eldeſt ſonne of Caſtile, ſhould marrie Catherine, the daughter of the Duke of Lancaſter, and of his wife Donna Conſtance of Caſtile, for whoſe dowrie the king D. Iohn ſhould aſſigne certaine places: That the cittie of Guadalajara, with the townes of Medina del campo, and Olmedo ſhould be giuen to the Dutcheſſe D. Conſtance, to enioy the reuenues thereof during her life: That the king ſhould pay ſixtie thouſand pounds ſterling to the Duke, and to D. Conſtance his wife at certaine dayes: and moreouer, foure thouſand pounds penſion during their liues, and the longer liuer of them. In conſideration whereof, the Duke of Lancaſter and Donna Conſtance ſhould renounce all rights, actions and pretenſions which they challenged to the Realmes of Caſtile, Leon, and their dependances, and that the places taken in Gallicia ſhould be reſtored. This accord beeing thus concluded, the Duke retired himſelfe into the towne of Porto, where he made his accord alſo with the King of Portugal: to which treaties it ſeemes the Duke had bene forced by the plague, which had conſumed two third parts of his men. The duke of Lancaſter then hauing for the fruites of his voyage married his two daughters to two kings, he returned into Guienne in the yeare 1387. not very well ſatisfied with the King of Portugal, nor the king with him. Of the marriage of Don Iohn king of Portugal, and of D. Philippe, there came this iſſue: firſt, they had a daughter called D. Blanche, which dyed young in Lisbon: then the Infant D. Alphonſo borne in the yeare 1391. at S. Iren, who liued not aboue two yeares: their third child was Don Edward borne in the Towne of Viſeo, and ſucceeded in his fathers Realme. Moreouer, they had the Infant D. Pedro, borne at Lisbon in the yeare 1392. he was Duke of Coimbra, and Lord of Mont Major the old, and of Amero: then the Infant Don Henry, of whome the Queene was deliuered at Porto, he was Duke of Viſeo, and Maſter of the Knights of Chriſtus, and it was he which firſt diſcouered the Ilands of Madera in the Ocean ſea. Of this marriage alſo came Donna Izabella, borne at Ebora in the yeare 1397. who was Dutcheſſe of Bourgongne, and Counteſſe of Flanders, wife to Philip Duke of Bourgondie: by her was built the Monaſterie of Prolonga neere vnto Sintra, of the Order of Saint Ierome. They had beſides theſe the Infant Don Iohn, who was Maſter of Saint Iames, borne at Saint Iren in the yeare 1400. hee was Conſtable of the Realme, and beeing married with Donna Izabella daughter to Don Alphonſo Duke of Bragance his baſtard-brother, he was grandfather by the mothers ſide to D. Izabella Queene proprietarie of Caſtile and Leon. And in the end the king Don Iohn and Donna Philippe his wife had the Infant Don Fernand, borne in the yeare 1402. at Saint Iren, who was Maſter of Auiz, a zealous prince to the Chriſtian Religion, and full of charity.

Genealogie of Portugal.

Before

A Before that the king Don Iohn came vnto the Crowne, beeing but Maſter of Auiz, he had two baſe children by a Gentlewoman called Donna Agnes, that is, Don Alphonſo, who married the daughter and heire of Don Nugno Aluares Pereira, Earle of Oren and Barcelles, and Duke of Bragance, called D. Beatrix: and one daughter named alſo Donna Beatrix, who was married to Thomas Earle of Arondel. This is the iſſue of the King D. Iohn the firſt of Portugal, who had yet a quarrell for the Realme with the King of Caſtile, the pourſuite whereof was deferred for a time: for the king of Caſtile beeing to performe his promiſe to the Duke of Lancaſter, and to pay him great ſummes of money, he made choice at that time to ſend backe the French forces, and not to ſuffer them to ſtay B in his countrie, giuing them part of their entertaynment, and good aſſurance for the reſt. Then hauing held an aſſembly of the Eſtates at Birbieſca, by reaſon the plague was at Burgos, he propounded the neede he had of money to pay the Engliſh Duke: and therefore he attempted to impoſe a generall Tribute vppon the Clergie, Nobility, and third Eſtate without exception, wherein he was croſt, being forced to ſeeke ſome other expedient. From Birbieſca he came to Soria, and then to Calaorra, where he heard the French Ambaſſadors, and ſent others to Bayone, to the Duke of Lancaſter, to confirme their accord: and then it was concluded anew, that from thence-foorth the Infant Don Henry ſhould be called Prince of the Aſturia's, and his wife Princeſſe, after the manner of England, whereby the kings eldeſt ſon is called Prince of Wales: and then began the cuſtom C to call the eldeſt of Caſtile Princes, whom before they called Infants, and it is an error to entitle them Princes of Caſtile or of Spaine: for they are not called Princes for any other occaſion, but that they haue the Aſturia's for their portion and intertaynment, the which was made a principality, firſt in this D. Henry, and his wife D. Catherina: to the patrimony of which principality, Iaen, Vbeda, Baeça, and Andujar haue beene ſince annexed. It is an error alſo to thinke that this title of principalitie is giuen to the Aſturia's of Ouiedo, for that in that region was the beginning of the recouerie of Spain: for it proceeds not from any thing elſe, but from this marriage betwixt Henry of Caſtile, and Donna Catherina of Lancaſter. Before the king Don Iohn of Caſtile parted from Calaorra, Charles the third king of Nauarre, brother-in-law to king Iohn, came to viſit him, with the Queene Donna D. Leonora of Caſtile his wife.

French ſuccors fruitleſſe for Caſtile.

Title of Prince firſt giuen in Spaine to the King's eldeſt ſonne.

This prince had ſucceeded king Charles the Bad his father, in the yeare 1386. beeing dead at Pampelona of a Leproſie, as the Spaniards ſay, and the French Hiſtories, of a diſeaſe he got by his incontinencie, whereof he languiſhed long. It is he of whom they write that the Phiſitions hauing him in cure, applying Aqua-vita to reſtore him, they ſet fire of it, which tooke hold of the bed, ſo as he was burnt and could not be releeued: Others ſay, that he was ſowed vp in a ſheet ſteeped in Aqua-vita, and that the Surgeon ſeeking to cut the threed, holding a waxe light, the ſheet was ſuddenly ſet on fire and burnt the king: but howſoeuer, hee ended his daies in great ſickneſſe at Pampelona, in the yeare 1386, the fiue and fortith yeare of his raigne, hauing raigned 73. His body was interred E in the Cathedral church of that cittie, where the heart of the Queene his wife lyes, who dyed in France in the yeare 1378. his bowels were buried at Saint Maries of Ronceuaux, and his heart at S. Maries of Vxue. The ſame yeare he dyed, his daughter Ieanne was firſt married to Iohn of Montfort Duke of Brittany, by whom ſhe had foure ſonnes, and three daughters, and afterwards to Henry King of England. Before his death he pacified the ſeditions which they of Pampelona had raiſed among themſelues, cauſing the authors to be puniſhed: among which, one of the chiefe was called Andrew of Turilles, who was executed.

Charles the 3. of that name, the 31. King of Nauarre.

THis Charles ſucceeded to the Realme of Nauarre, beeing called the Noble, for his bountie, affabilitie, and other vertues, which made him to be eſteemed by all Chriſtian Princes his neighbours, and generally beloued of all men. Hee was 25. yeares old, when he came to the Crowne. At the deceaſe of his father, he was at Pennafiel in Caſtile, B with the King D. Iohn his brother-in-law, of whom he tooke his leaue with infinit teares, vppon the receit of theſe newes. And ſuch was the loue and ſingular affection which the k. of Caſtile bare him, as from the beginning of his raigne he granted him full reſtitution of the townes and caſtles of Tudele, S. Vincent, Viana, Guarda, Eſtella, Miranda, Larraga, and other places, which were in depoſito ſince the laſt pacification made with Don Henry king of Caſtile, although the ten yeares capitulated were not yet expired: moreouer he forgaue him 20000. doublons of gold, which had beene lent to the deceaſed king his father, and did diſcharge him of the promiſe of two thouſand pounds ſterling, which he had made for the libertie of Perlas of Tortui an Engliſhman beeing priſoner in Caſtile. C Such and greater was the bountie of D. Iohn king of Caſtile to Charles the third king of Nauarre his brother-in-law, and likewiſe to the Queene D. Leonora his ſiſter, and to their daughters who were at that time in Caſtile: and moreouer hee cauſed the king to bee accompanied into his Realme by the chiefe of his Nobility, who beeing come to Pampelona, and there receiued with great pompe and ioy by the Eſtates of the Realme, the firſt act he did for the gouernment thereof, was to reſolue with his ſubiects and Councellors, to adhere to Pope Clement the 7. remaining at Auignon, and to reiect Vrbane the ſixt, as the kings of France and Caſtile had done, yet with this proteſtation, that hee would not ſeparate himſelfe from the holy Apoſtolike church, but obey that which ſhold be decreed by a generall Councel concerning the Schiſme. Then he ſought the allyance of neighbor D Princes, ſending ambaſſadours vnto them, eſpecially into Arragon, where hee made a league with the duke of Girone, the heire of Arragon, and treated the marriage of Donna Ieanne his elder daughter, with D. Iames eldeſt ſonne to the Duke of Girone, hauing an intent to vnite the crowne of Nauarre to that of Arragon, for that hee had no ſonnes, but this marriage tooke no effect.

Genealogie of Nauarre.

In the beginning of the yeare 1387. Queene Leonora his wife fell into a long and languiſhing ſickneſſe, which bred much trouble betwixt them. He had by her theſe children following: D. Ieanne the eldeſt, who was wife to Iohn of Foix, ſonne to Archambault: D. Maria who dyed a virgin at Pampelona, D. Blanche, who was Queene of Sicily and Nauarre, D. Beatrix Counteſſe of Marche, wife to Iames of Bourbon, and D. Izabella, who E dyed alſo a mayd. After theſe fiue daughters they had Don Charles their ſonne, who dyed a child, and Don Lewis which liued but ſixe moneths. Theſe be the lawfull children of the king Don Charles the third. He had out of marriage one ſonne called Godfrey of Nauar, who was Marſhall of the Realme, and Earle of Cortes, and one daughter named Donna Ieanne of Nauarre, who was married to Inigo Ortiz of Eſtuniga, ſonne to Diego Lopes of Eſtuniga.

Of theſe children mention is made in this kings teſtament, the which is in the Cathedrall church of Pampelona, in the which his breethren are alſo named: Peter Earle of Mortaing, and Leon a Baſtard, and Donna Maria alſo a Baſtard, married to the Earle of Denia. F F

In the the yeare 1387. the warre betwixt Caſtile and Portugal beeing hote, the French troupes, led by Lewis Duke of Bourbon to the ſuccour of King Iohn, paſt through Nauarre, where they were furniſhed with all neceſſaries by King Charles, who after their retreat and accord made by the king of Caſtile with the Duke of Lancaſter, hee came to Calaorra, as wee haue ſayd, to reioyce with the King Don Iohn, for this pacification.

Retur-

A Returning to the treatie of this warre, we ſay, that the Princeſſe Catherine hauing followed her father into Guienne, was after a new confirmation of the accord, ſent by him to Fontaraby, and there deliuered to the Prelates and Noblemen deputed by the king of Caſtile, to receiue her, who conducted her to Palence, where the marriage betwixt her and the Prince D. Henry was ſolemnized, he being but ten yeares old, and ſhee nineteene. The Dutcheſſe of Lancaſter, mother to the Princeſſe, paſt afterwards into Spaine, and came to the king D. Iohn her couſin at Medina del campo, to whome among other preſents ſhe gaue a rich Crowne of gold, ſaying, that the duke her husband had cauſed it to be made, hoping to be crowned king of Caſtile: but ſeeing they were agreed otherwiſe then he expected, it was his due, and therefore ſhe preſented it vnto him. The king receiB ued it with great ioy, and requited the Dutcheſſe with other gifts of price, putting her in poſſeſſion of the townes promiſed by the accord, whereunto he added Huete. The Dutcheſſe paſt afterwards to Guadalajara, hauing had a promiſe of an enterview betwixt the king and the Duke of Lancaſter her husband, at Fontaraby or Bajone. The king ſtayd not long to come to Victoria for this meeting, and the Dutcheſſe went before to draw her husband to Fontaraby: but he excuſed himſelfe by reaſon of his apparent indiſpoſition, and vpon the ſharpeneſſe of the winter, which made the paſſage of S. Adrian difficult. D. Pero Lopes of Ayala, Biſhop of Oſma, and Fernand of Illeſca were ſent vnto him from the king to whome he propounded an allyance which he deſired to make betwixt Caſtile and England, and to induce the King D. Iohn to quit that of France, whereof the ambaſſadors C excuſed their maſter. The interview being hindred by this occaſion the king D. Iohn came to Segobia, to giue order for the warre of Portugal, which had beene ſomewhat quenched ſince the duke of Lancaſters retreat: for the pacifying whereof Fernando of Illeſca, of the Order of the preaching Friars, and the Kings Confeſſor, had laboured much, but could not conclude any thing. 5 Caſtile.

The King of Portugall falling ſicke in his pallace of Cordal, gaue ſome hope that matters would turne fauourable for Caſtile: for his ſickneſſe was ſo violent, as all men deſpayred of his life: whereat the Queene Donna Philippe was much grieued, ſo as ſhee was deliuered of her firſt child before her time, which made them doubt ſhee would not haue any more: but midwiues rules are not alwaies true; for ſhe had afterwards thoſe chilD dren whereof we haue made mention. Portugal.

Friar Fernand and others, who treated a truce betwixt theſe two kings, being not able to effect that which they pretended, the King of Portugal being recouered, he entred into Galicia, and ſpoiled the countrie, and tooke Tuy by Intelligence, and Saluaterra: after which ſpoiles the Confeſſor Fernand returned into Portugal, and renewed the treatie, where he wrought ſo, as he yeelded to a truce for ſixe yeares, in the yeare 1389. by the which Tuy, Saluaterra, and all the Portugals had taken from Caſtile, was yeelded. By this pacification which continued long, Don Iohn King of Portugal, had meanes to ſettle him ſelfe in his Royaltie, and wholly to exclude D. Beatrix. 6. Exploits of the K. of Portugal in Spaine. 1389.

As for the affaires of Arragon, we find that before the war betwixt Caſtile and PortuE gall, the king D. Pedro being very old, married the fourth time with D. Sibilla, widow to Artal of Foſſes, whom he cauſed to be crowned at Sarragoſſa, in the yeare 1381. whether the Eſtates were called to that effect. At the which the Noblemen which had ſubiects that were no Gentlemen, maintained that they had ſoueraigne power ouer them, their goods and liues, and that it had beene long practiſed in Arragon. This action was begun vpon the complaints made by the Inhabitants of Anzanego, againſt D. Pedro Sanches of Latras their Lord: but it was prohibited, and a ſentence was giuen by way of prouiſion, that the Noblemen ſhould enioy the rights which they had accuſtomed, although they were not according to the common law or written law: and although they could not ſhew any priuiledges granted vnto them in that behalfe, yet ſhould it not be lawfull for the king to F draw them into queſtion, for any violence or bad vſage done vnto their ſubiects, but the puniſhment of any exceſſe done by the ſuperiors to their ſubiects, ſhould be left to God, the which gaue way to infinit wickednes. Theſe Eſtates ended with trouble & confuſion, for that D. Briande of Luna, hauing left D. Lopes Ximenes of Vrrea her husband, and married D. Lewis Cornel, theſe two Noblemen went to armes, and kept the field. 7. Arragon.

As for the Eſtate of Sardynia, the Arragonois were in a manner reduced to deſpaire, by the Sardynians and Geneuois their adherents: but it falling out, that Hugh Iudge of Arborea had, by reaſon of his tyrannies, beene cruelly murthered by his ſubiects, the partie of Arragon began to be in more eſteeme. Brancaleon of Oria came then to Monçon, to the king D. Pedro, hauing a paſ-port. The Eſtates beeing there aſſembled, he was receiued and honoured with the title of Earle of Monçon: this Lord had married Leonora ſiſter to Hugh of Arborea. In the meane time the Sardynians deſirous to ſhake off the Arragonois yoake, and to ſubmit themſelues to the Geneuois, held all the Ports of the Iland: whereas Leonora of Arborea, wife to Brancaleon, ioyning with the Geneuois, made her ſelfe head of the partie: which made the king to ſtay Brancaleon, notwithſtanding his paſ-port, whereupon he was ſent into Sardynia, and kept priſoner in the caſtle of Cailleri, during the life of the King Don Pedro.

Eſtates in Arragon.

There was another aſſembly of the generall Eſtates called at Monçon, in the yeare, 1383. where as the Infant D. Martin, Earle of Xerica and of Luna, in the name of the Eſtates, made complaint of many concuſſions and violences which had beene committed throughout the Realme, beeing countenanced by the Duke of Girone, the kings eldeſt ſonne, and Gouernor of the Realme: from whoſe counſell proceeded many vniuſt Ordonances, charges and exactions vppon the people, by the which the Eſtate was decayed. He ſayd moreouer, that ſome of the Dukes Councell had ſecret intelligence in Caſtile, and other places, yea with the Rebels of Sardynia, with Lewis Duke of Anjou, the Geneuois, and with the enemies to the Arragonois partie in Sicily; and had fauoured the attempts of the Infant of Majorca, who had ſome yeares before made roades into Cattelogne and Arragon: requiring that information might be made, and the offendors puniſhed: the which the king ordayned. Wherupon the Vicount of Roa, Gaſton of Moncade, Americ Scintilla, Iohn Bellera, and Fernandes of Heredia, Biſhop of Vic, were commanded to leaue the aſſembly, being ſuſpected: the which bred great troubles and ſeditions, and ſome Noblemen were chaſed from Court, and from the Duke of Girones houſe, who by reaſon therof grew in bad tearmes with the King his father, and worſe with the Queen D. Sibilla, his mother-in-law, by whom he was pourſued, as the king D. Pedro his father had beene by D. Leonora of Caſtile. The marriage with this Infant D. Iohn Duke of Girone made then with Violant daughter to the Duke of Bar, againſt his fathers liking, who deſired he ſhould marry the heire of Sicily, put him more into diſgrace, and gaue the Queen meanes to keepe him out of fauour: ſo as the gouernment of the Realme was taken from him: and for that Don Iohn Earle of Ampurias, with other Noblemen were diſcontented, the king ſent to ouer-runne the territorie of Ampurias, and to beſeege Chaſtillon, where the Earle was, who was forced to flie by ſea into Prouence. The Earle of Vrgel was for the ſame reaſon pourſued in hoſtile manner: and ſuch were the practiſes of Queene Sibilla, as the Prince with his wife D. Violant, were forced to retire themſelues farre from Court, to Caſtelfolit, where as the Biſhop of Vic, and the Vicounts of Liſle and Roccabertin kept him company. Among other perſons of the Dukes houſe, whom the king hated, was D. Conſtance, widow to D. Francis of Perillos, who was the guardien of all his ſecrets, and of the Dutcheſſe Violant his wife, wherefore the king did ſtill command that ſhe ſhould be chaſed away.

By reaſon of the Duke of Girones abſence from Court, Queene Sibilla had meanes to giue many places, and to aduance her friends, yea ſhe got a promiſe, by oath, from the chiefe townes of Arragon, to defend her life and goods againſt the Duke; who, notwithſtanding the king had forbidden him to meddle with the affaires, carried himſelfe ſtill for Gouernor of the Realme: and the King ſeeking to force him, hee appealed to the Iuſtice Major of Arragon. This Magiſtrate beeing of great authoritie, ſtayes all matters of fact, vntill he hath giuen ſentence vpon the appeale or oppoſitions. In the meane time the Earle of Ampurias, who had fledde to Auignon, and had employed all his meanes and friends to leauie men in France, arriued in the Countie of Roſſillon with eight hundred horſe, whereof Iohn Earle of Boullen was the Leader: But the King beeing aduertiſed of his deſeins, had ſo well prouided for all things, as the French ſeeing that all exploites of warre would be very difficult, returned, and abandoned the Earle of Ampurias.

A This King D. Pedro being in peace with Caſtile, and other potentats of Spaine, he was then to contend for the Iſland of Majorca, the country of Roſſillon and Cerdagne, Colibre and Valiſper, with Lewis Duke of Aniou, ſonne to Iohn the French King, who pretended a right to thoſe Eſtates, by vertue of a ceſſion made vnto him by the Marqueſſe of Montferat, ſiſter and heire to Don Iames the laſt King of Majorca; but they came not to armes for theſe things, the Duke of Aniou being diuerted by the affaires of Italy, hauing being adopted by Ieanne Queene of Naples, and crowned King of Naples, by Pope Clement the ſeuenth, in Auignon. Who paſſing into Italy with an army, died there. So as Don Pedro King of Arragon, was freed from the feare of warre, which hee expected from France.

Pretenſion of Lewis Duke of Aniou.

B About that time, or little before, Frederic the third King of Sicile, whom they ſurnamed the Simple his ſonne in law, died, without any heires male, who leauing but one onely daughter, called Donna Maria, hee pretended that the Realme belonged to the crowne of Arragon, according to the teſtament of Frederic the ſecond King of Sicile, who was of the houſe of Arragon, and alſo for other rights which he pretended. By the Teſtators will, if there were no iſſue male of the direct line, the women were excluded from the ſucceſſion of the Realme, willing that it ſhould be vnited to the crowne of Arragon, vpon theſe pretenſions the King Don Pedro made great inſtance in the court of Rome and in the end made Ceſſion of the right which hee pretended to his ſonne, Don Martin of Arragon, Earle of Xerica and of Luna, and afterwards duke of Momblane.

Pretenſions of the King of Arragon to the realme of Sicile.

C The quarrels and troubles which threatned Sicile, were afterwards ended by accord, in the time of King Iohn his ſonne, vpon condition that Donna Maria, heire of the realme, ſhould marry the ſonne of Don Martin, called alſo Don Martin. This D. Martin the father was Conſtable of Arragon. King Frederic had had diuerſe quarrels with Ioane Queene of Naples who pretended the realme of Sicile to belong vnto her: but there was an accord made in the yeere of our Lord 1372. and ſince their accords were ratefied and confirmed by Pope Gregory the eleuenth, in Auignon, by whoſe authority the two realmes did for many yeeres after continue diuided.

Exactions vpon the Clergie.

D The King D. Pedro being come to the fiftith yere of his raign, in the yeere of our Lord 1386. for the which there were great feaſts and ioy at Barcelona, hee would alſo giue the prelats and churchmen cauſe to remember it: for contrary to all cuſtome, hee exacted throughout his realme great ſummes of money vpon the Clergy. Afterwards this King being afflicted with griefe, by reaſon of the ſeditions of his owne, beeing charged with yeeres, and wholy gouerned by his wife Queene Sibile, hee died: wherevpon the Clergy, to the end they might terrefie Kings, that ſhould attempt to impaire their reuenues, ſaid, that he hauing violently vſurped the patrimony of Santa Tecla of Tarragone, by the perſwaſion of Queene Sibile, he was cited by the proctors of that church, to appeere before the Tribunall ſeat of God, within three ſcore daies after, to giue an account for that fact, and that the laſt day of the aſſignation hee died: But it is to bee preſumed

Death of D. Pedro King of Arragon.

E that it was time for him to leaue this world, for hee was aboue three ſcore and twelue yeeres old, and had raigned fifty one. Hee died at Barcelona in the yeere of our Lord 1387. where he was laied in the Cathedral church, and was afterwards tranſported to the royall Monaſtery of Santa Maria of Poblete.

D. Iohn the firſt of that name and foureteenth King of Arragon.

F TO the Realmes and ſoueraigne Eſtates of the deceaſed King, ſucceeded his ſonne D. Iohn, the firſt of that name, the eldeſt of his brethren, the which Queene Sibile his mother in law, ſought by all meanes to hinder, and had almoſt perſwaded the King Don Pedro her husband, to reiect him from the crowne: but beeing giuen to vnderſtand that ſuch an iniuſtice procured by a mother in law, againſt his eldeſt ſonne might cauſe great troubles after his death, he gaue way to the Order of nature, and Don Iohn was King of Arragon.

9 D. Iohn King of Arragon acknowledgeth the Pope at Auignon.

Arragon. It is remarkable that at the ſame time both in Caſtile and Portugal, there were Kings raigning of the ſame name. The King Don Pedro his father was a louer of learning, he entertained the vniuerſity of Lerida, and erected one in Hueſca. Hauing giuen to his ſonne Iohn the towne of Girone with the title of a Dutchy, then beganne the cuſtome, that the eldeſt of Arragon are called Dukes of Girone, as the eldeſt ſonne of France is called Daulphin of Vienne. A

The new King Don Iohn beganne his raigne with the perſecution of his mother in law, who like vnto Donna Leonora of Caſtile, was retired from Barcelona, ſeeing the death of the King D. Pedro approch, and had put her ſelfe into Zaroca, where ſhee was ſoone beſeeged, and taken by Don Martin of Arragon the Kings brother. And for that the King Don Iohn lay languiſhing in his bed, and could not be eaſed by the art of Phyſicke, this widow Queene was accuſed to haue cauſed him to bee poiſoned, wherevpon ſhe was ſtrictly examined, and all thoſe of her houſhold. All the goods the deceaſed King had beſtowed on her, were made forfaite, and giuen to the Queen raigning Donna Violant. The Regency or Gouernment of the realme was giuen to Don Martin, who alſo was made duke of Montblanc, by letters giuen at Grenoillez neere to Barcelona. The preuiledges, lawes and ſtatutes of that city were confirmed by him at his comming to the crowne, and hee did advow Pope Clement at Auignon, by the councell of the Cardinall Don Pedro de Luna, and the perſwaſion of the Queene D. Iolant or Violant, and he of Rome was declared vnlawfull, as made by force. B

Pope Clement at Auignon acknowledged in Arragon. C

All grants made by the King D. Pedro ſince the yeere 1365. were reuoaked. Such were the firſt acts of this King: a Prince weake both in body and minde, giuen to idleneſſe, hunting, dauncing, muſicke and poeſie, with ſo violent an affection, as they ſay, hauing at his comming to the crowne, ſent a ſolemne Ambaſſage to the French King, to treat of the affaires of their Eſtates, the chiefe Article was to require the French King, to giue him certaine Poets of Prouence and Languedoc which did floriſh in thoſe times in their vulgar tongue, not much differing from the Cattelan, whom hee receiued as a ſingular fauour, honoured them, and aſſigned them great penſions, inſtituting for the loue of them ſchooles of their poeſies. And to fill vp the meaſure of his imperfections, he had no care but to pleaſe his wife, vnto whom he was wholy vowed and addicted. D

The Generall Eſtates beeing aſſembled at Monçon, the Deputies had charge to require the ſeuerity of the ancient manners, and the reſtoring of martiall diſcipline, and that the honour of armes might bee reuiued, wherevnto the King had no inclynation. But aboue all, that the houſes and courts of the King and Queene ſhould bee reformed, and reduced to the faſhion and manner of their anceſtors, and that ſome baſe and vicious perſons ſhould be chaſed away. There were certaine Articles preſented againſt D. Carrocia of Villaragut, one of the Queens Ladies, in whom ſhe wholy truſted, and gaue her ſo great credit with the King, as the honors & offices of the realme, were diſtributed according to her aduice and will, without reaſon, meaſure, or regard of merit. The chiefe which ſought this reformation, were Don Alphonſo of Arragon, Marquis of Villena, D. Iames his brother biſhop of Tortoça, D. Iames of Prages, D. Bernardin of Cabrera, Vicont of Liſle and Roa, D. Pedro Queralt, D. Iohn Bellera, and Raymond of Bages; againſt whom their banded ſome of the Kings Mignons, ſo as all the realme was in combuſtion and armes: but the Kings weakeneſſe was at that time profitable; for it kept them from fighting; and hauing graunted a ſafe conduct to D. Alphonſo, D. Lopes Ximenes of Vrrea, Iohn Ximenes of Vrrea, and other their complices, they met with Don Martin the Kings brother, had conference vpon the reformation, and agreed vpon many Articles. Amongſt others Don Carrocia of Villaragut was chaſed from the Queenes court, with a prohibition neuer to conuerſe with her, or any of the Princes or Princeſſes. During theſe contentions Bernard brother to the Earle of Armaignac entred into Cattelogne, with an infinit number of ſouldiars French and Engliſh, who forraged and ſpoiled all they incountred, Bernard their leader hauing no other reaſon, but that he ſought meanes to entertaine the ſouldiars. This danger forced the King to arme, and to march againſt theſe vagabond troupes, whereof ſome beeing found ſcattered and out of order, were defeated, and the reſt forced to repaſſe into Languedoc. A The affaires of Sardynia had beene compounded about the time of the death of the King D.Pedro, ſo as the lands held by Marian Iudge of Arborea, were reſtored to Leonora his daughter, and Brancaleon of Oria her husband deliuered out of priſon; and betwixt the King of Arragon, and the common weale of Genoua, there was ſuch an order ſet downe, as the Siegneury of Genoua might not keepe nor arme any gallies, but in the ports of Genoua, Sauona, Albenga, and Porto Venere, in the riuer of Genoua, and the Liguſtike ſea, and in other ſeas at Pera, Capha', Famogoſta and Scio, Valencia, Majorca, Minorca, Iuiza, Caillerij and Alguer; ſo as a peace was entertained in the Iſland of Sardynia, about the yeere of our Lord 1389. when as the marriage was accompliſhed betwixt D.Martin ſonne to the Infant D.Martin duke of Momblanc, and Mary, daughter to Frederic the third King of Sicile; a ſubiect of new warre, by reaſon of the factions and partialities which were in that Iſland, amongſt the Noblemen, ſome allowing and others diſliking this marriage of their Princeſſe, who according vnto ſome, had beene taken out of the caſtle of Cattane, where by the will of the deceaſed King her father, ſhee was entertained in the gard of Artal of Alagon, and conducted as it were by ſtealth into Cattelogne, by them of Clermont.

The new Kings being come into Sicile, with the duke of Momblanc, who ſerued as a Tutor, being accompained by D. Bernard of Cabrera, Don Artal of Luna, allied to the King, and many other Noblemen of Cattelogne, Arragon and Valencia, and with a good army, they were receiued by them that held their party in the towne of Trapani, from whence they ſought to reduce the factious, ſome by mildneſſe, and others by rigour. The towne of Palermo was yeelded vnto him by the Earle of Modica, and there they were crowned; from whence they made a progreſſe, ſo as they were acknowledged throughout the whole Realme, yet there were often troubles renued through the naturall lightneſſe of that nation.

This yeere 1389. died Pope Vrbain, reſiding at Rome, in whoſe place the Cardinalls of his faction did chooſe Boniface the ninth, called before Peter Tornacel, a prieſt, Cardinall of the title of Saint Anaſtaſius. In the yeere of our Lord 1390. the citie of Lisbone was made an Archbiſhoprike by him at the requeſt of the King D. Iohn, who followed the Pope at Rome, and not him, at Auignon. To it was giuen for Suffragan the biſhop of Coimbra for that time: and in proceſſe of time the church of Portalegre was made a Biſhops ſeat by Paul the third.

The ſame yeere the King of Caſtile hauing aſſembled his Eſtates at Guadalajara, being thruſt on with a continual deſire to be King of Portugal, wherevnto he was animated by the Queene Donna Beatrix his wife, hee propounded to his councell, that hee had reſolued in that aſſembly to giue ouer the Realmes of Caſtile and Leon to his ſonne Don Henry, together with his other Lands and Siegneuries, except Seuile, Cordoua, Iaen, Murcia, and all the Moores frontiers: reſeruing alſo for himſelfe the third part of the reuenues of the church, granted vnto him by Pope Clement, ſaying, that he was aduertiſed, that vpon this renunciation the Portugals would receiue him for their King: for they had no other reaſon to oppoſe themſelues, and to reiect him, but for that they could not endure to ſee the realme of Portugal vnited to that of Caſtile. But his councel did aduiſe him not to doe a thing ſo diſhonourable for himſelfe, and not profitable for his countrie, in quitting his fathers realmes, to thinke to get a ſtrange one, which was held by a reſolute enemy: ſhewing him by reaſons and examples that he did hazard the loſſe of both, and to bee a fable to the world for euer: Hee did willingly heare and beleeue his councellors, and ſuppreſt this deſire, enioyning them ſilence. In this aſſembly he granted a generall pardon to all thoſe that had offended him during the laſt warres, except the Inhabitants of Tuy, who had yeelded to D. Iohn King of Portugal, and to his brother D. Alphonſo Earle of Gijon, to whom he would ſhew no mercy. The Eſtates graunted him a greater ſubuention of money then euer any King before him had. Beeing required by the Deputies of the Prouinces he reformed the expences and ſuperfluities of his court, and reduced his ordinary troupes of horſe, for the gard of the realm, to foure thouſand Launces, fifteene hundred Genets, and one thouſand crosbowes one horsbacke: he ordained that euery launce ſhould furniſh two horſes of ſeruice, and the Genets in like like manner. To the Launciers and Genets he aſſigned fifteene hundred Marauidis by the yeere, and ſixe hundred to the crosbow men, a coine which was then very currant: granting them moreouer many great preuiledges and immunities. There alſo it was decreed, that the King ſhould ſend vnto Pope Clement, to intreat him that in the prouiſion of the benifices of Spaine he would not admit any that were not borne in the country, by reaſon of the great inconueniences which did grow thereby: vpon the complaints made by the Clergy eſpecially of Guipuſcoa, Biſcay, Alaua and Galicia, by the Biſhops of Calaorra and Burgos, for that many lay men, vnder collour of right of Patronage, had ſeized vpon many lands, rents and other goods of the church, by reaſon whereof the diuine ſeruice was ill attended in many places of thoſe Prouinces, the buildings were ruined, and there were not Ornaments neceſſary for the places and perſons dedicated to holy workes.

Vſurpations vpon the Clergie.

The King being not well inſtructed of thoſe rights, leſt matters in the Eſtate they were, leaſt he ſhould cauſe ſome tumult before it were iuſtified. Beſides this, the ſubiects complained that many Noblemen hauing iuriſdiction preſumed to carry themſelues in a manner like Soueraignes, both in ciuill and criminall cauſes: it was therefore ordained, that it ſhould be lawfull for any one of what eſtate or quality ſoeuer, finding himſelfe grieued by the Chaſtellans, or other ſubalternall Iudges, to appeale to the Iudge royall. In the behalfe of the Nobility it was required, that it would pleaſe the King to take away the clauſe mentioned in the teſtament of the deceaſed King Don Henry, touching the ſucceſſion in the collaterall line to lands of the crowne, giuen by him to Noblemen and Knights which had followed and ſerued him in the conqueſt of thoſe Realmes: wherevnto anſwere was made, that euery one ſhould enioy that which had beene giuen him by the deceaſed King his father, but hee would in no ſort reuoke that clauſe.

Lands of the crowne giuen in recompence of ſeruices.

In this aſſembly of Guadalajara the truce was confirmed with Granado, the Moores Ambaſſadors being come thether, who brought vnto King Iohn many rich preſents. There alſo the King gaue vnto the Infant Don Fernand his ſonne, who was Lord of Lara the title of Duke of Pegnafiel, hauing a ducale crowne ſet vpon his head, with great ſollemnity, the which was made like a bande round and vnited, without any floures ſurpaſſing one an other, which did belong onely to Kings, though now it bee otherwiſe vſed, euerie one ſeeking to countenance his authority, by vſurping of title and marke beyond their due. Hee alſo gaue armes to the ſaid Don Fernand, that is, a caſtle and a Lion with the royall Bands of Arragon, for that hee had him by the Queene Donna Leonora of Arragon his firſt wife. He was the ſecond Duke in the Realme, for that hee of Benauent was the firſt. Theſe and other things were decreed at Guadalajara, whether Ambaſſadors came from Charles the Noble, King of Nauarre, to ſommon the Queene Donna Leonora, ſiſter to King Iohn, to returne into Nauarre, to the King her husband, but they could not preuaile.

Duke of Benauent the firſt, duke in Caſtile.

This Princeſſe beeing two yeeres before fallne into a great ſickneſſe, and finding no helpe by phyſicke, ſhee was aduiſed to change the ayre and to goe into Caſtile, hoping ſhee ſhould recouer her health ſucking the breath of her natiue ſoile. For this cauſe the King Don Charles her husband, who loued her much, conducted her himſelfe vnto the King Don Iohn her brother; with whom ſhee had continued ſome daies in feaſting and ſportes in the towne of Nauarre, and then hee returned and left the Queene Donna Leonora to remaine there, vntill ſhee had recouered her health.

13. Nauarre.

The Queene was not onely well entertained by the King of Caſtile her brother, but her whole houſhold was defraied, and ſhee was honoured as much as might bee. Beeing thus at her eaſe, ſhee ſoone recouered her health againe: but as her bodie was in better diſpoſition by this change of ayre, ſo her minde was much impaired; for were it for the commodities and delights ſhee receiued in this ſtately and magnificent court of Caſtile, or for ſome other occaſion, ſhee reſolued to remaine and keepe there ſtill, and to returne no more into Nauarre, grounding this vnreaſonable reſolution vpon the badde vſage ſhee ſaid ſhee had receiued from the King her husband, who did not loue her ſaid ſhee, but was hard vnto her; that her reue-

A newes were not well paied her: that the Knights and other Caſtillans which did ſerue her, were not reſpected in Nauarre, with other ſuch womaniſh excuſes, with whom vanity in an other place was of more eſteeme, then honeſty in her owne houſe: the which the King Don Iohn did heare with a brotherly affection, but with great diſcontentment, knowing, or at the leaſt doubting, that they were but collours without truth. King Charles hearing that ſhee was in good health, hee wrote diuerſe times vnto her, to haue her returne, but ſhee excuſed herſelfe, finding ſometimes one let, ſometimes an other: ſo as in the end knowing her intention, hee imployed the Cardinal Don Pedro de Luna a Cattelan, but without effect: for the Queene ſeeking to capitulate with the King her husband, ſhe propounded ſuch vnreaſonable conditions, as they were forced
B to take an other courſe.

Shee had continued two yeeres in Caſtile, the King her husband vſing all friendly meanes to draw her home, forbearing to cauſe himſelfe to be crowned King of Nauar, for the deſire hee had to celebrate this ceremony in her company, and to haue her crowned with him: but ſeeing that hee loſt time in writing and ſending meſſengers, hee ſent Don Ramires of Areillan and Don Martin of Ayuar, Ambaſſadors to the King of Caſtile, being at the Eſtates at Guadalajara, to intreat him to enterpoſe his authority with his ſiſter Donna Leonora, that ſhe might returne into Nauarre, and liue with the King her husband, as God and honeſty did require. The King gaue a courteous audience to the Ambaſſadors, and offred to doe his dutie therein, the which he performed:
C for going the day following to his ſiſters lodging, he let her vnderſtand that it was iuſt & reaſonable, ſeeing ſhe was in health, and her husband required it, that ſhe ſhould goe vnto him; and the better to perſwade her he promiſed that if ſhe had not entertainement fit for her royall State in Nauarre, he would impart ſome of his vnto her, and giue her a good company of Knights and Ladies to conduct her into Nauarre, with that honour which did belong vnto her. She hauing no iuſt reaſon to contradict the King her brother, anſwered him in theſe termes „ Sir I am much bound vnto you for many reſpects, beſides the good councell it pleaſeth you now to giue me, wherein I know you ſeeke my honour and proffit. The King my Lord and husband, muſt alſo be mindefull of your bounty and brotherly loue, vſed towards him in many matters of great conſe-
D quence, for my ſake: for if you had not imploied your ſelfe, at my requeſt to the French King, who held him priſoner, it may bee hee ſhould haue found greater difficulties in his deliuery. Being come into Spaine he knowes what honours, and what guifts he hath receiued from you during the life of the King his father: And when he came to ſucceed in the Realme of Nauarre, all the world hath ſeene how liberally you haue reſtored him the places, which you might iuſtly haue retained in Nauarre, being left in depoſito at the peace made betwixt your fathers: Moreouer you haue diſcharged him of twenty thouſand doublons of gold, and of his promiſe for the Engliſh Nobleman, who was a priſoner taken in warre, being two thouſand pounds ſtarling: preſent-
E ly after the death of the deceaſed King his father, you cauſed mee to goe out of your Realme, into his country, whether I carried whatſoeuer I had good and precious, to appeere the more honourable amongſt the Nauarrois, with the Ladies and Gentlewomen of my traine, borne of great families, all things tending to the honour and profit of the King my Lord: But in ſteed of acknowledging all this (it greeues me to ſpeake it, and I cannot ſpeake it without bluſhing) hee hath not receiued me, nor intreated mee as hee ought. He appointed me certaine prouiſions monthly, for the entertainement of my houſe, my ſtate and attendants, whereof I haue beene alwaies ſo ill paied, as I haue beene often forced to ingage my iewels, to content my ſeruants, who complained often vnto me. Beſides falling dangerouſly ſicke in Nauarre, and almoſt dead, I was duly informed, F that my languiſhing proceeded from certaine hurtfull herbes which were giuen mee by a phyſition a Iew, ſent by the King my Lord to cure me. I doe not thinke that theſe herbes were giuen me by the commandement of the King my Lord, or with his priuity, and God forbid it ſhould once enter into my thought: but I finde it very ſtrange that hauing complained, he did not vouchſafe to puniſh this bad phyſition, as hee deſerued. Seeing my indiſpoſition to continue I intreated him to giue mee leaue to come into

Excuſes of the Queene of Nauar.

Caſtile,

„ Caſtile, to your court, whereas God be thanked and your good reception, I haue recoue- A „ red my health. But during my aboade here, in this eaſe, I haue beene aduertiſed, that „ many flatterers and bad ſeruants to the King my Lord and mee, haue charged me with „ many ſlanders, the which hath much incenſed him againſt me, ſo as I know not how my „ Eſtate, or my life can be well aſſured in Nauarre, if I returne as you perſwade me: where„ fore I beſeech you Sir in the name of God, and for the brotherly loue you beare me, „ that you would be pleaſed to conſult with your good and faithfull councellors, vpon
„ my returne to the King my Lord and husband, whom I loue and honour, and to prouide
„ for the ſafety of my life and honor: for if I ſhould fall into any danger, or receiue any „ indignity, you ſhould haue intereſt therein.

B These words accompanied with a mournfull countenance, did much mooue the King D. Iohn, who promiſing his ſiſter that he would haue a care of her affaires, he conferred with his councell, imparting vnto them the ſpeech which the Queene of Nauarre had vſed, cauſing them all to ſweare that they ſhould giue him good and faithful councell touching her returne to the King her husband. The councell hauing duely conſulted of this buſineſſe they came vnto the King, and told him, that they had found it expedient, that hee ſhould cauſe King Charles his brother in law, to ſweare to vſe the Queene Donna Leonora his wife well and honourably, and for aſſurance thereof he ſhould leaue ſome places of Nauarre in depoſito, in the hands of ſome Knights that were not ſuſpect: whereby they thought the Queene might bee well aſſured to returne into Nauarre, and C to liue freely with her husband. The King of Caſtile allowed of this aduice, and hauing cauſed his ſiſter Donna Leonora to be called, he acquainted her therewith, exhorting her to follow it, the which ſeemed nothing pleaſing vnto her, yet ſhee yeelded, hauing no iuſt cauſe of contradiction: wherefore the King D. Iohn hauing cauſed the Ambaſſadors of Nauarre to bee called, hee would haue returned them home with this anſwere; but they replied that the King their maiſter would take any oth, but to deliuer places into a third mans hand, hee would not doe it: giuing many pertinent reaſons, why hee ſhould not yeeld to it.

After many allegations and diſputes herevpon, the Queene ſaid, that if it pleaſed the King her husband to ſweare and promiſe to Pope Clement, the French King, and to the D King her brother to vſe her well, ſhe would returne. The Ambaſſadors anſwered, that the Cardinal D. Pedro of Luna had already propounded ſuch an oth, and that the King their maiſter had anſwered, that it was not needfull the French King ſhould meddle with any controuerſies betwixt him and his wife, and that for the reſt he would make no difficulty. Theſe diſputes increaſing more and more, to the great griefe of the King of Caſtile, who knew well that the Queene his ſiſter was ſtaied for ſome other conſideration, and that the obiections made againſt her husband were meere ſlanders, he was much perplexed: for he both loued Charles King of Nauarre, and the Queene alſo. The Ambaſſadors being out of hope to worke the Queenes returne; they demaund the Infanta D. Ieanne, the King of Nauarres eldeſt daughter, to whom the ſucceſſion of the Realme did E belong for want of heires males, to be deliuered vnto them, to carry her into Nauarre, to the King her father, ſeeing he might not hope for any more children by the Queene, perſiſting in her vnreaſonable reſolution, to liue from his company. The Queene excuſing her ſelfe, ſaid, that it was not her intent to liue ſeperated from King Charles but ſhe deſired to bee aſſured of her life: And the King her brother (who alwaies perſwaded her to bee well aduiſed, and to beleeue what he ſaid vnto her) was forced to ſend Aluar Nugnes of Villa Real, Preſident of his Chancery, into Nauarre, to take information of theſe venimous herbes, which ſhee ſaid had beene giuen her by the phyſitian a Iew, and to bring the depoſitions of the witneſſes, whom ſhee named: but this was an information made without any aduerſe party, to the great ſcandale of Queene Leonoras F marriage: ſo as by the aduice of the royall councell of Caſtile it was ſuppreſt. The Queene remayning obſtinate, not to returne to her husband, the King of Caſtile preuailed ſo with her, as ſhee yeelded to ſend Don Ieanne her eldeſt daughter, for hee gaue her to vnderſtand that it would ſomewhat pacefie the King of Nauarre.

Beſides it was to bee feared that if ſhee ſtaied her, hee might in deſpight inſtitute his

A his brother Peter Earle of Mortaing heire of his realme. It did much import the Nauarrois, to haue this daughter in the fathers power, fearing leaſt the mother ſhould marry her to ſome Caſtillan, againſt the fathers will, and to the preiudice of the liberty of the Realme: The daughter was deliuered to the Ambaſſadors, with one of her ſiſters, being royally accompanied from the towne of Roa, whether the King and his ſiſter came to ſend her into Nauarre, where ſhee was receiued with great contentment to the King and the Nauarrois, yet he was much diſcontented at the rebellion and contempt of the Queene his wife.

This buſineſſe being ended, the King of Caſtile came to Segobia, where he did inſti- 24 like vnto the ſunne beames, at which did hang a white doue. This collar hee himſelfe did weare, and gaue it to many Knights that were moſt familiar with him, ſhewing them a certaine booke of Orders, which they muſt obſerue. Moreouer he would alſo inſtitute an other deuice, which he called Reaſon, the which Eſquires, which carried themſelues valiantly in Iouſts and Tournayes, and did any commendable act, ſhould carry: yet hee beeing dead theſe things died likewiſe with him, which followed the ſame yeere 1390. An. 1390.

He was reſolued to paſſe into Andaluſia, to order the affaires of that Prouince, and adminiſter Iuſtice: paſſing in the month of October by Alcala of Henares, thether came
C vnto him fifty Chriſtian Knights borne at Maroc in Affrike, who being ſent for by him had paſt the ſeas with leaue from their King, and were come to doe him ſeruice: Hee receiued them gratiouſly, and promiſed them penſions and lands in Caſtile. They were of the moſt ancient families of Maroc, hauing alwaies held the Chriſtian religion, Farfanes-Chriſtian Affricans.
and were called the Farfanes. The King deſirous to ſee them mannage their Genets (for they had the report to bee good horſemen) went to horſe-backe, and going out at the port which is called of Burgos, he entred into a plowed field, and beginning to gallop his horſe ouer the furroes, he ſtumbled in the mideſt of his courſe, and fell vpon the King, who was ſo bruſed as hee died, being but two and thirty yeeres old, whereof hee raigned eleuen and three monthes; his body was carried to Toledo, and buried D in the Chappell of the laſt Kings, where his father and mother lie. A Prince endowed with good parts but vnfortunate, and too ſharpe to his brother the Earle of Gijon, the which did ſomewhat blemiſh the luſter of his vertues: he was a friend and rewarder of valiant men, and religious according to the time. Hee was founder of three of the chiefe Monaſteries in Spaine, and gaue them great reuenues; that is, the Carthuſians at Valdelo̧oya in the territorie of Segobia in Raſcafrie, the which is commonly called Paular: The royall Monaſterie of the Order of Saint Benet at Vailedolit, the chiefe of the religion in the Realmes of Caſtile, Leon, Arragon and Nauarre, built whereas the old fort did ſtand. And moreouer hee founded the church and houſe of Santa Maria of Guadalupe, whereas he put religious men of Saint Ieroſmes Order, and
E tooke away the Chaplains which were wont to bee there; at which place there is an Image, which they hold doth miracles. 15

This King was very pittifull to Princes and men of marke that were ſtrangers and afflicted, as it appeered by the deliuery which hee ſought with great affection of Leon King of Armenia, who was priſoner with the Sultan of Ægipt to whom hee ſent an honourable Ambaſſage to that effect. And afterwards this Prince beeing retired into Spaine, he gaue him conuenient reuenues and penſions vpon the towne of Madrid and other places in Caſtile. It is he whoſe tombe is in the Celeſtins church at Paris, where he died mediating a peace betwixt the French and Engliſh.

The King of Nauarre hauing laboured in vaine for to haue the Queene his wife re- 16

reſolued not to delay his coronation any longer: wherefore he aſſembled the Eſtates of his realm in the city of Pampelone, whereas the ſollemnity of his coronation was made, Ceremony at the King of Nauarres coronation.
as followeth: The Deputies of the Clergy, Nobility and third Eſtate beeing aſſembled, with the Ambaſſadors of forraine Princes, in the great chappell of the Cathedrall church; the Biſhops beeing in their Pontificall habits; Don Martin of Salua

Biſhop of Pampelone, who was afterwards Cardinall, ſpake the words vnto the King: A O King our naturall Lord, it is fit before you receiue the Sacrament of the holy vnction, that you take the oth vnto your people of Nauarre, which hath beene accuſtomed to be taken in this Realme of Nauarre, by Kings your predeceſſors. Wherevnto the King anſwered, that he was ready to ſweare: then a croſſe being preſented vnto him, and a booke; laying his hand thereon, he pronounced theſe words with a loude voice,, We D.
Forme of the King oth to his people. ,, Charles by the grace of God King of Nauarre, Earle of Eureux &c. Doe ſweare vnto
,, our people of Nauarre, vpon this croſſe and vpon the holy Euangeliſt toucht by vs, and
,, to you the prelats and rich men of the cities and good townes, and to all the people of ,, Nauarre, for all your rights, lawes, cuſtomes, freedomes, liberties and preuiledges: that B
,, euery one of them, as they now are, ſhalbe maintained and kept, to you and your ſucceſ-
,, ſors all the time of our life, without corrupting them, bettering, and not impayring them
,, in all or in part: and that the violence and force which hath beene done to your prede-
,, ceſſors, whom God pardon, or to you, by Vs or our Officers, we ſhall hereafter com,, mand it to ceaſe, and ſatisfaction to bee made, according vnto right, as they ſhalbe made
,, manifeſt by good men and of credit.

Forme of the ſubiects oth vnto the King. After the Kings oth, the Deputies of the Eſtates, according to their degrees, ſtanding vp, did alſo ſweare after this maner. We N. N. Barons of Nauarre, as well in our owne names, as for all the Knights and Gentlemen of the realme, ſweare vnto you, our King and Lord, vpon this croſſe, and theſe foure holy Euangeliſts, handled and toucht by vs, to C gard and faithfully to defend your perſon, and our country, and to aide you to keepe, maintaine and defend the lawes and cuſtomes with all our power. After this manner did the deputies for the cities and townes ſweare, euery one according to the rights, lawes, cuſtomes, preuiledges, freedomes and liberties, which they did enioy. This oth beeing taken of either ſide, except by the Clergy, who ſweare not, the King retired himſelfe into Saint Stephens chappell, of the ſame church, where he put off his roabes, Vnction of the King of Nauarre. and tooke one of white taffity, which was vſuall in ſuch ceremonies, and then was brought backe by the Biſhops of Tarraſone and of Dax, to the great chappel, where as all things neceſſary were prepared for his vnction. The King being there enuironed by the Biſhops, he was annointed with oyle by the biſhop of Pampelone, with the praiers D and ſuffrages vſuall in ſuch actions: and the King hauing inſtantly put off that white roabe he was richly attired in other royall habits, and ſo approched neere vnto the high altar, where there was a ſword, the royal crowne gliſtring with pretious ſtones, and the royall Scepter, hee put on the ſword, and then drew it forth, holding it vp on high in ſigne of Iuſtice, and then ſheathed it againe, then hee tooke the crowne, and ſet it on his head, and laſt of all hee tooke the ſcepter in his hand, and in the meane time the prelats King of Nauar carried vpon a target. continued their prayers. Theſe things beeing done the King mounted vpon a target, on the which were painted the armes of Nauarre, the which was borne by the Deputies of the Nobility, and them of the city of Pampelone and the three quarters thereof, Bourg, Peuplement and Nauarre, as well in the name of the ſaid city, as of o- E ther cities and townes of the realme, as it had beene appointed by the King: wherevpon publike proteſtation was made by the Deputies of Eſtella, Tudela, Sangueſſa, O-lite and other townes, which could not ſet to their hands to ſupport this target, on the which the King was, that it was without preiudice at that time, or hereafter, to their com-monalties. Thus the King was raiſed vp by the deputies, who cried out thrice, Real, Real, Real.

The King beeing thus carried after the manner of the ancient French, hee caſt money vnto the people, which done, hee was taken from thence by the Cardinall Don Pedro of Luna, the Popes Legat (who aſſiſted at this ceremonie) and by the Biſhops of Pampelone and Tarraſone, and led to a royall throne in great ſtate: the prelats and o- F ther Clergy men continuing ſtill in their praiers and ending with a Te Deum.

Theſe things thus performed, the Kings Attorney General, called Garcia of Leach, in the Kings name, the Biſhop of Pampelone for himſelfe and all the Clergy of the realme, with the Deputies of the Nobility, townes and commonalties, demaunded an act of Peter of Godeille Apoſtolike Notary, of Peter of Iauariz Clarke and Apoſtolike Notary,

A Notary for the Dioceſe of Pampelone, and of Iohn of Ceilludo Notary, and Secretary to the King, the which was formally done. For the laſt act of this ſollemnity, maſſe was ſung by the Biſhop of Pampelone, whereas the King, according to the cuſtome of his predeceſſors, offred ſcarlet, gold and ſiluer. This coronation was the fourth yeere of this Princes reigne, in February in the yeere 1390. and to make more particular relation of men of quality, which were at this aſſembly, deputed for the Eſtates or otherwiſe, Firſt of all there was D. Pedro of Luna Cardinal, of the title of Santa Maria in Coſmedin, Legat a Latere in Spaine, to Pope Clement reſiding in Auignon: Don Martin Salua Biſhop of Pampelone, D. Iohn of Calaorra and Calçado, D. Pedro of Tarraſſone, Don Fernand of Vic of Oſſona, D. Pedro of Ampurias, D. Iohn of Dax, D. Garcia of Eugni of B Bayone, Confeſſor to the King, all Biſhops. Moreouer the Abbot of Irache, the Deane of the Collegiall church of Tudelo; the Abbots of the Monaſteries of Saint Saluator of Leyra, Oliuia, Yrançu, Hitero and Saint Saluator of Vrax: the Prior of the Order of Saint Iohn of Ieruſalem, the dignities, Chanoins and Clergy of the church of Pampelone, for the Eſtate of the Clergy. For the Nobilitie and millitary Order were Don Lionell of Nauarre, the Kings baſe brother, D. Arnaud Raymond Lord of Grammont, D. Arnaud Sanches Lord of Luſe, D. Pedro Lord of Laxaga, D. Martin Henriques of Lacarra Marſhal of the realme, D. Ramir of Areillan, D. Martin Lord of Mearçan, and of Saint Iulian, D. Iohn of Vcara, D. Fernand of Ayanc, D. Martin of Ayuar, D. Bertrand of Lacarra, D. Aluar Diaz of Medrano, D. Ximen Garcia Vicont of Baigner, D. Pedro Sanches
C of Corella, D. Pedro Ynigues of Vxue, D. Martin of Artieda, D. Pedro Arnaud of Garro, D. Iohn Gaſton of Vrroz, D. Garcia Ramires of Aſiayn, D. Iohn of Bern, the young Don Pedro Sanches of Licaraçu, D. Iohn Rodrigues of Ayuar, D. Raymond of Eſperça and Don Pedro of Ayanc: theſe were accompanied with many other Noblemen and Gentlemen, as it was fit for the Maieſty of ſuch an act. The were alſo the Deputies of the commonalties, and good townes of the realme of Pampelone, Bourg, Peuplement and Nauarriere which were thre quarters, or countries of the city, euery one hauing a ſeuerall Iudge, the which kept them long in diuiſion, and bred lamentable mutinies and ſeditions: but this King by wiſe councel reduced them all into one body, and ſuppreſt the cauſe, to the good and quiet of the Inhabitants: Moreouer there were preſent the De-
D puties of Eſtella, Tudela, Sangueſſa, Olite, Puent la Reyna, Arcos, which at this day belongs to Caſtile, Viana, Garde, which is alſo of Caſtile, of Saint Vincent, of Saint Iohn of Pie de Port, of Montreal, Ronceuaux, Lumber, Villafranca of Aguilar of Bernedo, at this day vnited to the crowne of Caſtile, and of Lans. Beſides theſe deputies, there were many Barons, Knights and others of quality of Caſtile, France and England, which did honour this coronation, with the Ambaſſadors of forraine Chriſtian princes. Namely Iohn Vicont of Fuſſenſaguet, Raymond of Beruat, Lord of Caſtlenau, D. Alphonſo of Luna, Archdeacon of Girone, Doctor Iohn Fernandes of Arana, D. Diego Lopes of Eſtuniga, high Treaſorer, Diego Lopes of Lagran, Steward to the King of Caſtile, Francis of E Pau of Arragon, Stcart of Montagu, Bernard of Roſtaing a Baſque. Theſe with many others, were witneſſes of all that paſt at this ceremony, as appeeres by the acts and writings which are in the chamber of accounts of that realme. In Iuly following the quire of the church fell, where theſe things were celebrated, for the re-edefying whereof, the King and others did contribute very much. The death of D. Iohn King of Caſtile, fell out then vnfortunatly for the King of Nauarre: for beſides that hee loued him, and was beloued of him like a brother, hee was a fit inſtrument to tame the wilfulneſſe of the Queene Donna Leonora, who did afterwards much trouble him, before hee could make her leaue Caſtile, and returne to him.

D. Henry the 3. of that name, the ſeuenteenth King of Caſtile 38. of Leon.

17 Caſtille.

VVHen as the King Don Iohn had this mortall fall, Don Pedro Tenorio, Archbiſhop of Toledo, a wiſe man, knowing the alterations which doe commonly follow ſuch accidents, to the preiudice of States, hee ſodainely cauſed a Pauillion to be pitched in the place whereas the Kings body lay, and hauing ſet gards about it that it mought not be ſeene, hee diſſembled his death, giuing it out that he was ſore hurt, but without any danger of death: and the better to conceale this buſineſſe, he cauſed his phyſitions to come vnto the Tent, to whom he impoſed ſilence, then at a conuenient time, he cauſed the Kings body to bee brought into the towne, and laied it in the Chappel of the Archbiſhops lodging. B

In the meane time he made ſuch diſpatches as he thought fit to the cities and townes of the realme, and to the Prelats and Knights who he knew were affected to the deceaſed King, and to his ſonne D. Henry. The Queene Donna Beatrix was at the time of this vnfortunat accident, at Madrid, where ſhe receiued letters from the Archbiſhop, aduiſing her to goe to Alcala, the which ſhe did, leading in her company D. Iohn Serran biſhop of Siguença Chancellor of the Kings priuy ſeale, and others, who were very ſorrowfull for theſe lamentable newes: but eſpecially the Queene Donna Beatrix, who had not any children by the King her husband, and was now diſpoſſeſt of her realme of Portugal, without any hope euer to recouer it. Beeing come to Alcala, the Archbiſhop hauing comforted her, and left her there for the gard of the body, he went to Madrid, where hee did ſet vp the Standards of Caſtile and Leon, for the new King D. Henry, who was then at Talauera with his wife Donna Catherina, and his brother the Infant Don Fernand, whereas their father had left them when as he ment to goe into Andaluſia: but hauing receiued letters from the Archbiſhop, he came preſently to Madrid. The Archbiſhop gaue ſuch order for al things, as there was no alteration. The funerals for his death were performed throughout all Spaine, with great heauineſſe, the which was followed with great demonſtrations of ioy, for that D. Henry was proclaimed King in the ſame towne of Madrid, whether the Deputies of Prouinces, and the Eſtates of the realme began to come; the firſt were D. Laurence Suares of Figueroa maiſter of Saint Iames, D. Gençalo Nugnes of Guzman maiſter of Calatraua, and ſome others, who did not medle with any affaires, nor with the gouernment of the King (who was not yet eleuen yeeres old) by reaſon of the abſence of Don Frederic duke of Benauent, of Don Alphonſo of Arragon, Marquis of Villena Earle of Denia and firſt Conſtable of Caſtile, and Don Pedro of Caſtile Earle of Tranſtamara, Princes of the bloud royall, who were ſent for, and it was fit to attend them. Notwithſtanding the Archbiſhop of Toledo thought it fit to conclude a marriage which was of great importance, and very preiudiciall for the Duke of Benauent, which was of Donna Leonora daughter and heire to Don Shancho of Caſtile, brother to the King D. Henry the ſecond, Counteſſe of Albuquerque and Montalban, and Lady of many other townes and caſtles: to which rich marriage Don Frederic pretended, the which was thought fit and conuenient, both for that hee was of the bloud of Caſtile, as alſo to recompence him in ſome ſort for the marriage which had beene concluded, betwixt him and Donna Beatrix of Portugal, whom the King D. Iohn did afterwards marry, whereby he had beene vndoubtedly King of Portugal. But the Archbiſhop thinking that the marriage of Donna Leonora would bee more fit for D. Fernand duke of Pegnafiel, brother to the new King, hee did worke it, and concluded it, with the Kings conſent and the Ladies, vpon condition that it ſhould bee conſommated when the Infant were foureteene yeeres old. Shee beeing ſixteene yeeres old, promiſed it, but not the Infant, for that by the marriage betwixt Don Henry and Donna Catherina, the Duke of Lancaſter her father had reſerued, that if Don Henry ſhould chance to die without

A out conſommating of the marriage with his daughter, then D. Fernand his brother ſhould marry her. The Noblemen, Prelats and Deputies of the towne of Caſtile and Leon, beeing not yet aſſembled, the Archbiſhop of Toledo demaunded of Peter Lepe of Ayala, a worthy Knight and learned, if he knew whether the deceaſed King had made any will, to whom he anſwered yea, and that hee himſelfe being preſent with others, the King had made his will at the ſeege of Cillorico in Portugal, the one and twentith of Iuly in the yeere of our Lord 1385. and that he had ſent his will to him being Archbiſhop of Toledo. The Archbiſhop remembred this, but he ſaid that he had ſince deliuered that vp to the King. By this teſtament it was ordained, that the King dying, leauing his ſonne D. Henry vnder age, the gouernment of the King and realme ſhould re-
B maine in the hands of D. Alphonſo of Arragon, Marquis of Villena, of the Archbiſhop of Toledo, D. Iohn Garcia Manriques Archbiſhop of Saint Iames, D. Pedro Nugnes maiſter of the Calatraua, D. Iohn Alphonſo of Guzman Earle of Niebla, and D. Pedro Gonçales of Mendoça Lord Steward of the Kings houſe, and with them one or two Bourgeſes of either of the ſixe townes: that is Burgos, Toledo, Leon, Seuile Cordoua and Murcia.

But afterwards the King did ſhew by actions, that he had changed his reſolution, not meaning that this ſhould be receiued for his laſt will and teſtament, wherevpon there grew ſuch debate, as it was hard to pacefie it. D. Frederic duke of Benauent, D. Pedro
C of Caſtile Earle of Tranſtamara, the Archbiſhop of Saint Iames, with ſome others, being arriued, hauing kiſt the Kings hands, as their naturall Lord, the Eſtates beganne to conferre concerning the gouernment of the King and realme, and hauing firſt propounded the aboue-named will, it was concluded that the Archbiſhop of Toledo, the Maiſters of Saint Iames and of Calatraua, the Duke of Benauent, the Earle of Tranſtamara, and Pero Lopes of Ayala, ſhould enter the chamber where the King kept his papers, to finde out this will. The chamber was opened by Ruis Lopes of Aualos, who afterwards was Conſtable, and Iohn Martines of Caſtille, gardiens of thoſe writings, where this will was found: It beeing read in the preſence of the aboue-named, and they all diſallowing of that which the King had ordained, they commanded him that
D. read it to caſt it into a fire which burnt in a chamber neere vnto the Biſhop of Cuencas, one of the houſhold to the deceaſed King, to auoide all contention and trouble, yet hee durſt not doe it, but laied it vnder a bed, whereas the Archbiſhop of Toledo tooke it, ſaying, that there were ſome clauſes which did concerne his Archbiſhoprike of Toledo, and ſo carried it away.

After ſome great contention betwixt the Noblemen and Deputies aſſembled, in the end it was concluded, that without any regard to the Kings will, or any other writing whatſoeuer, the gouernment ſhould be mannaged by a ſet councel, wherefore they named the duke of Benauent, and the Earle of Tranſtamara Princes of the bloud royall of Caſtile, the Marquis of Villena, and the Archbiſhops of Toledo and Saint Iames,
E the maiſters of Calatraua and Saint Iames, with ſome other Knights: and it was ſaid, of the Deputies of ſixteene cities of this Realme, eight ſhould aſſiſt at this councell by ſixe monthes, with this clauſe that not any Prelat, Knight, Maiſter, Deputie or any other ſhould haue any voice or authority, but when they were reſident in the court. This reſolution pleaſed them all except the Archbiſhop of Toledo, who refuſed for to ſweare to certaine good Articles concluded by the councell, anſwering with the Biſhop of Cuenca, that hee did it for that hee would not infring the lawes of the realme, which ſaid, that the King comming to the crowne in his minority, the father hauing appointed him no Tutors, in that caſe the Realme ſhould chooſe one, three, fiue, or F ſeuen to gouerne. Wherefore if they would heare what he had to ſay therein, for the diſcharge of his conſcience, and that they would afterwards proceed otherwiſe, hee ſhould bee contented with that they ſhould conclude. His anſwere beeing allowed by the councell, he was willed to preſent himſelfe the next day in the caſtle, where he ſhould be heard. The councell was of opinion that the Archbiſhop would not be ſo raſh as publikely to contradict a generall accord which they had made, elſe they prepared to giue him a bad reception.

Orders for the Gouernment of the realme of Caſtile.

The Archbiſhop beeing aduertiſed by one of the Deputies of the reſolution of the councell, hee ioyned with them the next day in a church, and ſware the Articles, to auoide the ſcandale which had happened, if hee had done otherwiſe. This beeing thus repaired, the Archbiſhop deſired to bee diſcharged of the gard of Don Alphonſo Earle of Gijon, brother to the deceaſed King, who had beene a long time priſoner in the caſtle of Almonacid: wherevpon he made ſuch inſtance, and ſo great proteſtations, as the councell (not able otherwiſe to pacefie him) decreed that the priſoner ſhould bee deliuered into the hands of the maiſter of Saint Iames, who ſhould take charge of him, and he cauſed him to be conducted to the caſtle of Monreal, belonging to the order of Saint Iames. 20 Archbiſhop of Toledo turbulent.

Some daies after the councell being aſſembled in the church of Madrid, whereas it was often held, certaine Gentlemen belonging to the duke of Benauent entred, hauing ſhirts of maile, whereat many were amazed, eſpecially Don Pedro Tenorio the Archbiſhop, who therevpon tooke occaſion to diſlodge from court, and in all places where hee paſt, he publiſhed that they had made a councell contrary to the will of the King Don Iohn: writing to all the chiefe townes of Spaine, and to the Noblemen that were abſent, who had beene named Tutors by the Kings will: Hee did moreouer write to Pope Clement, and to the conſiſtory of Cardinals, and the French King, and him of Arragon, intreating them not to allow of, nor receiue the diſpatches of this councell. This did much trouble them of the councell, who incited by this diſorder to a greater, would beginne to diuide the charges, offices, places and fortes of the Realme betwixt them. The duke of Benauent was the firſt, who demaunded the office of high Treaſorer, or Super-intendant of the Treaſor, for Iohn Sanches of Seuile, an infamous man by reaſon of his great vſurie, beeing alſo indebted to the King in great ſummes of money: wherevnto the Archbiſhop of Saint Iames oppoſed, ſaying, that it was not fit that hee who ought to bee araigned, ſhould bee aduanced to an office which had iuriſdiction: wherevpon there grew great troubles, and ſcandales, and the Noblemen of the councell beganne to fortefie themſelues with armes, cauſing their ſeruants and vaſſals to approch neere to Madrid, ſo as the Inhabitants of the towne ſet gardes at their portes: by reaſon whereof the Duke went out of the towne, and retired to Benauent', leauing his companions in great feare leaſt hee ſhould ioyne with the Archbiſhop of Toledo. 21. Sedition againſt the Iewes, cauſed by D. Fernand Martinez.

As this man was mooued with zeale for the affaires of ſtate, ſo at the ſame time Don Fernand Martines of Eccia, Archdeacon of Seuile, was mooued for religions cauſe againſt the Iewes, dwelling in Spaine, inciting the people againſt them, not onely in his ſermons, but alſo in market places and ſtreetes: ſo as the Iewes ſeeing they intended to ſpoile and murther them, they had recourſe vnto the Lords of the councell at Madrid, who deputed Iudges to preuent this diſorder at Seuile, Cordoua, and other townes of Andaluſia: but the people were ſo incenſed againſt this ſect, as notwithſtanding all the diligence of the Iudges, many were ſlaine, and their goods ſpoiled: An indirect courſe to draw Infidels to the religion of Ieſus Chriſt. E

The King Don Henry who grew in yeeres and Iudgement, did much apprehend the troubles, wherein the Noblemen of the councell did ingage the Realme, and therefore hee did write vnto the Duke of Benauent, and the Marquis of Villena, who had not beene preſent at all theſe things, that they ſhould come, or ſend preſently to Madrid, men with full authority: complayning by his letters which hee did write to Don Frederic Duke of Benauent, for that hee had gone from court without leaue. The Duke ſent Aluar Vaſques of Loſada, a Knight of honour vnto him, who gaue him a good accompt of his actions. The Marquis of Villena excuſed himſelfe vppon the diſſention of the Councell, who wrote in the beginning of the yeare 1391. to the Archbiſhop of Toledo, complayning greatly of the innouations which by his occaſion did threaten Spaine, proteſting for their parts, to yeeld vnto all that ſhould be ordayned by the Eſtates of the Realme: and as for the laſt will and teſtament of King Iohn, they would alwaies referre it to his oath, if he had not declared before his death, that he meant not it ſhould be of force. The

A The Arch-biſhop when he receiued theſe letters, was at Alcala with the Duke of Benauent, the Marquis of Villena, D. Martin Ianes of Barbuda, Maſter of Alcantara, and D. Diego Hurtado of Mendoça, with other diſcontented Knights, by all their aduice, hauing made a league together, anſwer was made vnto the meſſengers, that hauing reſolued among themſelues they would make a fit anſwer: to whom the meſſengers that were ſent from the King and the Councell replyed, that in the meane time the Arch-biſhop ſhould forbeare to aſſemble forces, and ſhold not employ the reuenues of the church to leuy ſoldiers: whereunto they anſwered, That whileſt they of the Councell did gouerne to their preiudice, they could do no leſſe then to ſeeke a remedy. During theſe broyles in Spaine,

B D. Domingo Biſhop of S. Ponce, Legate to Pope Clement reſiding at Auignon, came to Madrid, with letters to the King, condoling for the death of the deceaſed king his father, and congratulating his aſſumption, who alſo brought letters from the Pope to the Councell, by the which, like a good paſtor and father, he did exhort them to do iuſtice, and to gouerne the Realme well; the Legate making a long ſpeech to that end: to whom Garcia Manrique Arch-biſhop of S. Iames, anſwered. After which the Councell intreated the Legat to be a meanes to pacifie the troubles which had beene raiſed by the Arch-biſhop of Toledo, and that he would take the paines to look into the will and diſpoſition of both parties, to the end he might make report thereof vnto the Pope. The Legate offered to employ himſelfe in any thing they ſhould thinke fit for the publike peace: wherefore the

C Councell hauing thanked him for his good will, they deputed Peter Suarez of Quignones, Gouernor of Leon, a wiſe and diſcreet Knight, Garcia Alphonſo of Sahaghun, and Doctor Anthony Sanches of Salamanca, an Auditor, who did accompanie the Legate. Beeing arriued at Talauera de la Reyna, where as the Arch-biſhop was, he intreated him very earneſtly to hearken to the peace and quiet of Spaine, giuing him many Theologicall reaſons, beeing a great learned Doctor, eſpecially vppon the waſting of the goods and reuenues of the Church, which was the patrimonie of the poore, propounding vnto him in the behalf of the Councell, the iuſt conditions which they had deliuered vnto him, and promiſed to performe; perſwading him and his aſſociats to come vpon his faith and aſſurance, vnto the caſtle of Buytrago, belonging vnto D. Diego Hurtado of Mendoça,

D to conſult with them of the Councell, of the meanes how to accommodate all their diuiſions. The like requeſt and offer was made by Peter of Quignones in the behalfe of the Councell, ſignifying vnto them, that if they loſt this opportunity, they might afterwards deſire it in vaine: and of all this he proteſted and demanded an act. To all this the Arch-biſhop anſwered vpon premeditation, and excuſed himſelfe, as well vppon the teſtament of the deceaſed king, as vpon the lawes of the Realme which were infringed, perſiſting in the anſwer which had beene made at Alcala, pretending other lets, ſo as they could not go to Buytrago.

In the meane time Ambaſſadors came from France, to the new king Don Henry, to condole the death of the deceaſed king, and to performe ſuch ceremonies as are vſuall at

E the comming of new kings, the Biſhop of Landreſi, chiefe of this Ambaſſage, offering to the king Don Henry all friendſhip and ayde, in the name of the king his Maſter, and to confirme the league made betwixt their predeceſſors. To which ambaſſage the Arch-biſhop of S. Iames made anſwer in the kings name with great applauſe: the king did then renew and ſweare the league betwixt France and Caſtile, and ſo did the Ambaſſadours. They being diſpatched, and honoured with many goodly preſents, they were accompanied with other Ambaſſadors, whom the king Don Henry ſent into France, for the confirmation of this league: within few dayes there came alſo to Madrid, Ambaſſadors from the Kings of Nauarre and Arragon: from the Duke of Lancaſter, and other Chriſtian Princes, vpon the ſame ſubiect. They of Nauarre particularly intreated the yong King,

F that he would ſo worke with the Queene Donna Leonora his aunte, as ſhee might returne into Nauarre, and liue with the King her husband; wherein they of the councell imployed themſelues with great affection, but they preuailed not, for ſhe vſed the ſame excuſes, which ſhee had done to the deceaſed King Don Iohn, ſo much ſhee was pleaſed to liue in the court of Caſtile. The King of Arragons Ambaſſadors, beſides their generall Legation, had charge to perſwade all the councellors in particular, to gouerne the realme with ſuch care and loyalty, as the young yeares of the king his nephew required. And they of the Duke of Lancaſter demanded, that the league made with the deceaſed king, at the concluſion of their peace, ſhould be renued. All theſe receiued courteous anſwers, and were ſent backe with content. A

In the meane time the Arch-biſhop of Toledo leauied forces, and made great practiſes throughout all the chiefe townes, and with the Nobilitie of the Realme. And on the other ſide, at the incitation of the ſeditious Arch-deacon Don Fernand Martines, the people of Seuile, Cordoua, Toledo, Logrogne, and other townes, of Caſtile, had fallen vppon the Iewes, making a horrible butcherie of this miſerable people, and ſpoyling their goods, forcing by this meanes the reſt, who eſcaped the preſent fury to become Chriſtians, or at the leaſt to faine themſelues ſo: What can poore Infidels thinke (ſeeing ſuch cruelties practiſed by Chriſtians, and ſuch greedineſſe in them to imbeazle other mens goods) but that their religion is bloudie, deſiring nothing leſſe then the health of thoſe whome they entertaine in their ignorance, by ſuch deteſtable courſes, and diueliſh couetouſneſſe? With the like furie were the neighbour countries infected: for they of Valencia and Barcelona did the like, yea the rage of theſe zealous men had extended vnto the Moores dwelling in Caſtile and Arragon, if they had not feared that the king of Granado would haue maſſacred many Chriſtians that were his priſoners, and that it ſhould cauſe ſome new warre with the Arabians.

23. Cruelties and murthers committed on the Iewes. B

This worldly conſideration reſpecting the commoditie of this life retayned them, not the zeale and honour of Ieſus Chriſt, which conſiſts not in murthers and ſpoiles, but to do good to all men, and to pray for their enemies. The King Don Henry was aduertiſed of all theſe diſorders, but by reaſon of his youth which was contemned, he could not apply fit remedies. Yet he did ſomewhat pacifie the mutinue againſt the Iewes: But as for the Arch-biſhop of Toledo, and his Confederates, they had need of a ſharper reſtraint. The Councell ſent twice vnto him: that is, the Maſter of Saint Iames, who came vnto him at Illeſca, and afterwards at Talauera de la Reina, D. Iohn of Velaſco, Lord Chamberlaine to the king, and Peter Fernandes of Villegas Merin Maior of Burgos, who admoniſhed him to forbeare to aſſemble forces, and that he ſhould be content to vndergo with them, the reſolution of the Eſtates, vppon their differences, but they had no other anſwer, but what he had formerly made. 24. D. Pedro of Caſtile demands the office of Conſtable.

Amidſt theſe tumults there fell out a new occaſion to increaſe them: for hauing beene propounded in the Councell of the deceaſed king D. Iohn, to take the office of Conſtable from D. Alphonſo of Arragon, Marquis of Villena, for certaine reaſons: being now in diuiſion with the Councell, and not greatly beloued of the young King D. Henry, D. Pedro of Caſtile Earle of Tranſtamara, came to demand this office, who had yearly for his dyet and entertaynment 70000. marauidis. The Councell did let him vnderſtand, that the king at the beginning when the Eſtates aſſembled at Madrid, to gratifie the Marquis D. Alphonſo, had confirmed him in the dignity, and that there were no reaſon thus to degrade him, without ſome apparent cauſe, the which might be a means to increaſe the troubles which were but too great: wherefore they were of opinion, that he ſhold for that time forbeare and content himſelfe with a penſion, equall to the Conſtables entertainment, the which they promiſed him in the meane time: but they ſayd, that they muſt proceede againſt the Marquis by the courſe of Iuſtice: for the effecting wherof, they would procure the king to cite him to come to Court, and if hee did not obey, they promiſed to giue him his Eſtate. D. Pedro was ſatisfied with this anſwer, and D. Alphonſo Ianes Fajardo, Gouernor of Murcia was ſent by the King vnto the Conſtable, to cauſe him to come to court: but hee excuſed himſelfe from comming preſently, promiſing to be there ſoone after, notwithſtanding it was farre from his thought: for he had intelligence with the Arch-biſhop of Toledo, and others of the league, who drew men together from all parts, to come to the Court in armes, to the end they might haue the teſtament of the deceaſed king D. Iohn, put in execution, and chaſe away the Councell. A cauſe which drew the Arch-biſhop of Toledo, but onely a colour pretended by him and his confederates to retire from Court, and to take armes; they alſo prouided for their parts, and called all their friends to ayde them: they drew D. Leonora Queene of Nauar, vnto their league, binding themſelues by oath one vnto another, and they wrought ſo, as the king Don Henry continued vnto the Queene his Aunt the penſions which the deceaſed King D. Iohn was wont to giue her with an increaſe: By whoſe perſwaſion, and others of the Councell, he tooke the office of Conſtable from Don Alphonſo of Arragon, who had enioyed it nine yeares, and gaue it to the Earle of Tranſtamara, who was ſonne to D. Frederic, Maſter of Saint Iames, and couſin to the king. Queene of Nauar intangled in the troubles of Caſtile.

The Arch-biſhop of Toledo with the Maſter of Alcantara were about Auila, to whom they of the cittie of Burgos made many proteſtations, offers and prayers in vaine, for a peace; the like they did to the Duke of Benauent, and then they ſent vnto the King, who was come to Cuellar, beſeeching him to giue eare vnto a peace, and to end the troubles by a conuocation of the Eſtates; the which if he thought good to hold in their cittie, they offered to deliuer all their children in hoſtage, for their aſſurance that ſhould come. The C King mooued with the loue and willingneſſe of them of Burgos, ſent the Legate and others to the Arch-biſhop and his confederates, but they anſwered, That when they ſhold be neere the place where the king was, they would declare their intentions more at large. The Duke of Benauent, and the Arch-biſhop of Toledo, were alreadie ioyned with their forces, conſiſting of fifteene hundred men at armes, and 3500. foote, vnto whome the Queene of Nauarre came, intreating them, that before matters grew worſe, they ſhould be ſatisfied with the reſolution of the Eſtates: and whileſt that ſhe laboured with the confederates, the king went to Vailledolit, whither came about ſixteen hundred men at arms, with ſome other forces. The confederates little regarding the Queene of Nauarre, came D to lodge at Simancas, where as ſhe was more amazed then before, and employed all her endeauors to make ſome accord: In the end ſhee obtayned that there ſhould bee a conference at Perales, whereas at diuers times, in the preſence of the Queene and Legate, the parties met and conferred. Once among the reſt, the Arch-biſhop beeing demanded by him of Saint Iames, if he had any true intent, that the deceaſed kings teſtament ſhould take place: he made him no anſwer, for that the Duke of Benauent, who was not named in it, was preſent, whom he feared to offend: an infallible argument, that priuate reſpects did moue him more, then any zeale of the publike good, or the Kings ſeruice. It was concluded in Perales, that the Kings teſtament ſhould be of force, and that the tutors named therein ſhould gouerne: and to the end a peace might be the better entertayned, and that
E all emulation and iealouſie might ceaſe, there were added vnto them Don Frederic duke of Benauent, Don Pedro Earle of Tranſtamara, and the Maſter of Saint Iames: and for the better ſtrengthening of this accord, the generall Eſtates were held at Burgos, Iohn Hurtado of Mendoça, Pero Lopes of Ayala, Diego Lopes of Eſtuniga, and Iohn Alphonſo de la Cerde, either of them giuing one of his ſonnes in hoſtage, for the aſſurance of ſuch as ſhould come to Court.

Eſtates at Burgos for a peace.

Thus the Eſtates were called at Burgos; which citie was at great charges for that cauſe, and for the kings ſeruice. It was concluded in Perales, that the Kings teſtament ſhould be of force, and that the tutors named therein ſhould gouerne: and to the end a peace might be the better entertayned, and that Archb. of Toledo reſpects not the publike good.

E all emulation and iealouſie might ceaſe, there were added vnto them Don Frederic duke E of Benauent, Don Pedro Earle of Tranſtamara, and the Maſter of Saint Iames: and for the better ſtrengthening of this accord, the generall Eſtates were held at Burgos, Iohn Hurtado of Mendoça, Pero Lopes of Ayala, Diego Lopes of Eſtuniga, and Iohn Alphonſo de la Cerde, either of them giuing one of his ſonnes in hoſtage, for the aſſurance of ſuch as ſhould come to Court.

Eſtates at Burgos for a peace.

Thus the Eſtates were called at Burgos; which citie was at great charges for that cauſe, and for the kings ſeruice. But before any proceeding, the Councell pretending to bind Don Alphonſo Earle of Gijon vnto them, being priſoner in the hands of the Maſter of S. Iames, they decreed his deliuerie, and procured the king to reſtore vnto him all the lands

F which he had enioyed in the Aſturia's. There came vnto the aſſembly at Burgos, the king with Queene Catherine his ſpouſe, the Infant Don Fernand, and his future wife D. Leonora, who lodged in the Caſtle, whereof Diego Lopes of Eſtuniga was captaine. The Eſtates beeing entred into conference, there grew a new tumult: for ſome of the Noblemen not ſatisfied with that which had beene concluded in Perales, would haue D. Alphonſo Earle of Gijon admitted to councell, beſides the aboue-named, wherewith the Duke of Benauent his brother, the Queene of Nauarre, nor the Maſter of Saint Iames, were not A contented, ſaying, that his deliuerie had beene without their conſents, with an intent to make vſe of him to the preiudice of them three, and others that were of their opinion.

Such was their inconſtancie, as they which before would haue the kings will take effect, demanded now the accord of Perales. In the end they made choice of two of the greateſt Doctors in Spaine, to be arbitrators, and to giue their aduice therein; which were Don Gonçal Gonçales Biſhop of Segobia, and Aluar Martines of Villareall, but they made their controuerſies more obſcure, with their importune ſubtilties and obſtinacie.

25. Exactions cauſed tumults in Guipuſcoa.

Whileſt that great men contended for the gouernement of the Realme, the Kings Officers who had charge to recouer his rights, and to receiue his reuenues exacted vpon the B people, according to an order which had beene ſet downe by the Councell, preſſing an impoſition which is called Pedido, wherewith the countrie was charged, in the time of the King Don Pedro, from the riuer of Ebro vnto the ſea, without any regard of the Priuiledges or exemptions of the Nobilitie, namely, of the Inhabitants of this Prouince of Guipuſcoa; which tribute had beene contradicted in the time of the ſayd King D. Pedro, and ſince in the raignes of Don Henry, and D. Iohn, who had cauſed ſuch exactions to ceaſe, in conſideration of the auncient immunities of the Guipuſcoans: but in the time of this king the Councell beeing diuided, and all things in combuſtion, the Treaſurers had reuiued this receipt, whereof the Inhabitants of the countrie complayned in vaine. For this cauſe there was an aſſembly of the towne and commonalties of the Prouince of Guipuſ- C coa in the pariſh Church of Saint Mary, in the towne of Tholouſa, in Auguſt this yeare 1392. whither came the Deputies of Tholouſa, Segure, Mondragon, Motrico, Gueraria, Villafranca, Vergara, Salmas, and Sarauz, to aduiſe what was expedient for the defence of their immunities, who decreed, That for aſmuch as the Prouince of Guipuſcoa had firſt beene peopled by Gentlemen, and in all degrees free, and that by reaſon of the barrenneſſe of the countrie, they had neuer beene charged with any tributes, they be-ſought the King, and the Councel, eſtabliſhed by the Eſtates of Caſtile and Leon, to forbid the Collectors, or any that haue to deale with the kings treaſure, to exact any more mony of them. And attending the Councels reſolution vppon their petition, the ſayd Tribute ſhould not be payed, beeing aſſured that it was both the King and the Councels D intention, not to lay any vndue charge vppon them: they ordayned by way of prouiſion, as followeth:

Articles made in the aſſembly of Tholouſa in Guipuſcoa.

First, that the Collectors and receiuers comming to exact money, there ſhould not any thing be payed them: but the ſayd Collectors ſhould be apprehended, and led to the aſſembly at Vſarraga, there the Councell to determine of them according vnto reaſon and equity.

2 That if any of the Collectors ſhould arreſt one of the Inhabitants of the countrie, by reaſon of the ſayd tribute, he crying out, and demanding ayde, the neighbours without exception, ſhall be bound to go foorth in armes, and purſue the ſayd Collector, and hauing taken him, preſent him to the aſſembly at Vſarraga. E

3 If any Collector hauing leauied a pawne of one of the Inhabitants of the country, ſhall eſcape, and cannot be apprehended, the value of the pawne ſhall be taken out of the kings ordinarie reuenues, with all coſts, dammage, and intereſt, for the indemnitie of the pawne.

4 That all the people of the country ſhal iuſtifie the petition preſented vnto the king, tending to this, that he ſhall prouide a neceſſarie remedie for this miſchiefe, and they ſhall be bound to contribute towards the dammages which may happen.

5 That if the merchandize or wares, which they of Guipuſcoa are accuſtomed to ſend towards Victoria, Saluaterra, Treuigno, Argançon, and other parts of Alaua vnto the riuer of Ebro, ſhall be arreſted and ſtayed by any commonalties, townes, Lords that F haue iuſtice, or by any perſon whatſoeuer, in regard of theſe tributes and impoſitions, whoſoeuer ſhall haue the loſſe, ſhall make it knowne vnto his ſuperiors, and to this end the Councell ſhall aſſemble at Vſarraga, and the townes ſhall be bound to ſend, that is to ſay, Tholouſa ten men, Mondragon ten men, Segura ten men, Salmes two men, Vergara fiue men, Motrico three men, Guetaria three men, Villafranca ten men, and Sarraux two

two men, of the moſt ſufficient among them, who together ſhall ordaine of the reſtitution of thoſe things thus ſeazed, with the charges and fines, to the end the owner may not be damnified.

6 And for that the Merins Majors, and rulers of the countrie, were accuſtomed to make their circuits in great troupes, ſo as the people were charged and damnified, to the prejudice of the lawes and liberties of the countrie, it was ordayned that hee that ſhould haue this Office, were he Knight or Eſquire, ſhould be receiued as a Knight or Eſquire, in all townes and places, ſo as his force ſhould alwaies remaine in townes, in the which if the ſayd Merins, or their men, did commit any inſolencie or violence, for what cauſe ſoeuer, euery man ſhould be bound to take armes, and oppoſe himſelf againſt the ſayd force, appealing to the Councell and aſſembly of the ſayd townes, and worke ſo as the liberties and priuiledges of the countrie might remaine vnuiolated, and he that was wronged vndamnified.

7 Item, that if by reaſon of the ſayd impoſition and tribute called Pedido, ſome ſeazure hath beene made either of men or goods, by the ſayd Collectors, Receyuers, Iudges, or any other within a towne, and that the ſayd towne did conſent thereunto, or winke at the ſayd ſeazure, and that it hath beene tranſported to ſome other place, and there receiued and detayned, and the partie intereſſed can get no reſtitution, in this caſe the other townes beeing required by him, or ſome other for him, ſhall bee bound to go with force, to the place where ſuch perſons or goods are detayned, and there take ſo much of the Inhabitants goods as ſhall be needfull to ſatisfie the intereſſed, and themſelues alſo, who are come thither for this cauſe, for all their coſts and charges, and for euery man that hath beene carried away, they ſhall take two, and detayne them vntill the deliuerie of the firſt, with full ſatisfaction of their dammages.

8 If by reaſon of theſe things any of the Inhabitants of the ſayd townes or iuriſdictions ſhould be cited or adiorned before the Prouoſt of the Kings Court, or other Iudges, or otherwiſe called in what manner ſoeuer; they ſhall not be bound to appeare, but the ſayd townes ſhall take his cauſe in hand, and ſend their Atturneys to appeare, and defend him that is cited, without any coſt and charge vnto him, but at the charge of the ſayd Townes.

9 That there ſhall be a firme friendſhip and brother-hood, ſworne betwixt the ſayd townes, and the Inhabitants, ſuch as in the time of the king D. Iohn, vppon the paines ordayned, and they ſhal be bound to ayde one an other, ſo as where any wrong is done, they ſhall employ both body and goods one for another, and maintaine themſelues in iuſtice.

10 And for that in former times the townes aboue-named had a league with other townes of Guipuſcoa, not mentioned in this accord, their meaning was, that it ſhould not hereafter take place, but with the conſent of the king and his Councell, and that at the inſtance of all the townes of Guipuſcoa, the ſayd brother-hood and ordonances thereto belonging, were confirmed by the king D. Henry their Lord.

11 If any Baylife, or other Magiſtrate, or Gouernour, ſhould giue aſſignation to all the aboue-named townes, enioyning them to their Atturneys or chiefe men of the ſayd townes, they ſhall name their Atturneys, and ſend them to the place appointed, vppon condition that he ſhall neither do, nor ſuffer any diſpleaſure to be done vnto them by his Miniſters, for the which they ſhall giue caution. And if the aſſignation bee giuen out of the aboue-named townes, if it were in the towne of Saint Sebaſtian, the Deputies of the confederate townes ſhall aſſemble at Tholouſa: if it were to appeare in the towne of Miranda of Yraurgui, called Azcoitia, or at Saluaterra, called Azpeytia, or at Elgoybar, that they ſhall aſſemble at Guetaria, or Motrico, to conſult what is fit to be done, both for the kings ſeruice, the preſeruation and increaſe of the ſayd townes, and of their Immunities and Nobility.

12 That in two aſſemblies which were made yearely in the name of the ſayd brotherhood, the ſayd townes ſhould be bound to appeare by their deputies, as had beene accuſtomed in precedent times: but at extraordinarie conuocations which ſhould be made by the other townes of Guipuſcoa, they ſhall not be bound to go nor ſend, vntill their generall aſſociation be confirmed by the king, at the ſute of them all in generall.

To

To theſe Articles the ſayd townes bound their goods and perſons for euer, vpon paine of fifty marauidis of money then currant to be payed by him that ſhould infringe them, and applyable to the Councell of the reſt, which ſhould maintaine the contents thereof, to diſpoſe according to their wils: and the towne which hath fayled, ſhall be forced by the reſt to pay the fine, by all ordinarie and extraordinarie meanes, with all charges, damages and intereſts. A

It is credible that the other townes of Guipuſcoa made the like aſſociations, in regard of their priuiledges and liberties. Vppon this queſtion they pleaded againſt the Kings Receyuer, and there are letters found granted by the King Don Henry vppon the ſame, by the which he did aboliſh theſe tributes and exactions in fauour of the townes and places of Saluaterra of Iraurgui, Miranda of Iraurgui, Villamajor of Marquina, called Elgoyar, Val of Mendaro, Monreal of Deua, S. Andrew of Ayuar, Placenzia, Elgueta, S. Cruz of Ceſtona, the Chaſtelenie of Sayas, S. Nicholas of Orio, Bellamont of Vſuruill, with Aguinaga, Aſtigarraga, Aynduayn, Vrreota, S. Peter of Aſteauçu, the quarter of Larraul, Ichaço, Ciçurguil, Gauiria, Ataun: the country of Leſcano of Aduna, the Chaſtelenie of Aiztondo, that of Areria, Curnatraga, the pariſh of Beaſain, Arama, Alcega, Echaſonda, Saldibia, Gainça, Legorreta, Goyas, Vidania, Beyçaina, Rexil, Aya, and the territorie of Azgoytia, whereof there are letters found giuen in Saint Marie of Pelajos, in the yeare 1399. and confirmed at Vailledolit 1401. and by other kings. Thus the Guipuſcoans defended their freedomes and liberties againſt the Kings Officers, who made their profite during the confuſions and troubles betwixt the Noblemen and the Councell. Afterwards all the Townes, Boroughs and places of this Prouince of Guipuſcoa were vnited and made one bodie, and haue maintained themſelues ſo vnto this day, to the great good and generall commoditie of the Countrey, and the ſeruice of the ſoueraigne King. 26 Vnion of all the townes of Guipuſcoa. An. 1392.

The Eſtates of Burgos continued with little concord, by reaſon whereof in the beginning of the yeare 1392. the Deputies of the Eſtates, with the conſent of the parties contending, propounded euery one to write his voice in bulletins, vppon that which was in queſtion: Whether they ſhould follow the teſtament of King Iohn, or not, and the ſayd bulletins beeing caſt into a coffer and then opened, the partie that had moſt voyces ſhold carrie it: but without comming to this triall, the Queene Donna Leonora, who alwaies laboured to reconcile theſe differences, made another accord, and brought ſo many reaſons, as Don Frederic duke of Benauent, and D. Alphonſo Earle of Gijon, were receiued into the gouernement and councell: ſo as the Councell ſhould conſiſt of tenne ſpirituall men, beſides the Deputies of the ſixe townes, whereof fiue ſhould reſide ſixe moneths: and theſe were thus diuided: the Duke of Benauent, the Arch-biſhop of Toledo, the Maſter of Saint Iames, and Iohn Hurtado of Mendoça for one ſixe moneths: the Arch-biſhop of Saint Iames, the Earles of Gijon and Tranſtamara, and the Maſter of the Calatraua for the other: the Marquis of Villena, and the Earle of Niebla ſhould make vp the ten, but they would not come to Court. It ſeemed by this expedient, practiſed by the Queene of Nauarre, that the affairs were in a courſe of peace: but the death of Diego Sanches of Roja a knight of the Earle of Gijons faction, who was ſlaine neere vnto Burgos by two horſemen of the Duke of Benauents houſe troubled the whole aſſembly againe, and had like to haue cauſed great ſlaughter in the citie: he that was ſlayne was interred, and the murtherers eſcaped. For which fact the Deputies of the Eſtates were ſo much diſcontented, as they neglected all that had beene decreed and done, touching the eſtabliſhing of a Councel, and took the way of writing their voyces in bulletins, the which being put into a coffer & that opened, it was found that all did ioyntly require to haue the will of the K. D. Iohn in force. Wherupon the Duke of Benauent, who was not mentioned, went from Court much diſcontented. The Arch-biſhop of Toledo ſeeing him retired, agreed with them of the aduerſe party, vpon theſe conditions: That whenſoeuer the Marquis of Villena and the Earle of Niebla ſhould forbeare to come to Court, hee ſhould ſupply their places, and that a moitie of the kings reuenues ſhould be deliuered to him, to be diſtributed as he ſhould thinke fit; that he ſhould be ſatisfied for the charges hee had bin at in ſeeking the execution of K. Iohns teſtament. Theſe things thus concluded, the next day the D E F

A king with the knights and deputies of the Prouinces being preſent, it was decreed, that the teſtament of the deceaſed king D. Iohn ſhould be obſerued, and that ſixe tutors with the Deputies of Burgos, Toledo, Leon, Seuile, Cordoua and Murcia, ſhould gouerne. There were then preſent of the tutors, the Arch-biſhops of Toledo and S. Iames, the Maſter of Calatraua who was ſucceſſor both in the dignity and tutelage to D. Pero Nugnes, and D. Iohn Hurtado of Mendoça, repreſenting in like manner in this charge D. Pero Gonçales of Mendoça, named by the will. And for that the Marquis of Villena, and the Earle of Niebla were abſent, the king ſent for them to come to Court by a certaine day. The Legate was very ioyful of this accord, and abſolued all them that had ſworne to the contrarie: and in like manner the king did pardon all thoſe that had made any leagues or aſſemblies. And Order for the gouernment of Caſtile.

B to giue ſome contentment to the Duke of Benauent, and the Earle of Gijon, who were excluded from the gouernment, the tutors agreed to giue to either of them a penſion of a million of marauidis yearely, during their liues. In this manner the gouernement of the realmes of Caſtile began to take ſome form: but yet the factions dyed not, for euery man ſought rather his owne aduancement, then the publike good, as well ſuch as remayned in Court, as thoſe that left it: ſome with extreame ambition and deſire to gouerne all, as the Archb. of Toledo, and others vpon diuers pretexts of diſcontents, they did for a long time entertayne diuiſions and factions.

During the troubles of Caſtile, D. Iohn king of Portugal, did quietly enioy his conquered realme, with whom the tutors of Caſtile ſought to prolong the truce, which was al- 27 Portugal.

C moſt expired. For the effecting wherof they ſent vnto the frontier D. Iohn Serran biſhop of Siguença, Garcia Gonçal of Herera, and Diego Fernandes of Cordoua, Marſhals of Caſtile, with Anthony Sanches, Doctor and Auditor: to whom vpon propoſition of a perpetuall peace, or of a long truce, there were ſuch vnreaſonable conditions demanded by the deputies of Portugal, as the Caſtillan Ambaſſadors were forced to return without effect. The K. of Portugal ſhewed himſelf intractable in his demands, by reaſon of the new ſupport he thought to find in Caſtile. For they treated a marriage betwixt a baſe daughter of his called D. Beatrix, and D. Frederic duke of Benauent, who gaue willingly eare vnto it. Treaty of mariage to the preiudice of Caſtile.

The Ambaſſadors hauing made their report to the king D. Henry their maſter, whome Caſtille.

D they found at Segobia; hee ſent back into Portugal the biſhop of Siguença, and Doctor Anthony Sanches, adding vnto them Pero Lopes of Aiala, Alcaide Maior of Toledo. They were much troubled concerning the marriage of D. Frederic, whereof the Q. of Nauar did aduertiſe the king D. Henry, yea ſhe did ſollicit in the name of the D. of Benauent, that either he might bee allowed to marry the daughter of the K. of Portugal, or elſe they ſhould giue him the Counteſſe of Albuquerque to wife, who was ſecretly accorded to the Infant D. Frederic. The K. deſiring neither of theſe marriages, ſeemed to refer all to the Counteſſes will, who told the Archb. of Toledo in the preſence of them all, that ſhee wold do all that pleaſed the king: wherfore there was hope giuen to the Queen of Nauar to haue the marriage finiſhed at Areualo, and a diſpatch was ſent to D. Frederic, to aduertiſe him of what was paſt: but all this was but to diuert the marriage with Portugal, being

E more pleaſing to the Duke, then that of the Counteſſe of Albuquerque, the which hee made openly knowne vnto the king: wherefore the king proceeding in the ſame manner, ſent the Archb. of Toledo to him, to perſwade him with reaſon, that neither of theſe two marriages was fit for him, and rather to offer him the Marquis of Villena's daughter, with a more ample dowrie, then that which the king of Portugal could giue to D. Beatrix his daughter. But he could draw no other anſwer from D. Frederic, but that many Noblemen about the king declaring themſelues his enemies, he was forced to ſeeke fauor and friendſhip in Portugall.

At the ſame time the Inhabitants of Zamora, growing iealous of the captain of the ca- 28

F ſtle, and of the tower of S. Sauior (being a gentleman called Nugno Martinez of Villaycan, a deuoted ſeruant to the Duke of Benauent) put themſelues in armes, and made trenches and barricado's againſt him, ſaying, that he had ſome bad deſſeine with the Duke of Benauent, whoſe men he receiued daily into thoſe forts in great numbers, ſo as they ſent to demand ſuccours of the king, and of the Maſter of the Calatraua, who had beene ſent with ſome troupes, to keepe a garriſon at Salamanca, againſt the frontier of Portugall. Troubles in Zamora.

The Maſter conſidering the conſequence of this trouble, at this time when as the truce A with Portugal being expired, they expected warre, would not ſend any ſuccours, leſt he ſhould incenſe the Duke in ſhewing himſelfe partiall; the which pleaſed the king, who ſent the Biſhop of Siguença ſpeedily to Benauent, whereas the Arch-biſhop of Toledo was yet, to the end they might ſo worke with the Duke, as theſe troubles of Zamora might be pacified, the which they effected, and the Archb. came to Zamora, & brought the captaine, vpon aſſurance that the king would take it well to promiſe to deliuer the fort of S.
Sauior, into the hands of Fernand Alphonſo of Montnegro, Gouernor of Toro: the towne alſo gaue hoſtages: which things beeing thus ended, the Archb. returned to the king at Segobia.

29 The Deputies of Caſtile appointed to treate a peace with Portugal, hauing met with B Portugal. the Prior of S. Iohn of Portugal, and others appointed by the King D. Iohn at Sabugal, & conferred often of that buſines, they could not yeeld to thoſe hard conditions which were demanded: for the Portugals would haue the townes of Miranda and Sabugal left free to them: that the king D. Henry ſhould giue 12. Gentlemen, and 12. good Burgeſſes in ho-Conditions of peace propounded by the king of Portugal. ſtage for 12. yeares, for the aſſurance of the peace; which ſhould be changed euery foure yeares, and others of the like quality deliuered for them. And that during the ſayd 12.
yeares he ſhould not giue any ayde vnto the Queen D. Beatrix, nor to the Infants D. Iohn and D. Denis, brethren to the deceaſed king D. Fernand, who were in Caſtile, nor to any other that ſhould attempt againſt the Portugals: that all priſoners of either ſide ſhold be C deliuered, with other conditions, which ſeemed ſo hard vnto the Caſtillans, as they durſt not aduenture to promiſe any thing, but onely concluded a truce for two moneths, that they might conferre more amply vpon this pacification.

Caſtile. In the meane time the king D. Henry came to Medina del campo, to bee neere to Portugal, and to the duke of Benauent, who made ſhew to breed ſome innouation within the realme, hauing drawne together aboue 500. lances and a great number of Gentlemen at Pedroço, and about Toro. By reaſon wherof, & of many other inſolencies, wherof complaints came daily to Court, the king ſent the Archbiſh. of Toledo againe vnto him, with ſome Deputies of the citties which were of the Councell, to let him vnderſtand, how vn-ſeemely it was for him to entertaine the realme, whereof he was a member, in ſuch ielou- D ſie, and to conſume the people by the ſpoils and robberies of his men who kept the fields:
to what end went he ſo armed? what feared he? whereon did he complaine? what great benefit did he pretend by the allyance of Portugal, that he ſhould diſdaine the fauours of his king, who had dealt both bountifully and honourably with him, giuing him a million of marauidis yearely, and might hope for greater matters, and ſeing that he had ſuch ample teſtimonies of the kings loue, and the councels, to perſwade him to come to court, where he might purchaſe more fauor then euer? The duke anſwered to all that which the Archb.
had propounded vnto him, that he had neuer giuen eare to a marriage with Portugal, but in caſe a peace or a long truce were concluded betwixt the two realmes. As for that hee went accompanied with ſouldiers, it was well knowne that he had enemies in Court, who E had factions throughout the realme, which forced him to ſtand vpon his guard, and therfore they ſhould not hold it ſtrange if he came not to court. Moreouer, if he had receiued fauors from the king, he was ready to employ them in his ſeruice, and his whole eſtate.
The Archb. deliuered many reaſons vnto him, in preſence of the Deputies to pacifie him, and then returned to Medina del campo, where hauing giuen an accompt vnto the king and councel of his employment, he held it fit to content the duke in ſome ſort, for the ma-riage of Portugal was much aduanced. Thereupon it was bruted (whoſoeuer were the author) that the Duke approched neere vntō the towne, and that hee had intelligence with ſome, to be brought in with his forces, which cauſed a great mutiny among them, and e-uery man began to gather ſouldiers together for his owne aſſurance. I

The Archb. who was a friend to the duke (ſo far-forth as he did entertaine the troubles wherein he tooke delight) propounded a means which he held very conuenient, to auoid the ſpoiles which might follow theſe quarrels, which was, that he with the Archbiſh. of S.
Iames, and the Maſter of the Calatraua ſhould retire themſelues to their houſes, and that about the king there ſhould only remaine Iohn Hurtado of Mendoça, and the Deputies of townes,

A townes, and that the king ſhould conſult with them how to giue content to the duke of Benauent, and to find him a party equall to that which was offered him in Portugall.

By theſe factions, all the Realme was in combuſtion, and all ſorts of inſolencies were committed both in town and countrie, iuſtice was abuſed, and the treaſure miſ-gouerned. The city of Seuile was moleſted by D. Pedro Ponce of Leon, Lord of Marchena, and D. Aluar Perez of Guzman, Admirall of Caſtile, who ſeized thereon in the abſence of D. Iohn Alphonſo of Guzman, Earle of Niebla one of the tutors, chaſing many of his ſeruants and followers out of the city. On the other ſide Nugno Martinez of Villaycan, captaine of the fort of Zamora, not ſatisfied with the accord which had beene made by the meanes of the B Archbiſh. of Toledo, ſent to the duke of Benauent to haue him approch, and he would deliuer him vp the caſtle which he had in guard: the duke poſting thither, could not effect this enterpriſe, for that the inhabitants of Zamora, being aduertiſed by ſome of the dukes men, prouided for it, whereupon the Duke returned, and many that followed him did abandon him: wherevpon the king ſent the Archb. of S. Iames, and the Maſter of Calatraua to aſſure the townes that were ſuſpected, but they were ſhut out of Toro, the Inhabitants ſaying, that they would not receiue any, if the king were not in perſon, but they entred into Zamora, where as many knights of the dukes traine yeelded vnto them, and ſoon after the king came. But the Duke was aduertiſed thereof at the caſtle of Majorga, belonging to the Infant D. Fernand, by Iohn Alphonſo de la Cerde, who hauing bin high Steward C of the Infants houſe, and then diſplaced by the kings tutors, ſubſtituting in his place Pero Suarez of Quignones, Gouernor of Leon, had through deſpight fallen to the Duke of Benauents partie.

Miſeries of ciuill warre.

Whileſt that theſe contended in Caſtile, the Deputies, appointed to treat a peace with the King of Portugal during the truce which had beene prolonged, came to Extremos in the yeare 1393. the Portugal demanding for a finall reſolution, theſe Articles following. That they ſhould giue in hoſtage the baſe ſons of the duke of Benauent, of the Earls of Gijon, and of Niebla, (for the great men of Spaine had more baſe children then legitimate) the nephewes of the Maſters of S. Iames and Calatraua, of the Arch-biſhops of Toledo, and S. Iames, of Iohn Hurtado of Mendoça, and of Diego Lopes of Eſtuniga. But D aboue all they demanded the Duke of Benauents ſon, thinking he would not giue him, vnleſſe the king of Caſtile, would deliuer the caſtle of Zamora into his hands, the which they deſired, being aſſured that the Duke was wholy at their deuotion: but when they vnderſtood, that he had fayled to enter that fort, and that he began to be abandoned by many of the knights which had folowed him, they became more tractable, and yeelded to a truce for 15. yeares, ſo as they would giue them in hoſtage, the Earle of Gijons ſon, and eleuen Knights ſonnes more, with 12. children of the cittizens of Burgos, Toledo, Leon, Seuile, Cordoua, and Zamora: yet would not the Deputies of Caſtile conclude this truce, which was moſt beneficiall for Portugall, but demanded ſome reſpite to aduertiſe the king and his tutors. The king with his councell hauing conſidered the danger wherinto the home-E bred troubles, together with a forraine warre would draw them, they yeelded to all the Portugals demanded, namely, not to ayde nor aſſiſt D. Beatrix the widow Queen, nor D. Iohn, or D. Denis her Vncles. Thus a truce was concluded for fifteene yeares betwixt Caſtile and Portugal.

30. Portugal. 1393. Demaunds of Portugall to Caſtile.

The Court being in the cittie of Zamora, the captaine of the caſtle refuſed for ſome daies to deliuer the place vp to the king, ſaying, that his father Iohn Martines of Villaycan lately deceaſed, being Gouernor of Zamora, and He had held it by fealty and homage, and that they might not deliuer it vp vntill the king were 14. yeares old complete: but the tutors ſought him by ſo many meanes, and made him ſuch promiſes, that he ſhould be recompenced for his fathers eſtates, which had beene giuen to others, as in the end he deli-F uered the place into their hands, for the which he was in effect recompenced. They had promiſed him the gouernement of Ledeſma, which did belong to the Counteſſe of Albuquerque but they of the place refuſing him, for that they did not truſt him, he was otherwiſe prouided for. The Court remaining at Zamora, the Archb. weary of too much reſt, retired himſelfe into his Biſhoprick, being not greatly affected to the kings ſeruice, but to take part and adhere wholy to the Duke of Benauent, he now gaue them greater cauſe to ſuſpect him, for that he grew in choller with them of the Councell vppon his departure, A preſſing them to giue the Duke of Benauent contentment, and to pay him the Arrerages of his penſions: and that they ſhould alſo giue ſatisfaction to D. Diego Hurtado of Mendoça, touching the Admiralty which he demanded, and to Iohn of Velaſco, for the Office of Lord Chamberlaine to the King, and to Don Iohn Alphonſo de la Cerde, touching the place of Lord Steward to the Infant D. Fernand, which they had taken from him, to giue it to Pero Suarez of Quignones. Whereunto they anſwered mildly, that it was fitte ſuch men ſhould be ſatisfied, and that they would reſolue, according to iuſtice and equity, and as their dignitie required. Beſides theſe importunities, and other preſumptions, it was reported, that he had receiued the twentith penny of all merchandize and goods which had B beene ſold within the Realme, with other vnlawfull impoſitions: whereuppon the Gouernors gaue order to ſtay him, and Don Iohn of Velaſco. Whereupon they were commanded to deliuer vnto the King or his Captaines, the caſtles which they held: ſo as the Arch-biſhop was conſtrayned, notwithſtanding any excuſes, and allegations of his good ſeruice, to diſpoſſeſſe himſelfe of the caſtles of Talauera, Vzeda, and Alcala the old, and Iohn of Velaſco of that of Arnedo. For the Arch-biſhops impriſonment there was a generall interdiction in the Dioceſſes of Zamora, Palence, & Salamanca, and in the court.

Archb. of Toledo and D. Iohn of Velaſco detayned priſoners in Court.

Such things paſt in Caſtile, during the minoritie of the King D. Henry, which did much grieue the confederate Princes their allyes, to ſee a young Prince ſo ill intreated by his ambitious ſubiects; among which, the moſt remarkable were the great Prelates of the C Realme. Among others, Charles the ſixth, the French king, did the office of a Chriſtian Prince and friend, ſending this yeare 1393. a ſollemne ambaſſage to the king of Caſtile, the which came to Toro, where as the Court then remayned, to condole for the diſobedience of his ſubiects, eſpecially of the Noblemen, offering the king, in their Maſters name, all ayde and ſupport of the forces of France, if he had need. The French did alſo write to euery one of the Gouernors, to the chiefe Noblemen of Caſtile, and to the principall townes, exhorting them by the duty which they did owe vnto God, & to the crown of Caſtile, to obey their King, and to ſeeke the peace and quiet of the realme. This ambaſſage was receiued, heard, and ſent backe with great honor, as it was fit.

To draw the Duke of Benauent to the kings ſeruice, the Arch-biſhop of S. Iames went D to him being at Tordehumes, a place belonging to the duke, hauing a ſafe-conduct from D. Alphonſo Henriques of Caſtile, ſon to the deceaſed D. Frederic, Maſter of S. Iames. This Archb. wrought in ſuch ſort, as he reclaymed the duke, promiſing him in the kings name a confirmation of his annuall penſion, and to giue him 70000. thouſand frankes of gold, to aduance him to ſome good marriage, ſo as he would leaue the allyance of Portugal, and moreouer, the King would pardon him all that was paſt. After which the Duke came to Burgos to the king, without any diſtruſt, yea he refuſed a ſon of D. Iohn Hurtado of Mendoça, and one of D. Diego Lopes of Eſtuniga, with the Arch-biſhoppes nephew, which were offered vnto him for hoſtages: at which his free diſpoſition the king and the whole court did much reioyce. Being at Burgos, the truce concluded with Portugal was E proclaymed, as it had beene in like manner in Lisbone: thither came Ambaſſadours from the Duke of Lancaſter, to demand two yeares arrerages of the penſion which the deceaſed king D. Iohn had granted to the ſayd Duke, and to the Dutcheſſe D. Conſtance his wife, being foure-ſcore thouſand Frankes of gold, the which was willingly payed, and therefore the Duke did quit the intereſt which hee pretended, for want of due payment.

35 Maiority of D. Henry king of Caſtile.

The King Don Henry growing to the age of fourteene yeares, when as hee ſhould take vppon him the gouernement of the Realme, being riper of iudgement then of yeares, he did anticipate three moneths to free himſelfe of his tutors: and therefore hauing called the Noblemen and Prelats which did freely frequent the Court, with the Deputies of the townes, in the preſence of D. Domingo Biſhop of S. Ponce, Legat to Pope Clement, hee F declared that from thence forth he tooke the gouernement of his realmes into his owne hands: wherfore none of them ſhould any more ſtile themſelues Tutors, nor meddle with the gouernment, vnleſſe they were called.

In this aſſembly the Legate was a meanes to haue the Arch-biſhop of Toledo reſtored to thoſe places and Caſtles which had beene before violently taken from him, and the inter-

A interdiction of the three aboue-named Biſhopprickes was taken away, the king making great ſubmiſſions: There they alſo treated to reforme many diſorders within the Realm, by reaſon that Biſhopprickes and other ſpirituall liuings were giuen to ſtrangers, whereas they ſhould be employed to entertaine youth at ſchoole, or to reward men of merit, and ſuch as were borne in the Country, which was the cauſe that Spaniards did not ſtudie, for want of meanes, whereby the Realme was much damnified, not onely in ſpiritual matters, but alſo in temporall. The redreſſe muſt come chiefly from the Pope, who (beeing importuned by ſuch as had bin preferred to benefices, and by letters of fauor from forraine Princes) decreed, that they ſhould enioy them, but after their deaths none ſhould be preferred to any benefice in Caſtile and Leon, if he were not borne in the coun-

Orders for the giuing of ſpirituall liuings.

B trie. In this buſineſſe the king carried himſelfe afterwards as he pleaſed. Beeing free from his Gouernors, hee had many waighty affaires, eſpecially for the confirmation of the peace made with the Duke of Lancaſter, and for the truce newly concluded with the king of Portugal, there beeing a reſeruation in both treaties of a confirmation when he ſhould come to the full age of fourteene yeares. And moreouer, it did behooue him to ſend an ambaſſage into France, to renew the League with king Charles the ſixth. Beſides, the ordinarie expences in the Gouernours time amounted to fiue and thirtie millions of maraiidis then currant mony, ſo as it was needfull to cut off this exceſſiue charge: for theſe conſiderations and others, he called a generall aſſembly of the Eſtates at Madrid. Whileſt that they aſſembled, he paſſed into Biſcay, where hee had not beene ſince his com-

C ming to the Crowne.

The Companies and commonalties of the countrie, at his comming aſſembled in the field of Arechaualaga, according to their vſuall manner, demanding from the king a confirmation of their auncient liberties, rights, and priuiledges, the which he granted. Moreouer, they deſired to bee freed from all royall Prerogatiues which had beene impoſed in that Prouince, ſince the death of King Iohn, and that he ſhould confirme the new ſocieties erected among them, for the puniſhment of malefactors: and hee did alſo grant the combate as it was vſed among Gentlemen in Caſtile: of all which things he granted then full power with the aduice of his Councell. There the King was receiued for the Lord of Biſcay, where hauing kiſſed his hands, he was led to the church in the towne of Larrabe-

Demands made by them of Biſcay to the king of Caſtile.

D çua, where according to the cuſtome of his Predeceſſors Lords of Biſcay, hee tooke an oath vpon the altar to maintaine the rights of the countrie. Beeing afterwards come to Guernica, ſome Biſcayens preſented a petition vnto him, to haue all crimes which had beene committed in the country ſince the death of King Iohn pardoned, from the which hee was diſſwaded by the Noblemen of his Councell, that loued iuſtice to auoyd the pernicious conſequence thereof. Hee did alſo ſweare at Berneo, in Saint Euſemia's church, to maintaine the freedomes and liberties of that Town, but not ſo amply as they deſired. Beeing returned to Guernica, after much diſputation touching the combate, which ſome demanded, and others denyed, he granted it by pluralitie of voyces, and then was this

E manner of challenge brought into Biſcay, the King beeing ſet vnder a tree, in the vſuall place, and after the accuſtomed manner. Then hee returned by Durango and Victoria to Burgos, and from thence to Madrid, where the Eſtates aſſembled.

This yeare ſome Biſcayns and Guipuſcoans, armed certaine ſhippes at Seuile, at their owne coſt and charge, to ſeeke their fortunes at ſea, and came to one of the Ilands of the Canaries, called Lançarote, where beeing landed, they made prey of all they found, againſt whome the Ilanders with their King gathered together, and came to encounter them, but the Biſcayns had the vpper hand: they ſlue many of their enemies, and caried away an hundred and ſeuenty priſoners, with the King and Queene of the Iland: hauing well obſerued theſe Ilands, with the number, greatneſſe and ſytuation, they returned into

Diſcouery of the Canaries.

F Spaine with great ſtore of hydes, wax, and other things, whereof thoſe Ilands abound. The king D. Henry was very ioyfull of this exploit, and from that time challenged a right of propriety in the Ilands of the Canaries, which they hold to be the ancient fortunat Ilands, whereof he afterwards gaue the conqueſt to a French Gentleman, called Iohn of Betancourt, reſeruing the fealty and homage thereof vnto his Soueraignetie.

In the aſſembly of the Eſtates held at Madrid, the Kings majoritie was confirmed, who

alſo did auow whatſoeuer his Gouernors had done. The neceſſities propounded for the payment of great yearely ſummes, as well for the treaties of peace, payment of ſouldiers, ordinarie penſions giuen to the Princes and Noblemen of the Realme: as alſo for the entertaynment of the Kings houſe, the Eſtates made a free offer of a contribution: yet they beſought him to cut off his ſuperfluous gifts and penſions; and to cauſe the militarie orders to be obſerued: for of 4000. Lances which were in pay, it was manifeſt there were not 2000. A

They let him vnderſtand, that the reuenues of the Crowne beeing well husbanded, were great and ſufficient for all expences. They moreouer beſought him to diſpoſe of his affaires by the aduice of men of iudgement and experienced in the gouernement of the Realme. The king thanked them for their good aduice, promiſing to order all things according to right and equity. And for proofe, he cut off many penſions, and reuoked the offices and gifts for life, out of the reuenues, and other things ordained and aſſigned by his Gouernors, eſpecially to D. Leonora his Aunt, Queene of Nauar, notwithſtanding that ſome were confirmed by the meanes of his fauorites. He gaue to the Duke of Benauent a penſion of an 150000. marauidis onely: he diſanulled all leagues, aſſociations and homages done, by reaſon of the precedent troubles, and cauſed an abſolution to be publiſhed by the Legate, with Apoſtolicke authoritie of all oathes which had beene formerly taken in that regard. B

During this aſſembly the marriage of the Infant D. Fernand, the kings brother, and of D. Leonora Counteſſe of Albuquerque, which had beene kept ſecret vntill that time, was publiſhed, and a preſent promiſe made, and then they began to call her Infanta: ſhe was couſin, one degree aboue her husband: for D. Sancho her father, and the king D. Henry the ſecond, Grandfather to this D. Fernand, were brethren: ſhee raigned with her husband in Arragon. The Eſtates beeing diſſolued, the king being come to Illeſca, the Archbiſhop of Toledo came thither vnto him, and was graciouſly receiued: but D. Frederic Duke of Benauent, beeing diſcontented for that they had cut off part of his penſions and gifts, retired himſelfe about Leon, where he violently ſeazed vpon the Kings mony, and the reuenues of the Infant D. Fernand: whereof the king being aduertiſed, he ſent a commandement vnto him to forbeare thoſe courſes, and that he wold giue order to his Treaſurers to pay him that which was in equitie due vnto him: whereof he made no great accompt, but made ſhew to treate a new league, and confederacies with the Queen of Nauarre his ſiſter, D. Alphonſo Earle of Gijon his brother, and D. Pedro Earle of Tranſtamara his couſin: to whom the King ſent Garci Gonçales of Herera, his Marſhal, eſpecially to the Queene of Nauarre his Aunt, beeing in the caſtle of Roa with her daughters, intreating her inſtantly to forbeare thoſe tumults. Garci Gonçales of Herera told the Duke of Benauent, that he would proceed criminally againſt him, and others, if they continued to trouble the Realme, and would not be ſatisfied with that which had beene decreed by the Eſtates at Madrid, for it was impoſſible to pay them that which the Gouernors had granted them before. C D E

Yet hee offered to the Queene Donna Leonora, beſides the Decrees of the Eſtates, an 100000. marauidis, for the entertaynment of her daughters. The Duke ſought to excuſe himſelfe, ſaying, that the king had beene ill informed by his enemies, but if it pleaſed him to giue him for aſſurance the ſonne of Iohn Hurtado of Mendoça, one of Diego Lopes of Eſtuniga, and one of Ruy Lopes of Aualoz, hee would willingly come to Court, to giue an accompt of his actions, and to purge himſelfe of the blame which was layed vpon him: The Marſhall promiſed, and returning to the Court, hee met with the Arch-biſhoppe of Saint Iames in Amuſco, who vppon a counterfeit excuſe retired himſelfe from the Court, pretending to be ſicke, and therefore could not come: but in effect it was, for that hee ſaw the Arch-biſhop of Toledo beganne to gouerne all, and to be in greater fauour then before. F

35. Nauarre.

The King of Nauarre hearing that his wife had giuen cauſe to the King Don Henry to be diſcontented with her, by reaſon of her turbulent practiſes in Caſtile, hee thought it a fit and conuenient meanes to draw her into Nauarre, which ſhee did contradict all ſhee could: whereuppon he ſent his Ambaſſadours to the King Don Henry which were

Martin

A Martin Ayuar Gouernor of Tudele, and a Doctor, who found the court at Alcala of Henares: They intreated the King to perſwade the Queene his aunt to diſpoſe her ſelfe to come into Nauarre to liue with her husband, as duty required: but if ſhee could not be drawne vnto it, that hee would interpoſe his authority, that the Infants his daughters might be deliuered vnto them, to carry them to the King their father, who would hold it for a great fauor. The king D. Henry was very deſirous ſhe ſhould retire her ſelf, being but a fire-brand to kindle combuſtions in Caſtile: but being of a milde and gentle diſpoſition, he could not reſolue to force her: wherefore he anſwered the Ambaſſadors, that his will was to pleaſe the King their maiſter, both in this and in all other things, and that hee would doe what he might to perſwade his aunt to returne; ſo as he ſent a meſſenger vn- King of Nauar ſends for his wife.
B to her, with perſwaſiue letters: but ſhee made anſwere touching that which concerned her ſelfe, as ſhee had done often before. In regard of her children, ſhee ſaid, that ſeeing ſhe had ſent two vnto the father, they might well leaue her the other two, for her conſolation. The King hearing this anſwere, willed the Ambaſſadors to returne, and to aſſure the King of Nauarre, on his behalfe, that hee would ſo deale, as the Queene his wife ſhould returne vnto him; deſyring him not to take it in ill part, if hee firſt tried all milde courſes, and befitting Princes ſo neerely allied: or at the leaſt, if ſhee continued obſtinate, he would ſend him his daughters. The Ambaſſadors after they had renued the old league betwixt the two Princes, in the which many great men of Caſtile entred, they returned into Nauarre, to giue an account vnto the King of their negotiation.

C The Marſhal Garci Gonçales of Herera, who returned from the Queene of Nauarre, Caſtille.
Duke of Benauent and others, reported vnto the King that the Duke and Queene had met at Roa, aud that they complained of his fauorits, which were, D. Iohn Hurtado of Mendoça his Lord Steward, D. Diego Lopes of Eſtuniga Iuſtice Major, and Ruy Lopes of Aualos, his Lord Chamberlaine: and ſoone after the King was aduertiſed that the Archbiſhop of Saint Iames had ioyned with the Duke, and that they treated a league betwixt League treated to the preiudice of the king of Caſtile.
them, the Earle of Gijon, the Infants of Portugal, and others, the which did much trouble him. The Ambaſſadors of Nauarre ſtaied not long before they returned into Caſtile, which were the ſame Gouernor of Tudele, and the Biſhop of Hueſca, a Frenchman borne.

D The King hauing paſt the mountaines was come to Vailledolit, where he was againe, in the King of Nauarres behalfe, preſt with his promiſe, wherevpon hee tooke two months reſpight to ſend the Queen and her daughters, or at the leaſt the Infantas, without any futher delay: and hauing propounded it in councell what aſſurance the Queene of Nauarre might with reaſon demand of her husband, they gaue their opinions, that the King D. Charles, with ſome of the chiefe Knights, & Deputies of the cities and towns of Nauarre ſwearing that ſhe ſhould be wel and honourably intreated, ſhe had no cauſe to refuſe to goe vnto her husband. Hee ſent a gentlemen with the Ambaſſadors of Nauarre, to let the King their maiſter vnderſtand what had beene thought fit in Reſolution for the Queene of Nauarres returne to her husband.
E councell, and to receiue the oth. To preuent the tumultuous troubles in Caſtile, and to breake the league which the aboue named Noblemen with the Queene Donna Leonora had plotted, the King D. Henry drew together two thouſand Launces, beeing newly incenſed by the refuſall which D. Alphonſo Earle of Gijon had made to ſweare the truce made with Portugal, it being concluded that certaine prelats and noblemen of Caſtile ſhould ſweare it, and ſigne it with the King: the Earle excuſing himſelfe for that he had married a wife of the bloud of Portugal, to whom there had beene certaine places and other things promiſed by the treaty of marriage, which had not beene kept: the like refuſall was made by D. Alphonſo of Arragon, Marquis of Villena, ſaying, the truce had beene made without his priuity, whereof the Ambaſſador of Portugal, being ſent
F to that end into Caſtile tooke an act. For this cauſe, and other ſignes tending to open rebellion, the King armed, and ſent D. Diego Lopes of Eſtuniga, to the Archbiſhop of Saint Iames, to know his intent, and what cauſe he had to complaine: The Archbiſhop anſwered, that theſe tumults grew, for that they had cut off theſe Noblemens penſions, and confirmed them to others: and that there was no better meanes of peace, then to giue contentment to the duke and the reſt. Don Diego Lopes aduiſed him to come to court, to giue his opinion touching theſe things, but hee anſwered, that hee would not come, whileſt the Archbiſhop of Toledo was in court. A

36. Moores. With theſe inteſtine troubles, the King D. Henry was almoſt drawn into an vnſeaſonable warre, with the Moores of Granado, by the vaine ouerweening of D. Martin Inanes of Barbuda, maiſter of the Alcantara, a Portugal borne, who being entred into quarrell with Ioſeph King of Granado, touching religion, would make triall of the truth of Chriſtian religion by armes; of his perſon againſt the King of Granado, or of a hundred Chriſtian Knights againſt two hundred Moores, or more, to that proportion, vnto a thouſand. The King being aduertiſed of this other tumult, hee commanded the maiſter by his letters not to enter into this action; for that hee would not by any meanes haue the truce broken with the Moores: but the maiſter not regarding the Kings prohibition, marched to Cordoua, with three hundred Launces, and one thouſand foote, hauing a croſſe for his Enſigne. They of Cordoua, let him know that he ſhould not vndertake this enterpriſe, which was contrary to the Kings will and ſeruice, and the peace of the country, giuing him many examples of their ruine which haue cauſed vnneceſſary war: but he gaue more credit to an Hermit, called Iohn del Sayo, who had aſſured him that hee ſhould haue the victory, wiſhing him not to giue eare to any that ſaid the contrary: Moreouer being much giuen to Aſtronomy, he thought he had foreſeene ſomething by the ſtarres. The wiſeſt men of Cordoua, namely D. Alphonſo and D. Diego, Lords of Aguilar, ſeeing that no reaſons could preuaile with the maiſter, would haue ſtopped his paſſage at the city bridge: but he was ſo fauoured by the ſuperſtitious multitude, vnder collour that it was diſhonourable to hinder an enterpriſe of the croſſe againſt Infidels: ſo as he not only paſt, but ſo augmented his troupes, as being come to Alcala the Royal, he had aboue fiue thouſand foote. At Alcala D. Alphonſo Fernandes of Cordoua Lord of Aguilar, and his brother D. Diego Fernandes, came vnto him, who did admoniſh him againe, adding withall, that euery one would hold it indiſcreetly done of him, who was reputed a wiſe Knight, and Maiſter of the Order of Alcantara, to goe and defie the King of Granado, who was ſo neere, as with in leſſe then two daies hee might incounter him with two hundred thouſand foote, and fifty thouſand horſe, and that without doubt, beſides the daunger and hurt hee might doe vnto the realme, by the breach of the truce, and defeat of his men, he ſhould blemiſh his honour, and draw vpon himſelfe perpetuall blame, amongſt all men that profeſſed armes as a raſh and ill aduiſed captaine: but finding him obſtinate, and pretending that it would be held cowardiſe and baſeneſſe in him, if hauing paſt ſo farre, hee ſhould now returne: whereupon they wiſhed him to lead his men to the riuer of Açores, which makes the limit betwixt Granado and Caſtile, and there attend the King of Granado a day or two: if hee appeered, hee ſhould either fight with him body to body, or elſe a hundred Chriſtians againſt two hundred Moores, as they agreed: But if the Moores came not to the confines, hee ſhould bring backe his troupes, and ſo hee ſhould preſerue his honour and reputation. The Maiſter who was confirmed in his deſire to fight with the Moores, beeing moreouer incenſed for that the Granadins had intreated two Gentlemen ignominiouſly, whom hee had ſent vnto their King, to carry this challenge; hee anſwered brauely to theſe Knights, that hee thanked them for their good aduice, but he was reſolued not to ſtay, vntill hee ſaw the port of Eluira at the city of Granado, or fight with the Moores, if hee met them vpon the way, & that he did hope to let the world ſee a miracle within few daies. Thus he entred vnfortunatly into the country of Granado, and did aſſault the tower of Excla, where hee was hurt in the hand, and neere vnto him were three of his men ſlaine by the defendants, whereas hee beganne to bee amazed, for the Hermit which followed him had told him, that he ſhould not looſe a man, and therefore hee demaunded of him what it ment, that they had already ſlaine three of his men, to whom the Hermit anſwered, that it was ment, in battaile, and not at the ſeege of places, the which the Maiſter beleeued, as aſſayling the tower more furiouſly then before.

The King of Granado ſeeing the raſhneſſe of this vnaduiſed Maiſter of the Order of Alcantara, ſent Ambaſſadors to the King of Caſtile, to complaine of the breach of the truce made betwixt them, and to demaund if it were by his commandement or not.

On

A On the other ſide hee aſſembled a good number of horſe and foote, with the which hee marched towards the fronter, he ſurprized the maiſter, who was ill aduertiſed, and charged him, with his troupes ſo furiouſly, as without giuing them time to arme, hee ſlue the maiſter, and all his horſemen, with moſt of his footmen, of the which about fifteene hundred ſaued themſelues by flight. The maiſter D. Martin Iuanes cauſed himſelfe to bee ſurnamed Without feare, and there is ſuch an Inſcription found vpon his tombe in Alcantara, whether his body was carried by the permiſſion of the King of Granado. The King of Caſtile had newes of this defeat being in the Monaſtery of Santa Maria of Pelayos, neere vnto the towne of Saint Martin de val d' Egliſe, where in a manner at the
B ſame time arriued the Ambaſſadors from the King of Granado, who made their complaint, and demaunded if the maiſter of Alcantara were entred in hoſtile manner into Granado, by his commandement, and what his pleaſure was for the entertayning of the truce. The King anſwered, that what the maiſter had done did much diſpleaſe him, and that he had forbidden him by his letters to vndertake ſuch quarrels, it auayling nothing to countenance religion by the breach of the truce, which he deſired to entertaine with the King of Granado his friend: but he had not obayed him, for the which he had beene puniſhed, if God by his iuſt iudgement had not abandoned him to bee ſlaine by the Moores, and his men defeated, as they had well deſerued, whereof he was newly aduertiſed, to his great content. The Meſſengers were ſent backe with this anſwere, the which
C did increaſe the ioy which the Mooriſh King conceiued for his victory, by the aſſurance which they brought him of the continuance of the truce betwixt Granado and Caſtile.

Ambaſſage from the king of Granado to the King of Caſtile.

This trouble vpon the Moores frontier, was a pretext for the Duke of Benauent and other of the confederates to arme, and to fortefie themſelues, euery one in his quarter, ſaying, it was to be ready at the Kings commandement, if the Moores did enter into Andaluſia. The King did cauſe D. Fernand Roderiques of Villalobos, to bee choſen maiſter of the Knights of Alcantara, in the place of the deceaſed Barbuda. D. Laurence Suarez of Figueroa maiſter of Saint Iames, vnderſtood of this route in Ocagne, where he was, and came preſently to the King being at Pelayos; he aduiſed him to haue his forces in D aredineſſe for all euents, aſſuring him that he ſhould eaſily ſuppreſſe the Duke of Benauent and the Earles of Gijon and Tranſtamara, with other Malcontents, the which hee ſhould not much regard, but rather be carefull of the Mooriſh warres, if they grew hot. And to aſſure the frontier of Andaluſia it was expedient that he were ſent to Villa Real, with the Archbiſhop of Toledo, to ioyne with the Maiſter of the Calatraua, and that the King ſhould come to Toledo: promiſing moreouer that he would perſwade D. Alphonſo of Arragon Marquis of Villena to come and doe him ſeruice. The King beleeued this councell, and came to Toledo, whether D. Diego Lopes of Eſtuniga came vnto him, and gaue an account of the voiage which hee had made vnto D. Iohn Garcia Manrique Archbiſhop of Saint Iames: but the King being otherwiſe aduertiſed of the diſobedience of the Duke of Benauent, and of his confederats, and how they continually
E leauied men, he came to Illeſca, being followed by the Archbiſhop of Toledo, the Maiſter of Saint Iames, the Earle of Niebla, D. Diego Hurtado of Mendoça Admirall, Iohn Hurtado of Mendoça Lord Steward, Diego Lopes of Eſtuniga chiefe Iuſtice, Ruy Lopes of Aualos Chamberlaine, and other Noblemen, with about ſeuenteene hundred Launces.

D. Henry reduceth the rebels to his obedience.

Heere D. Alphonſo of Arragon Marquis of Villena, who had not approched neere the court all the Kings reigne, came and kiſt his hands, being accompanied with a hundred Knights and Squiers of the country of Valencia, which he had aduentured through the abſence of the Earle of Tranſtamara his competitor, who was in diſgrace with the King D. Henry. The Marquis hauing purged himſelfe of ſuch things as might bee ob-
F iected againſt him, and made many excuſes, for his not comming to court, he made ſute to be reſtored to his Office of Conſtable of Caſtile, which had beene taken from him by the Gouernors, to conferre it vpon D. Pedro Earle of Tranſtamara, to the preiudice of his honour and dignity, to whom the King gaue a gratious anſwere, aſſuring him that he would order his affaires with all equity and Iuſtice: then he intreated him to paſſe the mountaines and to come with him into Caſtile the Old, but the Marquis excuſed him ſelfe, ſelfe, ſaying, that he was not come ſo well appointed as he deſired to doe him ſeruice, A but if he gaue him meanes he would returne willingly to ſerue him. So he returned into his country, not well ſatisfied with the King D. Henry, who made no account to reſtore him to his office of Conſtable, but ſoone after, by the aduice of the Archbiſhop of Toledo, he tooke from him the title of Marquis of Villena, for that it ſeemed not ſafe, nor profitable for the Eſtate of Caſtile, that a Marquiſate frontering vpon a forraine Realme, ſhould remaine in the hands of a Knight who had ſo ſtrict an alliance as the Marquis D. Alphonſo had with the Kings and Realme of Arragon. From Illeſca the King paſt to Vailledolit, where he was aduertiſed that the duke of Benauent was at Ciſneros with ſix hundred Launces, and two thouſand foote; and the Archbiſhop of Saint Iames in Amuſco, with other ſix hundred Launces and one thouſand foote. Many were B of opinion that the Kings forces ſhould be led againſt them, to fight with them: but the ſounder iudgment diſſwaded al fighting, if it were poſſible, for the realm ſhould looſe of either ſide, beſides the hazard where into the King ſhould thruſt both his Eſtate and life, by a battaile, to the which a Prince muſt neuer come againſt his ſubiects, vnleſſe he be forced by ineuitable neceſſity. This aduice preuailed, and there were ſent vnto the Archbiſhop of Saint Iames, and at his requeſt, Iohn Hurtado, and Diego Lopes of Mendoça to Calabaçanos, with whom they wrought ſo, as they drew him to court vpon aſſurance, whereas the Archbiſhop did alſo obtaine a ſafe-conduit for the Duke of Benauent, to whom he went himſelfe, and brought him to court. The duke being in the Kings preſence, C ſought to free himſelfe of the accuſations which were laied againſt him. Firſt he maintayned that he had taken none of the Kings reuenues within his iuriſdiction, but what was due vnto him, the which ſhould not be held ſo great a crime, ſeeing that many prelats and others of leſſe quallity then himſelfe, had often vſed it, and were not drawn into queſtiõ. As for the men of war which he had gathered together, he had therein followed the general command, for feare of war with the Moores, after the defeat of the maiſter of Alcantara: and if he had beene at Roa, to ſee the Queene of Nauarre his ſiſter, it was not preiudicial to the realm, nor contrary to the Kings ſeruice. Theſe excuſes were held neither good nor true by the king; who notwithſtanding told him, that he would willingly forget al that was paſt, ſo as he would from thrence-forth liue in peace and obedience, D propounding vnto him theſe conditions. That if it were found he had leauied more money then had beene aſſigned him at the laſt Eſtates held at Madrid, he ſhould reſtore it vnto the king, or to ſuch as it did belong: that he ſhould cauſe D. Pedro to come to court, whom the King pardoned, for that which did concerne him, reſtoring to others their intereſts: that the duke ſhould giue his two baſe ſonnes in hoſtage, and ſhould leaue in depoſito the caſtles of Medina del Rioſecco, and Tordehumos for foure yeeres; with this clauſe that if he raiſed any tumults, thoſe places ſhould come vnto the King: That if he ſhold fal from the Kings ſeruice, certain Knights of his houſhold ſhold promiſe & ſwear to turne vnto the kings party: that the penſion of an hundred & 15. thouſand Marauidis, graunted vnto the Duke at the Eſtates at Madrid, ſhould be augmented to fiue hundred E thouſand: that for the ſeuenty thouſand frankes of gold which had beene promiſed him for his marriage, the King gaue him the reuenues of Valence de Campo, the which Iohn of Portugal had till then enioyed, and now he tooke it from him, for that hee had beene a practiſer and confederat againſt his Eſtate. Theſe things being thus ordred, the duke and the Archbiſhop went from court, and being come to Ciſneros, the duke ratefied all, and diſmiſt his troupes, retayning only a hundred launces for the Kings ſeruice.

conditions propounded to the Duke of Benauent.

D Pedro Earle of Tranſtamara comes to court.

Within few daies after D. Alphonſo Henriques came vnto the King being at Vailledolit, with a letter of credit from the Conſtable D. Pedro Earle of Tranſtamara his brother, telling the King, that if it pleaſed him to giue ſome aſſurance vnto the Earle, hee would come to court: wherevpon the King aſſured him, and hee came preſently, freeing himſelfe of many things whereof he had beene accuſed: then he complained of D. Alphonſo Earle of Gijon, who had forcebly taken from him the towne of Paredes of Naua, which the deceaſed King D. Iohn had giuen him in exchange for the towne of Alua de Tormes, which he had taken from him, to giue it to D. Iohn Infant of Portugal. F

The King gaue the Conſtable a good reception, promiſing to prouide for all things according

A according vnto Iuſtice: and preſently he went in perſon to Paredes of Naua, which place he deliuered into the hands of Ruy Lopes of Aualos his Lord Chamberlaine, and did ſommon his vncle D. Alphonſo Earle of Gijon, to appeere within threeſcore daies, and to produce what right he had to this place, wherevpon Iuſtice ſhould be done him: but if he did not appeere, it ſhould be adiudged to D. Pedro. The King did alſo preſſe him to ſweare the Articles of the truce of Portugal, as other Noblemen, Prelats and Knights had done according to the capitulation; the which the Earle would not doe, but ſought excuſes and euaſions, wherewith the King was very much diſcontented. This was a matter of great importance, for the Marquis of Villena and the Earle of Gijon refuſing to ſweare the Articles, the King of Portugal pretended that the truce was of no force,
B and that the hoſtages were forfeited vnto him: So as he refuſed the oth which the Marquis, after his refuſall, would haue taken when as hee came to court, ſaying, that the time prefixed for ſuch ratifications was paſt, wherefore they muſt capitulate a new.

During theſe troubles in Caſtile, the King of Nauarre did ſtill ſollicit his wiues returne or at the leaſt of his two daughters: and the King D. Henry had a great deſire to ſee her diſlodge, but he knew not how to ſend her honeſtly out of Caſtile: But ſhe her ſelfe prepared the way: for when as ſhee vnderſtood that the Duke of Benauent, and others of the league were reduced vnder the Kings obedience, fearing ſome ſurpriſe, ſhe procured D. Pedro the Conſtable to come to Roa, with two hundred Launces, and ſome footemen, and then ſeeing her ſelfe as it were aſſured, ſhee ſent vnto the King, to demaund aſ-
C ſurance to come to court, to iuſtifie her ſelfe: but the King thinking that the Duke of Benauent, the Conſtable, his aunt, and all they of the league in Generall, did ſmother in their breſts the ſame wils they had before, hee reſolued to puniſh them, one after an other; and therefore he cauſed them, that the Queene of Nauarre had ſent vnto him, to be ſtaied, and then being come to Burgos, he propounded in councell, what was to bee done. There were preſent the Archbiſhop of Toledo, the maiſters of Saint Iames and Calatraua, D. Iohn Hurtado of Mendoça the Admiral, D. Iohn Hurtado, D. Ruy Lopes of Aualos, and others, whereof ſome came armed to councell, by the Kings commandement. D. Frederic Duke of Benauent came alſo, notwithſtanding that ſome of his friends had wiſhed him to retire, telling him that they ment to take him: as he entred into the D place where the councell was kept, the King went forth, making ſhew that he would goe ſup, and ſpeaking aloude, that they muſt conſider what anſwere to giue to the Queene of Nauarre.

And ſoone after hauing ſent them word, that they ſhould ſpeedily diſpatch that which they had to doe, the Duke was taken priſoner, and put in the caſtle of Burgos, in the cuſtody of the Maiſter of Saint Iames, from whence hee was afterwards tranſported to Monreal, and in the end in the time of the King. D. Iohn to the caſtle of Almodouar del Rio neere vnto Cordoua, where he ended his daies. D. Frederic Duke of Benauent a priſoner.

This is that famous priſon of D. Frederic duke of Benauent, celebrated throughout all
E Spaine. This done the King ſent Diego Peres Sarmiento the Gouernor, to ſeize vpon all the Lands and goods, not onely of the Duke of Benauent, but alſo of the Conſtable D. Pedro, and by the ſame meanes he ſeized vpon the lands of his aunt. Donna Leonora Queene of Nauarre, and he himſelfe, being followed with ſome troupes, went to Roa (where ſhe was) to beſeege her, and take her: wherevpon the Conſtable who was with her, abandoned her, and went into Galicia, to prouide for his owne affaires. The Queene ſeeing her ſelfe forſaken, beganne to lament, filling all the caſtle of Roa with pittifull cries; and the more to mooue them to pitty, ſhe attired her ſelfe, her daughters and women in mourning weeds, and ſent her Confeſſor vnto the King, to know his pleaſure, ſeeing hee came in that manner with an army. The King gaue him ſome rea-
F ſons, and marched on to Valera, from whence he ſent Iohn Hurtado of Mendoça and Ruy Lopes of Aualos to the Queene, to whom (being full of teares, and with a mournfull habit and countenance) ſhe complained much of the King her Nephew, ſaying, that hee ſought to take away her goods; and demanded aſſurance to goe and ſpeake with him. The Inhabitants of Roa, carefull of their ſafeties, ſent to offer the place vnto the King, if it pleaſed him to receiue them as his owne, and not to alienate them any more, wherewith the King was content: wherevpon they receiued the Archbiſhop of Toledo, Iohn Hurtado, Diego Lopes and Ruy Lopes with their followers, and ſoone after the King entred, to whom the Queene being come, they entred into a church, and there had much conference. In the end the King granted her the reuenues of Roa, Sepulueda, Mardrigal and Arcualo, retayning the Iuſtice vnto himſelfe and he commanded her to follow him to Vailledolit. A

Earle of Gijon ſeizeth vpon Oueido.

This buſineſſe being ended, the King marched towards Leon to make warre againſt his vncle D. Alphonſo Earle of Gijon, who was in the Aſturia's, and had ſeized vpon the city of Oueido, which did belong vnto the King, the which he did fortefie, with his towne of Gijon, and other places. By the way hee had conference with the Archbiſhop of Saint Iames, who was much mooued for the impriſonment of the Duke of Benauent: for he had come to court vpon his word and aſſurance. The King made him promiſe that he ſhould not enter into any league, yet the griefe hee had for the Dukes detention, made him forget all the affection he had had to the ſeruice of the crowne of Caſtile, which in the end he left, and retired into Portugal, making the Schiſme in the church his pretext, ſaying, that of his knowing the Pope raigning in Auignon was not lawfull, but he that held his ſeat at Rome: and for that the Portugals did adhere vnto him he retired into Portugal, where he obtained the Biſhoprike of Coimbra, and then the Archbiſhoprike of Braga, where he ended his daies. He was of the noble family of Manriques, a man of a ſmall ſtature, but of an actiue ſpirit, full of courrage, high minded, eloquent, liberall, apt to compound great mens quarrels, ambitious, and one that enuied the Archbiſhop of Toledo. D. Pedro of Tenorio, who was of a different humor; ſeuere, ſtatly, ambitious alſo, but he couered his ambition with modeſty, maintayning his dignity in ſuch ſort as he was reſpected and feared. He loſt in Caſtile the Archbiſhoprike of Saint Iames, the office of Chancellor to the King, with many other lyuings. The King in paſſing cauſed the caſtle of Manſilla to be razed, and vnited the towne (which had belonged vnto the Duke) vnto his demaines. He then ſent his men againſt Gijon, the which they did beſeege both by ſea and land. B C

His diſpoſition.

Being come to Leon, he made a declaration in a great aſſembly, in the chiefe church, of the rebellions and fellonies of the Earle D. Alphonſo his vncle, committed both againſt the King D. Iohn his father and himſelfe, the fauors he had done him ſince his inlargement by the Gouernors, and his Ingratitude, for the which he did confiſcate all his goods to the crowne, except the Siegneury of Noruegna, which he gaue to the church of Ouiedo, as had beene formerly ordained by the deceaſed King his father. The King hauing ſent ſome troupes towards Ouiedo the Earles men were chaſed away, and the King was maiſter of the city; ſo as the Earle was forced to ſhut himſelfe into Gijon, where he was ſtraightly beſeeged. One of his baſe ſonnes called D. Hernando holding the caſtle of Saint Martin, deliuered it vnto the King, and came vnto his ſeruice. The Conſtable D. Pedro Earle of Tranſtamara, ſeeing what had befallne the Duke of Benauent and the Queen of Nauar, and how they handled the Earl of Gijon, he found means to make his accord, and came vnto the King at the ſeege of Gijon, by whom he was well receiued, and had giuen him the townes of Pont Ferrada, Villafranca and Varçarcell, which had beene the Duke of Benauents. The yeere growing towards an end, and the country of Aſturia being barren, not able long to maintaine an army, the King reſolued to make ſome accord with the Earle, who ſought it: wherevpon they concluded theſe Articles. That the French King ſhould be Iudge of their controuerſies, who ſhould iudge within ſix monthes whether the Earle had offended, and if it were found that hee ſhould looſe his lands, he was content, if not, all ſhould be reſtored to him againe: That vntill a definitiue ſentence, the towne of Gijon ſhould remaine in the Earles hands, vpon condition it ſhould remaine in the Eſtate it was then, without adding any ſupply of victuals or men; and that the Earle ſhould not goe aboue three leagues from the town, if it were not into France, to ſollicit the iudgement of this cauſe. In which caſe the King ſhould giue him three hundred thouſand Marauidis, to defray his charges: That the Earles other Lands ſhould remaine in the poſſeſſion of D. Ruy Lopes of Aualos, Lord Chamberlaine to the King, who ſhould hold them vpon his faith; and that the D E F

A Earle ſhould giue his ſonne D. Henry for hoſtage. By this compoſition the Earle D. Alphonſo was freed from ſeege.

This yeere 1394. died D. Iohn Alphonſo of Guzman Earle of Niebla, a man of a peacefull ſpirit, yet was he ſomewhat ingaged in the troubles of Caſtile, leauing his ſonne D. Henry of Guzman heire to his great poſſeſſions. Pope Clement died alſo that yeere in Auignon, the ſixteenth yeere of his Popedome, in whoſe place the Cardinals of that ſeat, meaning to proceed to the election of an other, receiued letters from the Vniuerſity of Paris, to perſwade them to deferre it for ſome daies, to know the intention of Pope Boniface the ninth, reſyding at Rome, touching the vnion of the church; yet notwith-

B ſtanding they entred into the Conclaue nine daies after the funeral, and without regard of any letters written by the Vniuerſity, and King Charles, they gaue their voices, and withall made a proteſtation in writing, that the future Pope ſhould not hinder the rooting out of the Schiſme, and that he ſhould bee bound to giue ouer his dignity if neede were; they made choiſe of D. Pedro de Luna, carrying the title of Santa Maria in Coſmedin, a Cattelan and Doctor of the Canon law; a man of great authority, and well practiſed in worldly affaires, whom they called Benedict the thirteenth. The French King yeelding to that was done, ſent his Ambaſſadors to Auignon, to doe the accuſtomed homage to the new Pope: but beeing afterwards ſollicited by ſome of the Cardinals, who repented themſelues of Benedicts election, he ſought, by meanes of the proteſtation

C which had beene made, to force the Pope to quit his dignity, vnder pretext to reconcile the Schiſme: but Benedict was loth to leaue ſo ſweet a morcell, which ſo many of his order had gap'd after, reſiſting long, to the great preiudice of all Chriſtendome, and the French king did in vaine ſollicit by many Ambaſſages, D. Henry King of Caſtile, to ioyne with him, in the diſplacing of Benedict from his Popedome, whom the Kings of Nauarre and Arragon did alſo obey.

Election of Pedro de Luna to be Pope, called Benedict the 13.

The King D. Henry hauing proceeded, as we haue ſaid, againſt the chiefe authors of the troubles of his realme, he returned to Vailledolit, and knowing by good experience the diſpoſition of his aunt, whom he had brought with him, he reſolued to ſend her into Nauarre, to King Charles her husband, the which (notwithſtanding the Eſtate ſhee was

D in) ſhe did impugne by all meanes poſſible: wherefore the King fearing ſhe would ſteale away, and put her ſelfe into ſome place of ſtrength, which would be very troubleſome to take, he commanded the prior of Saint Iohn to ſet a gard about her lodging, and he himſelfe went to Tordeſillas. Then the Queene knew that ſhe muſt of force returne into Nauarre, without any other aſſurances then ſuch promiſes and othes as the King her husband had giuen, and ſeeing no euaſion, nor delay, ſhe ſent to intreat the King her Nephew to be well aduiſed what he did, in ſeeking to force her to returne into Nauarre: and ſeeing that it did concerne both her honour and life, ſhe intreated him to propound it to the graue and learned men of his councel, to reſolue what was fit for her to doe. The King was very well pleaſed herewith, and committed the buſineſſe to the Biſhops of Pa-

E lence and Zamora, by whoſe aduice it was concluded, that the Queene Donna Leonora ſhould returne to her husband, and that the King her Nephew ſhould accompany her to the frontiers of Nauarre, whereof ſhe was aduertiſed, that ſhe might diſpoſe her ſelfe to obay, but it was againſt her will: wherevpon the King returned to Vailledolit, and from thence they tooke their way towards Nauarre, hauing ſent the Archbiſhop of Toledo and him of Zamora, an Arragonois, and the biſhop of Albi a Frenchman, with others, to Tudele, to aduertiſe King Charles of his wiues comming and to take a new oth of him, to intreat her well and honourably. The Archbiſhop of Saragoſſa came to meet the Queene, being accompanied by many Knights of Nauarre, France and Arragon; to whom ſhe was deliuered, with her daughters, vpon the confines of Caſtile and Nauarre,

F to the great contentment of King Henry, to whom ſhe had beene chargeable many yeeres, by her turbulent and ambitious ſpirit. The King D. Charles did ſhew by the effects, that he was neuer ill-affected towards her; for he receiued her, with all that did accompany her, with great honour, and ſhewes of loue and ioy: he intreated her curteouſly, and honoured her as much as ſhe could deſire: commanding there ſhould be feaſts and bonfiers made throughout all the realme of Nauarre, by reaſon of her com-ming. And for that they had not yet had any ſonne, he would haue the Eſtates of his realme(aſſembled to that end at Pampelone, ſome monthes after the Queenes returne) ſweare the Infanta's his daughters for lawfull heires of the realme, and of his other Eſtates, who ſhould ſucceed one after an other, vnto the laſt liuer. He cauſed his ſubiects to take this oth, as it was accuſtomed in Spaine, and to auoide warre and ſedition, whereof they had freſh examples in the neighbour countries of Arragon and Valencia. A

Arragon. D. Iohn King of Arragon, ſonne to D. Pedro the Cerimonious, hauing reigned nine yeeres and three monthes, went about that time into the Iſland of Majorca, whether he had beene drawne by the ſeditions of the Iſlanders, rayſed againſt the Iewes, which dwelt among them, whom they had ſlaine, and ſpoiled, after the manner of the Caſtillans and Arragonois, incenſed by a ſeditious Archdeacon, preaching at Seuile, with which miſchiefe all the townes of Spaine were in the end infected except Saragoſſa. The King hauing puniſhed the chiefe authors of theſe hatefull mutinies, in his returne, he was driuen by a ſtorme, to Cap de Cruz, about Ampurias, from whence being come to Caſtillon, he was ſurprized by ſodaine death; ſome hold that it was in chaſing the Wolfe in the woods of Foxa, others ſay, hee fell and bruzed his skull, in the yeere 1395. This Prince, as we haue formerly ſaid, had taken to wife a French Lady, called Martha, daughter to Iames Earle of Armaignac, who gouerned him quietly, by whom he had one only daughter called Ioane, married at the time of his death to Mathew of Caſtelbon, Earle of Foix, and Lord of Bearn, which was the cauſe of much warre in Arragon. The Queene D. Martha being dead, ſoone after her deliuery, the King D. Iohn married Donna Violant daughter to the Duke of Bar, who brought him a ſonne, but of ſhort life, and lies interred at Saragoſſa, and afterwards a daughter, carrying the mothers name, and married in her time to Lewis duke of Aniou, ſonne to that Lewis which died in Italy, purſuing his intereſt to the realme of Naples. After the death of King Iohn, Mathew Earle of Foix, who had married his eldeſt daughter, pretended, according to the cuſtome practiſed in Spaine, that the crowne of Arragon did belong vnto his wife, and ſought all meanes to obtaine it: but the Arragonois would not then ſubiect themſelues vnder a ſtrange Prince, and reiecting the womans right, they did chooſe D. Martin for their king, who was brother to the deceaſed, and was then in Sicile. A IN the reigne of King Henry the third, it often appeered how vaine the enterpriſes of bad ſubiects are againſt a vertuous and innocent Prince: for God did preſerue this poore pupill, from the ambitious rage of his Tutors, Princes, Prelats and great Lords of Caſtile, ruining them by their owne diſcord. And he did ſo much honour the royall Maieſty, as when as this young Prince had taken vpon him the gouernment of the realme, at the age of foureteene yeeres, he deliuered them into his hands, to puniſh them, as their obſtinate rebellion, and ingratitude had deſerued. Being freed (as we haue ſaid) of the Duke of Benauent, the Queene of Nauarre, and the Archbiſhop of Saint Iames, and hauing by their exam-
B ple reduced the Earle of Tranſtamara and the Archbiſhop of Toledo, to their duties: there onely remained D. Alphonſo Earle of Gijon his vncle, who was reduced to that extremity, as he was forced to vndergoe the cenſure of a ſtrange Prince, in a cauſe which concerned his honor, his goods and his liberty: the which he might haue enioyed with reputation, yea much augmented his dignity, if he had contained himſelfe with modeſty, in the fauor of D. Henry King of Caſtile his naturall Prince.

According to the accord made at the ſeege of Gijon, the King ſent his Ambaſſadors to the French King, to debate the cauſes he had to diſpoſſeſſe D. Alphonſo, who hauing ſtai- Proceeding a- ed many daies in the court of France, the Earle of Gijon, nor his Attorney appearing; gainſt the Earl and the time of the aſſignation being expired, they prepared for their returne, when they of Gijon.
C had newes that their aduerſe party was come to the coaſt of Brittaine, and was comming towards Paris: wherefore to giue more countenance to their cauſe, they attended. Being arriued, hee ſpake with King Charles, for his iuſtification, accuſing the King his Nephew, that he ſought to take his portion from him, lying in Aſturia, Leon and Caſtile, the which was aſigned him by the deceaſed King D. Iohn his brother, adding many other charges and exceſſe, wherevnto the Ambaſſadors anſwered pertinently, laying open the Earles ingratitude, rebellion and conſpiracy, againſt the King his Lord, and
D benefactor, who had drawne him out of priſon, and reſtored him to all his goods, the which King Iohn had iuſtly taken from him, adding therevnto penſions, Eſtates and honours; and accuſing him in particular of the violent vſurpation of the towne of Paredes of Naua, and other tyranicall actions done by him, hauing alſo refuſed to ſigne the truce of Portugal, with many other acts of contempt and fellony: concluding that hee ought to looſe the Earldome of Gijon, and to be wholy left to the diſcretion and will of the King his Lord; ſo as in the proofes of theſe crimes, exhibited by the Ambaſſadors, in defence of their Princes actions, hauing not any thing to reply publikely, he gaue the Lords of the French Kings councell ſecretly to vnderſtand, that the ill will which the King his Nephew bare him, incenſed by his bad councellors, who were corrupt and mercenary, proceeded from nothing elſe, but that hee had alwaies oppoſed himſelfe to the E practiſes and ſecret intelligences which they had with the Engliſh, in league with whom they would draw the King of Caſtile, to the preiudice of the friendſhip and ancient alliance, which was betwixt the houſes of Caſtile and France: wherefore he intreated them to deale ſo with King Charles, as he would iudge fauorably of his cauſe, cauſing his Eſtates and Lands to be reſtored to him againe, promiſing, all his life time, to doe him good and loyal ſeruice.

The King deſirous to reconcile Princes that were neere in bloud, cauſed the Ambaſſadors to be treated with about a prorogation of the aſſignation; for they had proteſted that the time prefixt being expired through the Earles negligence and contempt, to whom the King their maiſter had cauſed three hundred thouſand marauidis to be deliuered, for the charges of his voiage, and to take from him all excuſe, that they could no more appeere before him, as before their Iudge: yet they ſaid, that ſeeing the King of F Caſtile their Lord had ſubmitted himſelfe vnto his Iudgement, for the brotherly loue that was betwixt them, notwithſtanding that many of his councell had diſwaded him, holding it a diſparragement for the ſoueraigne Prince to contend with his vaſſall and ſubiects before a ſtrange Iudge, and out of his country and iuriſdiction.

They were of opinion that if the Earle Don Alphonſo did willingly deliuer the towne of Gijon vnto the King of Caſtile, and ſubmit himſelfe to his will and mercy, that by his interceſſion the Earle ſhould obtaine a ſafe conduit and aſſurance to come into Caſtile, and ſo he ſhould treat of his affaires more profitably then by any other courſe. They withall made a requeſt vnto King Charles in the name of the King their Lord, that for the league which was betwixt the two Kings and realmes, he would be pleaſed to command D. Alphonſo to depart his country, which the French King could not refuſe, and therefore he cauſed notice to be giuen vnto the Earle, that he ſhould retire himſelfe, commanding all Gouernors of Prouinces, eſpecially of port towns, not to giue him any fauor or aide, wherefore he went away in poore eſtate, & kept himſelf ſome daies about Rochelle. The ſix monthes of truce concluded betwixt the King and him being many daies before expired, and yet the Ambaſſadors had not written any thing concerning the concluſion of this ſute, there were ſome troupes of horſe and foote ſent about Gijon, after which the King came with greater forces, both by land and ſea, the which did ſo preſſe the place, as the Conteſſe, Donna Iſabella of Portugal, yeelded it, compounding for her life and liberty, and of ſome Knights that were within it, and the deliuery of her ſonne D. Henry, whom the King held in hoſtage. In the meane time letters came out of France, from the Ambaſſadors, contayning what had paſt in this cauſe, wherewith the King was wel ſatisfied. The miſerable Counteſſe Iſabella, daughter to D. Fernand King of Portugal, being deſtitute of all meanes, went into France to her husband D. Alphonſo, who was poore, and without any helpe or fauour, but from the Viconteſſe of Touars, in whoſe country he liued in the towne of Marant. After the taking of Gijon, the King went to Seuile to treat a truce with the Moores, being ſollicited by King Mahumet then reigning in Granado, the third after the death of Mahumet the old, who was bruted to haue poiſoned the King D. Henry the ſecond, and this was his ſucceſſion.

Gijon yeelded vnto the King, and the Earle diſpoſſeſt and baniſhed into France.

Mahumet Guadix the tenth King of Granado.

2 Granado.

MAhumet ſurnamed Guadix, after the death of Mahumet the Old his father, was ſetled King of Granado: he onely among all his predeceſſors, receiued this Scepter peaceably, and left it quiet at his death. During his reigne which beganne in the yeere 1379. and ended 1392. he had not any warre againſt Chriſtian Princes for all the time of his reigne, the Eſtate of Caſtile vnder King Iohn was ſo troubled with wars with D. Fernand King of Portugal, and afterwards with the maiſter of Auiz, and beſides with the Duke of Lancaſter, as the Realme of Granado felt no trouble. This Mahumet Guadix was ſonne in law to the King of Tunis, whoſe daughter, named Hadiſa, of the ancient linage of the Almohages, he had married when his father liued, by whom he had Ioſeph his ſucceſſor to the Realme, and yet he had other wiues, and many children by them, according to the liberty of the Mahumetiſts, in that point. During this calme, he fortefied many places in the Realme of Granado, eſpecially towards the frontier of Andaluſia; by the which the Kings of Caſtile were accuſtomed to inuade the Moores. Hee renued the truce betwixt the two realmes of Granado and Caſtile, with King Iohn, in the yeere 1390. the which was ſworne and confirmed by the Kings, and by their eldeſt ſonnes and ſucceſſors. The name of Guadix was giuen him, for the great loue he bare to the towne of Guadix, and that country, from his Infancy, the which he did frequent and beautifie with many things whileſt he liued. He died in peace, in the yeere of our Lord 1392. the thirteenth of his reigne.

Ioſeph the eleuenth, King of Granado.

TO him ſucceeded this King Ioſeph, of whom wee haue made mention, in the route with he gaue vnto Martin Iaues of Barbuda, maiſter of Alcantara. Before there was

A was ſome likelihood of warre, during the raigne of D.Henry the 3.king of Caſtile, but it was ſoone pacified,after an incounter neere vnto Lorca,wheras the Mores at the coming of this king Ioſeph, beginning to flie, were defeated with great loſſe. If the father had raigned peaceably, as well among his ſubiects,as with Chriſtian Princes his neighbours: his ſon gouerned with great difficulty & tumults: for beſides the quarels he had with the Chriſtians,(which ſucceeded reaſonably well) he was purſued by his owne ſonne, and in danger to looſe both Crowne and life. This bad ſonne called Mahumet, as his Grandfather was, thruſt on with ambition to raign,ioyned with a Nobleman among the Mores, called Aben Mohaya, who had long hated King Ioſeph. Theſe two together did what they could to put him from his royall ſeate, diſperſing among the Mores all the ſlanders they could inuent againſt him: but chiefly they did charge him with the vice of clemencie, which he had vſed to many Chriſtian captiues, hauing ſet them free without ranſome: an vndoubted argument, ſayd they, that he was a Chriſtian in heart. There were great combuſtions throughout all Granado, by meanes of this peruerſe ſonne and his confederats, the which were pacified by the mediation of an Ambaſſadour from the king of Maroc, of the linage of the Merins,who was then at Granado,for his Princes affaires,who wrought in ſuch ſort, as the ſonne and all that followed him, yeelded obedience vnto the king, to the good of the Realme, which for a time enioyed a deſired peace: for by reaſon of the troubles, many Chriſtians had imbraced theſe quarrels of the Moores, ioyning with either partie, but all tending to the ruine of their eſtate. Beſides this Mahumet, ſon to king Ioſeph, who made warre againſt him, Hiſtories make mention of three others: that is, Ioſeph the eldeſt, who raigned, but not immediatly after his father, Cidi-Ali and Cidi-Amed. After this pacification, and the defeate of the Maſter of Alcantara aboue-mentioned, king Ioſeph was more reſpected among his ſubiects,and gouerned his Realme in peace the remaynder of his dayes without any oppoſition: He kept friendſhip with the Princes of Spaine his neighbours, and with the Kings of Affricke, as much as he could: yet he grew into ſecret hatred with the king of Fez, whereof no man knowes the occaſion, neither did he diſcouer it, vntill he felt the poiſon, which this trecherous king ſent him: for among many rich preſents, there was a caſſocke of cloth of gold, of great price,but infected with this mortall poyſon, which did not worke ſodenly, but by degrees: an art much practiſed among thoſe damned creatures, to free themſelues of their enemies, or to make States and Principalities voyd, as their ambitious appetites did driue them. King Ioſeph hauing no cauſe, as he thought, to ſuſpect any ſuch treaſon from a king of his ſect, whome hee had not offended, receiued the preſents: but hauing one day put on the caſſocke, he felt himſelfe preſently poyſoned without remedie: the which was of ſuch force, as hauing depriued him of all his naturall faculties, his fleſh fell away by peece-meale, with great horhor to them that were about him, and amazement of the Phiſitions, which had him in cure, to whome the true cauſe of his infirmitie,nor the remedies were euer knowne. Thus this king died miſerably, hauing raigned about foure yeares in Granado, in the yeare of our Lord 1396. and of the Arabians 779.

Sonne perſecutes the ſather to raigne.

Ioſeph king of Granado poyſoned.

Wonderfull force of poyſon.

Mahumet the 9. of that name, and 12. king of Granado.

MAHVMET This ſonne ſurnamed Aben-Balua, who had ſo much deſired to raigne in his fathers life-time, vſurped the Realme from his elder brother Ioſeph, who yeelding to the time, ſupported it as well as he could, beeing countenanced by ſome Noblemen, that were friends to his deceaſed father and him. The firſt entrance of this king Mahumet was pleaſing vnto the Moores, by the cruelty he ſuffered to be done to two Friars brethren, who mooued with an inconſiderate zeale, would goe and preach in Granado. Beeing forbidden by the king to preach their doctrine to a people ill prepared to receiue it, they perſiſting in their reſolution, the Alfaguis and Doctors of the Alcaron fell vpon them, and hauing whipt them, they ſlue them moſt cruelly, ſo as theſe two poore Friars were held holy Martyrs, whereof ſome of their bones were gathered together, and carried to Seuile and Cordoua, to them of their Order, all men perſwading themſelues that they wrought miracles. This king thinking himſelfe ſetled in his eſtate, he confirmed the truce with Chriſtian Princes, eſpecially with D. Henry king of Caſtile, who freed him of the tribute which the kings of Granado were wont to pay to the Kings of Caſtile. The King Don Henry ſhewed himſelfe tractable, by reaſon of the indiſpoſition of his perſon; who beeing the reſt of his daies ill diſpoſed, purchaſed the ſurname of Sickly, and made him to deſire peace with his neighbours, and to hate warre. The friendſhip and familiaritie of theſe two Princes was very great, and continued long, viſiting one another by ambaſſages, and ſending preſents, ſtriuing who ſhould be more ſtately and bountifull: and King Mahumet deſiring on a time to make demonſtration of his loue to the king D. Henry, ſending him rich preſents, hee gaue the charge of the ambaſſage to one of his wiues, the which gaue great content to the king of Caſtile.

D. Henry of Caſtile, called the ſickly.

3 Caſtile.

But to returne to this king Don Henry, after that he had ſubdued the Princes of his bloud, and their confederates, who contemning his youth, and thruſt on by ambition, had troubled his Realme, he beganne to be ſickely, and vnfit for the actions of warre, the cauſes whereof by the ſingular grace of God ceaſed. Hee had a great care of Iuſtice, and to eaſe his ſubiects, and beeing in that eſtate hee ſought all meanes to maintaine his reputation and authoritie, fearing nothing more then to bee contemned of his ſeruants, to whome he ſometimes ſeemed ſeuere and rigorous, and ſometimes was content onely to terrifie them: Whereof they produce this example. The king on a time hauing hunted late in an vnknowne countrie, and ill followed, recouered his lodging, being readie to ſit downe to his ſupper, hauing a very good ſtomacke, he found it ill prepared, ſo as hee began to grow in choller with the clarke of his kitchin, ſaying, that hee was negligent, and that he would puniſh him. The clarke who (it may be) ſought for this occaſion, excuſed himſelfe vppon the ſmall meanes which were appointed him by his Councellors to furniſh his table: ſo as, ſayd he, beſides the aſſignation which is very ſhort, I recouer it with ſuch difficultie, as I am forced to pawne mine owne, to ſupply it: wherewith the king was very ſad, taking it for a great argument of the ſmall eſteeme the Noblemen that ruled, made of him, by this diſhoneſt ſparing for a kings table, into whoſe coffers there entred of yearely reuenue 70. millions of Marauidis, if Writers do not erre.. And therefore he beganne to ſtudie, how he might make them know it, giuing to his Clarke one of his roabes, called at that time Balandranas, the which hee pawned for two ſhoulders of mutton, with the which, and ſome Quailes which they had taken, the king ſupped, beeing ſerued by the Clarke.

Beeing returned to Burgos, he diſſembled that which he had in his heart, and watched an opportunitie to be reuenged. Hee was aduertiſed that the chiefe Noblemen of his trayne and Councell, holding the greateſt dignities in the Realme of Caſtile, the Prelats, the Maſters of knightly Orders, the Duke of Medina Celi, D. Ruy Lopes of Aualos, Don Iohn and D. Diego Hurtado of Mendoça, Diego Lopes of Eſtuniga, Iohn of Velaſco, Gomes Manrique, Peter Alfan of Ribera, and others hauing gouernements in the chiefe Prouinces, ſhould meet together one night at a ſtately and ſumptuous banket: wherefore hee found meanes to enter diſguiſed, to ſee their cheare, and heare their diſcourſe: where hee ſaw all things furniſhed in great aboundance, and with more then royall ſtate, where there wanted not any thing that might pleaſe the appetite, and as for their diſcourſe and table-talke, it was nothing but of the great and bounteous penſion they drew from the King, of the profits and commodities of their Offices and Gouernements, gifts, preſents, honours, fauours, and ſuch like, which makes the Courtiers paradiſe. The King hauing obſerued all this, beeing returned vnto his lodging, hee ſecretly in the night, drew in his Guards, and many other ſouldiers: and when it was day, hee ſent for all theſe Noblemen of the Banquet, to come vnto his Pallace, to bee witneſſes to the Will which hee would make, who flocking thither with all expedition, they ſtayed in the great Hall, vntill it was paſt noone.

In the end the king came foorth with a naked ſword in his hand, ſetting him downe in

A in his chaire, and then preſently the hall was full of his armed guards, ſo as the Noblemen were amazed at this vnaccuſtomed ceremonie. The king addreſſing his ſpeech to the Arch-biſhop of Toledo, asked him, how many kings of Caſtile he had ſeene: he anſwered, that he had ſeene foure; which were the king D. Pedro, D. Henry his grandfather, D. Iohn his father, and himſelfe. The like demand the king made vnto the reſt, and euery one anſwered as he had ſeene, according to their ages, ſome three, ſome foure, and ſome fiue.
How can it then be, ſayd the king, that I who am younger then any of you, can brag to " haue ſeene aboue twenty: The Noblemen replyed, that they knew not what hee meant " thereby; for naturally with his corporall eyes he could not haue ſeene ſo many kings. Yes " truly, ſayd the king, I haue ſeene them, and all you here preſent are thoſe kings, who diſ- " B poſe of my Realme, and mannage my rents and reuenues at your pleaſures. I am king but " in name, and as a ſhade, but you are the bodie and the effect, waſting my goods to my " diſhonor, and the contempt of my authoritie. I haue ſeene, I haue ſeene the pompe and " aboundance you liue in at my charge, and haue vnderſtood how you intreat my ſubiects, " and abuſe the power which I giue you in your eſtates and gouernments: but you ſhal not " liue vnpuniſhed, I haue conuicted you all by your owne confeſſions and brags, and iudge " you all to die, like bad and trecherous vaſſals. This ſpeech beeing ended, the Miniſters of " iuſtice appeared, & among them the executioner of the court, carying an axe and cords, the which did much amaze all the Noblemen, thinking verily, that they ſhould loſe their heads: ſeeing themſelues compaſſed in his guards, and conſidering that they had to do C with a young king, who for want of iudgement might giue way to his choller, and reuenge his wrong without regard to the conſequence. Beeing thus amazed, looking one vppon another, and not knowing what to anſwer, the Archbiſhop of Toledo tooke courage to ſpeake vnto the king, who kneeling downe, told him, that ſo ſeuere a ſentence was happily more iuſt then honourable for a young Prince, or profitable for the realme of Caſtile, which for euer would feele the loſſe of ſo many great and worthie men, both for councel and armes, as he meant to put to death, for that they had committed ſome faults which are common to all that liue with kings, and are bred vp in great charges of realmes.
Moreouer, it was not reaſonable to take that for a confeſſion to conuict one, which is ſpoken at banquets, and in wine, where men do vſually talke, and bragge, and oftentimes D without truth, yet he ſpake not theſe things to iuſtifie himſelfe, or any of his companions nor to contend againſt his clemencie, as beeing free from offence, the which they would rather implore and trie, demanding with all humilitie, the liues of all theſe offenders, and his pardon, adding many other reaſons, the which were allowed by the king, for he deſired an occaſion to pardon them, yet he would haue them yeeld vp all the forts which they had in guard, and he condemned them in pecuniarie fynes, ſo as he drew from them aboue an hundred and fifty millions of marauidis, for the exactions and concuſſions done vppon his people, and the kings money: keeping them two moneths in the caſtle of Burgos, vntill the full payment and execution of theſe things.

Executions at Seuile.

E If he were moderate in this act of iuſtice, hee vſed greater rigour at Seuile, where all was full of partialities, proceeding from the diuiſions and quarrels which his tutor had bred, which the Magiſtrates and kings officers could not ſuppreſſe. Being declared of full age, he went thither and cauſed the Earle of Niebla, Peter Ponce of Leon, and other heads and chief authors of theſe ſeditions to be put in priſon; and hauing examined euery mans actions, he baniſhed ſome, others he condemned in great fynes, and loſſe of their offices, and cauſed many to be hanged, or loſe their heads: ſo as there were aboue a thouſand per-ſons intangled in theſe puniſhments and executions of iuſtice: one of the chiefe miniſters whereof, was Doctor Iohn Alphonſo of Toro, to whom the gouernement of Seuile was giuen for matters of iuſtice: and the more to countenance him, the king ſtayed there ma-F ny daies.

This king gaue many other teſtimonies of his loue to iuſtice: he gaue audience to all ſutors indifferently, three dayes in the weeke, he heard all the complaints of his ſubiects, and prouided for them: he could diſcerne of men of iudgement, which were fit for coun-cell, and the gouernment of the commonwealth. The moſt eſteemed, and of greateſt au-thoritie about him, were Don Pedro Tenorio, Arch-biſhop of Toledo, Friar Iohn Henri- ques, and Friar Fernando of Illeſca, with the Cardinall D. Pedro of Frias Biſhop of Oſma, and theſe for the Clergie: of Knights he made great eſteeme of Don Laurence Suarez of Figueroa, Maſter of Saint Iames, Gonçales Nugnes of Guzman, Maſter of Calatraua, Diego Hurtado of Mendoça, high Admirall of Caſtile, Ruy Lopes of Aualos, his Lord Chamberlaine, and afterwards Conſtable, Diego Lopes of Eſtuniga chiefe Iuſtice, Peter Lopes of Ayala, a knight of great learning, who came to be Lord Chancelour, John Velaſco a Chamberlaine, and other knights of his Councell, which conſiſted of ſixteen graue perſonages. Among others, that were very deare vnto him, there was a Doctor, a Iew by ſect, borne at Burgos, who afterwards imbraced the Chriſtian Religion, called Don Pablo, who for his learning and good life, was in time choſen Biſhop of Carthagena, and in the end obtained the Biſhopricke of Burgos. He had many times oppugned the Chriſtian Religion, as a Iew Rabin, and Maſter in the Iewiſh Law, but hauing receiued in gift of a Chriſtian Doctor, the booke of Saint Thomas Aquinas intituled de Legibus, he read it diligently, and was ſo mooued with the reaſons thereof, as he left his Iewiſh religion, the which is not ſtrange, ſay the Diuines of Spaine: for he that knowes not Saint Thomas knoweth not any thing, and he that knoweth him, knowes all things. This Prelate who was a great Preacher, a great Philoſopher, wiſe and iudicious in matters of State, and of the kings Councell, wrate many bookes, whereof ſome are yet extant. Beeing a Iew, he was married, and had three ſonnes all learned men, whereof the one was Deane of Segobia, and ſucceeded his father in the Biſhoppricke of Burgos, he was called Don Alphonſo of Carthagena, from whome we haue the genealogie of the kings of Caſtile, written in Latine. Don Gonçalo another ſonne of D. Pables was Biſhop of Palença, a Prelat of great learning: and the third was Aluar Garcia of S. Maria, a learned man alſo, D. Pablo their father beeing of the King Don Henries Councell, notwithſtanding that he had bin a Iew, did aduiſe him and his ſucceſſors, not to receiue into their ſeruice, either of his houſholds Councell, or to any Offices of the Realm, any Iew, although he were conuerted, and that for ſome ſpeciall cauſes.

The King Don Henry being endowed with theſe good qualities beyond the Ordinary of young Princes, had alſo ſome blemiſhes, like other mortall men: for hee was noted to be ſparing, and deſirous to heape vp treaſure, and yet they ſay, that it was without the oppreſſion of his ſubiects, the which is hard in a Prince: yet hee gaue many prouiſions and penſions to them that were neere to him in bloud, or allyed to him by affinitie: as to the Queene D. Beatrix, his mother-in law, whome he maintained in the eſtate of a Queene, and to Don Fernand his brother, who ſhewed himſelfe alwaies obedient to his will. His countries beeing in peace, he gaue himſelfe to repaire and fortifie the fronter places, and did build a new the caſtle of Carthagena. As for religious buildings, the church, and conuent of the Carthuſians at Burgos, called Mirefleurs, are his worke: he was a great fauorer of the Franciſcans, to whome Queene Katherine his wife, had a particular deuotion, who was a Ladie of great pietie, according to the inſtruction of that time, bountifull, maieſticall, wiſe, and diſcreet in her words, yet ſuperfluous in her manner of liuing, and louing wine, whereby in her latter dayes ſhe fell into a palſey.

The Kings infirmitie which began at the age of ſeuenteene yeares, did in time ſo vndermine him, being incurable, as he became drie and leane, ſo as the proportion of his body was changed, and he ſeemed another man, then formerly he had beene: moreouer, he was ſo ſad and melancholicke, as moſt commonly he was alone, and would not admit of any company. Yet he was alwaies carefull of the gouernement of the Realme. He alwaies entertayned Ambaſſadours in Princes Courts, as well Chriſtians as Mahumetiſts, by whom he was aduertiſed what was done in forraine countries, their manners, and manner of gouernements: a thing moſt profitable for him that ſends them, but not for them that receiue them: for by Ambaſſadors which are reſident, the Councels and actions of Princes are diſcouered, to the great preiudice of their eſtates. Two of his Ambaſſadors ſent into the Eaſt, the which were Pelayo of Soto maior, and Fernando Pelaſuel, fell into the hands of Tamberlaine, Emperor of the Tartarians, after the defeate of Baiazet; who intreated them graciouſly, and ſent them backe into Spaine with an Ambaſſador of his, to demand friendſhip of king Henry.

During

A During his raigne, in the yeare. 1397, the order of the Knights of the Calatraua, inſteed of a blacke hood which they had worne vntill that time, tooke for their marke a red ſquare croſſe, which they carry at this day, the which was done by the Bull of Pope Benedict of Auignon, at the inſtance of Don Gonçal Nugnes of Guzman, maiſter of the Calatraua. 5 Red croſſe the marke of the Order of Calatraua.

The realme of Caſtille being at peace with all men it was ingaged in new troubles by Don Iohn King of Portugall, for that the Articles of the truce, concluded betwixt their Ambaſſadors for fifteene yeares, had not beene ſigned and ſworne by certain Noble men of Caſtille, as had beene agreed: with other light occaſions, which drew him to field, be- 6 Portugal.
B ing yet proud of his former victories, and contemning the youth and infirmity of King Henry his aduerſary, wherefore he ſodenly brought his army before Badajos, which towne hee tooke, and the Marſhall Don Garci Guttiere of Herrera in it: whereat the King Don Henry was much incenſed, and ſpeedily prouided for all things neceſſary, to ſuppreſſe the boldneſſe of this Portugall King, both by ſea and land. One of the moſt remarkable exployts of this warre, which continued three yeares, was the incounter of fiue Caſtillan gallies with ſeauen of Portugall, comming from Genoa, laden with armes and ſouldiers: the fight hauing continued very ſharpe ſome houres, in the end foure of the gallies of Portugall were taken, one broken and the reſt put to flight. In this incounter the Portu- Victory of the Caſtillans at ſea.
C galls loſt aboue fiue hundred men, beſides the armes and equipage of their gallies, the which were drawne to St. Lucar. Many noble men of Portugall at that time left King Iohn, and retired into Caſtile, where they were entertained, and had lands and houſes giuen them by the King D. Henry. Among others Martin Vaſques of Acugna, and his brethren Giles Vaſques and Lopes Vaſques came alſo with an hundred lances, Iohn Fernandes and Lopes Fernandes Pachecos bretheren, Aluar Gonçales Camelo Prior of S. Iohn, with many others. The king of Portugal entring by Gallicia, he tooke from king Henry the town of Tuy, and towards extremadura he layd ſeege before Alcantara, to whoſe ſuccour was ſent D. Ruy Lopes of Aualos, then made Conſtable of Caſtile, in the place of the Earle of Tranſtamara, who raiſed the ſeege, and entring into Portugal, ſpoiled and burnt the countrie, and tooke Pegna major, a place of ſtrength, by force. On the other ſide, the D towne of Miranda of Duego was beſeeged by King Henries captaines, who preſt it in ſuch ſort as it yeelded. After ſome courſes and prizes made at ſea by the Admirall of Caſtile, the truce was renued betwixt the two kings, and was ſo entertayned, as it was the laſt war which the Portugals had with Caſtile vntill our daies, ſo as theſe two Princes gouerned their Eſtates in peace and quietneſſe the remainder of their liues.

In Arragon whileſt they contended for the right of the ſucceſſion againſt Mathew of Caſtelbon Earle of Foix, and his wife D. Ioane eldeſt daughter to the deceaſed king D. Iohn as we haue ſayd: D. Maria wife to the D. of Momblanc, being abſent in Sicily, took vpon her the title of Queene, by the aduice of the councell of Cattelogne, in the city of Barcelona, where there aſſiſted D. Inigo Valterra, Archb. of Tarragona, Bernard of Pinos, Hugh 7 Arragon.
E Angleſole, Roger of Moncade Viceroy of Sardinia, Michel Gurrea, Francis of Aranda, who was held the wiſeſt of his time, Bernard Michel, William Pujade, Gerard Paliol, and Bernard Zatrille. Theſe were of opinion that the Regencie of the realme ſhould bee put into the hands of D. Maria, vntill her husbands coming, to whom they had ſent D. Hugh of Bage, Biſhop of Tortoſa, Ihon Foulq ſon to the Earle of Cardona, Emanuel Ragiadel, Raymond Zaual, a Cittizen of Barcelonet, and Peter Grimald of Perpignan, Ambaſſadors, to giue him notice of his election, and to haſten his returne. The widow Queene Violant, was in the meane time accompanied by foure of the chiefe Ladies by order from the Councell, the which did neuer abandon her, and ſhould haue a care of her deliuery, for that ſhe ſaid ſhe was with child. And for that many men of ſtate, and others hauing had charges & of- Francis of Aranda a wiſe man.

to queſtion during this Interegne, and ſome of them were committed at Barcelona. The Will of the deceaſed King, beeing opened in the Aſſembly of Cattelogne, they found that the ſame Duke of Momblanc, to whom the peoples fauour inclined, was there named heyre and ſucceſſor to the Crowne, in caſe the King Don Iohn dyed without iſſue male, the which was ſignified to the Counteſſe of Foix.

At the Eſtates aſſembled at Sarragoſſa, to giue order that the realme ſhould recciue no loſſe in the abſence of the king D. Martin, theſe chiefe men were preſent:

D. Garci Fernandes of Heredia, Arch-biſhop of Sarragoſſa.
D. Iohn Martines Murillo, Abbot of Montarragon.
D. Pedro Fernandes of Ixar.
D. William, and Raymond Allamans Ceruillon.
D. Pedro Ruis Morio, for the great Prior of Ampoſta.
The Prior of Rota.
The Abbot of S. Fides.
D. Pedro of Ladron, Vicount of Villanoua.
D. Lopes Ximenes of Vrrea.
D. Fernand Lopes of Luna.
D. Iohn Martines of Luna.
D. Alphonſo Fernandes of Ixar.
D. Pedro Fernrndes Vergua.
D. Francis of Allagon.
D. Pedro Ximenes of Vrrea, ſon to D. Lope.

The Atturneys of D. Lewis Cornel, of D. Artal of Allagon, of D. Iohn Ximenes of Vrrea Atraſillo, of D. Pedro Galcerand of Caſtro, and of D. Anthony of Luna. Moreouer, Iohn Ximenes de la Cerde, Iuſtice Maior of Arragon, with many other Noblemen, knights and Deputies of towns and commonalties, who without regard to the demands and proteſtations of Mathew Earle of Foix, and D. Ieanne his wife, confirmed the Duke of Monblanc teſtamentarie heire of the Realme, diſanulling the conuentions made by the deceaſed king D. Pedro, grandfather to D. Ieanne, at the treatie of her marriage with the Earle of Foix, by the which it was ſayd, that if Don Iohn her father dyed without iſſue male, ſhe ſhould inherit the Realme: whereupon Mathew Earle of Foix ſought to obtaine his right by armes, ſeeing that iuſtice was denyed him. And hauing employed the ayde of the Earle of Armaignac, of Iohn Duke of Berry, the French kings vncle, and of other Noblemen of France, he paſſed with a thouſand men at armes, and three thouſand light horſemen, from the Vicountie of Caſtelbon, beyond the Pyrenees, and by the valley of Ferriere at Villemur, he tooke Camaraça, and marched as farre as Lerida, where hee ſpoyled the country: againſt whome the Eſtates did choſe Don Pedro of Vrgell for Generall. And for that it was ſuſpected that D. Iohn Earle of Ampurias, had fauoured theſe French troupes at the paſſage of the mountaines, he was committed to priſon, but ſoone after deliuered, hauing made proofe of his innocencie. Although the Earle of Foix did much annoy the Arragonois, yet the greateſt loſſe fell vppon himſelfe, for beeing too weake a partie to incounter the power of Arragon, he did nothing but ſpend his eſtate, ingage himſelfe, and ſtriue for nothing, his army beeing forced to riſe from before Barbaſtro, and to retire for want of victuals and other diſcommodities towards Hueſca, and then to paſſe by Caparoſſo belonging vnto Nauarre, into Bearne, on this ſide the mountaines, after which hee neuer made any memorable attempt. The king D. Martin, notwithſtanding all the importunitie of the Arragonois, was not reſolued to leaue Sicile, vntill he had ſeene his ſonne peacefull king of the Iland, the which he effected after a long and tedious warre, by the ruine of the noble families of Clairmont and Alagon, and of other rebels, whereof Andrew of Clairmont Duke of Modica was beheaded at Palermo, after which Artal of Alagon was expelled Sicile, with all his family, by vertue of whoſe Predeceſſors, that Realme had beene in a manner conquered for the houſe of Arragon.

D. Martin the firſt of that name, and 15. King of Arragon.

MAtters beeing thus brought to paſſe, D. Martin elect King of Arragon, leauing with the King his ſonne, called alſo D. Martin, and his wife Marie, William of Moncado, Marquis of Malta, chiefe Iuſtice and Conſtable of the Realme, Peter Serra Biſhop of Cattanea, Francis Zagarriga, Hugh Santapaz, and other Cattelans and Arragonois, for
B Councellers, he ſayled towards the Iſland of Sardinia, where he was viſited by the Noblemen holding his partie, as well of that Iſland as of Corſica, whereas the Earle of Cinerche and others of the familie of Iſtria, and of that of Rocca, held many townes and caſtles at his deuotion. From thence the King paſt into Prouence, where he did viſit Pope Benedict in Auignon, receiuing a roſe from him on Palme ſunday, hauing done him homage for the Iſlands of Sardinia and Corſica: then continuing his voyage, hee arriued in Cattelogne in the beginning of Maie, in the yeare 1397. At his entrie into the countrie, hee found a ſtately ambaſſage, where were the chiefe Noblemen of Arragon, and deputies of the citie of Sarragoſſa, who intreated him, that without any ſtay he ſhould goe vnto the Eſtates aſſembled at Sarragoſſa, and that he would not deale in any affaires of the realme,
C vntill (according to the auncient cuſtome) hee had taken and receiued their othes, the which ſeemed ſomething ſtrange vnto the King: yet he anſwered theſe ambaſſadors gratiouſly, that beeing tired with ſo long a voyage, he had need of reſt: wherefore after ſome little ſtaie at Barcelona, hee would come preſently to Sarragoſſa: notwithſtanding after his entrie into Barcelona, which was very ſtately, ſitting in his tribunall, hee pronounced a ſentence againſt Mathew Earle of Foix, and D. Ioanne his wife, beeing his neece, by the which he declared them rebels, and guilty of high treaſon, and fallen from all their rights: he did confiſcate the Vicontie of Caſtlebon, and other lands held by them in the realme of Arragon and Cattelogne, adiudging them vnto the crowne. Moreouer, hee ſent from thence ſhippes and ſouldiers into Sardynia and Sicile, ſending backe D. Roger of Moncado into his gouernment of Sardinia, and D. Pedro of Bage into Sicile. After which, hee
D went to Sarragoſſa to the Eſtates about the end of October. The King preſiding in this aſſembly, did much commend the vertue, fidelitie, and valour of the Arragonois, ſeeking by good words to make them tractable and well-affected to him and his children: for after the oath taken by him for the obſeruation of the rights and priuiledges of Arragon and other Prouinces, and reciprocally by them, he intreated the Eſtates to acknowledge his ſonne D. Martin King of Sicile, beeing abſent, for lawfull heire of that crowne after him, the which was willingly done, the King of Siciles ambaſſadors hauing promiſed an vnion of the two realmes for euer, and to cauſe the King their maſter to ratifie it, and to take the oathes accuſtomed in ſuch acts. There was giuen vnto the King at theſe Eſtates
E 130000 florins of gold to pay his debts, and 30000 for his expences. During the aſſembly, there was ſome tumult of warre in the Mountains, there being entred by the pace of Sarazal ſome of the Earle of Foix troupes, who tooke and ſackt Thermes: but without any other exploite they returned. In the meane time Mathew of Caſtelbon Earle of Foix dyed without any children, being in the yeare 1398. wherby D. Martin remayned peaceable King of Arragon, who ſetled himſelfe, and diſpoſed of his affaires according to his deſire.

Sentence againſt the earle of Foix.

Death of the Earle of Foix.

First of all knowing that the wiſedome of a Prince conſiſts chiefly in knowing wel how to chuſe men of valour, whoſe ſeruice he muſt vſe in the gouernment of his Eſtate, he la-
F boured to draw vnto him, by his bountie and fauour, the hearts and affections of thoſe which he knew to be ſuch: namely, he gratified D. Alphonſo of Arragon much, and honored him with the Dutchie of Gandia; he made D. Iames of Prade Conſtable of Arragon, and to many other Noblemen and knights, hee gaue gifts and priuiledges: hee reſtored Archambaud of Graille, who had beene heire in the right of ſucceſſion to the Earledome of Foix by reaſon of his wife, ſiſter to the deceaſed Matthew of Caſtelbon, to the lands which he had forfeited: yet he made but a bare recompence to his Neece the Counteſſe of Foix, who retired her ſelfe ro Valencia, with 3000. florens of yearely penſion, for her whole entertaynment, where ſhe ended her dayes. He maried his other neece D. Violant to Lewis Duke of Aniou, choſen king of Naples, to whom hee gaue 160000. florens in dowrie, ſo as ſhe ſhould renounce all rights and pretenſions which ſhee might haue to the Crowne of Arragon, and other lands of the deceaſed king D. Iohn her father, adding afterwards to this bond, an allyance which he made with Nauarre, to be the better aſſured of the French. And not to forget the workes of pietie, couered with the vale of religion, ſeing Pope Benedict greatly moleſted in Auignon, although it were by the practiſes of the French king, he ſent an armie by ſea, to aſſiſt him, and if need were to carrie him away, the euent whereof was miſerable: for being come vnto the mouth of the riuer of Rhoſne about December, in the heart of a very ſharpe winter, the gallies not being able to go vp the riuer, by reaſon the water was low, moſt of the ſlaues, mariners and ſouldiers dyed for cold.

Statues ſent by the Pope into Arragon.

The fauour which the king of Arragon did ſhew vnto the Pope, did ſo far auayle him, as it made the French king forbeare for a time to oppoſe himſelfe: to acknowledge the which, and in his loue to his country, he ſent into Arragon foure ſtatues of ſiluer and gilt and enriched with ſtones, the which were kept in the citty of Sarragoſſa, and therin were incloſed the relikes of Valerius, Laurence, Vincent and Encratia, reputed by the Sarragoſſans for Saints, patrons and protectors.

Thus the king D. Martin ſought in the firſt yeares of his raigne, to content the world by his humane wiſedome, and to purchaſe the fame of a politicke and religious Prince: notwithſtanding as humane wiſedome failes moſt commonly, he could not keepe ſuch a meane, but in gratifying ſome, he diſcontented others, yea the Arragonois themſelues: for the Realme being often in combuſtion, by reaſon of the old quarrels betwixt the houſes of Luna, Vrrea, and Gurrea, and eſpecially dnring the interregne many of theſe factions preſumed to go to field, and did rob and ſpoile euen to the towne gates: whereuppon the king raiſed ſome troupes to ſuppreſſe theſe theeues, giuing the charge thereof to Don Alphonſo, ſonne to D. Alphonſo of Arragon Duke of Gandia, making him as it were Gouernor of the realme, and his Lieutenant generall: a great dignity, which was preſently impugned by the Noblemen of Arragon, mooued through enuy, alledging, that that charge ought not to be giuen according to their ancient cuſtomes, but to one that was borne in Arragon: wherefore they appealed before the Iuſtice maior, beeing an attempt againſt their liberties and freedomes: ſo thinking to preuent a miſchiefe, hee augmented it, for the Realme was preſently full of armes, which hee was forced to remedy with great difficulties and ſeuere meanes, it may be vnworthie of his royall Maieſtie.

Troubles in Arragon.

Caſtille.

The Schiſme which was in the church of Rome, did ſomewhat trouble Spaine: yet by the wiſe councell of Princes, all paſt without any great alteration. The French king did greatly ſollicite him of Caſtile to ioyne with him, to force Pope Benedict of Auignon to ſubmit himſelfe to a compromiſe treated by the Princes, and according to the proteſtation of the Cardinalls which had choſen him, to leaue his dignitie, vntill it had beene determined who ſhould be Pope, and head in the church of Rome. For the which the king D. Henry hauing called a great aſſembly at Salamanca of Prelats and Doctors, both Diuines and Canoniſts, in the end he yeelded after many difficulties: whereof D. Martin K. of Arragon being aduertiſed, he was wonderfully mooued: for he did much ſupport Pope Benedict, a Cattelan by nation, and therefore ſent to Salamanca before the kings departure; his ambaſſadours were Vidal of Blagues, and Raymond of France, to complaine of this vnion which the king of Caſtile had made with him of France, without communicating any thing vnto him: to whom an anſwer was made in friendly tearmes, which did ſatisfie them.

In the aſſembly of Salamanca it was aduiſed, that the two Popes ſhould reuoke all the proceedings made one againſt another, and ſhould haue an enterview in ſome place of aſſurance, where they ſhould deuiſe betwixt themſelues how to free the church of this Schiſme, the which they ſhould declare within a certaine time: and during the delay they ſhould giue a certaine paſtor vnto the church, but if they could not, or would not agree,

that

A that then they ſhould both giue ouer their pretended dignities: but this aduice was of no force, for D.Pedro de Luna, or Pope Benedict, would by no meanes leaue it, ſaying, that he would hold his Popedome, whereupon he was much afflicted by the French, yet by the meanes of the king Don Henry, he had ſome reſt for a time, and the French king ſeemed neither to acknowledge, nor obey him, the which continued not long.

Beginning of the white cote

At that time there ſprung vp a Sect of white coates: their author was a Prieſt of the mountaines of Sauoy. They were men moued with deuotion, who began to runne ouer Italy, as it were in proceſſion, attired in white ſhirts, and wearing their haire long ouer their faces, demanding pardon of God, and mercie for their ſinnes, with great and lamen-
B table cries: and moreouer in going they ſung Hymnes, as that which begins, Stabat mater doloroſa, and other ſuch ſuffrages. Their troupe in the beginning beeing but ſmall, they grew to ſo great a number, there ioyning with them at all the townes where they paſt, men, women, children, Clergi-men, ſecular men, Gentlemen, peſants, poore and rich, ſo as they were forced to diuide themſelues into bands, which ſomtimes were not leſſe then ten, twelue, or fifteen thouſand perſons: which made many Princes and Potentates of Italy to ſuſpect, that vnder a ſhew of religion they had ſome hidden enterprize to the preiudice of their Eſtates. The towne of Luca gaue them moſt credit. They ranne vntill that land fayled them, which was to the fartheſt point of Calabria, and then returned backe. Their captaine with a great multitude of his ſectaries being come to Viterbo, Pope Boni-
C face found meanes to draw him to Rome, where being examined of his intention, they found nothing in him but meere ignorance and ſuperſtition, whereby all the townes and families in Italy had beene troubled: many men leauing their houſes, wiues, children, parents, with all publike and priuate affaires, to follow this poore ideot, who for all the pain he had taken, was by the Popes ſentence condemned to the fire, who being burnt, euery one retired to his home, and his followers were diſperſed into diuers parts.

An. 1399.

Death of the Arch-biſhop of Toledo.

About the yeare 1399. died D.Pedro of Tenorio, Archb. of Toledo, beeing ſorrie hee could not attaine vnto the yeare 1400. to the end he might depart this world in the yeare of Iubile. The Spaniards ſpeake much good of this Prelate: that he had beene employed during the raigne of three kings, in the waightieſt affaires of Spain, with opinion to haue
D beene a wiſe and diſcreet Councellor, a learned man, and a louer of learned men: but he was wilfull, and that which he himſelfe bragged of, not very liberall (for the great reuenues which he enioyed) eſpecially to his kindred, who neuer receiued any aduancement from him, nor by his fauour, from the king of Caſtile. His houſe was ancient, iſſued from Galicia, but growne greater in Portugall: he himſelfe was borne at Tauira, the ſonne of a ſimple Gentleman, and but poore. He left many remembrances of him in his buildings in diuers parts of Spaine, as S.Martins bridge in the citie of Toledo, and the caſtle of S. Seruant towards the port called Alcantara, the Monaſterie of S.Catherine of the Order of S. Ierome, and the Collegiall church of Chanoins in the towne of Talauera, the chappell where his bodie lyes in the great church at Toledo, and the cloyſter thereof, a ſtately and E royall worke. Beſides theſe buildings, he repaired the caſtles of Canales, Alhamin and Almonacid. He cauſed a ſtrong caſtle to be built neere vnto Alcala the royall, to ſerue for a refuge for Chriſtian ſlaues, which eſcaped the Moores that were nere vnto the fronter, and ordayned a certaine rent for the entertainment of a wonderfull great lampe, the which ſhould be a direction in the night for poore fugitiues, giuing light three great leagues round about. The towne of Villafranca, the church and the bridge vppon Tayo, betwixt Talauera and Guadalupe, were his worke, it beeing called at this day, the Archbiſhops bridge. By the death of this Prelate, the ſea of Toledo was void foure yeares, the Schiſme in the Romiſh church being the cauſe thereof. In the meane time D.Iohn Biſhop of Siguença had the gouernement of the Church, who gaue credit to the image of Saint F Marie of Nieua, and beganne to build the Church thereof, the which was afterwards augmented by the Queene Donna Catherina. This image was found by one Peter, who for that cauſe was ſurnamed, Of good aduenture, who hauing found it, aduertiſed the biſhop. It is much reuerenced by the Spaniards, who hold, that ſhee doth wonderfull and great miracles.

Sea of Toledo void for foure yeares.

An. 1400.

The yeare 1400. at what time the Iubile was, the Spaniards going about to ſet vp a great great Bell in the Church at Seuile, all the people being aſſembled, and the King D. Henry A being in the tower, a ſudden tempeſt with lightning ſlue many, ſcattered the reſt and amazed the whole citty.

1401. In the yeare 1401. there was ſome likelihood of an agreement betwixt the Kings of France and Caſtile, and Pope Benedict, attending the determination of a generall Councel. The Chriſtian Princes which did acknowledge him beſides theſe, were the kings of Arragon, Nauarre, Scotland, Cypres, and the Duke of Sauoy. The reſt of the Potentats did adhere vnto Pope Boniface reſiding at Rome: but Benedict was not long in quiet: for the Cardinals and Clergie which were about him (whereof the chiefe was Iohn of Noua-caſtello, Cardinall of Oſtia, borne in Burgondy) rebelled againſt him, being fauoured and ſollicited by the French, yea there were ſent to Auignon by the duke of Orleance brother B to king Charles, Robin of Bracamont, and William of Mollon, who ſet guards about the Guards ſet about the Popes pallace. Popes pallace, and kept him as it were priſoner, for that hee would not voluntarily relinquiſh his Popedome. But the king of Arragon mediating for him, he ſent Don Iames Prades his Conſtable, who procured him his libertie, and that hee ſhould be obeyed in the Countie of Venice. In this tumult there were onely thtee Cardinals which ſhut themſelues vp with the Pope, which were Pampelona, Girone, and Saint Adrian: many men of accompt endured much, eſpecially Nauarrois, and aboue all Don Martin of Salua, Cardinall of Pampelona, Don Bertrand of Gramont, Pronotarie and Maſter of the ſacred pallace, and others. This Pope aduanced to the Archbiſhoprick of Toledo a nephew of C his, ſonne to his brother D. Iohn Martin of Luna, beeing Doctor of the Canon law, and adminiſtrator of the church of Tarragone, he was alſo called D. Pedro de Luna, but he was not ſo ſoone conſecrated.

The affaires of Caſtile being reaſonable quiet, the Infant Don Fernand, the Kings brother and Duke of Pegnafiel, was perſwaded by ſome Noblemen, to take vppon him the gouernement of the Realme, pretending that the king D. Henries infirmitie and continuall paine, was the cauſe he could not intend it: ſo as many things ſucceeded not well: but this was but a cloake to couer the enuie which they bare to D. Ruy Lopes of Aualos, Conſtable of Caſtile, on whom the king relyed, giuing him great authority in all things thoroughout the Realme. This Conſtable was borne at Vbeda, of meane parentage, but ho-
Family of Auala iſſued out of Nauarre. neſt, whoſe aunceſtors came out of Nauarre: he was a man of great courage, and ſingular iudgement in matters of warre, or in any other charge that was committed vnto him. It therefore grieued theſe Noblemen of great houſes to be commanded by him, ſeeking to thruſt forward the Infant D. Fernand, to diſturbe the State. But D. Fernand was no fit inſtrument for their deſſeins: for if there were euer an obedient brother, and patient in all things, it was he: beſides, being of a ſlow ſpirit, affaires of great conſequence did ouercharge him, neither did he willingly vndertake them. Finally, he was a louer of peace, and enemie to warre and tumults.

For theſe cauſes he reiected them that would haue him gouerne, ſhewing them the inconueniences and ſcandals which would grow by ſuch enterpriſes: exhorting them that E
if his brother did not ſeeme vnto them very profitable, by reaſon of his infirmities, they ſhould attend the remedie from the prouidence of God with patience. This Prince Don Fernand was, as we haue ſayd, married to D. Leonora Counteſſe of Albuquerque, who was heire to many Eſtates in Spaine. For beſides the Earledome of Albuquerque, and the fiue townes of Infantazgo, the townes of Haro, Brion, Cerezo, Vilhorado, Ledeſma, Codeſera, Azagala, Alconchel, Medellin, and Alconeta, were of her patrimony: beſides the which king Iohn had giuen her Villalon, and Vruegna in exchange of other places. She was firſt called Vrraca, but ſhe changed it: ſhe was a vertuous Ladie and noble in all her actions, hauing many children by her husband, as we will ſhew, treating of the affaires of Arragon. In the yeare 1403. the riuer of Guadalquibir did ſo ſwell, as it came ouer the wals of Seuile, and couered the houſes in the lower parts, with great loſſe of men F and goods, To preuent which accident, the diligence of Alphonſo of Toro, Gouernour for the iuſtice of that city, is much commended.

1405. The yeare 1405. was happie and ioyful to the Caſtillans, by reaſon of the birth of the Genealogie of Caſtile. Infant Don Iohn heire of thoſe Realmes, in the towne of Toro, Queene Katherine hauing

A hauing had before D. Maria at Segobia, in the yeare 1401. who was Queene of Arragon. Awhile after ſhe brought the king another daughter, called Katherine by the mothers name, and was future wife to D. Henry Maſter of Saint Iames, third ſonne to the Infant D. Fernand. Pope Boniface the ninth being dead a little before, ſeuen Cardinals did chuſe the Archb. of Rauenna called Coſmat, borne at Sulmona in the realme of Naples, being Cardinal of S. Cruz, whom they named Innocent the 7. So as the ſchiſme continued ſtil in the Romiſh Church. His competitor Benedict paſſed the alpes, and came to Genoua, to conferre with ſome Potentates of Italy of the meanes how to ceaſe the ſchiſme. Beeing there he did conſecrate his nephew D. Pedro de Luna Archb. of Toledo, and Primate of Spaine: and moreouer, made another Archb, 9. Biſhops, and 8. Abbots. Hee had in his

Innocent the 7. choſen Pope in the place of Boniface the 9

B traine that famous Preacher Vincent of the houſe of Ferreres of Valencia, who then preached in the citty of Genoua, and ſince in many other places, and eſpecially in Spaine, with a great opinion of holines. By the death of D. Diego Hurtado of Mendoça, high Admirall of Caſtile, which happened the ſame yeare, there was aduanced to the place D. Alphonſo Henriques, younger brother to the Earle of Tranſtamara, and to his lands and goods which were as great as any Noblemans in Caſtile, ſucceeded his ſonne D. Inigo Lopes of Mendoça, a famous perſonage.

D. Iohn of Caſtile one of the baſe ſons of the king D. Pedro had ſecretly married himſelfe in priſon, to the daughter of Bertrand Ertllo his keeper, of whom he begat Peter and Conſtance. Conſtance was a Nunne in the Monaſterie of S. Dominicke the royall of Ma-

C drid. Peter being condemned to perpetuall priſon eſcaped, and as the king D. Henry cauſed ſearch to be made for him, Queene Catherine being newly brought in bed, begged his pardon: at the ſame time when as ſhe intreated the king her husband, hee was hidden in her chamber, and hearing that the king had pardoned him, he came foorth preſently in a Prieſts habit, and obtained the Archdeaconſhip of Alaua: beeing an Archdeacon he had two concubines, one an Engliſh woman called Izabel, and the other a Spaniard, whoſe name was Mary Bernard, by theſe he had eight children, ſons and daughters: from one of which named Alphonſo is deſcended the family called of Caſtile, reduced at this day to litle

About the end of this yeare the Moores of Granado began to ſtirre, hauing no cauſe but onely the king D. Henries diſability to war, by reaſon of his indiſpoſition. They took 12

D the towne of Ayamonte, belonging to Don Aluar Peres of Guzman; whereat the Moores. king D. Henry being diſpleaſed, he ſent to king Mahumet Aben-Balua, to haue the place reſtored in the eſtate it was, otherwiſe he would prouide by armes: the which the Moore promiſed, giuing ſome excuſes, but he did not performe it, but after ſome dayes entred again by Queſada with a great army, and did ouer runne the country about Baeça: for ſuppreſſing of whom, the king D. Henry ſent troupes of men at armes towards the fronter vnder the leading of D. Pedro Manrique the Generall, with whom there ioyned many noblemen and knights: and although the Chriſtians forces were inferior to the Moores, yet Battel betwixt the Chriſtians and Moores.

E they offered them battell, in the which there was great ſlaughter of both parts, but no certaine victory, in regard of the loſſe, but the Moores kept the field and the reputation. Of Chriſtians of accompt there dyed Alphonſo of Aualos, the Conſtables nephew, Martin of Rojas, Garci Aluares Oſorio, and Iohn of Herrera, knights of valour.

The king D. Henry ſeeing that he muſt enter into warre, he aſſembled his Eſtates at To- Caſtille.

ledo, to conſult of the meanes to purſue it, and then he went to Madrid, where he receiued newes of the battell. The Prelates, Noblemen, and Deputies of townes being aſſembled, and hauing conſulted freely what was to bee done (for the king had reſolued to enter in perſon into Granado, requiring their aduiſe and conſent) he was forced, his infirmity increaſing, to giue the charge thereof to his brother D. Fernand, and to make him his Lieutenant generall in this expedition, who ſpake vnto the Eſtates in the kings name, letting

F them vnderſtand, that his reſolution was to make warre with all violence, and with his greateſt power againſt the king of Granado, for ſome reaſons he gaue them: and therefore he made accompt to put to field ten thouſand men at armes, foure thouſand genets or light-horſe, and fiftie thouſand foot-men, beſides the forces that were in Andaluſia: to entertayne which troupes with all neceſſarie prouiſion for ſixe moneths, hee had need of a hundred millions of Marauidis then currant, paying to euery horſeman twenty Mara- A uidis a day, and to euery footeman tenne. He therefore intreated the eſtates, to prouide Demand of King Henry of the Eſtates. and contribute that ſumme freely and ſpeedily, ſeeing it muſt be imployed for the defence and ſafety of all Spaine. The eſtates were amazed at ſo great a charge at that ſeaſon and beſought the Infant to ſpeake vnto the King for the moderating of the ſumme, ſeeing hee had ſo great a treaſure lying at Segobia, whereof a ſmall portion might eaſe the Eſtates.

The Prelats and Clergy men aboue all others, made great difficulty for this contribution:
the which in the ende the King, after conference with his Brother, and other his familiars, ordred in this manner.

That the Eſtates ſhould preſently furniſh fourty fiue Millions of Marauidis, B which are valued at a Million of Crownes by the Authors of thoſe times: and if the King ſhould neede any more, hee might impoſe it without calling of the Eſtates. The condition to impoſe mony vpon the ſubiects without calling the States ſeemed hard, yet they all conſented for that time, ſo as it might not be a preſident. Matters ſtanding thus, the Kings infirmity increaſed in ſuch ſort, as foreſeeing his approching death, he made his will, and inſtituted for heire of his realmes his Sonne D. Iohn, beeing but twenty two

And if his heire ſhould die, hee did then ſubſtitute his daughter Catherine, and vnder the ſame tutors, to whome alſo he left the gouernment of his realmes. C

His will was to be buried in the habit of Saint Francis, and that his Sonne

he was poyſoned by a Phiſition a Iew, the which was knowne afterwards by the confeſſi-

D. Henry the third hauing rayned ſixteene yeares and almoſt three months, dyed in the yeare 1406. in December, in the Citty of Toledo, being not much a boue twenty ſeauen yeares old: hee was interred in the Chappell of the laſt Kings in the Cathedrall Church D there. The ſame yeare dyed Pope Innocent the ſeauenth at Rome hauing rayned two yeares, in whoſe place was choſen Angelo Carairo a Venetian, Patriarke of Conſtantinople, and Cardinall of Saint Marke, by thirteen Cardinalls of his faction, and was named Gregory the twelft by whome the Schiſme was contynued.

After the returne of the Queene D. Leonora to the King of Nauarre her husband, ſhee 13 was deliuered of a Sonne in the citty of Pampelone, who was called by his Fathers name, Nauarre. but he lyued little. The peace of this realme was great vnder this King Charles, who liued very contentedly with his wife, after her returne, and made her Regent when hee paſt into France, which was in the yeare. 1397, for hee had many great affaiers to decyde with King Charles the ſixt, who detayned many places from him, which had beene ſeazed E on in his fathers time, and had often ſollicited him in vaine by his Ambaſſadors to do him reaſon: wherefore hee was forced to goe in perſon. Before his departure, hee ordayned there ſhould bee payed towards the building of the great Church of Pampelone, ruined ſome yeares before, the forteth pennie of al the reuenues of his realme, for twelue yeares, where-with it was built in the forme we now ſee it. Hereof there were letters giuen by this King at Saint Iohn of Pie de Port this yeare 1397. in May. His voiage into France did benefit him little, for beſides that the French King was not counſelled to yeeld vp the places which he held, eſpecially in Normandy; the friendſhippe which the King of Nauarre had with the Engliſh, was ſuſpect and odious vnto him, although this amity were not preiudiciall to the French, but rather a Neutrality (to the end they might F liue in peace) then a league. Seing therefore that hee was not wellcome, hee returned preſently into Nauarre, from whence ſoone after he ſent the Cardinall of Pampelone, who had retyred himſelfe into Nauarre, after that hee had endured many miſeries in Auignon, for Pope Benedict.

Hee

A He vſed ſuch dilligence and fit meanes, as he made the French King and his councell willing to giue recompence to the King of Nauarre for his lands, wherefore he was conſtrained to repaſſe the Pyrenees againe. In the meane time died Iohn of Montfort duke of Brittaine, husband to Ioane, ſiſter to this King Charles of Nauarre, who had by her husband foure children, Iohn who was duke, Richard, Arthur and Gyles. This Princeſſe was afterwards married to Henry of Lancaſter King of England, fourth of that name, he who depriued his couſin Richard of the crowne: by him ſhe had not any children. Charls King of Nauarre, hauing cauſed his ſonne Charles to be ſworne his heire by the Eſtates of his realme, he married D. Ioanne his eldeſt daughter to Iohn the eldeſt ſonne of Archambaud, who had ſucceeded in the county of Foix and Bearn, by the death of Mathew
B of Caſtelbon: his ſecond daughter called Donna Maria died a Virgin: and as for the third, Mary Queene of Sicile, being a little before dead, who by her teſtament had left this realme to D. Martin her husband, ſonne to D. Martin King of Arragon, he thought to make her Queene of Sicile, and to marry her to this young D. Martin being a widower. He therefore ſent his Ambaſſadors to the King of Arragon to this effect, who was very well pleaſed, and yeelded to the marriage, although they had offred him many other matches for his ſonne D. Martin King of Sicile, and that the Sicilians did what they could to make him incline to a marriage with Ioane ſiſter to Ladiſlaus King of Naples. The accord was made betwixt the King of Arragon, and the Ambaſſadors both of Na- Marriage of D Martin King of Sicile and D. Blanch of Nauarre.
C uarre and Sicile (amongſt which was Peter Serra, Cardinal of Cartanea) at a place called Alta, in the Realme of Valencia, in the yeere of our Lord 1401. where it was concluded that the King of Nauarre ſhould giue in dowry with his daughter a hundred thouſand florins, of the ſtampe of Arragon: whereof forty thouſand in hand, and threeſcore thouſand at a certaine time, for the which he ſhould giue in pawne the townes and caſtles of Arguedas, Santa Caro, Murillo, and Gallipienço: the King of Arragon ſhould binde for her dowry the townes and caſtles of Sos, Saluaterra, Vncaſtillo and Rueſte. And for that they were ſomewhat allied by affinity, there ſhould be a diſpenſation procured from Benedict. For confirmation and execution of theſe things, the Kings of Arragon and Nauarre had an enterview vpon the confines of their Realmes, betwixt Cortes and Mallen, where they did ſweare what had beene concluded. With the King of Na-
D uarre did ſweare D. Lionel of Nauarre his brother, D. Charles of Beaumont chiefe Standard-bearer, D. Martin of Lacarra Marſhal, D. Francis of Villa Eſpeça, Chancellor of the realme, Iohn Ruys of Ayuar, ſuperintendant of the treaſure, and D. Martin of Olloaqui prior of Saint Iohn with others: In like manner did many noblemen and prelats for the King of Arragon.

This don the King of Arragon was conducted to Cortes, where hauing beene royally feaſted by the King of Nauar, the Infanta D. Blanch was deliuered vnto him, a Princeſſe of excellent beauty, whom he led into his country, & hauing prepared a fleet at Valencia, he ſent her into Sicile, to the King D. Martin his ſon vnder the charge of D. Martin of E Cabrera, a Knight of Catrelogne, in 1402. This Lady was in the end Queene of Nauarre: for ſoone after the content of this marriage followed a diſcontent for the death of D. Lewis the ſecond ſon to the King of Nauar, being but ſixe months old, and not long after that of D. Charls his eldeſt, which two Infants are buried in the Cathedral church at Pam- Death of the two ſonnes of Nauarre.
pelone, and D. Blanch ſuruiued her eldeſt ſiſter D. Ioane. The crowne of Nauarre fell then to the ſucceſſion of daughters, and the King cauſed D. Ioane his eldeſt daughter, to be againe ſworne heire of the realme, with her husband D. Iohn of Foix. This ſame yeere the Epiſcopal ſea of Pampelone was voide, by the death of Cardinal Martin of Salua, biſhop of that city, who had paſt the age of 66. yeeres, in great trouble and F paine, to maintaine the party of Pope Benedict in Auignon. D. Michel of Salua his
I Nephew obtained the Biſhoprike after him, who was afterwards made Cardinal by Pope Benedict, in following of whom he died two yeeres after at Monaco. The King of Nauarre being the third time called in France, his voiage was then more proffitable vnto him, then at the precedent, for he obtained of king Charles the ſixt the Lordſhip of Nemours the which was erected to a Dutchy, and moreouer twelue hundred pounds ſtarling of yeerely rent, to be taken out of the reuenues of Bry and Champagne, with a good ſumme of ready money for all pretenſions and rights, the which he renounced, ſeeing he could not doe otherwiſe: in reſpect whereof the title of Earle of Eureux ceaſed in the houſe of Nauarre, taking that of Duke of Nemours. A

The towne of Cherbourg in Normandy, held in the King of Nauarres name, by the Marſhal D. Martin Henriques, was by this accord deliuered to the French: all letters and expeditions being ended, the King D. Charles returned into Nauarre, an other way; for he paſt by Languedoc and Cattelogne, where he viſited the King D. Martin at Lerida, with great content and pleaſure to theſe two Princes allied. Paſſing from thence by Sarragoſſa, he came into his country, where afterwards he gaue himſelfe to building in many places, yea two ſumptuous pallaces, one in Tafalla, the other in Olite, the which B now fall to ruine, for want of reparations, eſpecially that of Olite, where the Marſhalls of Nauarre were accuſtomed to lodge: and the Spaniards ſay, that he had intent, to make a paued cauſey and couered, to paſſe at all times without diſcommodity, from one of theſe places to the other, being but a little league diſtant. The bridge of Eſtella vpon the riuer of Ega, was this Kings worke, who for that he had liued in continuall peace, had ſtore of treaſure, to imploy in ſuch buildings. During his aboad in France, there had beene ſome ſpeech of marriage betwixt his youngeſt daughter D. Beatrix and D. Iames ſonne to the Earle of Vrgel, of the bloud royall of Arragon, the which by reaſon of certaine lets, tooke no effect: wherefore the King being returned, he married her to Iames of Bourbon Earle of March, one of the goodlieſt and actiue Princes of his time. The C marriage was celebrated in the city of Pampelone, in the yeere 1406. with great ſolemnity, and concourſe of the nobility of Spaine and France, about the beginning of the warre of Granado, and a little before the death of D. Henry King of Caſtile, the newes whereof were greeuous to King Charles, a great friend and allie to the houſe of Caſtile.

THe heat of the warre againſt the Moores was ſomewhat quenched by the death of King Henry, leauing his ſonne and ſucceſſor in his realmes, an Infant, in his ſwathling clothes, being but two and twenty monthes old. For it behoued to haue a ſpeedy care of that which was neceſſary for the peace of the Realme, wherein the Queene D. Catherine, and the Infant D. Fernand duke of Pegnafiel, appointed Gouernors by the teſtament of the deceaſed King, imployed all their care: but they could not keepe the noblemen from entring into factions: and as the gouernment of two is neuer firme, they were the firſt which diuided themſelues. The prelats, noblemen and deputies of townes which were in court, aſſembled againe in Toledo: Some perſwaded the Infant D. Fernand duke of Pegnafiel, to take vpon him the title of King, promiſing to main- E taine and defend him, alledging that it was no new thing in Spaine, when as the deceaſed Kings children were young and not fit to gouerne, or they left none but daughters, that the royall Scepter was put into the vncles hands, or of ſome other Prince of the bloud, a man of fit age and endowed with wiſdome, to gouerne the affaires of that realme: producing many examples of D. Sancho the fourth, who had beene receiued for King, and the children of his elder brother, being yet young reiected, and of the King D. Henry his grandfather, who had raigned with the conſent of the Spaniards, although he were a baſtard, to the prejudice of D. Conſtance Dutcheſſe of Lancaſter, being then eldeſt daughter to the King D. Pedro, with other examples more antient, as well of Caſtile as of the firſt Kings of Leon, either well or ill reported; That the vrgent affaires of the F realme, and the warre of Granado which was begunne, required that he ſhould reigne, and the troubles which he had lately ſeene in his brothers time, did aduertiſe him to preuent others, which were a breeding, if Caſtile ſhould receiue an Infant of two and twenty monthes for King. The Infant D. Fernand was not well pleaſed with theſe perſwaſions, but the Conſtable D. Ruy Lopes of Auales, hauing in a publike aſſembly, required openly,

Factions in Caſtile after the Kings death.

A openly that they would raiſe him to the royall throne of Caſtile, being a plot laied among the noblemen, thinking that moſt voices would chooſe D. Fernand, he made an anſwere of rare example, and perſiſted therein; and to whom then ſaid he belongs the realme, but to my Nephew D. Iohn ſonne and onely heire to the King D. Henry my brother? Thus by this conſcientious Prince, the crowne of Caſtile and Leon was preſerued for the Infant, who was then at Segobia, with the Queene Donna Catherine his mother, whether the duke of Pegnafiel went, with the other noblemen, after the funerals of the deceaſed King. The breeding vp of the young King was left in the mothers charge, who made great inſtance againſt D. Iohn of Velaſco, and Diego Lopes of Eſtuniga, who
B demanded it, according vnto the fathers will, to ſtop whoſe mouthes, and to giue them ſome content there was preſently giuen them twelue thouſand florins of gold. The will being read, and an oth taken, the Queene and the Duke charged themſelues with the gouernment of the King, ſwearing in the hands of D. Iohn of Illeſca Biſhop of Siguença, and promiſing the obſeruation of the lawes, rights and preuiledges of the realme, Prouinces and cities thereof: But within few daies the Queene and D. Fernand diſagreed in their commands. The Queene being a woman was gouerned by an other woman of Cordoua, called Leonora Lopes, without whoſe aduice ſhe did not any thing, no not that which was reſolued in councell; ſo as without the dukes great modeſty and patience, the realme had beene full of ſeditions and great confuſion. It was ordained that the King
C ſhould haue three hundred launces for his gard, and the Duke two hundred, the which did much diſpleaſe euery man of iudgement. And for that the ſouldiars which were vpon the frontier were not paied, and endured much, there was drawne out of the Kings cofers twenty millions of Marauidies, vpon condition it ſhould be repaied out of the firſt of the Kings reuenues that ſhould be receiued, or others that ſhould be leauied.

The Infant D. Fernand refuſeth the realme of Caſtile.

Whileſt they were attentiue about theſe affaires at Segobia, the Marſhal of Caſtile Fernando Garcia of Herrera, being in Lorca, entred into the country of Granado, to ſurpriſe ſome moores, who had their retreat at Vera, but for want of ladders he could not effect it. Some daies after he incountred with other troupes neere vnto Xurena, where hauing defeated them, he entred into the towne, but he could not take the caſtle; where-
D fore the Chriſtians retired, hearing that a great number of Moores came to charge them. Theſe petty exploits did ſomewhat kindle the warre of Granado, wherein the Infant D. Fernand deſired to imploy himſelfe.

Difficulties increaſing in Segobia, in reſpect of the gouernment, it was thought fit Donna Catherine the Queene mother, and D. Fernand duke of Pegnafiel ſhould diuide it betwixt them: ſo as the places remoat from all tumults of warre, and within the country, ſhould be at the Queenes diſpoſition; which were the dioceſes of S. Iames, Tuy, Aſtorga, Ouiedo, Leon, Zamora, Salamanca, Ciudad Roderigo, Auila, Segobia, Oſma, Burgos and Calaorra. And vnder the dukes charge, ſhould remaine the Archbiſhopriks of Toledo and Seuile, and the Biſhoprikes of Cuenca, Siguença, Carthagena, Caliz, E Cordoua, Iaen, Badajos, Coria, Plaiſance, Lugo, Mondonedo, Palence and Orençe, with certaine conditions vpon the iudgement of ſuits, and other things.

Gouernment Caſtile diuided betwixt the Queene mother and the Duke of Pegnafiel.

The King of Granado hauing for his allies and aſſiſtants in this warre the petty Kings of Tunes and Tremeſſen, he cauſed his army to march towards Priego. And at the ſame time the Duke of Pegnafiel went towards the frontier, and came to Seuile. There were many light incounters, ſometimes with gaine, ſometimes with loſſe: the towne of Zaara, the caſtle of Andito, Priego, Cagnete, Las Cueuas and Ortexica were taken from the Moores. The ſtrength of the Moores army was about Iaen, and yet they durſt not giue battaile to the Chriſtians, who went and camped before Septenil, hauing in their campe ſome peeces of ordinance, whereof the Spaniards were in thoſe daies very F vnskilfull, the inuention of that deuiliſh Engine being then new. At ſea thirteene gallies of Caſtile did fight againſt three and twenty of the Moores, D. Alphonſo Henriques being Admiral of Caſtile, who tooke eight of the enemies gallies, the reſt ſoone periſhed, and ſome fled.

The ſeege of Septenil was long, during the which D. Pedro of Eſtuniga tooke Ayamont: and in the end through the valour of the Moores which were within Septenil,

they were forced to raiſe the ſeege. The Moores after this retreat recouered Priego A and Las Cueuas, and burnt them: they attempted Cagnette, but they found it well manned.

The duke of Pegnafiel going from Seuile, had carried in this warre the ſword of King Fernand ſurnamed the holy, who tooke that city from the Moores, attributing ſome vertue and happineſſe therevnto: and for that hee had promiſed to bring it backe, and leaue it in its place, hee did it at this returne, and then paſt into Caſtile, leauing good order vpon the frontier: this is all was done in the yeere of our Lord 1407. in the warre of Granado; at what time died Don Pero Lopes of Ayala great Chamberlaine of Caſtile, being threeſcore and fifteene yeeres of age, a Knight endowed with two principall quallities which adorne nobility; for beſides his learning, which was great, he had made B proofe of his valour in the two battailes of Nagera, betwixt the two Kings D. Pedro and D. Henry brethren, and in that of Aljubarote, betwixt D. Iohn King of Caſtile and D Iohn of Portugal. He hath left in writing the Hiſtory of Caſtile, of his time; a treatiſe of hunting, wherevnto he was much giuen, and other Bookes.

An. 1407. Death of D. Pero Lopes of Ayala, a valiant and learned Knight.

An. 1408. The yeere 1408. being come, the Eſtates of Caſtile and Leon, aſſembled at Guadalajara, whether came the King, the Queene-mother and the Infanta. The duke of Pegnafiel came alſo, whereas the deputies of the Eſtates hauing had diuerſe conferences touching the continuance of the warre of Granado, they agreed and offred money for the furniſhing thereof, yet with ſome delaies and difficulties. D. Pedro de Luna Archbiſhop of To- C ledo, who had beene at this aſſembly, had led a young man of eighteene yeeres of age with him, whom he aduowed to be his kinſman, and was called Aluaro de Luna, whom he brought into the Kings houſe, and made him Page of the chamber, by the meanes of Gomes Carillo the Kings Gouernor. He was held to be ſonne of Aluaro of Luna, Lord of Cagnette, who was chiefe cup-bearer to the King D. Henry: but he who was held to be his father, did not avow him for his ſonne, for he was borne of a diſhoneſt woman, called Mary of Cagnette, who had beene common to others, and had brought them children: wherefore Aluaro de Luna did not thinke that this was his ſonne, and for that he ſhould not inherit his great poſſeſſions, hee ſould all in his life time, leauing to this child only eight hundred florins, and that at the intreaty of his friends. Aluaro the fa- D ther being dead, the child retired to Auignon, to the court of Pope Benedict, where hauing remained ſome time, he came into Caſtile to the Archbiſhop, by whoſe meanes he was receiued into the Kings houſe, and in time grew ſo great, as he was made Conſtable of the realme, and yet it was not very ſucceſſull for him. His mother Mary of Cagnette, had alſo by a captaine of Cagnette, D. Iohn of Crezuela, who was Biſhop of Oſma, and afterwards Archbiſhop of Seuile, and in the end of Toledo.

Aluaro de Luna and his beginning.

Whileſt they remained at Guadalajara, the King of Granado came to the ſeege of Alcaudete, hauing ſeuen thouſand horſe and 26000. foote in his army: yet through the valour of Martin Alphonſo of Montemajor and others, which were within the place, it was preſerued. The Moores victuals were many times cut off by the garriſons of An- E daluſia, & many light victories gotten one of an other, wheras Garci Fernandes Manrique captaine of Xeres, and Fernand Rodriques of Vallezillo, who held Zahara, and Fernand Arias of Sahauedra, Gouernor of Cagnette, ſhewed themſelues both valiant & vigilant, carrying great ſpoiles out of the Moores country, euery one in his quarter. This warre beeing more difficult to the King of Granado then hee had eſtemeed, hee ſent Ambaſſadors to the Gouernors at Guadalajara, to demaund a truce, the which was graunted, againſt the will of D. Fernand Duke of Pegnafiel, who deſired the warre ſhould continue. Wherefore the Eſtates reduced the ſubuention which they had granted of threeſcore millions of marauidies, to fiue and forty.

Ioſeph

Ioſeph the thirteenth King of Granado.

DVring this ceſſation of armes, King Mahumet Aben Balua died, hauing put on a poiſoned ſhirt, the twelfth yeere of his reigne, and of the Arabians the 791. in whoſe place came King Ioſeph his eldeſt brother, a little before put in priſon in Salebregne, from whence he was drawne and led with great ſilence to Granado, to raigne ouer the Moores, being loath preſently to diuulge Mahumets death, for feare of the Chriſtians enterpriſes. Seeing himſelfe ſetled, he ſent a meſſenger preſently to D. Alphonſo Fernandes Gouernor of Alcala the royal, aduertiſing him of his aduancement, and withall he ſent vnto the King of Caſtile and to the Gouernors, a Mooriſh Knight called Abdalla Alemin, to let them vnderſtand what had paſt, intreating them to reioyce at his good hap, and to continue the truce made with his predeceſſor Mahumet, the which the Queene mother, and the duke D. Fernand did confirme for the ſaid time, and ſent a Secretary to Granado to ſee it ſworne. At his returne, he was accompanied with an other Ambaſſador, who had charge to preſent vnto the King of Caſtile, horſes, ſwords, ſome peeces of veluet, rayſins, dried figs, almonds and other preſents, and to require a prolongation of the truce for two yeeres, but he obtained it not; for the Queene mother and the duke of Pegnafiel, would haue King Ioſeph acknowledge himſelfe vaſſall to the King of Caſtile, whereof the Ambaſſador excuſed himſelfe, ſaying that he had no charge to treat of any ſuch matter: yet all acts of hoſtility ceaſed that yeere 1409. notwithſtanding ſome tumult at Priego, the Moores contrary to their plighted faith, running vpon them which did repaire it: but this was pacefied and ſatisfied, with excuſes from King Ioſeph, and the truce prolonged for fiue monthes. Moores. An. 1409.

The court being at Vailedolit, was then in ſome combuſtion, for that many imagining that D. Iohn Velaſco and D. Diego Lopes of Eſtuniga, did entertaine the Queene mother in quarrel with the duke of Pegnafiel, D. Frederic the young Earle of Tranſtamara, ſonne to D. Pedro, did preſſe him to puniſh them, offring to lay hold of them, if he pleaſed: whereof they hauing ſome intelligence, retired from court, whereat the Queene was much diſcontented, and was not quiet vntill ſhe had cauſed them returne, hauing obtained a ſafe conduit from the duke D. Fernand. At Vailledolit there arriued Ambaſſadors from the French King, and from Lewis Duke of Orleans his brother, who offred the King of Caſtile and his Gouernors to come to the war againſt the Moores, with a thouſand launces entertained: with them were Ambaſſadors from the Dukes of Auſtria and Luxemburg, making the like offers: and moreouer the Duke of Orleans demaunded Queene Beatrix, widow to King Iohn the firſt to wife. There were great thankes giuen vnto them all, and the truce made with the new King of Granado made knowne vnto them. As for the marriage the widow Queene would giue no eare vnto it, contenting her ſelfe to liue a widowes life, in her houſe of Villa real, from whence ſhe did not part. The French Ambaſſadors confirmed the ancient league betwixt the houſes of France and Caſtile. Caſtile.

16. Marriage betwixt D. Alphonſo eldeſt ſonne to the Duke of Pegnafiel, and D. Maria the Kings ſiſter.

At Vailledolit there was an aſſembly, in the which was ratefied the marriage of the Infanta Donna Maria the Kings ſiſter with her couſin Germain D. Alphonſo eldeſt ſonne to the Duke of Pegnafiel, to her was aſſigned for dowrie the Marquiſate of Villena, Aranda and Portillo: and for an earneſt penny of the marriage, there were thirty thouſand doublons of gold deliuered. This yeere D. Laurence Suarez of Figueroa, maiſter of Saint Iames being dead, there was ſubſtituted in his place D. Henry the third, ſonne to the Infant D. Fernand Duke of Pegnafiel, notwithſtanding all the labouring of Garci. Hernandes, Lord of Villagarcia, great Commander of Caſtile.

About that time there was ſet vp (as a moſt holy thing in Spaine) an Image of the Virgin Mary, found by a relligious Frenchman, in the mountaine which is betwixt Salamanca, and Cité Roderigue, called La Pegna of France, where afterwards there was a Monaſtery monaſtery built, in honour of this Image, whereof the Spaniards report many Prodigies and miracles, of the which they haue made whole bookes and treaties. This age was fertile (during the Schiſme of the church) of ſects and new monaſticall inſtitutions. For beſides the reformation of the regular Chanoins of Saint Auguſtin, by the dilligence of Leon of Carrate Prior of Frigionaja of Santa Maria in the fields of Luca; the Order of White Monkes of Mount Oliuet had its beginning neere vnto Siena, by Bernard and other Monkes of Siena, and that of Saint George of Alaga, by Laurence Iuſtinian a Venetian otherwiſe called blue Celeſtins.

Three Popes at one time in the church of Rome.

The ſame yeere the Schiſme in the church did produce a third head in the church of Rome: for many Princes hauing inſiſted much for the reunion of the church, that the two Popes Benedict of Auignon, and Gregory of Rome, ſhould meet at Sauona, and take ſome good courſe for the quiet of Chriſtendome, theſe good fathers, zealous of their glory, did ſo contemne one an other, as there was no meanes to draw them together: wherefore many Cardinals being disbanded, as well from the ſea of Rome, as from that of Auignon, there was a councell celebrated by them at Piſa in Tuſcany, by the which Benedict and Gregory being depoſed from their papal dignity, Peter Philarge, a friar, borne in Candy, Archbiſhop of Milan, and Cardinal of the title of the twelue Apoſtles, was choſen, and named Alexander the fifth, who liued but tenne monthes: wherefore the Cardinals were forced to meet againe at Bolonia in Lombardy, whereas Balthaſar Coſſe a Neapolitaine, Cardinal of the title of Saint Euſtace, and Legat of Bolonia, was choſen, and named by them Iohn the three and twentith. This was a triepling of the Schiſme, and confuſion in the church of Rome: for the two firſt Popes did ſtill hold their dignities, and had their followers, to the contempt one of an other, namely Caſtile and Nauarre held for Benedict reſyding in Auignon, holding the other two for falſe Popes.

Arragon.

Aboue all others D. Martin King of Arragon did reuerence and ſupport Pope Benedict, who at that time had many croſſes both within and without his realme: for the King of Sicile his ſonne, being young and gouerned by young men, had ſo diſcontented the Noblemen of the country, both Sicilians and Arragonois, as finding himſelfe plonged againe in very great difficulties, the King his father was forced to ſend him ſuccors both of gallies and ſouldiars, whereby in the end he became maiſter of all Sicile, but with great paine: and being better councelled he did gouerne it with more honour and authority, but not without continuall iealouſie and diſtruſt: Yet hee had meanes to imploy himſelfe in the warre of Sardynia, and to preſerue that Iſland to the crowne of Arragon:

17 VVarre in Sardynia.

In the which Brancaleon of Oria, had made ſuch attempts againſt the Arragonois, as they were in a manner ready to abandon it, hee hauing ioyned vnto his forces thoſe of Americ Vicont of Narbone, who had married Beatrix ſiſter to his wife Leonora of Arborea; theſe two brothers in law, being ſtrong and alſo fauored by the common-weale of Genoua, it was needfull to haue the forces of Sicile and Arragon vnited to ſuppreſſe them. D. Martin King of Sicile came thether in perſon with tenne gallies, with a reſolution not to leaue the Iſland, vntill he had wholy ſubdued it, whereof he did aduertiſe the King his father, who ſoone after ſent D. Pedro Torellia into Sardynia with an hundred and fifty ſaile, which tranſported good numbers of foote and horſe with many Noblemen and Knights of fame.

Viceroy of Valencia ſlaine by the treachery of his owne brother.

During this preparation D. Raymond Boil, Viceroy of Valencia, was murthered in Eaſter weeke, going out of the caſtle, whereof his owne brother was a practiſer, whereof being conuicted, he loſt his life, with the reſt that had committed the murther. Within a while after there was a marriage in the ſame city, betwixt D. Iames of Arragon Earle of Vrgel, ſonne to D. Pedro, and D. Iſabella the Kings ſiſter, and daughter to the deceaſed King D. Pedro, and of Sibille of Sforza, his laſt wife, an vnfortunate marriage, as we will ſhew. And for that a ſon which D. Martin King of Sicile had had by D. Blanche of Nauarre, was dead about that time, D. Martin King of Arragon the grandfather, conceiued ſo great a griefe, as retyring himſelfe from all affaires, he ſhut himſelfe vp in the Monaſtery of Val de Chriſtus, which hee had cauſed to bee built, and left the whole charge of the warre of Sardynia to his ſonne Don Martin King of Sicile, who (with the forces

A of Arragon, led by D. Pedro Torellia) charged the enemies campe about Sauluri, and put them to rout with great ſlaughter, forcing the Vicont of Narbona to ſaue himſelfe in Montreal: he tooke Sauluri and the caſtle, with the towne of Egliſe, and laied ſeege to Oriſtagno, the chiefe fort of Brancaleon of Oria, and of the Sardinians rebelled: but the King being ſurprized with ſickneſſe in this fortunat victory, hee cauſed himſelfe to be carried to Caillery, where he died, to the great griefe of all the Sicilians and Arragonois, and extreame ſorrow of the King of Arragon his father, who liued not long after him. By his death without any lawfull children, the realme of Sicile fell to the King of Arragon, and was for euer after vnited to that crowne. Death of Don Martin King of Sicile.

Blanche of Nauarre, the widow Queene, remained Regent of the Iſland, by the will of the King her husband, confirmed B by her father in law. A baſe ſonne of his called D. Frederic, had for his portion the Earledome of Luna. At that time there grew great troubles in Arragon, whereof D. Iames Earle of Vrgel was the chiefe author, a turbulent Prince, who made no difficulty to challenge the crowne euen in the life time of the King Don Martin: and for that it was a tickle point, and did not ſucceed well, he aſpired to the ordinary Regency, which was a dignity wherewith the eldeſt ſonnes of Arragon, and the preſumptiue heires, were wont to bee honoured, the which hee obtained, and was moreouer made Conſtable: but vnderhand the King gaue order that he ſhould not be receiued in his Regency, and cauſed an appeale to be made by the factions of Vrrea, Heredia and other, before the C Iuſtice Major of Arragon.

This was in the yeere 1409. when as the King deſirous to ſee if he might haue a child to ſucceed him in his great Eſtates, married with Donna Ioane of Prades, or Marguerite, as ſome write, a faire young virgin of the bloud royall, the which haſtened his end: and in the meane time hee was much ſollicited by Lewis duke of Aniou, who had married Donna Violant, daughter to D. Iohn King of Arragon, and by the Duke of Pegnafiel, borne of Donna Leonora of Arragon, daughter to the King Don Pedro, and ſiſter to this King D. Martin, that he would declare his ſucceſſor, the which he refuſed to doe, at their requeſts, but tired with their importunities, he was ready to name by his teſtament, for heire of the realmes of Arragon, Sicile and other lands, Don Frederic de Luna, baſtard D to his deceaſed ſonne. This King being thus diſtracted with paſſions in his age, the affaires of Sicile and Sardynia were more troubled then before. Marriage of D. Martin King of Arragon & Donna Ioane of Prades.

In the yeere 1410. beganne the warre in Caſtile againſt the Moores, the truce beeing expired, and the Moores army hauing ſurpriſed Zahara with great ſlaughter of the inhabitants and ſouldiars, and great ſpoile of them that remained. The Infant Don Fernand comming for this occaſion to Cordoua, hee cauſed the ruines of Zahara to bee repaired, and went to beſeege Antequera, hauing in his army tenne thouſand foote and three thouſand fiue hundred horſe. Neere vnto the towne were two hils, the approches whereof beeing kept, the army might bee ſafe from all attempts of the Moores, who were in field with fiue thouſand horſe and 80000. foote, led by Cidi Ali and Cidi Amet E brethren to Ioſeph King of Granado. Theſe paſſages were garded, the lower part of the hill with ſixe hundred Launces and two thouſand foote vnder the commaund of Don Sancho of Rojas Biſhop of Palença, Don Diego Fernandes of Quignones Gouernor of the Aſturia's, D. Aluar Peres of Guzman, and Don Iohn Hurtado of Mendoça. And at the other hill of harder acceſſe, being higher and eaſier to bee kept, there were ſet foure hundred Launces and one thouſand foote, commanded by Don Martin Vaſques, D. Fernand Peres of Ayala, Gouernor of Guipuſcoa, D. Raymond of Guzman and Iohn of Soto Major great commander of Alcantara. The Duke of Pegnafiel had cauſed many ladders to bee brought from Seuile, with other Engines of warre to aſſaile townes. 18 Caſtille.

F The Moores beeing deſirous for to raiſe the ſeege from before Antequera, came to aſſaile the Biſhop of Palença and his troupes in this paſſage of ſtrength, from whence they were not onely repulſt, but the skirmiſh growing very hot, in the end, beyond the Moores expectation, there was a great incounter, the Biſhoppe beeing fortefied with new bands, which came from the campe, ſo as the Moores fighting without order, and rather hindered then fauoured by their numbers of raſcally footemen, they were forced to turne their backes with great loſſe; for authors write that there were aboue fifteene thouſand of them ſlaine vpon the field, and onely twelue hundred Chriſtians.

After this victory the ſeege was continued, and the place battred by all meanes, the which in like manner was valiantly defended, where as the Chriſtians loſt more in the ſallies of the beſeeged, then they had done in the battaile. There died Martin Ruis of Aben Dagno, of a poiſoned arrow. On the other ſide three hundred chriſtians horſemen, going out of their gariſon of Iaen, were incountred, and cut in peeces by the Moores about Montexicar. But the Moores garriſon of Archidona within two leagues of Antiquera, were happely defeated by the Chriſtians that were at the ſeege, for they did much annoy them, by their continuall courſes, and cutting off their victualers and forragers that came to the campe. The riuer of Gorza was their common watring place whether they could not go without a gard. The Chriſtians being aduertiſed of an enterpriſe made vpon their men, hauing ſet a ſentinell vpon an high eminent place, called the rocke of two Louers, they found themſelues ſo ſtrong, when as the Moores came to charge them, as they repulſt them, and purſued them beating and killing euen vnto the gates of their fort: there were two thouſand ſlaine vpon the field, and many carried away priſoners. The rocke of two Louers was ſo called from the deed of a Chriſtian ſlaue, and his Maiſters daughter being a Moore, whom he had perſwaded to flie with him from Granado, to enioy their deſired loues, and to liue freely together in Caſtile: they being purſued by her father, who was well accompanied, and ouertaken vpon this rocke, which is midde-way betwixt Archidona and Antiquera, after that they had long defended themſelues againſt them that would take them, and ſeeing no meanes to eſcape, they caſt themſelues downe head-long from the top of the rocke, imbraſing one an other, and ſo ſlue themſelues. To diuert the ſeege of Antiquera, the Moores ſent ſome to burne the Engines of battery that were before it with wilde fire, vnder collour of treating of a truce. The treaſon being deſcouered and puniſhed, the Infant cauſed a trench to be caſt and a rampar to be made round about the place, ſetting good gards, and then he purſued the ſeege, hauing fortefied his army with the companies of Seuile and Cordoua, who haue alwaies done great ſeruice in theſe Mooriſh warres, the which kept King Ioſeph for aduenturing of a battaile.

Defeat of Chriſtians neere to Montexicar.

Rocke of two Louers.

The towne of Antiquera being preſt with all violence, it was taken, there going firſt vnto the aſſault, the companies of D. Garci Fernandes Manrique, of D. Charles of Areillan Lord of Los Cameros, and Roderigo of Narbaez. The firſt which died in fighting, was Iuancho a Biſcain, and the firſt which entred were Guttiere of Torres and Sancho Gonçales Cherino. The caſtle did hold out eight daies longer, and then was yeelded by the Moores, to haue their liues ſaued and their goods, who were ſafely conducted to Archidona. There entred into it, Don Frederic Earle of Tranſtamara, and the Biſhop of Palencia: the garde of the towne and caſtle was giuen to Roderigo of Narbaez. In the meane time the Moores did forrage the territorie of Alcala the royall, and the Chriſtians after the taking of Antiquera, did ouerrunne the country of Aznalmara, Cabecha and Yehar, ſmall rownes which were taken by force, through the wiſdome and valour chiefely of the Conſtable D. Ruy Lopes of Aualos: after which exploits the Infant Don Fernand returned a victor to Seuile, where he had meſſengers from the King of Granado, ſoliciting him to make a truce, wherevnto hee yeelded, being preſt to attend the affaires of Arragon: wherefore there was a truce concluded betwixt Caſtile and Granado for ſeuenteene monthes.

Antequera taken.

Truce with the King of Granado.

19 Wee haue before left Don Martin King of Arragon, beeing without children to ſucceed him, importuned by many Princes, pretending to bee his heires, troubled with the ſeditions and rebellions of the Sardynians and Sicilians, beeing old and broken, and yet newly married to a young Princeſſe, with hope to raiſe his houſe: But beeing weake both in bodie and minde, griefe and care made the way to a peſtilent feuer, the which ſeized on him this yeere 1410. in the Monaſtery of Valdonzellas, neere to Barcelona, hauing raigned about 14. yeeres, whoſe body was buried in the Monaſtery of Poblette.

Arragon.

There

A There was no will of his found, or any heire inſtituted in his Realmes of Arragon, Sicile &c. The reaſon thereof was thought to bee for that hee knew not to which hee ſhould incline amongſt all the pretendants to that crowne, after his deceaſe. Wherefore the Arragonois, Valentians, Cattelans and Sicilians were in great perplexity, for Don Fernand Duke of Pegnafiel Infant of Caſtile pretended a right, beeing ſonne to Donna Leonora of Arragon, ſiſter to the two laſt Kings deceaſed: Lewis Duke of Anjou hauing married Donna Violant, daughter to King Iohn the firſt, maintained the ſucceſſion to belong to him: the like pretenſion had Don Iames Earle of Vrgel, hauing alſo married one of the daughters of the King Don Pedro: Don Frederic of Arragon, Earle of Luna, baſe ſonne to Martin King of Sicile, put forth himſelfe, and ſo did Don

B Alphonſo Earle of Gandia: all theſe pretendants had their partiſans within the Realme, and euery one tried all meanes, with great contention, and likely-hood of ſedition, to attaine vnto that which hee pretended, ſo as in theſe tumults Don Anthony of Luna ſlue Don Garcia Archbiſhop of Saragoſſa treacherouſly. To preuent which diſorders in time, the Noblemen of the Realme agreed, that of the three Eſtates there ſhould be nine men choſen, by whoſe Iudgement the Scepter of Arragon ſhould bee giuen to him of the pretendants whom they ſhould thinke moſt profitable for the commonweale. For Arragon there were named Don Dominike Biſhop of Hueſca, Francis of Aranda and Don Berenger of Bardaxi a great Lawier. For the principality of Cattelog-

C ues. And for the Realme of Valencia were choſen Vincent Ferrier, of the Order of the preaching friars, who was afterwards cannonized, his brother Boniface Ferrier a Lawier, a Monke of the Order of the Carthuſians, and Maiſter Peter Bertrand, this laſt was ſubſtituted in the place of Gines of Rabeça who fell mad. Theſe nine men beeing aſſembled in the caſtle of Caſpe which is in Arragon, all thoſe which pretended any right vnto the Realme, were ſommoned to exhibit their reaſons before them, whereof ſome appeered perſonally, and others by their Ambaſſadours. In the meane time in Caſtile the Infant D. Fernand, for himſelfe and the King his Nephew, cauſed this buſineſſe to be conſulted of by the learned of the country, who in the beginning were of opinion that both of them had an intereſt, and that they muſt frame an oppoſition be-

D fore the Delegats, as well in the Kings name, beeing a pupill, as in his vncle and tutor Don Fernand; yet hauing better conſidred, or being otherwiſe perſwaded, they gaue all the right of the ſucceſſion, in the realme of Arragon, to the Infant D. Fernand, who for this cauſe deputed Ambaſſadors, the Biſhop of Palença, and D. Diego Lopes of Eſtuniga, chiefe Iuſtice of Caſtile, and Lord of Bejar, with Doctor Pero Sanches of the Kings councel, to ſend them into Arragon: and at the ſame time hee cauſed fifteene hundred launces to draw neere vnto the frontier of Arragon: hee and the Queene-mother with the young King comming to Aillon, a neere place to Arragon.

Princes pretending to the realme of Arragon.

Murther of the Archb ſhop of Saragoſſa.

Nine arbitrators to chooſe the King of Arragon.

Whileſt they are buſie about theſe purſutes, the Duke of Benauent a priſoner in the caſtle of Mont-real, brake priſon, and eſcaped, hauing ſlaine the captaine which had him in gard, whereof they beeing aduertiſed at court, they prouided ſpeedily for all the paſſages, eſpecially towards Portugal, thinking that hee would bend that way: but hee went towards Nauarre, where hee was kindely entertained by the King D. Charles, and by the Queene Donna Leonora his ſiſter: who notwithſtanding hauing receiued letters from the Queene-mother, the Infant Don Fernand, and the councell of Caſtile, intreating them to ſet a gard vpon the Dukes perſon, vntill they had further newes, they cauſed him to bee put into a ſtrong caſtle, yet intreating him with all honour and reſpect, and then they ſent an Ambaſſador into Caſtile, to make their excuſe, for that they had receiued this fugitiue Prince, and intreated him as their brother, but they kept him

F in ſure garde, that he ſhould not attempt any thing againſt the crowne of Caſtile. This Ambaſſadour found the court at Aillon, where he was well receiued, and his excuſes allowed.

20 Caſtile.

There arriued alſo Ambaſſadors from the French King, with very rich preſents, the which were requited with others of no leſſe value, being ſent by an expreſſe Ambaſſage ſome monthes after.

An. 1411. Greene croſſes the badge of the Knights of Alcantara.

This yeere of our Lord 1411. Pope Benedict graunted that the Knights of Alcantara, in ſteed of hoods which they did weare in ſigne of their profeſſion, ſhould from thence forth carry greene croſſes. During the courts aboade at Arllon, attending what would bee the end of the troubles of Arragon, which increaſed daily, they ſent the horſemen of Caſtile to fauour the friends of the Archbiſhop of Saragoſſa that was ſlaine, by the which the lands of D. Anthony de Luna were ſpoiled. And at that time friar Vincent Ferrier, that great preacher, made a voiage to the court of Caſtile, who made ſome ſermons before the Queene mother, and ſome Noblemen; by whoſe aduice there was an Order made, that all Iewes, dwelling in Caſtile, ſhould carry for a marke and diſtinction to bee knowne, a peece of red cloth vpon their cloakes, and the Moores greene hattes with white moones. The affaires of Arragon growing tedious, the King was carried backe to Vailledolit. The truce of Portugall being expired it was treated by Ambaſſadours to make a perpetuall peace, the which was not then concluded.

Arragon.

The arbitrators appointed to iudge to whom the Realme of Arragon did belong, hauing beene many daies in conference in the caſtle of Caſpe, in the end they did all agree to adiudge it to the Infant D. Fernand of Caſtile, whereof hee had notice giuen him in Iune, in the yeere 1412. beeing at Cuenca: wherefore hauing made his election knowne vnto King Iohn his Nephew, and to the Queene his mother, and giuen great thankes for the fauour he had receiued in that reſpect by the forces and meanes of Caſtile, he prepared himſelfe to goe and take poſſeſſion of his Realme. And firſt of all hee declared for Tutors and Gouernors of the Realme in his place, D. Iohn of Illeſca, Biſhop of Siguença, D. Pablo biſhop of Carthagena, D. Henry Manuel Earle of Montalegre, and Pero Alfan of Ribera, Gouernor of Andaluſia, with whom hee ioyned other men of State and learning. This and other things beeing ordred hee went into Arragon, where he found great reſiſtance, eſpecially of Don Iames Earle of Vrgel, who pretended to reigne: him he ſought by all friendly meanes to draw vnto his ſeruice, but in vaine: for the Earle being obſtinate, he drew the Engliſh into Spaine, notwithſtanding whoſe aide he yeelded.

D. Fernand the firſt of that name, the ſixteenth King of Arragon.

21. Genealogie of Arragon.

DOn Fernand the firſt of that name, raigned in Arragon, Cattelogne, Valencia, Sicile, Majorca, Minorca &c. By the conſent of all the Eſtates: and for his good parts was ſurnamed the honeſt, whoſe poſterity was famous: Before hee came to the crowne of Arragon, he had by his wife the Counteſſe of Albuquerque, Don Alphonſo, who was heire of the Realmes, and was in his fathers life-time called Prince of Girone, in ſteed of the title of Duke, vſurped vntill that time by the eldeſt ſonnes of Arragon. He had alſo by her the Infant Don Iohn, who was King of Nauarre, and afterwards of Arragon and Sicile by the deceaſe of his elder brother. Moreouer hee had Don Henry maiſter of Saint Iames, Don Sancho maiſter of the Alcantara, and the Infant Don Pedro, who died in the warres of Naples, beeing ſlaine with a great ſhot: all theſe fiue Princes were borne in Caſtile. The daughters which iſſued from this marriage were Donna Maria Queene of Caſtile, married to King Iohn the ſecond her couſin germaine, and Donna Leonora who was Queene of Portugal, wife to Don Edward. D. Fernand was two and thirty yeeres old when hee beganne to reigne in Arragon, beeing Lord of great poſſeſſions in Caſtile, whereof he gaue the Dutchy of Pegnafiel, and the Signeury of Lara to Don Iohn his ſecond ſonne, all which Inheritance, both by father and mother in Caſtile, his children enioyed for a time, but beeing turbulent, and not able to entertaine themſelues with the Kings of Caſtile, they loſt all.

In the yeere 1413. the King Don Fernand hauing beſeeged the Earle of Vrgel, in

A Vrgel, in the towne of Balaquer, for that hee did ſtill raiſe new troubles, hee preſt him in ſuch ſort, as his wife was perſwaded to goe forth, and caſting her ſelfe at the Kings feete to demaund her husbands life. The King vſing his accuſtomed clemency, pardoned him his life: but the Earle comming forth, and hauing kiſt the Kings hands, hee was ſhut vp in the ſame caſtle. There were many Knights of Caſtile which ſerued the King in this warre, and amongſt other forces, there were ſent vnto him by Donna Catherine Queene of Caſtle, foure hundred launces with promiſe to furniſh him with foure thouſand, if he had need; but the Earles yeelding freed him of that neceſſity. Hee ſeized vpon Lerida, and other places, and in a ſhort time made all within the Realme to bow,
I. and therefore hee ſent away his ſouldiars of Caſtile well ſatisfied, Don Godfrey of Nauarre, Earle of Cortes, and Marſhall of Nauarre, the Kings baſe ſonne, was at this warre, with ſome men at armes.

The new King did afterwards cauſe the Earle of Vrgel to bee araigned, and condemned him to perpetuall priſon, depriuing him of his dignity and goods, and then he ſent him priſoner to Vruegna, a fort in Caſtile, from whence he was afterwards tranſported to Mora. The Counteſſe his mother was alſo condemned to looſe her goods, and ſome men of baſe condition were put to death. Theſe things being done, the King came to Saragoſſa, where he was crowned by the Archbiſhop of Tarragone, in the preſence of many Noblemen of Arragon, Valencia, Sicile, Cattelogne, Caſtile and Nauar,
C at the which there were great and ſtately triumphes. To ſerue at this ceremony, the Queene of Caſtile his ſiſter in law had ſent him a crowne of gold, weighing fifteene markes, inricht with many ſtones of great value. He was armed Knight by the Duke of Gandia, and then annointed and crowned in the great church of Saragoſſa: after which act he was very bountiful to the Noblemen and Knights that aſſiſted at his coronation. From Nauarre came the Marſhal D. Godfrey, Peter Martin of Peralta, with many others.

Coronation of the King D. Fernand at Saragoſſa.

Going from Saragoſſa, he came to Morella, where he ſhould meete with Pope Benedict, who after his depoſing had retired himſelfe into Arragon, yet retayning ſtill his dignity, as much as he might. There they had an enterview, whereas Pope Benedict went in a ſollemne proceſſion, in his pontificall habit, with a white Miter on his head
D ſet with ſtones of great price, to whom the King did all the honour hee could deuiſe: Before his departure from thence there came Ambaſſadours from the Emperour Sigiſmond, who perſwaded the King of Arragon to fauour the councell, which was then called at Conſtance, for the rooting out of the ſchiſme. To treat whereof there was an enterview concluded betwixt the two Princes at Nice, and the King was intreated to perſwade Benedict, willingly to renounce his dignity of Pope. The councell began the fifth day of Nouember in the yeere 1414. and continued aboue three yeeres. There were Ambaſſadors ſent from Caſtile, by the aduice of King Fernand, D. Diego of Anaya Maldonado Archbiſhop of Seuile, and D. Martin Fernandes of Cordoua, accompanied with many great Doctors in Diuinity. This yeere died in Caſtile Vincent Arias a great
E Doctor, and the firſt that did comment vpon the lawes of Caſtile.

Pope Benedict in Arragon.

Councel of Conſtance.

An. 1414.

The King D. Fernand hauing held the Eſtates of Cattelogne at Momblanc, he paſt to Valencia, where he found Benedict held for Pope onely in Caſtile, Arragon and Nauarre. In that court there were alſo many prelats, noblemen and knights, as well of the realme as ſtrangers, by reaſon of the marriage which was celebrated there, betwixt the Infant D. Alphonſo of Arragon, the Kings eldeſt ſonne, and Mary of Caſtile, ſiſter to the King Don Iohn, by reaſon whereof there were great ſports, ſo as ſome Biſhops, according to the manner of that age, carried the praiſe, namely Don Sancho of Roias Biſhop of Palence: to whom at the intreaty of the Queene of Caſtile, Benedict, the pretended Pope, did conferre the Archbiſhoprike of Toledo, beeing voide by the deceaſe of F Don Pedro de Luna. And for that in the contract of future marriage, there had beene graunted in dowry to the Infanta, the Marquiſate of Villena, when as there was no likely-hood that the Infant ſhould come to the crowne of Arragon, it was againe concluded, for that it ſeemed by this meanes the Marquiſate ſhould bee alienated from the crowne of Caſtile, that in lieu thereof there ſhould bee giuen two hundred thouſand doublons of Caſtile.

Marriage betwixt D. Alphonſo of Arragon, and D. Maria of Caſtile.

During the Kings aboad at Valencia, hee fell ſicke, which ſtaied him from going to Nice: wherefore the Emperour Sygiſmond reſolued to come into Spaine, whereof the King D. Fernand being aduertiſed, he cauſed himſelfe to bee carried to Perpignan to meet with this great Prince, who toiled himſelfe for the revnion of the church: an example of modeſty in his traine which was ſmall; in habits which were ſimple: and in his ſeruice, for he was not ſerued but in peuter.

Enterview of the Emperors Sigiſmond and D. Fernand King of Arragon.

Their enterview was in September in the yeere of our Lord 1415. after the foureteenth Seſſion of the councell of Conſtance, where Iohn the three and twentith, and Gregory the twelfth, were depoſed, who yeelded (though againſt their wills:) onely Benedict held his Popedome by force, and would not allow of this councel, with whom neither the intreaties nor threats of Princes, nor the acts and proteſtations of Ambaſſadors from the councell could preuaile: after whoſe departure, the King Don Fernand laboured what he could to induce this froward ſpirit to yeeld to the conſent of all Chriſtendome; but there was no meanes; yea Benedict retired in great indignation to Pigniſcola, a fort vpon the ſea in the Realme of Valencia: wherefore the King by the aduice of Friar Vincent Ferrier, and other great Doctors, gaue him to vnderſtand that hee retired himſelfe from his obedience. This did not amaze Benedict, but flying to his ſpirituall armes, hee pronounced King Fernand to bee fallne from all regall authority in Arragon, writing to all the townes and people that were ſubiect vnto him, that they ſhould not yeeld him obedience.

The King little regarding it, not onely perſiſted in his reſolution, but alſo went into Caſtile, to perſwade the councell of King Iohn his Nephew, to ſubmit him and his Realmes to the authority of the councell: but being not fully recouered, he was forced to ſtay at Igualada, where hauing newes of the death of his ſonne, Don Sancho maiſter of Alcantara, his ſickneſſe increaſed, ſo as hee died in the yeere of our Lord 1416. hauing reigned onely three yeeres and tenne monthes, beeing about ſixe and thirty yeere of age, and was buried in the Monaſtery of Poblete. Hee did inſtitute by his will Don Alphonſo his eldeſt ſonne, to bee heire of his Eſtates, and for want of children did ſubſtitute his brethren: and if they died without children, hee did ſubſtitute vnto them the ſonnes or nephewes of his daughters, excluding them. The authors of the Hiſtory of Sicile write, that this Prince beeing come to the crowne of Arragon, would not ſodainely intitle himſelfe King of Sicile, for that the Iſland was full of tumults and ſeditions, which grew preſently after the death of King Martin, whereof the chiefe motiue was Bernard of Cabrera Earle of Modica and chiefe Iuſtice, which is the principall dignity in that Realme, who with other Noblemen his confederats, pretended that the vnion of Sicile with the crowne of Arragon, plotted by the two King Martins, father and ſonne, had beene concluded againſt all right and cuſtome: and therefore they maintained that it was lawfull for the Sicilians to chooſe a King at their pleaſures.

Death of D. Fernand King of Arragon. An. 1416.

Bernard of Cabrera had a conceite that this honour was due to him, and therefore hee ſought to ſeize vpon the perſon of the widow Queene Donna Blanche the Regent, to the end that hee might marry her, were ſhee willing, or not, thinking by this meanes to make his way more eaſie to the crowne: but ſhee beeing aduertiſed of his intent, retired from Cattanea, and fortefied her ſelfe in Syracuſa, where ſoone after ſhee was beſeeged by Bernard of Cabrera and his partiſans, and without their ſpeedy and faithfull ſuccours, which diſſallowed of his enterpriſes, ſhee had beene taken. Cabrera was repulſt from this ſeege, and the Queene carried to Palermo, whereas hee purſued her againe, hauing gathered all his forces againe together, and had almoſt ſurprized her: Hee ſtill laied ambuſhes for her, vntill at length hee himſelfe was betraied by his owne men, and drawne into his enemies ſnares, who deliuered him into the hands of the Admirall Sancho Doriz, who kept him ſome daies priſoner, in great miſerie, in the caſtle of La Motte of Saint Anaſtaſe, and in the end deliuered him to the Agents of King Fernand, by whom hee was ſent to Barcelona, there to receiue the puniſhment of his raſhneſſe at the Kings pleaſure: but this milde and generous Prince, mooued with his age, and the ſeruices which the Princes of

Arragon

A Arragon had receiued, after that he had reprehended him ſharpely, he not onely ſet him at libertie, but did aſſigne him an honorable ranke in his Court. The troubles of Sicile being pacified by the taking of this Bernard of Cabrera, Don Fernand was acknowledged for king, and obeyed, who gouerned it by his Lieutenants and Viceroys, as other Kings of Arragon haue ſince done. The Maieſty of this Prince was ſuch, together with his mildneſſe and wiſedome, as without vſing the rigour of armes, or any other violent conſtraint, he cauſed all rebellion to ceaſe, as well in Sicile as Sardinia. As for Queene Blanche, widow to Martin king of Sicily, who was alſo heire of Nauarre, ſhee was afterwards married to the Infant Don Iohn of Arragon.

D. Alphonſo the fifth of that name, the 17. King of Arragon.

TO Fernand ſucceeded his ſonne D. Alphonſo, ſurnamed the Valiant, a Prince worthy of that title, for his royall vertues, and the famous conqueſts and exploites of warre done by him, and for that he did no leſſe loue learning then armes. Eight and twenty daies before the death of the King Don Fernand, dyed Donna Leonora Queene of Nauar
C his Aunt, hauing beene married to King Charles her husband foureteene yeares, ſhe was buried in the Cathedrall church at Pampelona.

There was great mourning and heauineſſe in Caſtile, at the newes of King Fernands death, whoſe obſequies Queene Katherine cauſed to be celebrated, with a pompe worthy of ſuch a Prince, and afterwards by the aduice of the Nobility, ſhee tooke vppon her the ſole gouernement of the realme, and the tutelage of King Iohn her ſonne, whome ſhee gaue in guard to Don Iohn of Velaſco, D. Diego of Eſtuniga, and to D. Sancho of Rojas, Archbiſhop of Toledo: whereat the Conſtable D. Ruy Lopes of Aualos, D. Pedro Manrique, and D. Alphonſo Henriques grew very iealous, whereupon there grew quarrels and troubles after the accuſtomed manner during the minoritie of Kings. The Queene and D the Councell did prolong the truce with the King of Granado, for two yeares. In the yere 1417. ſending Lewis Gonçal of Luna, Secretary of the Kings chamber to Granado to that end. By this treatie the king of Granado ſet an hundred priſoners at libertie, whoſe ranſomes would haue mounted to a great ſumme of money. D. Iohn Rodrigue of Caſtagneda, Lord of Fouente Duegna, and D. Inigo Ortiz of Eſtuniga, ſonne to Diego Lopes, being in quarrell, and demanding the combate, the Queene would not grant it them in Caſtile, but commanded them to retire into Granado, where as king Ioſeph would giue them the field: Theſe Knights were put into the field by the Mooriſh king, but he preſently forbad them to fight, declaring that they were both good Knights, and reconciling them together, he ſent them home honored with Iewels and rich preſents. This hee did at the in-E treaty of the Queene-mother of Caſtile, who had writ earneſtly vnto him, ſhewing therin to haue a mild and Chriſtian-like heart. For theſe combats are proofes of mad men, which ſhould not be ſuffered in the place of iuſtice, ſeeing thereby all controuerſies, how great ſoeuer, may be compounded and ended.

Truce with Granado. 1417.

Combats ſhold not be allowed among Chriſtians.

The Emperour Sigiſmond grieuing for the death of the king of Arragon, after that he had laboured in vaine to reconcile the kings of France and England, who were continually in warre, he paſſed to Conſtance, whereas the Councell in the two and thirtith Seſſion, declared Benedict to be periured, contumacious, a rebell, Schiſmaticke, and Hereticke, depriuing him of his papacie, which he had held almoſt two and thirty yeares: yet he played the Pope ſtill in Pegniſcola: but the Princes of Chriſtendome in generall yeel-
F ded to the Councell, notwithſtanding Benedicts exclamations, that ſeeing it was called without his authoritie, it was not lawfull. The Cardinals which were at Conſtance, being two and twenty, with thirty Electors deputed by the Councell, did chuſe Othon Colonne, a Romane, Cardinall of the title of Saint George in Velabro, and named him Martin the fifth. Benedict although he were abandoned by the Princes, yet he continued ſtill in his purpoſe, keeping ſome Prelates vnder his obedience, among which were the Cardinals

26 Conqueſt of the Canaries by Iohn of Betancourt.

This yeare Iohn of Betancourt, a knight of France, by gift from Queene Catherine, conquered the Ilands of the Canaries, and intitled himſelfe King. He could not take the great Canarie, for all the Inhabitants of the Iland had retired themſelues thither: wherefore finding too great reſiſtance, he retired himſelfe, hauing built a fort in that of Lancerot, from whence he did trafficke, and drew profit from the neighbor places, of lether, tallow, ſlaues, and other ſuch commodities: he being dead, one Menault ſucceeded him, in whoſe time Pope Martin inſtituted an Epiſcopall ſea in thoſe Ilands, to the which there was a certaine Monke called Friar Mendo aduanced: but this king Menault hauing no great regard, when there was queſtion of profit, to the ſoules health of the Ilanders, he ſold them indifferently, as well the Pagans, as thoſe which had receiued Baptiſme: whereof the new Biſhop did complaine to Queene Katherine, requiring her to free them of that Lord: whereupon ſhe ſent Peter Barna de Campos with three ſhips of warre, with whom Menault hauing long contended, in the end by the Queenes ſufferance, he ſold theſe Ilands to a Knight of Seuile, called Fernando Peres, in whoſe hands, and his ſucceſſors of Seuile, they haue remained vnto the time of the king D. Fernand the 5. and of the Queen D. Izabella. 27 Family of Eſtuniga comes out of Nauarre.

D. Diego Lopes of Eſtuniga, Iuſtice maior of Caſtile, hauing long ſerued King Henry the 3. and Iohn now raigning dyed this yeare. His houſe came out of Nauarre, and was of the bloud royall, as ſome Authors haue left in writing. The yeare 1418. Queene Catherine dyed ſuddenly, being fifty yeares old, ſhe was buried at Toledo in the chappell of the laſt kings. By her death King Iohn was freed from tutors, and there was a Councell eſtabliſhed, with the which he ſhould gouerne his Realmes, whoſe letters and expeditions ſhould be ſigned on the back-ſide, by two of his Councellors. This yeare there came ambaſſadors to him from France, to demand ayde againſt the Engliſh, to whom they gaue hope of an army at Sea. The king of Portugal did alſo ſend to confirm a perpetuall peace betwixt Caſtile and Portugall, but there was nothing concluded at that time. The Engliſh proclaimed warre againſt Caſtile, whereupon the truce with Granado was prolonged for two yeares. King Iohn beeing at Medina del campo, was betrothed to D. Maria of Arragon his couſin, daughter to the deceaſed king D. Fernand: then hee held a Parlament, when for his new accord of marriage, they granted him a great ſubuention. The ſame yeare mention is made of the death of Friar Vincent Ferrier of Valencia, afterwards canonized a Saint by Pope Calixtus, who was alſo of Valencia. Hee that moſt gouerned the king at that time entring into his maioritie, was Don Sancho of Rojas, Arch-biſhop of Toledo, whereat they did murmure, from which time the Eſtate of Caſtile was very turbulent. C D

An. 1418.

The Guipuſcoans and Biſcayens fell to theeuing at ſea, without any ſubiect of warre, euen vppon the coaſt of Brittany, whereof D. Iohn then liuing complayned much by his ambaſſadours, to the King of Caſtile, who deſirous to liue in peace with Chriſtian Princes, ſent Fernando Peres of Ayala, Gouernour of Guipuſcoa, to bee an arbitrator. Hee with another choſen by the Duke of Brittanie, cauſed all diſorders to bee reformed, and reſtitution to be made. The Councell of King Iohn, was then reduced to fifteene Prelates and Knights, whereof fiue ſhould aſſiſt and ſerue, and they ſhould change euery foure moneths. E

28 Portugal.

Don Iohn King of Portugall laboured to quench and qualifie all occaſions of new troubles, betwixt his Realme and that of Caſtile, by a firme peace: Wherefore hauing ſent backe his ambaſſadours in the yeare 1419. to Don Iohn King of Caſtile, they were returned with good hope and promiſe, to ſend ambaſſadours into Portugall, expreſſely to that end. This king D. Iohn the firſt of that name then raigning in Portugall, hauing made a long truce with D. Henry King of Caſtile, duriug that time he gaue himſelfe to gouerne his Realme with iuſtice, to repaire the ruines which had growne by the precedent warres, and to adorne it with new buildings: wherein employing himſelfe with iudgement, bountie, and wiſedome, hee was beloued and reſpected both of his owne ſubiects, and of ſtrangers. F

In

A In remembrance of the victorie which he had gotten at Aljubarote, he did build neere vnto it a ſumptuous Monaſterie, which he dedicated to the Virgin Mary, and did call it Saint Mary the royall of the battell, or victorie, which is a Conuent of Iacobin Friars. And for that he had a better iudgement then many other Princes, knowing that moſt of the religious Monkes, and other perſons did not vnderſtand the Latin tongue, in the which the houres and ſuffrages were ſung in churches, he cauſed them to be tranſlated into the Portugall tongue, and in like manner many bookes of the holy Scripture, and the interpretation thereof, namely, the foure Euangeliſts, the which did afterwards much diſpleaſe our Doctors in Diuinity. Hee was ſo zealous of the honor of his houſe, as a Groome of his chamber called Don Fernand Alphonſo of Saint Iren, hauing ſo much forgotten himſelfe as to defloute one of the Queenes maides, daughter to D. Aluar Peres of Caſtro, Earle of Arroyoles, he cauſed him to be burnt in the place of Ruſio in Lisbon, and as for her, he chaſed her ſhamefully from Court, ſending her to her parents, neither could the Queenes interceſſion preuaile any thing. He did alſo puniſh with great ſeuerity, the other inſolencies of his Courtiers, and aboue all things he ſhewed himſelfe a louer of iuſtice, onely he did forget to do reaſon to D. Beatrix Queene of Caſtile, pretending to be right heire of the Realme, which he enioyed whileſt that ſhe liued (as it were) in a priuate eſtate in Caſtile, an example of rare patience and chaſtitie: for ſhee would neuer heare ſpeake of a ſecond mariage, although ſhe were ſought vnto by Princes of great ſtate, who happily might haue ſetled her in her fathers kingdome.

Booke of the holy Scripture tranſlated into Portugall.

C Beſides the aboue-named buildings, he built the towne of Almerin vpon the riuer of Tayo, the pallace of Sintra, the caſtle at Lisbon, thoſe of Sierra Balada, neere to S. Iren, and other. Seeing himſelfe in peace with all Chriſtian Princes, and well obeyed of his ſubiects, he paſſed the ſea with an armie, and tooke Ceuta from the Moores of Affricke, hauing in his company the Infant D. Edward, holding then the place of the eldeſt, for Don Alphonſo was dead, the Infant Don Pedro Duke of Coimbra, and Lord of Montmajor the old, and of Auero, Don Pedro of Meneſes, Earle of Viana, Standard bearer of the realm, who was the firſt Gouernor of Ceuta, which victorie was intermixt with mourning for the death of the Queene D. Philippe his wife, which happened in the yeare 1415. at what time the king D. Iohn did take away the vſe of accompting the yeares, by the Æra of Cæſar, the which had beene till that time obſerued in Portugall, ordaining, that from that time the yeare ſhould begin from the Natiuity of Chriſt: and that it ſhould bee ſo dated in all publike and priuate writings, to the end to conforme himſelfe to that which was brought into Caſtile, Arragon and Nauarre, and to auoyd the confuſion which fell out in contracts and bargains, betwixt the ſubiects of the Realmes of Spaine.

In the yeare 1419. the Infant Don Henry his ſonne, who was Maſter of the Order of Chriſt, mooued with an honeſt emulation, by the conqueſt which his father had made vpon the Barbarians, hauing conferred with ſome men of knowledge and experience in Coſmographie, reſolued to runne ouer the Ocean ſea, and to diſcouer the ſhoare and Ilands thereof. Going from Lisbon with ſome ſhips, hee came to the Iland of Madera in the yeare 1420. the which he found deſert and full of wood, whereof it carries the name: for Madera is that which the Latins call Materia, and we timber. He ſet fire to this wood, ſo as hauing cleanſed it, they found the ſoyle good and fruitfull for all things, eſpecially for ſugar canes, which grow in ſuch aboundance, as both Spaine and all Europe make great vſe of it.

The Infant did afterwards continue this and other nauigations, and was the firſt ſpurre to the Portugals, which came after, to diſcouer the coaſts of Affricke and Aſia, and the Ilands of the South, and Eaſterne ſeas, with great honor to their nation, and infinit profite to the whole world. Theſe things were attempted by the Portugals, when as the peace betwixt them and the Caſtillans was doubtfull: for the Councell of Caſtile delayed it, by reaſon of the kings minority, yet they liued quietly one with another.

About that time the ambaſſadors of Caſtile, which had beene ſent to the Councell of Conſtance, returned into Spaine, bringing home the re-union of the church of Rome vnder Pope Martin the fift. Among them was Don Diego of Anaya Maldonado Archb. of Seuile, who built the Colledge of Saint Bartholomew at Salamanca, this yeare 1420. being beeing called the great Colledge, the moſt auncient of all Caſtile, where many learned men haue beene bred. In that Vniuerſitie of Salamanca are many other Colledges, built and endowed with good liuings, where there is good exerciſe of Diuinity, arts, and tongs, as alſo in other townes of Spaine, by the care of Biſhops and good Prelates, labouring chiefly to maintaine learning which are the grounds of pietie and vertue. A

29. Nauarre. The ſame yeare a marriage was made betwixt D. Blanche of Nauarre, the widdow-Queene of Sicile, and the Infant D. Iohn of Arragon, ſecond ſonne to the King Don Fernand deceaſed. By the treatie concluded the yeare before, it was ſayd: That if the Infanta, the preſumptiue heire of Nauarre (for the elder ſiſter the Counteſſe of Foix, was already dead without children) ſhould die before her husband, hauing children or not, that hee ſhould raigne during his life in Nauarre, after the deceaſe of King Charles his father-in-law. From this condition and promiſe being ſworne, there grew many troubles in Nauar. Beſides the expectation of the Realme, there was giuen to the Infant Don Iohn by king Charles, in dowry with D. Blanche his daughter, foure hundred twenty thouſand, a hundred and twelue florens of gold, of the coyne of Arragon, ſixe ſolz, and eight deniers: a notable ſumme for a King of Nauarre, an argument of the great treaſure which hee had gathered together during the long peace of his raigne. It was alſo agreed, that the lands and forts which the Infant did hold in Caſtile and Arragon, ſhold deſcend to the heire which ſhold be borne of that marriage, ſucceeding to the Crowne of Nauarre. The Infant did enioy in Arragon the Dutchies of Gandia and Momblanc, the Earledome of Ribagorça, and the towne of Balaguer: and in Caſtile the Dutchie of Pegnafiel, Infantazgo, and the Segneurie of Lara: and moreouer, the townes of Cuellar, Caſtro-Xeris, Villalon, and Haro: afterwards he obtayned Alba de Tormes, Olmedo, Paredes of Naua, Majorga, Villerado, Cerezo, Medina del campo, Aranda of Duego, Roa, Colmenar, and other places, all which he afterwards loſt by the wars he had againſt Caſtile, the titles and pattents whereof are remayning in the records of Nauarre. B C

Poſſeſſions D. Iohn Infant of Arragon.

Theſe articles of marriage were ſworne by the three Eſtates of the Realme. And it was long diſputed betwixt the Infant Don Iohn, and the king of Caſtiles councell, where this marriage ſhould be celebrated. In the end he got fortie dayes libertie to go and perform it in Nauarre, whither he went accompanied with many of the Nobility of Caſtile: From hencefoorth D. Iohn will entitle himſelfe Infant of Nauarre and Arragon. The marriage beeing ended, returning with his wife D. Blanche towards Caſtile, hee met with a meſſenger from Don Sancho of Rojas, Archbiſhop of Toledo, who aduertiſed him of a great exceſſe committed by his brother Don Henry, Maſter of Saint Iames, ſolliciting him to returne with all ſpeed to court: and thus it was. D

30. Caſtille. Don Henry the third ſonne to the deceaſed Don Fernand king of Arragon, deſired to marrie Donna Catherine, king Iohns youngeſt ſiſter, who had the Marquiſate of Villena for her dowrie, but fearing that he ſhould neuer obtaine her by any due courſe, he reſolued to haue her by force: ſo as beeing raſh and exceeding bold, he entred on a time into Toledo with three hundred armed men, where he ſeized on the kings perſon, wherein he was aſſiſted and fauoured by Don Ruy Lopes of Aualos the Conſtable, and D. Pedro Manriques. They tooke Iohn Hurtado of Mendoça Lord Steward of the kings houſe, and others who were oppoſite vnto them, and holding the King as it were a priſoner, they cauſed many of his houſhold ſeruants and Officers to be chaſed away: aboue all, they deſired to diſplace D. Aluaro de Luna, kinſman to the deceaſed Archbiſhop of Toledo, who of a page of the chamber was come to be the kings great minion. But D. Henry held it now the beſt to winne him by mildneſſe and bountie, that hee might make vſe of him in that which he pretended. E

The Infanta Donna Catherina, to whom this marriage with Don Henry was not pleaſing, entred into the Monaſterie of Saint Claire in that cittie, from whence ſhe was afterwards taken, for that Don Henry led the King to Segouia, and then to Auila, promiſing not to vſe any force concerning the marriage. Don Iohn Infant of Nauar and Arragon, hearing of theſe newes, he much blamed the attempt of Don Henry his brother, and reſolued to oppoſe himſelfe againſt him, wherefore he called all his friends to Olmedo, and ſuch Noblemen and Knights as diſliked of this exceſſe: ſo as in few daies hee aſſembled F

A three thouſand Lances, the Infant D. Henry preparing alſo for the warre, hee was in a manner equall in ſtrength to his aduerſaries, beeing in the towne of Auila, whether hee had led the King. The factious being ready to enter into a furious warre, D. Leonora the widdow Queene of Arragon, and mother to theſe two Princes, laboured ſo betwixt them as all theſe troups retyred except a thouſand Lances, which remayned for the Kings gard: then comming to the treaty of marriage, the Infanta D. Catherina being inſtantly intreated by the King her brother (who was not free) to take D. Henry for her husband, ſhe would by noe meanes harken to it, D. Henry being the ſtronger about the King thinking that D. Iohn was oppoſite to his deſſines, he kept him from the king, & not reſpecting
B him, nor them that followed him, he called an aſſembly of his partizans, in forme of a Parlament, where he cauſed the fact of Tordeſillas to be allowed, and ordained what he pleaſed: yea he cauſed letters to be written in the Kings name to the Pope, by the which hee intreated him to giue vnto the Infant D. Henry the Lands of the Maiſterſhippe of Saint Iames in fee ſimple, to him and his children for euer, with the title of a Dutchy: an impudent demand, and ſo reiected by the Pope. The King married with D. Maria of Arragon, in Auila, without feaſts or ceremony, and then they led him to Talauera: and the Infant D. Henry neuer ceaſſed vntill he had celebrated his marriage with D. Catherina his Couſin Germaine, cauſing the Marquiſate of Villena to be aſſigned for her dowry with the title of Dutchy, who was the third Duke of Caſtile: and the queſtion being of marri-
C ages, where they doe vſually ſhew them-ſelues bountifull, Aluar de Luna the Kings Minnion, had in guift the towne of Saint Stephen of Gormas, and other Knights were aduanced to other lands, as it pleaſed D. Henry. The King being much diſcontented with his reſtrayned Eſtate, hee conferred often with Aluar de Luna of the meanes how hee might eſcape, but there appeared great difficulties on euery ſide, for the confederats which held him watcht carrefully ouer him, notwithſtanding going one day abroad vnder collour of hunting, he aduentured to runne to Villalua, and finding himſelfe not ſafe there he paſt to Montalban, which is betwixt Talauera and Toledo, ſome-what out of the way: whereof the Infant D. Henry being aduertiſed, who had newly fyniſhed his marriage he was wonderfully troubled in mynde, drawing what forces he could to field, and then the Conſta-
D ble and he follwed the King, but in vaine, for he was in a place of ſafety, who ſent ſome to aduiſe them that they ſhould not follow him, but returne to Talauera, which the Infant D. Henry did, but the troupes which were in the pourſute ſtayed not vntill they had ſome newes, and came and lodged about the Caſtle of Montalban, yet they attempted not any thing, for the reuerence they bare vnto the King, who ſeeing him-ſelfe as it were beſeeged, and without victualls in the place, he had means to aduertiſe the Infant D. Iohn, D. Sancho of Roias, Archbiſhoppe of Toledo, the Admirall D. Alphonſo Henriques, and other Knights, intreating them to come and free him.

Eſtates forced.

Demaund of D. Henry moſt impudent.

Marriage forced betwixt D. Henry and D. Catherine of Caſtille.

King eſcapes out of D Henries hands.

In the meane time D. Henry held a councell with his partiſans at Talauera and prouided for many things, leaſt the King ſhould eſcape from him. Being intreated by his men, who E were in the forme of a Campe about Mountalban, hee came thether, bringing with him the Queene D. Maria his Siſter and all the Nobility that was at Talauera, to repaire this diſorder in ſome ſort. The King and ſuch as were with him in the Caſtle, for want of better foode, did eate their horſes: D. Iohn of Torſillas Biſhop of Segobia, being brought in, hee ſought to make an accord for the Infant D. Henry: but the King interrupted him, ſaying, that D. Henry ſhould come himſelfe, and ſo hee ſent him backe. D. Henry would not aduenture to enter, but he procured that the Conſtable d' Aualos, and D. Aluar of Luna conferred together, but they could not conclude any thing, nor yet the deputies of the prouinces of the realme, who entring into the Caſtle, were intreated to moue the King, but they could get noe other anſwer but that D. Henry muſt free his lodging from F ſeege: who indeed was forced to diſlodge, for the Infant D. Iohn and other Noblemen, being followed by good troupes of men at armes approched, and would haue taken him from thence by force. Thus the King was deliuered from this ſeege, and the Caſtle furniſhed with victualls: wherefore he ſent a commandement to the Infant D. Iohn of Arragon, that he ſhould not aduance with his troupes, vntill he had other newes from him. The Infant ſtayed at Fonſalida, where D. Alfonſo Henriques the Admirall ioyned with him, him, being well accompanied, and others which came from all parts, to deliuer the King as they ſaid, out of priſon. This was at that time when as Villa-real beganne to be called Citudad real, in recompence of the good ſeruice which the Inhabitants did vnto the King in this tumult. Don Henry being retired to Ocagne, hee had commaundement from the King to lay downe armes, but hee would not obay. The King parted from Montalban to returne to Talauera, vpon the way hee was met by the Infant Don Iohn, and Don Pedro his brother, with other Noblemen, who hauing kiſt the Kings hands, dined with him at Villalua, and then they were ſent backe to their troupes: for Aluar de Luna, who gouerned the King, could not endure that any of the Infants ſhould ſtay in court, leaſt it ſhould impaire his credit and authority.

The King being come to Talauera, he ſent a new commaundement to Don Henry and his confederats to diſarme, who were content, ſo as D. Iohn the Infant of Arragon, did alſo diſarme, whom the King commanded to ſend away his men, wherein he obaied: after which the King hauing diſpatched ſome buſineſſe in his fauour at Talauera, hee went to Auila: by the way hee came to Pegnafiel, where hee did viſit his couſin Donna Blanche of Nauarre, wife to the Infant Don Iohn, making great demonſtrations of loue vnto her. Don Henry would not diſarme, eſpecially beeing degraded of the title of Marquis of Villena, by a decree of the councell, and his lands beeing ſeized on, hee would recouer them by force, if he might not otherwiſe, for proofe whereof hee aſſailed Chinchilla, Alarcon and the caſtle of Garci Nugnes, where there was a garriſon for the King: cauſing on the other ſide his wife Donna Catherina (to whom the Marquiſate did belong) to bee a ſutor vnto the King for his pardon: but the King was ſo incenſed, as he would not heare ſpeake of it, and he reuoaked the title of Duke, which hee had cauſed to bee giuen him, of the lands belonging to the Order of Saint Iames, hoping to make them hereditary. The King did alſo reuoake the guift of Caſtagnedain the Aſturia's of Santillana, which hee had made vnto Don Garci Fernandes Manrique, for that hee was one of Don Henries faction: Don Garci refuſing to yeeld, beeing in poſſeſſion, there were ſome companies of men at armes ſent, who chaſed him, and tooke ſome of his followers, of whom Iuſtice was done. Don Henry hoping for no fauour from the King, marched towards Aguilar del Campo, as hee ſayd, to kiſſe the Kings hand; but the King diſlodged from Aguilar, and came to Palençuela, ſending word to Don Henry that hee ſhould not aduance, and that hee ſhould diſmiſſe his ſouldiars: then hee came to Vailledolit, and from thence to Tordeſillas, whereas Queene Mary his wife was: yet Don Henry followed the King, leading with him fifteene hundred launces, and came vnto Guardarama; ſo as the King was forced to draw companies vnto him for his ſafety. Don Henry ſent againe to beſeech him to giue him acceſſe, that he might diſcharge himſelfe, cauſing the deputies of townes to make the like ſute from him; but they laboured in vaine, the King giuing them ſo many reaſons, as they laied all the blame vpon Don Henry and told him that he muſt obay, and leaue his armed troupes, the which he promiſed to doe, but he did not performe it.

D Henry depriued of his goods and dignities in Caſtile.

The Queene Donna Leonora mother to theſe Infants of Arragon, being in great perplexitie to ſee this her Sonne in danger to be ruined, ſhe laboured all ſhee could poſſibly to pacifie the Kings wrath moſt iuſtly incenſed againſt this rebell and raſh vaſſall. Don Lope de Mendoça Archbiſhop of Saint Iames did the like, but they preuailed nothing, the King reiecting all prayers and ſutes, vntill hee had laid aſide Armes: wherefore Don Henry hauing made ſhew of two thouſand Lances, and three hundred light horſe, hee diſmiſt them, and returned to Ocagne with the Noblemen of his faction, except Don Pedro of Velaſco, who came to the Court. The King did alſo muſter his men, where there were found aboue ſixe thouſand men at Armes, whom hee alſo diſcharged, beeing payed, except one thouſand Lances which hee ratayned for his guard.

Interceſſion for D. Henry Infant of Arragon.

Nauarre. An. 1421. In the meane time Donna Blanche Infanta of Nauarre, was deliuered of a Sonne at Pegnafiell, in the yeare of our Lord, one thouſand foure hundred twenty and one, the which was Chriſtened at Olmedo by the King of Caſtile, and was named Don Charles. and Don Aluar de Luna was his other God-father: Don Iohn the Infants father, feaſted the

A the King and whole court, with great bountie and ſtate. Two yeares after this Infant was carryed into Nauarre, at the inſtance of King Charles his Grand-father, who at that time made Viana a Principalitie, affected to the eldeſt ſonne of Nauarre, annexing to the towne and caſtle of Viana, thoſe of Guarde, Saint Vincent, Bernedo, Aguilar, Vxeneuilla, Pombation, San Pedro, Cambreda, val de Campeço, Maragnon, Toro, Herrara and Buradon: and more-ouer he gaue vnto him Gorela, and Cintruenigo, Peralta and Cadrieta, theſe foure laſt being diſtinct Siegneuries from the Principalitie: And at the Eſtates at Olite, he cauſed him to be ſworne heire of the realme of Nauarre, after the deceaſe of the Infant Don Iohn his father.

From Olmedo, the King of Caſtile came to Toledo, to the Eſtates, whether D. Henry, Caſtille.
B the Conſtable, and their confederates were cited, who appeared not, but ſent their Ambaſſadors to make their excuſes, ſaying, that they held for their profeſſed enemies Don Sancho of Rojas Archbiſhop of Toledo, D. Iohn Hurtado of Mendoça, and many others, and that they ſuſpected the Infant D. Iohn: wherewith the King beeing more incenſed then before, reſolued to purſue them by armes, whereſoeuer they were: but Don Henry being aduertiſed and aduiſed, promiſed to preſent himſelfe before the King at Madrid by the fourteenth of May this yeare 1422. where he appeared a day before the Aſſignation. An. 1422.
Hauing kiſt the Kings hand, beginning to enter into a diſcourſe, to excuſe and iuſtifie himſelfe, the King would not heare him, but ſent him back to his lodging. The day following, there were produced in the Kings Councel, fourteene of the Conſtable d'Auales
C letters, by the which he was charged with treaſon, and practiſing with the King of Granado againſt the King of Caſtile his Lord. They were openly read by Sancho Romero the kings Secretary, who ſaid, that D. Diego of Fuenteſalida, Biſh. of Zamora had giuen him them. D. Henry and Garci Fernandes Manrique, thinking to defend the Conſtables innocie and fidelitie, were committed to priſon by the Kings commandement, and all the horſes and furniture they had in Court ſeazed on. The Conſtable and the Infanta D. Catherina, being aduertiſed of what had paſt at Madrid, they left Caſtile, and retired to Balueda, a caſtle in the realme of Valencia, and the Gouernor Don Pedro Manrique fled to Taraſſone: wherefore the King cauſed all their goods to bee ſeazed, commanding all Gouernors and Magiſtrates to apprehend them. Theſe letters did not ſeeme very cer-
D taine, wherefore they of the Kings councell ſuſpecting that they were counterfet, (as in truth they were) they cauſed the Kings Attorney generall, to frame an accuſation againſt the Conſtable, for that he had beene a confederate and fauourer of D. Henry, when as the King was detained in Tordeſilla, and of the diſorders which after followed: by reaſon whereof his goods were ſeazed on, for it did appeare that the letters were counterfet, by the confeſſion of Iohn Garcia of Guadalajara the Conſtables Secretary, who betraying his Maiſter, had himſelfe counterfetted them, and ſealed them with his ſeale at Toledo, for which crime he was executed at Vailledolit. The King cauſed Gonçala Mexia to bee named Adminiſtrator of the Order of Saint Iames, whereof the Infant D. Henry, being E in priſon, was Maiſter, and did aduertiſe the King of Arragon of his detention and the cauſes. The Conſtable and the Infant D. Catherina being retired to Valencia, they were well entertained by them that did gouerne thoſe realmes in the abſence of D. Alphonſo of Arragon, who was at Naples, whereat D. Iohn King of Caſtile was ſo much diſcontented as he ſent his Ambaſſadors into Italy to the K. of Arragon to complaine of this fact. About the end of this yeare 1422. King Iohn had by Queene Mary his wife, a daughter Death of the Archb. of Toledo.
borne at Ilesca, who was named D. Catherina: and about that time D. Sancho of Rojas Archbiſhop of Toledo, died at Alcala of Henares, in whoſe place was ſubſtituted Don Iohn of Contreras Deane of the ſame Church, and borne at Riaxa. The Infanta D. Catherina was declared and ſworne heire of the Realme of Caſtile, the yeare following F 1423. at the Eſtate of Toledo, if the King her father ſhould die without heires male: for ſuch was the cuſtome of Spaine. There the truce betwixt Caſtille and Portugall was renewed for twenty nine yeares, with a condition, that if hereafter the one ſhould offer to make warre againſt the other, hee ſhould giue him warning 18. moneths before: A ſinceritie which is contemned in this age, whereas they ſeeke to ſurpriſe one another by any ſecret and indirect meanes. This truce was proclamed the court being at Auila.

D. Ruy de Auales the Conſtable charged with treaſon.

And ſoone after the king Don Iohn beeing at Vailledolit, there came ambaſſadours from A D. Alphonſo King of Arragon, to excuſe the reception which had beene giuen at Valencia, to the Infanta D. Catherina, and the Conſtable, Don Ruis Lopes of Aualos : and to acquaint the king of Caſtile with the ſucceſſe of the warre of Naples, whereas they king of Arragon was buſied.

31 Arragon.

This Prince who was famous not onely among all them that had raigned in Arragon, but in all the reſt of Chriſtendome had this occaſion to vndertake the warre of Naples: after the deceaſe of king Ladiſlaus, his ſiſter Ioane the ſecond, widow to the Duke of Eſterlic, hauing ſucceeded in the Realme, as ſhee was infamous, by reaſon of the familiarity which was more then did befit the greatneſſe of a Queene, which ſhe had with Pandolfello Alope, a Knight of Naples, being held to be one of the goodlieſt men of his time. Shee B to couer their looſe life, contracted marriage with Iames of Bourbon, Earle of Marche, a Prince of the bloud Royall of France, vppon condition that he ſhould not intitle himſelfe king, nor ſhould not meddle with the gouernement of the Realme, but as ſhe pleaſed. The Earle being come to Naples, he ſoone diſcouered what paſt betwixt the Queene his wife, and Pandolfello: wherefore being mooued with a iuſt diſdaine, hee cauſed the adulterer to be ſlaine, and depriued the Queene of the gouernement, hauing puniſhed her onely with words and reproches. The Queene diſſembling her diſcontent againſt the Earle, watched a fit oportunity to be reuenged: wherein ſhe wrought ſo by her practiſes and intelligences, as ſhe not onely recouered her liberty, but ſhe put the Earle her huſ- C band into priſon, who beeing afterwards freed by the interceſſion of Pope Martin, retired into France, leauing the Queene to liue after her owne appetite. Pope Martin who was moleſted by the faction of Vrſins, the chiefe whereof was Braccio Fortebracci, hee made a ſtrict league with this Queene, by the which ſhe promiſed to ayde him with three thouſand horſe, and other things: but their friendſhip was ſoone diſſolued: and Pope Martin to annoy Queene Ioane, did inueſt in the Realme of Naples, Lewis Duke of Anion, called the third, who was ſonne to Lewis the ſecond, and of the Infanta D. Violant of Arragon, and declared Queene Ioane fallen from it, and depriued thereof: wherefore Lewis began to league himſelfe in Italy with many Princes and Potentates, namely, with D the Commonweale of Genoua, who were mighty at ſea, from whom he was ayded to conquer the Realme of Naples, with thirteene gallies, whereof Baptiſt Fregoſo was Generall.

Vnchaſtneſſe of Ioane 2. Queene of Naples.

Pope Martin enemy to Queene, raiſs in Lewis Duke of Anieu.

Theſe things beeing come to the knowledge of King D. Alphonſo, who was newly aduanced to the Crowne of Arragon, beeing young, and deſirous of glorie, conſidering how much it might preiudice the Eſtate of Sicile, if the houſe of Aniou ſhould ſettle it ſelfe againe at Naples, he thought he ſhould greatly diſappoint Lewis his deſſeines, if he ſhould make warre againſt the Geneuois: wherefore hauing prepared an armie at ſea, he came and landed in the Iland of Corſica, which was wholly in the power of that State, and vnder colour of the right which the kings of Arragon did pretend, by reaſon of ancient donations made vnto them by the Popes, of the two Ilands of Corſica & Sardinia: E at his firſt landing he tooke Calui, and then beſeeged Boniface, preſſing it in ſuch ſort, as without ſpeedie ſuccors from Genoua it had beene taken, and the whole Iland. During this ſeege Queene Ioane, who ſaw a great ſtorme readie to fall vppon her, ſent Anthony Caraffa vnto him, intreating him to vndertake the defence of her and her Realme, againſt Lewis of Aniou, the Pope and their allies, in requitall whereof ſhe would adopt him for her ſonne and ſucceſſor in the Realme of Naples, and for an earneſt-peny ſhe would deliuer him the two caſtles of Naples. King Alphonſo was well pleaſed with theſe conditions, who to make this accord authenticke, ſent Raymond of Perillos to Naples with 18. gallies, and 14. galliots, and D. Bernard of Centillas, and D. Iohn of Moncado his ambaſſadors, with authoritie and ſufficient inſtructions, who agreed with Queene Ioane in the F
Kings name, and receiued the aboue-named forts: and after the releeſe of Boniface by the Geneuois, whereas the king receiued ſome loſſe, he paſſed with the reſt of his army into Sicile, and from thence to Naples, where the accords and adoption was confirmed, the Queene inueſting him then in the Dutchie of Calabria, as preſumptiue heire of the Realme: but the peace betwixt the mother and the ſonne was not laſting: wherefore ſhe

repenting

repenting to haue adopted Alphonſo, he dealing in her affaires, there fell out warre betwixt them: ſo as after many incounters, and variable ſucceſſe, the Queene left Naples, and was forced to retire to Auerſe, from whence ſhe ſent to call backe Lewis of Aniou, beeing then at Rome, who in the yeare 1423. came to Auerſe, where hee was receiued with great ioy, and was adopted there by the Queene, and was made Duke of Calabria, and Alphonſo reiected as ingrate: at which time happened in Caſtile the impriſonment of D. Henry Maſter of Saint Iames, brother to the king D. Alphonſo, and the retreat of D. Catherine his wife, with the Conſtable to Valencia, and of other Noblemen into diuers parts of Arragon, whoſe goods D. Iohn King of Caſtile had confiſked, whereupon grew many quarrels: by reaſon whereof the King D. Alphonſo was forced to returne into Spaine, leauing his brother D Pedro at Naples, to make head againſt the Duke of Aniou, with Iames Cadora, and many Noblemen Italians, of his faction to aſſiſt him. Sayling along the coaſt of Prouence, he ſurprized Marſeilles, a Towne belonging to the Duke of Aniou, being Earle of Prouence, the which he ſpoyled and burnt, carrying away for a precious Iewell the body of Lois ſometimes Biſhop of Tholouſa, ſonne to King Charles the Lame, being held a Saint. It is noted for a noble and religious act in this Prince, that at the taking of the towne hee would not ſuffer any iniurie to bee done vnto the women that were retired into the Churches, nor any thing to be taken from them. It was taken in the night at a ſecond aſſault: Alphonſo being rich with ſpoiles landed at Valencia.

Marſeilles ſurprized by the King of Arragon.

In the meane time in Caſtile they made the proceſſe of all the fugitiues, and degraded D. Ruis Lopes of Aualos, of his Eſtate and dignitie of Conſtable, depriued him of the gouernement of Murcia, and did confiſcate all his lands and goods. He had enioyed Xodar, Ximena, the tower of Alaquin, Arcos, Arjone, Arjonilla, Figuiera and Colmenar, in the countrie of Auila, and Oſorno and Ribadeo in Galicia, and other places, which were all forfeited to the King, who gaue the office of Conſtable to Don Aluar de Luna, who was afterwards created Earle of Saint Stephen de Gormas, and receiued with great ſolemnitie. Alphonſo Iames Faiardo was made Gouernor of the fronter of Murcia, and his lands were diſtributed to others: ſo as the houſe of Aualos remained very poore in Caſtile. The King decreed, that D. Iohn of Tordeſilla Biſhop of Segobia, who had beene Superintendant of the treaſor, in the time of the deceaſed King Henry, ſhould be apprehended, to make him giue an account of his charge: but the biſhop of Zamora who had this charge, ſhewed himſelf a friend, and ſuffred him to eſcape into Portugal, from whence he paſt to Valencia. About the end of this yeere 1423. D. Leonora king Iohns 2. daughter was borne: as ſoone as he had intelligence that the king of Arragon was arriued at Valencia, he ſent him an Ambaſſage, to congratulat his arriual, and to intreat him to ſend him D. Catharina the wife of D. Henry and the fugitiues of Caſtile, or elſe to chaſe them out of his country: whereof the king D. Alphonſo excuſed himſelf, as wel to theſe Ambaſſadors of Caſtile, as by others whom he ſent expreſly to K. Iohn, who intreated him for an enterview, wherewith the king was willing, but ſuch as were enricht with the conſtables ſpoils, diſſwaded him, wherewith the king of Arragon was diſcontented, and afterwards more, they refuſing him to let him confer with the Queen of Caſtile his ſiſter. In the yere 1424. the Infant D. Catherina died at Madrigal, whereupon the King cauſed the Princeſſe Leonora to be ſworne for heire of thoſe realms, in caſe he died without any iſſue maſle. In which yere there alſo died at Pegniſcola, Benedict, being 90. yeeres old; hauing held the Popedome 31. yeers 2. months and 10. daies, from his election made at Auignon, and after that hee had bin depoſed by the councel of Conſtance, 7. yeers and 4. months, his body was interred in Illueça, in vnhallowed ground (as they ſay:) a man to violent in al his actions, obſtinate and indomptable: of ſo ſtrong a conſtitution of body, as they could not attribute the cauſe of his death but to poiſon, the which they found had bin giuen him in certaine ſweet meats, by a Monke, called Thomas, ſet on by the Cardinal of Piſa, who was ſent into Spaine to that end. The crime being auerred, the Monke Thomas was taken and quartered, the Cardinal who remained at Tortoſa fled, fearing that Don Roderigo and Don Aluar de Luna Benedicts Nephewes ſhould reuenge his death vpon him. After his deceaſe the Cardinals which were of his faction, and were retired with him, to Pegniſcola, would haue continued the Schiſme, and entring into the Conclaue with the accuſtomed ceremonies, they did chooſe a Chanon of Barcelona, named Gil Mugnos, borne at Teruel, whom they called Clement the eight, wherevnto Don Alphonſo King of Arragon conſented, beeing in bad termes with Pope Martin at Rome. This Clement created Cardinals, gaue Benefices and Diſpenſations, and did all acts of a Pope as well as Martin, and by him the Church of Rome continued diuided.

Don Alphonſo King of Arragon a fauourer of a new Schiſme.

1425. In the yeare one thouſand foure hundred twenty and fiue, D. Henry ſonne to D. Iohn King of Caſtille, was borne at Vailledolit, who ſucceeded him in the Realmes. Hee was baptized by Don Aluaro of Oſorno Biſhop of Cuenca, the God-fathers were Aluar de Luna, the Conſtable, and Don Alphonſo Henriques Admirall of Caſtile: and the Godmothers Donna Eluira Porto-carrero the Conſtables wife, and Donna Ioane of Mendoça the Admirals: and within few moneths after this Infant was ſworne Prince and heire of the realmes in that Towne, in the Monaſterie of Saint Pablo, the Infant Don Ihon of Arragon, as Lord of Lara, being the firſt that ſwore him fealtie and future homage.

Birth of the Infant Don Henry of Caſtile.

Nauarre. The offences betwixt the Kings of Caſtile and Arragon were ſuch, as they attended nothing but open warre, not onely in theſe two realmes, but alſo in Nauarre, the ſucceſſor thereof, Don Iohn, being much bound to either countrie: wherefore the King Don Charles vſed all meanes poſſible to reconcile them. Notwithſtanding the King Don Alphonſo ſent a letter open, by a Secretarie of his, to the Infant D. Iohn his brother, to come into Arragon to aſſiſt at a Parlament which hee had called, vpon paine to bee declared a rebell. Don Iohn not onely obtained leaue to goe to the King his Brother, but hee had alſo full authoritie to make an accord with him. When he came to the Court of Arragon at Taraſſone, hee had newes of the death of the King of Nauarre, his father in lawe, which happened ſodenly at Olite, in September, beeing buſie about his buildings. A Prince much lamented both of his ſubiects and ſtrangers, for his vertues and milde diſpoſitions: who beſides other remarkable things, ſetled a perpetuall peace in Pampelone, the which before his time had beene deuided into three regions or countries, called Bourg, Peuplement, and Nauarriere, gouerned by three diuers Iudges, with ſeuerall Iuriſdictions, ſo as there oftentimes fell out great contentions and mutinies among them, the which hee did aboliſh, reducing all the Inhabitants of the Towne vnder one Iuſtice, taking away for euer the factious names of parts and quarters, placing one Gouernour or Magiſtrate ouer them, with ten Iurates to aſſiſt him. Hee was threeſcore and foure yeares old when hee dyed, and had raigned thirtie nine yeares and nine moneths. His body was laide in the Cathedrall Church at Pampelone, with Queene Leonora his wife.

Death of Charles King of Nauarre.

Pampelona vnited into one body.

Don Iohn, firſt of that name, thirty three King of Nauarre.

DOn Iohn his ſonne in lawe ſucceeded him, in the right of Donna Blanche his wife, the Crowne of Nauarre paſſing from the houſe of France, to the houſe of Caſtile and Arragon, for want of heyres male, the which continued not long: Hee was about eight and twenty yeares old when hee began to raigne in Nauarre: when as King Charles dyed, hee was in the campe of King Don Alphonſo, who being incenſed againſt the King of Caſtile, for his brother Don Henryes impriſonment, was gone to Armes, and had his forces on the confines of Arragon and Nauarre, about Taraſſone, the which hee cauſed to enter into Nauarre, as ſoone as the newes came of the Kings death. After which they vſed this ceremonie: Don Iohn, who ſhould ſuccede, kept his chamber three dayes, after which hee went to horſe-back, accompanied with the King his brother, and cauſing the Standard of Nauarre to be carried before him, by a Knight called Nugno Vaca, and a Herald to march before with a coate of the armes of Nauarre, crying out alowd, Nauarre, Nauarre, for the King Don Iohn and Donna Blanche his wife: going often about the field, the Trumpets ſounding, and being followed Ceremonie in taking poſſeſſion of the realme of Nauarre.

A followed by many Knights and Gentlemen of Caſtile and Arragon, on foote, but there was not one Nauarrois, for the Nobilitie of Nauarre had done the like at Olite, for the Queene Donna Blanche their naturall Princeſſe, and not without a miſterie.

Whileſt that theſe things paſt vpon the frontiers, the King of Caſtile hauing made a great aſſembly at Palence, and gathered together much money, in the end hee was aduiſed to free Don Henry out of priſon, beeing the cauſe of all this tumult, and for the which the King of Arragon had taken Armes. The King of Caſtile would firſt haue the King of Arragon diſarmed, which difficulties being debated, it was agreed that Don Henry ſhould bee deliuered in the hands of Don Iohn King of Nauarre, who ſhould bee anſwerable vntill that the King of Arragon his brother had laide downe B Armes. Wherefore Pero Garcia of Herrera, Marſhall of Caſtile, followed by fiue hundred men at Armes, came to the Caſtle of Mora, whereas the Infant Don Henry was deliuered vnto him, hee ſwearing to conduct him and deliuer him into the hands of Don Iohn King of Nauarre. 34. Caſtile.

Don Henry brother to the King of Arragon and Nauarre, deliuered.

The two Kings Brethren being come to Saint Vincent of Nauarre, hearing that they brought Don Henry, they returned, and going to meete him, the King Don Iohn receiued him at Agreda, and then ledde him to Taraſſone, whereas the King of Arragon embraced him with great content. Beeing there, Don Lewis de Guzman Maiſter of Calatraua, and Don Ihon of Soto maior, Maiſter of Alcantara, ſent to offer him their friendſhip and meanes, againſt them of the Kings Councell, and againſt his Mig- C nions, which had beene oppoſite againſt him. The which the King of Caſtile did not doubt, but ſent Fernande of Robles, and Doctor Periagnez of his Councell, to Caſcante a Towne of Nauarre, to treate with the King Don Ihon touching his returne into Caſtile to end that which remained to doe touching Don Henry, the which hee yeelded vnto, and came to the King of Caſtile beeing at Roa, who entertained him kindly, and hauing beene there ſome dayes together, without ſpeaking of any affaires, the King of Caſtile went to Segobia, and hee of Nauarre to Medina del Campo. Soone after, in the beginning of the yeare one thouſand foure hundred twenty and ſix, hee came to Toro to the King of Caſtile, where hee gaue him an accompt of that which hee had negotiated with the King of Arragon his Brother, wherewith the D King ſeemed to bee very well ſatiſfied. The Eſtates were held there, by the which the King was let vnderſtand of the ſuperfluous charge of a thouſand Lances which hee led for his garde, the which coſt eight Millions of Marauidis, wherevpon they were reduced to a hundred, vnder the Conſtables charge, who was in ſuch authoritie and fauour, as euery man feared him openly, or hated him ſecretly. The Eſtates requiring alſo that the Kings exceſſiue gifts ſhould bee cut off, it was ordained, that all that had or ſhould be giuen by the King before the age of twenty fiue yeares, ſhould bee reputed voide: Many other good decrees were made, but they laſted little.

Eſtates at Toro, and their remonſtrances.

The King of Nauarre ſtaied in Caſtile, where he had great poſſeſſions, and was much E fauoured, yea for his ſake many Noblemen Caſtillans were aduanced to Offices in the Kings houſe, as Ruy Dias of Mendoça was made Lord Steward, and Ihon Aluaro of Gadillo Standard-bearer. As for himſelfe hee was wholy gouerned by Diego Gomes of Sandoual, whom he made Earle of Caſtro Xeris, a place which was of his patrimonie. There were three Leagues beginning in Court, one for the king of Nauarre, the ſecond for Henry his brother, and the third for the Conſtable Don Aluar de Luna, who increaſed dayly in authoritie. The king ſpent the reſt of that yeare one thouſand foure hundred twenty and ſixe, at Fuente del Sauco, at Vailledolit & at Zamora, where he cauſed ſome pettie mutiniers and rebels to bee puniſhed by Iuſtice, whileſt that great men, which troubled the realme, liued in all aſſurance.

F In the beginning of the yeare one thouſand foure hundred twenty and ſeauen, the Infant Don Henry and his wife Donna Catherina came from Valencia to Ocagne, where the hatred burſt forth betwixt the King of Nauarre, and the Conſtable Don Aluar de Luna being much fauoured and highly ſupported by the fauor of the King, who deſired alſo to entertaine the King of Nauarre. Don Henry aduancing towards the Court, came to Vailledolit, accompanied by the Maiſters of Calatraua and Alcantara, and others of the faction oppoſite to the Conſtable, it auailing nothing that the King, who was at Simanca, did write vnto him, and commanded him by many meſſages, that he ſhould not come to Court, but returne to Ocagne. The two Brethren entring into Vailledolit, being confederate with Don Pedro of Velaſco, who was Earle of Haro, and Lord Chamberlaine to the King, Don Inigo Lopes of Mendoça, Lord of Hita and Buitrago, who afterwards was the firſt Marquis of Sentillana, Don Fernand Aluares of Toledo Lord of the Vallee of Corneia, who afterwards was the firſt Earle of Alba, and his Vncle Don Guttiere Gomes of Tolledo Biſhop of Palence, the Maiſters of Calatraua and Alcantara, with other noble men of Caſtille, ſent to beſeech the King, that for ſome good reſpects he would command the Conſtable to retire from Court, for that the abſolute power which he did vſurpe In the gouernment of affaires, was the cauſe of many inconueniences. The King would haue it put to Compromiſe, and that the King of Nauarre on the one ſide, and Don Aluar on the other, ſhould deliuer their reaſons before Arbitrators: of which aduice Franciſco of Soria, a Franciſcan Friar was the Author. The Iudges named for the confederates, were Don Lewis of Guzman Maiſter of the Calatraua, and the Gouernour Don Pedro Manrique, and for the Conſtable, Don Alphonſo Henriques high Admirall of Caſtille, and Fernand Alphonſo of Robles, of the Kings Councell, and his chiefe Treaſurer: and for an Vmper the Abbot of Saint Benets in Vailledolit. All which gaue ſentence, that Don Aluaro de Luna the Conſtable, ſhould abſent himſelfe from Court, for the ſpace of eighteene moneths next enſuing, and not come within fifteene Leagues of it, and ſo ſhould they doe whom hee had put into the Kings Chamber.

Leagu. againſt the Conſtable Aluar de Luna.

D. Aluar de Luna the Conſtabl. baniſht from court.

The Conſtable yeelding to this ſentence, hee retired himſelfe to his houſe at Aillon, and the King of Nauarre with his brother Don Henrie, came to Cigales, where the King was, of whom they tooke their leaues with reaſonable good ſhewes of loue: yet Don Henry had a better countenance of him then the King of Nauarre, to whom they imputed the whole cauſe of the Conſtables diſmiſſion, which made the King the more deſirous to ſee him againe. And for that Fernando Alphonſo de Robles, one of the Kings Counſell, had beene one of the principall Inſtruments of all theſe alterations, hee was ſhut vp in the Caſtle of Segobia.

After all this, they treated of Don Henries affaires, and of his confederates. The accord which the King made there with Don Henry, beſides the reſtitution of his goods, and the dignitie of the maiſterſhip of Saint Iames, was, that for the Marquiſate of Villena, hee ſhould enioy Trugillo and Alcaras, with their appurtenances, and other lands in the country of Guadalajara: Moreouer they gaue him two hundred thouſand Florens of gold in ready money, and a Million and two hundred thouſand ſmall Marauidis of yeerely penſion during his life. To the King of Nauarre for his charges during the troubles, hee gaue a hundred thouſand Florins to bee payde by a certaine time. There was then preſent Inigo Ortiz of Eſtuniga, Marſhall of Nauarre, who had married Donna Ioane baſe Siſter to the Queene Donna Blanche.

Accord made by the King with Don Henry.

The King diſcharged and ſent home to their houſes a great number of vnneceſſarie men which followed the court without cauſe, who were but a burthen to him and the country: and to take away all occaſion of diſtruſt and new troubles, hee granted a generall pardon to all men, of what Eſtate, quality, or condition ſoeuer they were, that had medled with the precedent troubles. Hee reſtored Don Ruy Lopes of Auales the Conſtable (beeing accuſed to haue had Intelligence with the Moores, by letters produced to the Kings Councell) to his honour and fame, but hee neither reſtored him to his Office nor goods. Amideſt theſe treaties the Conſtable Aluaro de Luna was called backe againe to the court, his verie enemies conſenting therevnto, yea the King of Nauarre, and his brother Don Henry, who grew after ſo iealous one of an other, who ſhould bee in the Conſtables fauour, as they entred into factions: wherefore the King of Caſtile imploying therein the Queene of Nauar, and the Eſtates alſo of Nauarre, they perſwaded their King to returne into his realme. D. Henry went in pilgrimage to Saint Iames, and then was ſent to the Moores frontier, who began to raiſe ſome tumults, as we will hereafter ſhew.

D. Ruy Lopes of Auales reſtored to his honor and good name, but not to his goods.

The

A The King of Caſtile being at Vailledolit, D.Leonora Infanta of Arragon, ſiſter to the King of Nauarre, paſt thereby going into Portugal, to be married to Prince Edward, the heire of that Realme, to whom the King her couſin gaue the beſt reception he could, honouring her with rich preſents, money and men to accompany her. Soone after the King being at Arando of Duero, he receiued D. Pedro Infant of Portugal, and Duke of Coimbra, very gratiouſly, being alſo his couſin germaine: for D. Philippe mother to D. Pedro, and Donna Conſtance mother to the King D. Iohn, were ſiſters daughters to the duke of Lancaſter, but by diuers ventures. This Prince came from trauailling ouer Chriſtendome: and it is he of whom it is ſaid in Portugal, that hee had ſeene the ſeuen parts of the world, that is to ſay all: from thence he paſt much honoured into Portugal. D. Pedro of Portugal a great trauel-ler.

B In like manner there came the ſame yeere into Caſtile, D.Pedro Infant of Arragon, in his returne from Naples, whereas the affaires had not beene very ſucceſſull for the Arragonois: where he went to ſee the Queene Donna Leonora his mother, at Medina del Campo. The King freed D. Garci Fernandes Manrique out of priſon, who had beene committed with the Infant D. Henry. Thus paſt the gouernment of Caſtile vnto the end of the yeere 1428.

In the which the King of Arragon hauing made an accord with Pope Martin, he forced the Antipope Gil Mugnos, reſyding in the caſtle of Pegniſcola to renounce the Popedome, hauing held it foure yeeres; whereby the Schiſme in the church of Rome ended, hauing continued foure and forty yeeres. Ths Gil Mugnos had in recompence C the Biſhoprike of Majorca, and was receiued into the bōſome of the church, and in fauor with the Apoſtolike ſea of Rome. The Cardinals created by him gaue ouer their hats, and Martin remained ſole Pope. Arragon.

This yeere beganne an other ſect of Monkes of Saint Ieroſme, ſpringing out of that of Saint Bartlemew of Lupiana, wherevnto Friar Lopes of Olmedo, a Doctor of the lawes, and a religious man in that Monaſtery, gaue the beginning. Hauing beene choſen by the Monkes of Saint Bartlemew to be generall of their Order, being deſirous to reforme them, he gathered out of the Bookes of Saint Ieroſme, and others, a cetaine rule and manner of lyuing, which hee ſaid, had beene held in Bethelem, wherevpon that great Doctor, and his Monkes preſcribed that monacall weed, which he ſaid was vſed by them, 35 Caſtile.

D and hauing preſented all vnto Pope Martin, hee cauſed his order to be allowed, vnder the name of friars hermits of Saint Ieroſme, of the obſeruance of Bethelem, and then he ſought to haue it receiued in Spaine, by the religious of his Order, and to reforme them to bee more perfect, according to the ſame: but they told him plainely, that they would none of it, wherefore he was forced to finde out other followers. He therefore erected a conuent vnder that title neere vnto Seuile, called of Saint Iſidro, a name which hath remained to this new ſect, ſo as there haue beene ſince in Spaine two ſorts of Monkes of Saint Ieroſme, the one of Lupiana, and the other of Saint Iſidro, or of friar Lope. This Order of Monkes makes the fourth of them that liue vnder the Romiſh church in Spaine, numbred with the Bernadins, Benedictins and Carthuſians. Theſe Foure Orders of Monkes which beg not.

E Iſidres haue multiplied in ſuch ſort, as ſince they haue extended themſelues farre into Italy, and other Regions. And althought that their beginning be from Spaine, and that in the beginning the chiefe of their order was a Spaniard, yet in ſucceſſion of time, and through the negligence of the Spaniards, the Italians haue gotten it: and whereas they ſent vice-generals of this Order out of Spaine into Italy, now it is otherwiſe. Such were the effects of the doctrine of that age.

Whileſt that D. Iohn King of Nauarre, and his wife D. Blanche were in Caſtile, the E- Nauarre.

F ſtates of Nauarre aſſembled, and tooke a new oth to D.Charles Prince of Viana. Queene Blanch went firſt into Nauarre, and ſoone after the King her husband arriued, hauing made a renuntiation of certaine lands in Caſtile, in fauour of his ſonne D.Charles, being then ſeuen yeeres old, where the leagues were renued betwixt Caſtile, Nauarre and Arragon, King Iohn hauing full power from King D.Alphonſo his brother. And on Whitſonday 1429. the King D. Iohn and Queene Blanche his wife were crowned at Pampelone, the three Eſtates of the realme being aſſembled, and the rights, preuiledges and liberties of the country ſworne by them. D.Martin of Peralta Biſhop of Pampelone did the ceremony of the vnction, and others accuſtomed in ſuch caſes. There were preſent the Ambaſſadors of forraine Princes, the Biſhops of Calaorra, Tarraſſone and Bayone, with many Noblemen and Knights of Nauarre, Caſtile and Arragon. At this coronation there was againe ſworne and confirmed the matrimoniall conuentions betwixt the King D. Iohn, and D. Blanche the heire, made in the time of King Charles her father.

The Eſtate of the Moores of Granado, during theſe tumults in Caſtile, had beene quiet, by prorogation of the truce with the King of Caſtile, and his councell, in conſideration of a certaine tribute, which was paied by King Ioſeph vntill his death, the which was in the yeere 1423. being very old, and hauing enioyed the realme fifteene yeeres.

Mahumet the Left-handed, called Aben-Azar the foureteenth King of Granado.

Moores.

AFter Ioſeph reigned his ſonne Mahumet, called Aben-Azar, the Scepter of Granado continuing by him in the ſucceſſion of Ferrachen, who was Gouernor of Malaga. This King who was left-handed of his perſon, had alſo a ſiniſter reigne: for he was thrice chaſed from his throne, after great miſeries, and twice reſtored. Theſe ſeditious changes were ordinary, and haue alwaies beene amongſt the Arabians, who are inconſtant, treacherous, rauiſhing and ambitious, if there be any liuing. King Mahumet did maintaine the truce, and entertaine himſelfe in the fauour and friendſhip of the King of Caſtile, for ſome yeeres, and in like manner with Muley Aben Ferriz King of Tunes: but he could not get the loue of his owne ſubiects. In the beginning of his reigne, he made a Knight whoſe name was Ioſeph, of the family of Aben Sarraces (which was great and much eſteemed amongſt that nation) Alguazil Major or chiefe Marſhall of Granado. The troubles of Caſtile, whereas many Noblemen, yea D. Henry Maiſter of Saint Iames, banded againſt their King, was a preſident for the Moores, who conſpired againſt this Left-handed Mahumet, in fauour of an other of the ſame name, ſurnamed the Little: ſo as they made him King, and forced Mahumet to flie to Tunes, to King Muley Aben Ferriz his friend: in which exile he was followed by about fiue hundred Moores of his faction, as well horſe as foote, who were all well entertained, and afterwards aſſiſted to recouer the loſt Kingdome in Spaine.

Mahumet Aben-Azar expelled.

Mahumet the Little, the fifteenth King of Granado.

MAhumet called the Little, reigned then about the yeere 1427. the eleuenth of that name, and fifteenth King of the Moores at Granado. The ſurname of Little, was giuen him, to diſtinguiſh him from his predeceſſor, who raigned before him. This King entring by tyrany, thought that rigour and cruelty was the beſt means to maintaine him in his Eſtate, as commonly tyrants doe; wherefore he beganne to perſecute the Officers, friends and partiſans of his predeceſſor (whom he had expelled) by impriſonments, baniſhments, confiſcations and cruell deaths, whereas many were ruined, and many alſo eſcaped, amongſt the which was the Alguazil Ioſeph Aben Sarrax, who fled to Lorca a towne in the realme of Murcia, ſubmitting himſelfe to the mercy of the King of Caſtile, and of the Gouernor of Lorca, who was Lope Alphonſo of Lorca, who afterwards led him to court, and preſented him to the King D. Iohn at Illeſca, a towne belonging to the Archbiſhop of Toledo, ſeated betwixt Madrid and Toledo. The King gaue good entertainment to this Moore, from whom he vnderſtood the reſolutions of Granado, Lope Alphonſo being truchman betwixt them. The King being intreated by Ioſeph Aben Sarrax, to aide his maiſter to recouer his realme, hee yeelded vnto it, and hauing giuen him many preſents, and ſhewed him all fauour, he ſent him with Lope Alphonſo in Ambaſſage

A to Tunes, to let King Mahumet vnderſtand how much hee deſired to doe him good, and to exhort him of Tunes, to aide and fauour his gueſt. The buſineſſe ſucceeded ſo well, as Mahumet Aben Azar, receiuing money, and all other kinde of aide, from the King of Tunes, he paſt from Tunes to Oran, and then croſſing the ſea, hee came and landed at Vera in Granado, whoſe comming being divulged through the country, the towns thereabouts, yea that of Almery, opened their gates vnto him. Mahumet the Little, who held the Realme, reſolued to make head againſt him, thinking that his forces were yet but weake, ſending about eight hundred horſe and ſome foote before to incounter him, moſt of which ioyned with Mahumet Aben Azar, who purſuing his good fortune, entred
B with the like facility into Guadix, yea hee was receiued into the city of Granado: ſo as Mahumet the Little, his competitor was forced to ſhut and fortefie himſelfe, in the Alhambra of Granado; where he was preſently beſeeged, Aben Azar lodging his campe at a place called Alcabiçar, neere to the fort of Alhambra: to whoſe obedience there preſently yeelded the townes of Malaga, Gibraltar, Ronde, and in the end the whole realme: wherefore Mahumet the Little, being hated and abandoned of all men, and fainting, hee was forced, and taken in the caſtle of Alhambra, with his children, where hee ended his daies miſerably, and his children were kept priſoners. Thus Mahumet Aben Azar recouered the realme, two yeeres after he had beene expelled, in the yeere 1429. and of the Arabians 812.

Mahumet Aben-Azar recouers his realme of Granado.

Mahumet the vſurper taken and put to death.

An. 1429.

C The King of Nauarre at his departure out of Caſtile, left Diego Gomes of Sandoual, Earle of Caſtro Xeris, his familiar friend there, who preſently cauſed the townes of Pegnafiel, Portillo and Caſtro Xeris to bee repaired, which made D. Iohn King of Caſtile conceiue, that there was ſome enterpriſe in hand to his preiudice, and that the King of Nauarre was gone away diſcontented with him. In which opinion he was confirmed by the newes which he receiued, that they leauied both foote and horſe in Nauarre and Arragon, the which they couered with a pretext to ſend them into France, to ſuccour King Charles againſt the Engliſh: Moreouer that hauing treated an accord and pacification betwixt Caſtile, Nauarre and Arragon, although the King of Nauarre had ſigned it, yet he of Arragon would not heare of it. For theſe cauſes the King of Caſtile ſent
D friar Francis of Soria his confeſſor, and Peter of Boccanegra Deane of Cuenca, Ambaſſadors into Nauarre, to know what the King of Nauarres intention was, and to complaine of the Earle of Caſtros doings, and of other things, whereof hee was aduertiſed, which were practiſed againſt him, and the Eſtate of Caſtile. To whom anſwer was made, that they did not practiſe any thing againſt him, and that the ſouldiars which were leauied, were not to bee ſent into Caſtile, and if they ſhould, it were not for any thing that might offend the King their maiſter.

37 Caſtile.

But in effect D. Iohn King of Nauarre, hee of Arragon, and D. Henry their brother, were conſpired againſt the gouernment of Caſtile, and they had an intent to trouble the State, to pull downe them that were great, and to aduance others, who were kept vnder
E or chaſed away; aboue all the King of Nauarre was furiouſly iealous of the Conſtables D. Aluaro de Lunas greatneſſe, and other things that were managed in that court contrary to his liking: and as he was of a turbulent ſpirit, hee did not ceaſe to ſeeke occaſion of quarrels, entertaining his brother D. Alphonſo king of Arragon in the hatred which he had conceiued againſt the king of Caſtile, for the impriſonment of D. Henry. Theſe two Princes being thus diſpoſed, all things prepared to warre, the which did much trouble the Queene Donna Blanche, and the Eſtates of Nauarre, who intreated him that hee would forbeare, and enioy his realme in peace, and thoſe goodly Eſtates which hee had in Caſtile, whereas the Queenes dowry was aſſigned, & the reuenues of many Lordſhips affected to Prince Charles his ſonne: but they were not heard, and much leſſe a ſecond
F Ambaſſage from the King of Caſtile, in which were D. Alphonſo Tenorio, Notary or Secretary of the realme of Toledo, and Doctor Fernand Gonçales of Auila councellor of State to the King of Caſtile, with two deputies of townes: wherefore the King of Caſtile made preparation, and leauied men of all ſides, to reſiſt the kings of Nauarre and Arragon, and he tooke a new oth of fealty of all the Noblemen of his realme, eſpecially of the Infant D. Henry.

Ceremonie in taking poſſeſſion the realme of Nauarre.

Here-

Herevpon the King of Nauarre ſent to excuſe himſelfe, and to require an enterview of A the King of Caſtile, but his excuſes were not credited, yet the enterview was graunted.
Death of D. Alphonſo Henriques Admiral of Caſtile. At this time there being dead D. Alphonſo Henriques high Admiral of Caſtile, baſe ſonne to D. Frederic maiſter of Saint Iames and grand-child to King D. Alphonſo the twelfth, there was ſubſtituted in his place his ſonne D. Frederic; his body was interred at Saint Clara in Palence, founded by him. The Kings troupes being ready to march, the conſtable went towards the frontier of Arragon with two hundred launces, and the King led the reſt of his forces towards Pegnafiel, whereas the Earle of Caſtro and the Infant D Pedro, brother to the Kings of Arragon and Nauarre, had fortefied themſelues. Their other brother, D. Henry, ſought in the meane time to leauy men about Toledo, but the B
Warre of the Caſtillan againſt Arragon and Nauarre. Inhabitants hindred him. The King ſommoned D. Pedro and the Earle to yeeld vp the towne of Pegnafiel, vpon paine to be proclaimed traitors, and to be ſo condemned; ſo as the Earle yeelded vp the towne, vpon honorable conditions, and amongſt others, not to be bound to carry armes againſt the King of Nauarre. The caſtle which was commanded by Gonçalo Gomes of Sumel, held ſome daies. On the other ſide the Kings of Arragon and Nauarre, entred into Caſtile, with two thouſand fiue hundred men at armes, and ſome few foote, whoſe entry the conſtable could not ſtop, with whom Don Henry ioyned with two hundred and twenty horſe, againſt the promiſes made. They ranne neere vnto Cogollado, and beeing come to Xadraque, the Conſtable following them, they preſented him battaile, the which he would not accept, for Peter Cardinal of C Foix ſonne to Archimbaud, and Mary Queene of Arragon, ſiſter to the King of Caſtile, came by great iourneies out of Arragon, and put themſelues betwixt them, making an entrance to an accord, which was, that the two Kings ſhould returne into their realmes, and that the conſtable and other noblemen of the King of Caſtiles army, ſhould intreat him to reſtore vnto the King of Nauarre, and to the Infant D. Henry their lands: for as ſoone as the army of Arragon and Nauarre had entred into Caſtile, the King did cauſe all that the houſe of Arragon did hold in Caſtile, to bee ſeized on. By this meanes the armies parted, and the two brethren Kings came to Huerta and Hariza, in Arragon, and the Infant D. Henry to Ocagne; but the indignation of D. Iohn King of Caſtile, was ſo great, as he did not regard, that which had beene capitulated, but ſent to all his ſubiects, D that they ſhould hold the Arragonois and Nauarrois for enemies, and make violent warre againſt them, and comming himſelfe in perſon to the campe at Piquera, hee reſolued to goe and charge his enemies in their fort at Hariza. Queene Mary and the Cardinall Foix returned againe to the King of Caſtile, propounding many meanes of peace, but all in vaine: wherevpon they returned, very much diſcontented. D. Frederic of Caſtile Earle of Arjone, was apprehended in the army, vpon ſuſpition that he fauored the Arragonois: war being proclaimed throughout al Caſtile, the inhabitants of the country of Biſcay, Guipuſcoa, Alaua, and Rioja, entred ſodainely into Nauarre, where they committed infinit ſpoiles. Thus an innocent Realme ſuffred for a nocent King, whom they had earneſtly intreated to entertaine peace with Caſtile. E

The King of Caſtiles army being ſtrong and ready to enter into Arragon, hee ſent word to D. Alphonſo King of Arragon, that he would ſpare his country, if hee would forſake the king of Nauarre, the which he refuſed: wherevpon the conſtable of Caſtile beeing followed by fiue hundred horſe, marcht to Monreal, tooke it, ſpoiled Cetina, and Army of the King of Caſtile. finding no reſiſtance, returned to the army, which conſiſted of 7000. men at armes, 3600 genets or light horſe, and 60000. foot, with the which King Iohn entred into Arragon, where he tooke and burnt the towne of Hariza, but hee attempted not the caſtle, which was very ſtrong: this was all the exploit was done with that mighty army: for the two brethren Kings not preſenting themſelues to battaile, and victuals fayling for ſo great an army, he was forced to retire into Caſtile, towards Medina Celi, from whence F he ſent for the gard of the frontier, D. Pedro of Velaſco his Lord Chamberlain, with 600. launces to lie with them in Alfaro, Calaorra, or Logrogno: againſt whom the King of Nauarre did fortefie Tudele, Viana and La Garde.

In the meane time D. Henry and D. Pedro brethren to the kings, ouerran the country of Eſtremadura, hauing to incounter them Don Roderigo Alonſo Pimentel, Earle of Benauent

A Benauent, who finding himſelfe weake, had the Conſtable ſent to him, with ſufficient forces. The king being returned to Pegnafiel, wrought ſo as the captaine of the caſtle yeelded it vnto him, fearing to be put in the ranke of rebells and traitors to their Prince. The king of Arragon ſlept not, but imploying his forces (his enemy being farre of) hee tooke in Caſtile, in the country of Soria, Deca, and the caſtles of Ciria, Boronia and Bozmediano, carrying away an infinite number of priſoners, aboue forty thouſand charges of corne, and great ſtore of cattle and other ſpoiles. The king of Caſtile was much mooued with theſe newes, and gaue all the lands which the king of Nauarre, his ſonne D. Charles, the Queene Donna Blanche, and the Infant D. Henry held in Caſtile, to D. Henry his ſonne, Prince of the Aſturia's, and he ſent D. Pedro of Velaſco to make moſt
B violent warres in Nauarre: and being reſolued to enter himſelfe in perſon the next yeere with a great army, he called the Eſtates to Burgos, to haue money, demaunding a hundred millions of Marauidis to entertaine it ſixe monthes: and for that their was ſome difficulty to draw together ſo great a ſumme he borrowed of rich men, and of churches, all their plate and ſiluer veſſel, and ſent it to bee coined at Seuile. During the aſſembly at Burgos, there came Ambaſſadors from the kings of Nauarre and Arragon, which were, Peter of Peralta, the Abbot of Ronceuaux, Doctor Iohn of Lezana, D. Iohn of Luna, and Berenguel of Bardaxi, to treat of a peace, to whom anſwere was made, that the king of Caſtile would ſend Ambaſſadors expreſly to giue them a conuenient anſwere: and to them of Nauarre, ſhewing particularly in the name of Queene Blanch and of her ſonne
C D. Charles, that they had not done any thing, for the which they ſhould ſeize their rents and penſions, yea the Queenes dowry, who had neuer conſented to theſe quarrels, the like anſwere was made. The Ambaſſadors of Caſtile were D. Sancho of Rojas Biſhop of Aſtorga, Pero Lope of Ayala Marſhall of the kings body, and D. Fernando Gonçales of Auila, of the Kings councell. Who being come into Nauarre, made great complaints of D. Iohn King of Nauarre, accuſing him of great faults, wherein they did alſo comprehend the Queene, ſaying, that ſhe was a confederate in the warre, ſeeing that ſhe had ſold her iewels to furniſh her husband with money, and made other demonſtrations of an enemy. From Nauarre they paſt into Arragon, where they gaue as little hope of peace: wherefore King D. Alphonſo ſent Ambaſſadors to Rome, to Pope Martin, to complaine D of the King of Caſtile, who refuſed all honeſt meanes of an accord. The Conſtable being come into Extremadura, he made the Infants D. Henry and D. Pedro retire towards Albuquerque, vpon the frontier of Portugal, whether they ſent great ſtore of cattle, hoping they ſhould ſerue to victual them, for the which the King of Portugal was glad to excuſe himſelfe to the King of Caſtile, who complained. The Conſtable tooke Trugillo, and hauing ſeized alſo of the caſtle by the meanes of one of the captaines of the garriſon, he deliuered it into the Kings hands: hee attempted Montanches, and hauing taken D. Roderigo Alphonſo Pimentel Earle of Benauent with him, he came and camped before Albuquerque, an impregnable fort, but hee deſired to draw the Infants to fight Knight to Knight, but they would not vouchſafe to accept it: wherefore he retired his ar-E my towards Pierrebonne, from whence hauing aduertiſed the King of the Eſtate of his affaires, he came preſently to the campe, and then the caſtle of Montanches yeelded, by intelligence which the conſtable had with the captaine. The Prouinces and townes of Caſtile did furniſh the King with fiue and forty millions of Marauidies for the warre: and there was an Ambaſſage ſent to Rome to Pope Martin to free the King of Caſtile of the imputations which were laied vpon him by him of Arragon. The King of Nauarre making ſhew to enter into Caſtile by Briones, D. Pedro of Velaſco went to field, with all the troupes he could gather together, hauing drawne out of Biſcay three thouſand men, led by Iohn of Abendagno, Ordogno Garcia Arrega, Gonçalo Gomes of Butron, F and his ſonne Gomes Gonçalo of Muxica, Lord of the houſe of Muxica, and finding no man to make head againſt him hee went to beſeege the towne of Saint Vincent, the which was taken by aſſault, but whileſt the Biſcains were buſie at the pillage, not caring to keepe any order, nor martiall diſcipline, entring confuſedly into the houſes, without any gards vpon the approches: being entred into the houſes, the Inhabitants who were armed, and retired into the caſtles, ſeeing this confuſed multitude in their towne, they brake brake out vpon them, and incountring Gomes Gonçales in the ſtreet, with a ſmall company they tooke him, hauing ſlain moſt of his ſouldiers: whoſe father Gonçalo Gomes of Butron, running to ſuccour him, beeing as ill accompanied as his ſonne, was ſlaine with ſome of his men, and could not be releeued. D. Pedro of Velaſco, ſeeing that the caſtle could not be forced with a long and painefull ſeege, he ſet fire on the ſuburbes, and of ſome houſes in the towne, and then returned to Haro, carrying with him many of his Knights and good ſouldiers wounded. The towne of Saint Vincent, for the loſſe it ſuſtained then, and for the good ſeruice it did in the warre betwixt Nauarre and Caſtile, obtayned many priuiledges and freedomes for the inhabitants thereof. He among the Nauarrois which did moſt harme to the Caſtillans, was a Knight called Sancho of Londogno the kings Marſhall, iſſued from the houſe of Londogno, neere to Ordugna, a member of Biſcay: he running one day into Rioja, was ſurprized by the ambuſhes which Diego Peres Sarmiento captaine of Baſtide had layed for him, who carried him priſoner to that fort: but this loſſe was ſoone recompenced by Ruy Dias of Mendoça the bald, borne at Seuile, and yet he did ſerue the king of Nauarre faithfully, and was gone foorth of Tudele with foure hundred horſe and fiue hundred foot, ouer-running the countrie of Agreda, againſt whom D. Inigo Lope of Mendoça Lord of Hita and Buitrago (who kept a garriſon there for the king of Caſtile) ſallying foorth, and comming to fight in the field of Arauiana, he was there vanquiſhed, with the death and impriſonment of many Caſtillans. At that time the Infanta D. Izabella of Portugall, daughter to the king D. Iohn, was married to Philip Duke of Bourgondie, Earle of Flanders, and Lord of many other Seigneuries, who had two wiues without any children. Of this mariage was born Charles whoſe daughter and onely heire was afterwards married to Maximilian of Auſtria. The very day that this marriage betwixt D. Philip, and the Infanta Izabella was celebrated with great pompe at Bruges, the Order of Bourgondie of the golden fleece was inſtituted by him, the tenth yeare after his comming to it, vppon a vow which he had made to go and make warre againſt the Infidels of Syria, and to conquer the countrie of Iurie: but his great affaires made his vow fruitleſſe. His Order had for head and patron (I know not by what diuinity) S. Andrew, and the ſolemnitie of the Order was to be celebrated euery yeare three dayes together, whoſe knights ſhould be the firſt day attired in red, in ſigne that heauen is purchaſed by the effuſion of bloud and by Martyrdome: the ſecond day in blacke, repreſenting mourning for the dead: and the third in white, in honour of the puritie of the Virgin Mary: and they ſhould carry for a marke of their knight-hood, a chaine made in faſhion of fuzils, with a rams skin & fleece hanging at it: a deuiſe taken, not from the Pagan Iaſon, but from the faithfull Gedeon, as ſome ſay. The firſt knights of this Order were foure and twenty in number, of the Nobleſt and moſt renouned of his Eſtates of Burgondy, Flanders and the Netherlands: wherewith ſince many Princes and great Noblemen of Spaine and other places, haue held themſelues much honoured. This was that Duke Philip, who to reuenge the death of his father Iohn, murthered at Montreau-faut-Yonne by the Dauphin Charles, drew the Engliſh into France, to the ruine of his naturall country, as you may read at large in the Hiſtory of France.

1430. The yeere 1430. being come, D. Iohn King of Caſtile prepared to make warre againſt the King of Nauarre, againſt whom he had the greateſt ſpleene; and forgetting no kinde of rigour, he reſolued to depriue him and his of all the lands which they held in Caſtile, without euer hoping to re-enter into them: and therefore he gaue to D. Guttiere of Toledo Biſhop of Palence, and afterwards Archbiſhop of Toledo, the towne of Alua de Tormes, to D. Pedro Manrique Gouernor of Leon, the towne of Paredes de Naua: to D. Roderigo Alphonſo Pimentel, Earle of Benauent, Majorga: to the Marſhall Inigo Ortiz of Eſtuniga, Cerezo: he would haue giuen to Fernand Diaz of Toledo, fiue hundred vaſſals in the lands which did belong to D. Iohn King of Nauarre, but hee refuſed them: He gaue to D. Frederic of Arragon Earle of Luna, baſe ſonne to Martin King of Sicile, Villalon and Cuellar: to Queene Mary his wife Olmedo; and other places to other Knights. The king being come to field, before the fort of Albuquerque, hee cauſed the Infants D. Henry and D. Pedro to bee ſommoned, to yeeld him the place, promiſing that the Infants ſhould be herd in Iuſtice, and that all the reſt ſhould haue a generall pardon: giuing

giuing the Infants thirty daies time to reſolue, and the reſt forty: but their anſwers were arrowes and bullets, with great daunger to the Kings perſon, who being in a great rage at their obſtinacy, he cauſed D. Henries proceſſe to be made, and gaue the adminiſtration of the maiſter-ſhip of Saint Iames to the conſtable, diuiding his lands to diuerſe Knights, very prodigally, as hee had done the King of Nauarres. In the meane time D. Diego of Eſtuniga, or Suniga, Biſhop of Calaorra, and Calçada and his vncle D. Pedro of Eſtuniga, Earle of Ledeſma, Iuſtice Major of Caſtile, and an other D. Diego of Eſtuniga his couſin, with the forces of the frontier, tooke the towne of La Garde in Nauarre, by Scalado, being two leagues from Logrogno, the caſtle held out, and coſt many good mens liues, on either ſide, and beeing fortefied with new ſuccors, ſent from the King of Nauarre, they made furious and bloudy ſallies vpon their enemies, who held the towne, but in the end they were ſo preſt by the Biſhop and the Earle of Ledeſma, as they did capitulate to yeeld, if by a day prefixt they were not releeued by the King their Lord; during the which there ſhould be a ceſſation of armes; and if there came any ſuccors, the beſeeged ſhould bee bound to aduertiſe the Biſhop that hee might doe as hee pleaſed. This accord being made, the captaine of the place beſeeged made a mine vnder ground, by the which he drew into the caſtle a great number of ſouldiars, which the King of Nauarre had ſent him, vpon the aduertiſment of the capitulation. The time beeing ready to expire, the captaine aduertiſed the Biſhop, that the ſuccors were arriued, and at that inſtant he opened the mine in the mideſt of the place, from whence iſſued great numbers of ſouldiars of Nauarre, who beganne to charge the Caſtillans, which cauſed a great confuſion amongſt them, and did much trouble the Biſhop; yet beeing madde with this treachery, they put themſelues in defence, and repulſt the Nauarrois into the caſtle ditch, hauing loſt many good men of either ſide. This hauing not ſucceeded ſo happely as the Nauarrois expected & their victuals fayling them, by little and little they abandoned the fort: So La Garde both towne and caſtle remained in the King of Caſtiles power. The Queene D. Leonora mother to the Princes of Arragon, ſorrowful for ſo many ruines, being old, and wholy giuen to deuotion, lyuing at Medina del Campo, in her Monaſtery of S^t. Iohn de las Duegnas, was not exempt from the diſcommodities of this war: for the King of Caſtile ſuſpecting that ſhe fauored her children, cauſed her to be ſhut vp in Santa Clara of Tordiſillas, and put garriſons in her houſes of Montalban, Vruegna, and Tyedra: and would haue done as much at Caſtro Xeris, and Saldagne, but the Earle found meanes to exempt himſelfe, and yet the King was not very well pleaſed with him. The court being in Aſtudillo, there came an Ambaſſador from Iohn Earle of Foix, father to Gaſton, who afterwards married Leonora the heire of Nauarre, who beſought the King of Caſtile, that he would bee pleaſed that the Earle his maſter might imploy himſelfe, to make a peace betwixt him and the Kings of Nauar and Arragon: to whom the King of Caſtile anſwered, that he did thanke the Earle of Foix for his good will, but there was no meanes of a peace. On the other ſide the Earle of Armaignac, an enemy to the King of Nauarre and the Earle of Foix, hauing giuen all the hindrance hee could towards Gaſcony, that no ſuccors ſhould paſſe out of France to the King of Nauarre, for the which he had beene at great charge, hee ſent to intreat the King of Caſtile, to reimbourſe him, to whom were paied ten thouſand florins of gold. This yeere D. Pedro of Velaſco, Generall vpon the frontier of Nauarre, was created Earle of Haro. The King being at Burgos, had newes that the Infant D. Pedro ouerrunnning the country about Zamora, had taken the caſtle of Alua de Liſta: and paſſing afterwards to Oſma, which was the Rendezvous for the army of Caſtile, there came vnto him a Franciſcan friar, confeſſor to Donna Blanch Queene of Nauarre, whom they called Archbiſhop of Tyre: Peter of Perault chiefe Steward to the King of Nauarre, and Ramir Deane of Tudelo, councellor to the King, Ambaſſadors for the King of Nauarre; and for him of Arragon, D. Dominike Biſhop of Lerida D. Raymond of Perillos, and William of Vigue, Knights, ſent to treat and conclude a peace, at what price ſoeuer.

The difficulties were very great, and they were forced to ſend backe ſome of the Ambaſſadors to the two brethren Kings, and in the meane time the army marched: but the reaſons, and propoſitions of the Ambaſſadors were in the end admitted, and a truce truce was accorded at Majano, for fiue yeeres, both by ſea and land, betwixt the King of A Truce betwixt the King of Caſtile and the King of Arragon and Nauarre. Caſtile, and D. Henry his ſonne Prince of Aſturia's, on the one part; and D. Alphonſo King of Arragon, D. Iohn King of Nauarre, D. Blanch his wife, and D. Charles Prince of Viana, their ſonne on the other part: into which truce there entred for the King of Caſtile, the Earle of Armaignac; and for the two Kings brethren, the Earle of Foix. It was alſo agreed, that D. Godfrey of Nauarre, Earle of Cortes, brother in law to King Iohn, who had followed the party of Caſtile, ſhould not be troubled nor moleſted in the perception of his goods, nor otherwiſe. This Knight ſtaied long in Caſtile, and did the King good ſeruice in his warres againſt the Moores: the like aſſurance was graunted in regard of the Infants D. Henry and D. Pedro: and to iudge of the differences during the B truce, there were ſeuen perſons named for Nauarre and Arragon, and ſeuen for Caſtile, whoſe ſeat ſhould be at Taraſſone and Agreda, alternatiuely. Thus ended the warre betwixt Caſtile, Nauarre and Arragon, to the great preiudice of the King of Nauarre: for he was diſpoſſeſt of all the lands he had in Caſtile, and moreouer of the towne of Garde in Nauar. During theſe treaties, D. Frederic Duke of Arjone died a priſoner at Pegnafiel, Death of the Duke of Arjone. whoſe Dutchy and Eſtates were giuen to D. Frederic of Arragon, Earle of Luna. There were alſo reſtored vnto Queen Leonora her houſes & caſtles, and ſhe was ſet liberty, and freed from the Monaſtery of Santa Clara of Tordeſillas, at the intreaty of the King of Portugal, to whom the King of Caſtile ſent the proceedings againſt her foure ſonnes, the King and Infants of Arragon, and their offences, to the end that ſhe might ſee what C reaſon he had to confiſcate their lands. The ſame yeere King Iohn of Caſtile, was ſollicited to make a league of friendſhip with the Engliſh, but he excuſed himſelfe touching the league, beeing loath to doe any thing to the preiudice of the King and Realme of France, an ancient friend and confederate to the crowne of Caſtile, ſending backe the Ambaſſadors with a diſcreet and friendly anſwere: and ſoone after hauing ſent D. Sancho of Rojas Biſhop of Aſtorgo to the King of England, hee concluded a truce betwixt Spaine and England for one yeere. At the ſame time beeing ſought vnto by the King of Granado to continue peace and friendſhip betwixt them, the ſaid Mooriſh King offring him all the force of Granado to ſerue him at his will, he gaue him thankes for the offer, and by an Ambaſſador which hee ſent expreſly to Granado, to conclude ſome D truce, he deſcouered the Eſtate of that realme. The Ambaſſador, who was Lewis Gonçales of Luna, Gouernor of Cordoua, found King Mahumet averſe to thoſe conditions which the King of Caſtile demaunded: wherefore he returned without any concluſion, reporting how little aſſurance there was of the Moores faith; which made the King of Caſtile to thinke vpon the affaires of that frontier, and to man it well, ſending ſome preſents to the King of Tunes, by Lopes Alphonſo of Lorca, his Ambaſſador, with complaints againſt the King of Granado, intreating him that he would not ſuccor him in the warre which he was reſolued to make againſt him.

Moores. Mahumet Aben-Azar King of Granado, was, as we haue ſaid, reſtored to his regal ſeat, in the yeere 1429. two yeeres after his exile, who ſhewed himſelfe thankefull to the King E of Caſtile, for the fauour and aide which he had giuen him in the recouery of his realme, ſending ſundry Ambaſſages vnto him, with offers and thankes: but refuſing this yeere to pay the tribute and penſions to the King of Caſtile, which he demaunded, of friends they became enemies, and the warre was begunne by Diego of Riuera, Gouernor of the frontier, who running through the plaine of Granado, tooke aboue two hundred horſe, and towards Ronda, D. Fernando Aluares of Toledo, Lord of Val de Corneja, did great ſpoiles vpon the Moores. The King of Caſtile meaning to imploy D. Diego Gomes of Sandoual, Earle of Caſtro Xeris, in this warre, hee ſent for him to court; but the Earle diſtruſting the King, retired to Briones a place belonging to Nauarre, from whence hee ſent to make his excuſe, but it was not allowed. Wherevpon the King cauſed F his proceſſe to bee made, and by a ſentence giuen at Zamora hee was condemned by contumacy, as a rebell, his caſtle of Caſtro Xeris was confiſked, and deliuered Caſtro Xeris confiſked. by the Captaine thereof to Iohn of Luxan, Ramir of Tamojo, and to Doctor Fernand Dias of Toledo, whom the King had ſent thether. The Earle hauing many great men, and of the Kings fauorits which hated him, durſt neuer more appeare in his preſence.

A Before he entred into Granado, Don Iohn King of Caſtile, keeping his Court at Medina del Campo, was ſollicited by the Ambaſſadors of Portugal, to make a perpetuall peace betwixt the two realmes, wherevnto hee conſented, and it was ſworne in the yeare one thouſand foure hundred thirty and one, by the two Kings, and their eldeſt ſonnes, and next ſucceſſors to the Crowne, Don Henry of Caſtile Prince of the Aſturias, and Don Edward of Portugall. This peace did end all quarrels betwixt Portugal and Caſtile, and continued fortie three yeares, to the great good of both realmes. This yeare dyed Don Nugno Aluares Pereira, firſt Conſtable of Portugal, by vertue whereof Don Iohn, from being Maiſter of Auiz, came to the royall dignity. This great perſonage towards the end of his dayes, poſſeſt with a ſuperfluous deuotion, left the affaires of the B world, whereas hee mought haue ſerued God well, and beene profitable to the common-weale, retyring himſelfe into the Monaſterie of the Carmelites in the citty of Lisbone, which he had built, and there he liued very ſolitarie and ſimply almoſt nine yeares. The Portugals ſpeake wonders of the almes-deeds, faſtings, prayers, and other workes tending to piety of this Noble man, as well in his Monaſticall life, as before. Beſides the Carmelites at Lisbone, he cauſed S. Georges Church to bee built in the place of battaile at Aljubarote, that of Saint Mary of Villa vicioſa; the great Chappell of the religi-
C ous of Saint Auguſtin in the ſame place, the Church of Saint Mary de Monte, Saint Mary of Portel, and Saint Mary of Sonſel, and others. Before hee retired himſelfe, hee diſtributed his goods after this manner. To Don Diego his grand-child, borne of Donna Beatrix his daughter, and of Don Alphonſo Earle of Barcellos, her husband, hee gaue the Earldome of Oren, with all the lands which hee held in Extremadura, at Lisbone and there-abouts. To Don Ferdinand his other grand-child, borne of the aboue named, heire after his father of the Duchie of Bragance, and who ſucceeded in the Earledome of Arroyolos, with all the rents hee had on this ſide Tayo and Vdiana. To Don Iſabella ſiſter to his two grand-children, maried to the Infant D. Iohn Maiſter of Saint Iames of Portugal, the Kings Sonne, who was the ſecond Conſtable of that realme, hee gaue the lands of Lonſada Payua and Tendanes, and the Towne of Almadaan, with the rents of Loule: and to his familiar vaſſalls and houſhold ſeruants, he diuided his money, horſes, D armes, apparrell and moueables. And thus naked, and diſcharged of all temporall goods hee entred into the Monaſterie, where hee was poſſeſt with ſo ſtrong an opinion to merit heauen by auſteritie of life, trauell, and affliction of his body, as hee reſolued to ſeperate himſelfe more from the company of men, and to liue alone in deſarts, if the King Don Iohn and Prince Edward his Sonne, had not diuerted him, ſhewing how much it would hurt the eſtimation which all men had of him, and of his wiſdome: wherefore hee contained himſelfe in his Monaſterie vntill his death, which was in the yeare 1431. and 71. of his age.

D HE affaires of Caſtile beeing ſome-what pacefied, with the Chriſtian Princes of Spaine, made way for the warre which King Iohn had reſolued againſt the Moores of Granado, notwithſtanding that according to the diſcipline brought in of late, hee had alwaies a ſpleene againſt them which had preſumed to reſiſt him by armes: and therefore vpon euery occaſion he fell into new troubles within his realme: for he had mignions by whom hee was wholy gouerned, who made him iealous of many great men, and by their importune reports did eſtrange them, and in the end made them ill affected to their Prince. For beſides that which we haue related in the precedent Booke, of the Earle of Caſtro Xeris, D. Iohn of Soto Major, maiſter of Alcantara, being ſent E for by the King, he neuer durſt with aſſurance preſent himſelfe before him, nor come to court, what promiſe ſoeuer he made him, neither could Don Guttiere Gomes of Toledo, Biſhop of Palence, his great friend perſwade him: Yet did he performe whatſoeuer they commanded him, that did concerne the Kings ſeruice, and the obedience which hee ought him, excepting alwaies that he would not be bound to come to court againſt his will. And moreouer, notwithſtanding any peace concluded betwixt Caſtile and Nauarre and Arragon, the King D. Iohn did ſtill entertaine occaſions of quarrels; and maintained the Earle of Armaignac, a great enemy to the King of Nauarre, furniſhing him with money, to the end he might be as a thorne in his foote, to annoy him towards France, ſo as hee might not attempt any thing againſt Caſtile. And for a greater proofe F of his hatred againſt this Prince, not ſatisfied to haue taken his lands from him in Caſtile, he cauſed his caſtle of Pegnafiel to be raized.

Hatred betwixt Courtiers cannot be reconciled, but by the ruine of one party.

The country of Galicia beeing in a manner all in armes through the quarrels of Nugno Freire of Andrada, and his ſubiects, the King ſent and pacefied them: then leauing D. Pedro Manriques for Gouernor general in Caſtile, he went in perſon towards Cordoua: for Roderigo of Pereira Gouernor of Gaçorla hauing entred raſhly with three hundred horſe, and one thouſand foot into the country of Granado, had beene defeated and A moſt of his men cut in peeces by the Moores: but this loſſe was at the ſame inſtant recõpenced by the taking of the towne and caſtle of Ximena by ſcalado, through the dilligence of the Marſhal Garcia of Herrera: wherefore the King hearing that the warre began to grow hot, he made haſt to approch nere vnto that frontier: being vpõ the way, & paſſing by Ciudad Real, there was a great earthquake, ouer a great part of the country; for euen the city of Granado was ſhaken therewith. The King being come to Cordoua, he ſent the conſtable D. Aluaro de Luna with three thouſand horſe, who forraged the territories of Illora, Trajara, Loxa, Archidona and other places in the champian country of Granado, and then he returned towards Eccia. B

Moores. In the meane time a knight, called Gilaire, who was by birth a chriſtian, and had beene taken being but eight yeers old, and inſtructed in the law of Mahumet, came to the King at Cordoua, letting him vnderſtand that there was a Knight of the Moores, deſcended from King Mahumet Aben Alhamar, called the Vermeil, the ninth King of Granado, hee who had beene ſlaine by D. Pedro King of Caſtile, called Ioſeph Aben Almao, who was in no good termes with Mahumet Aben Azar then raigning, and deſired ſome fit occaſion to reuolt from him; wherefore if the King would enter into the plaine of Granado, hee did aſſure him, that this Moore would come and ioyne preſently with his army and reuolt the whole realme in his fauor. This buſineſſe being propounded in councel, they were of opinion, that King Iohn ſhould aduance with his forces, which were 80000. C fighting men. On the other ſide Mahumet Aben Azar aſſembled al his forces of Granado, which amounted to two hundred thouſand foote, and fiue thouſand horſe, with the which hee came to make head againſt King Iohns army, with whom Ioſeph Aben Almao the Moore, had ioyned, with ſome troupes of horſe. The armies being neere, about the mountaine of Eluira, there were many skirmiſhes: ſo as on a Sonday the firſt day of Iulv, both the armies were drawne forth to battaile, in the which the Chriſtians had the victory. This was called the battaile of Figuere, for that it was fought in a country full of figs, and is very famous in Spaine; for there died aboue ten thouſand Moores, King Iohn remayning ſo maiſter of the field, as he ſpoiled and burnt all round about the city of Granado, and yet the Moores durſt neuer come without their walles to defend their D houſes and fields. The King of Caſtile had greater enterpriſes, but by the councell and importunity of the Conſtable, he retired: they ſay the King of Granado had corrupted him with good ſtore of gold, which he ſent him in a preſent of figs & dried rayſins, which made him ſo preſſe the Kings retreat: who beeing returned to Cordoua, and hauing giuen order for the ſafety of the frontier, he came to Toledo, and from thence to Eſcalone, where he was wonderfully feaſted by the conſtable. After which the Eſtates were called at Medina del Campo, at the which the peace with Portugal was confirmed, and there was granted to the King of Caſtile by the deputies of the Prouinces, 45. millions of Marauidis, for the charge and continuance of the warre againſt the Moores of Granado whereof Ioſeph Aben-Almao intituled himſelfe King, by the aduice of D. Iohn King of Ca- E ſtile, who did aſſiſt and fauor him all hee could to diſpoſſeſſe Mahumet Aben-Azar: and therefore he ſent commandement to the captaines and Gouernors of the frontier, to aſſiſt him in any thing hee ſhould vndertake. This Moore was ſo well followed in a ſhort time by a good number of Knights of his ſect which hated King Mahumet, as hauing ſurprized Montefrio, he made it his reſidence and ſtorehouſe for the warre, the which he did mannage with wiſdome, valour and iudgement: and beeing aided and fauored by Don Lewis of Guzman, maiſter of Calarraua, D. Diego of Riuera, and other Noblemen and Chriſtian captaines, within few daies hee tooke the townes of Cambil, Alicum, Illora, Ronda, Iſnajar, Archidena, Caçarobonella, Setenil, Turon, Hardales, Caſtellar and Loxa, all which yeelded willingly, except the caſtle of Loxa, which held for king Mahumet, into F the which the Algazil Ioſeph Aben Sarrax had put a good garriſon: but ſoone after he beeing dead, it was yeelded to Ioſeph Aben Almao, through the fauour of a route the which hee gaue to Mahumets troupes: which victorie was of ſuch conſequence, as the cittie of Granado opened her gates: ſo as King Mahumet beeing out of hope to bee able to reſiſt, going out of Alhambra, with that which was moſt deere and

By this euent Ioſeph Aben Almao remained King of Granado, in the beginning of the yeare 1432. Mahumet hauing raigned ſince his returne three yeares, and it was in the 815.yeare of the Arabians raigne. 1432.

Ioſeph Aben Almao, the ſixteenth King of Granado.

THis new King Ioſeph beeing receiued of the whole realme without contradiction, the Crowne of Granado returned by him into the family of Mahumet Aben Alhamar,or the Vermeil,who preſently made himſelfe vaſſall to the King of Caſtile,by whoſe fauour hee had gotten the realme, promiſing a certaine tribute of money and other things,whereof there were letters paſt,ſealed with his ſeale of Gold.He did aduertiſe King Iohn of the ſucceſſe of this warre, and did attribute all the happineſſe thereof to God and him: informing him more-ouer of the ſiege which hee went to lay before Malaga, wherein the King did aſſiſt him,as he had done before,commanding D.Diego of Ribera, Gouernor of that fronter,to furniſh him with men,victualls, and all ſorts of aide in that enterpriſe. Whileſt theſe things were acting,there came a Geneuois to Court,an Ambaſſador from Muley Aben Ferriz,King of Tunes, who had charge to intreate King Iohn to ſpare King Mahumet Aben Azer, and to finde ſome expedient for peace: but finding the realme already poſſeſt by Ioſeph,hee complained in the name of the King of Tunes his maiſter, of the miſfortune of Mahumet his Kinſman: to whom the King of Caſtile anſwered pertinently,ſaying,that he had made warre againſt him for good and iuſt reaſons,for that hee had beene dayly informed that hee had ſeeret Intelligence with the Kings of Nauarre and Arragon his enemies. This Ambaſſador ſtaied ſome dayes in the Court of Caſtile, being then at Vailledolit. The raigne of Ioſeph Aben Almao laſted not aboue ſixe moneths: for being old and broken, hee dyed that ſame yeare 1432.whereby Mahumet Aben Azar came to raigne againe the third time,who being aduertiſed of the death of his Competitor,tooke all fit courſes to make the Granadins obey him againe, wherein the King of Caſtile did not oppoſe himſelfe, it may be mooued at the requeſt of the King of Tunes,by his Ambaſſador,who returned well ſatisfied into Affrick,being accompanied by Lope Alphonſo of Lorca, ſent by the King of Caſtile, that hee might take with the King of Tunes ſome friendly expedient for peace, betwixt Caſtile and Granado:and in the meane time there was a ſhort truce granted to Mahumet,who made a Knight called Audilbar,who had beene faithfull vnto him, his Alguazil Maior, in the place of the deceaſed Ioſeph Aben Sarrax.

Mahumet Aben Azer recouers the realme of Granado.

The warre of Granado being ended after this manner: there fell out new occaſions of trouble in the Court of Caſtile by the Kings credulitie, who willingly gaue eare to reports,giuing him to vnderſtanding that the Kings of Nauarre and Arragon had ſecret intelligences with D.Pedro Fernandes of Velaſco, Earle of Haro, Guttiere Gomes of Toledo,Biſhop of Palence, and his Nephew D. Fernando Aluares of Toledo, with other great men of Caſtile: wherevpon he ſtaied ſome, impriſoned others, and many ſeeking to eſcape,were brought back to Court,being then at Zamorra,and others eſcaped: ſo as it was full of amazement and tumult. Of the number of the priſoners were the aboue-named D.Fernando Aluares of Toledo,Biſhop of Palenza, and the Earle of Haro,who had the Court giuen him for priſon, putting in caution. The Biſhop was committed to the caſtle of Muzientes, and D Fernando his Nephew to that of Vruegna. D.Ferdinand of Velaſco the Earles brother fled away,and being come into his brothers country, hee aſſured himſelfe of the towne and places of ſtrength there. Don Inigo Lopes of Mendoça,Lord of Hita and Buitrago, hearing what had beene done in Court, and how his friends and kinſmen were perſecuted, hee fortified himſelfe in Hita. There was no matter found to charge and conuict theſe Noblemen, ſo as they were deliuered one after after an other, but the Biſhop and his Nephew were the laſt of all. Don Iohn of Soto Maior, Maiſter of Alcantara remained, who beeing in diſgrace with the King, and afterwards reconciled, yet hee fell againe into diſlike, ſo as Don Henry Infant of Portugal was enforced to imploy himſelfe to reſtore him to grace. The King gaue charge to Doctor Franc to end all differences with him, who conferring with Diego of Manjarres Treaſurer of Alcantara, they ended all matters, ſo as the Maiſter had reaſon to bee contented: but hee ſhewed himſelfe ſo indiſcreet, as hee reiected all that they had concluded: and notwithſtanding that the Doctor ſought to ſatisfie him in all his demands, yet he was ſo tranſported with his paſſions, as contemning the King, and all them that treated in his name, he called D. Henry and D. Pedro Infant of Arragon, remaining at Albuquerque to deliuer them Alcantara, and the forts which depended. The Maiſter going from Alcantara to Valencia, before he had gone two leagues, he had a conceit that hee ſhould not be ſafe in that towne; wherefore he returned to Albuquerque, to the Infant D. Henry: And for that he feared to be ſurprized in the towne, he deſired to lodge in the caſtle, whether alſo Doctor Franc was led priſoner. Wherevpon it was giuen out, that the Infant Don Henry kept the Maiſter of Alcantara priſoner in the caſtle of Albuquerque: wherewith Gutiere of Soto Maior, great Commander of Alcantara, nephew to the Maiſter, being much diſcontented, he ſtaied the Infant Don Pedro priſoner at Alcantara, the whole people conſenting therevnto. Don Frederic Admirall of Caſtile being aduertiſed of theſe things, hee went poſt to Alcantara, with all his horſemen, to the end this priſoner might bee deliuered vnto him, to conduct him vnto the King, but the Commander would not yeeld him: The Admirall wiſht him to keepe him in ſafe gard, promiſing him a great recompence in the Kings name, and from thence hee went and ſpoiled the country about Albuquerque.

The detention of the Infant Don Pedro, did much trouble Don Henry his brother, who cauſed the Maiſter to goe to field, to let the world know that hee was no priſoner: but for all this the Commander would not releaſe Don Pedro: for the King tempting the couetouſneſſe and ambition of this man, promiſed to make him maiſter of Alcantara in his Vncles place: ſo as it appeared to all men, that in retaining Don Pedro, hee had more hope to aduance him-ſelfe, then charitie to his Vncle, who indeed was depriued of his Maiſterſhip, the Commander aduanced vnto it, and the Inhabitants of Alcantara, for their forwardneſſe in the taking of the Infant, were endowed with great priuiledges. Don Henry ſeeing his affaires in very bad eſtate, fearing they ſhould vſe his brother vnworthily, he had recourſe vnto the King of Portugal, to mediate his peace with the King, and his brothers deliuery: by whoſe meanes an accord was made with this condition, that the fort of Albuquerque, & all others that the Infants did hold, ſhould bee deliuered into the Kings hands, and they depriued of all their lands in Caſtile.

These things happened in the yeare 1432. when as King Iohn gaue the title of a Citty to the towne of Victoria, the chief in the prouince of Alaua. About the end of this yeare there fell ſuch aboundance of Snow in Nauarre and Arragon, as the townes and bourroughs were in a manner beſieged, the Snow continuing forty dayes together, ſo as they could not go from one place to another: and the long continuance thereof made many beaſts, yea the moſt ſauage, and birds of all ſorts, to come familiarly into their houſes, being preſt with hunger, and ſuffer themſelues to be taken, as if they had put off their naturall wildneſſe, and were become tame, a preſage of future miſeries.

An. 1433. The truce betwixt the King of Caſtile, and Mahumet Aben Azar King of Granado being expired, in the yeare 1433. there were new ſupplies of men ſent vnto the frontiers of Andaluſia, vnder the command of Don Fernand Aluares of Toledo, Lord of Val-decorneja, who tooke Benamaruel and Bençalema from the Moores: and the Eſtates of Caſtile were held at Madrid, where they treated to continue this holy warre.

Portugal. Death of Don Iohn King of Portugal. This yeare D. Iohn King of Portugal, dyed in the Caſtell of Lisbone, a Prince full of yeares, leauing his realme in peace, and a happy memory of his gouernment, hee was ſeauenty ſeauen yeares old when hee dyed, and had raigned forty nine yeares. His body was layed in the Cathedrall Church at Lisbone, and afterwards buryed in the royall

A royall Monaſterie of S. Mary of the battell. Before he left this world, he ſaw a ſon borne of D. Edward his ſonne and ſucceſſor of the Realme, and of Donna Leonora of Atragon his wife, who was named Don Alphonſo, and raigned after the father.

D. Edward the firſt of that name, and 11. King of Portugall.

B DOn Edward was preſently after proclaymed king in the pallace of Alcaçaua, in the preſence of his breethren D. Henry Maſter of the Order of Chriſt, and duke of Viſeo, the Infant Don Iohn, Maſter of Saint Iames of Portugal, and Conſtable of the realm, Don Pedro of Meneſes Earle of Viana, the biſhop of Ebora and many other Prelates and Knights: whereas the biſhop of Ebora did celebrate the ceremonie. They ſay, that the Noblemen being aſſembled to celebrate this act, a Iew, Phiſitian to the new king, and very learned in aſtrologie, came and preſented himſelf vnto the aſſembly, beſeeching them to deferre it vntill noone, with aſſurance that he had obſerued ſome bad conſtellation, threatning that Kings raigne, that ſhould be receiued at that houre. The king (who was better inſtructed, touching theſe prognoſtications) would haue them proceed without
C delay, wherefore the Iew replyed, that the king ſhould raigne little, and with great troble. He was one and forty yeares old when he began to raigne, and had beene married fiue yeares before, too late for a Prince that was heire to a great Eſtate. His wife Donna Leonora was daughter to King Fernand, who of Duke of Pegnafiel had bene made king of Arragon, by election of the arbitrators deputed by the Eſtates of the countrie, borne of Donna Leonora of Albuquerque, who was iſſued of the bloud royall of Caſtile and Portugall: for Donna Beatrix her mother was daughter to the king Don Pedro, and ſiſter to Don Iohn king of Portugal, borne of the faire and happie Agnes of Caſtro, and the father was Don Sancho ſonne to Don Alphonſo king of Caſtile, the laſt. Of this Princeſſe of Arragon king Edward had Don Alphonſo, his eldeſt, and ſucceſſor to the Crowne of D Portugall, borne in the pallace of Sintra, in the yeare 1432. then D. Fernand his ſecond ſonne this yeare 1433, who was Duke of Viſeo, and married Donna Beatrix his couſin germaine, daughter to D. Iohn, Maſter of S. Iames, and the third Conſtable of Portugal: of which marriage was borne Donna Leonora Queene of Portugall, wife to Don Iohn the ſecond: and alſo D. Izabella Dutcheſſe of Bragance, and Don Dominicke Duke of Viſeo, and Don Manuel who came to raigne in Portugal, from whome is deſcended the laſt King Don Sebaſtian by the maſculine line. Beſides theſe two ſonnes, Donna Leonora brought king Edward, her husband, foure daughters, D. Philip who dyed being but eleuen yeares old, ſtricken with the plague at Lisbon, D. Leonora married to the Emperour Fredericke the third, father and mother to the Emperor Maximilian of Auſtria, the firſt of E that name, the third was D. Catherina, who was betrothed to Don Charles Prince of Viana, heire of Nauar, and afterwards to Edward the fourth King of England, and yet married neither of them, but dyed a mayd: the fourth was D. Ieanne, a very faire Princeſſe, who married with Don Henry the fourth, king of Caſtile. This was the iſſue of king Edward, who is numbred for the eleuenth king of Portugall, vnfortunate at the leaſt in this, that during his raigne the plague neuer ceaſed to conſume his people: yet he was a louer of iuſtice, for the adminiſtration wherof he deputed euery three moneths one of his brethren, an Earle and a Biſhop, commanding them to do Iuſtice to euery man, and to ſuppreſſe all exceſſe: he was ſober in ſpeech, and in his manner of liuing, as much as any F Prince of his time: he did limit the expences of his Wardrobe to fiue hundred doublons of gold by the yere, he cauſed both gold and ſiluer to be coyned of a good Standard. His reſidence at his firſt comming to the crowne was at Belin: there his brother the Infant D. Pedro the Traueller, duke of Coimbra, came and kiſt his hands, and ſware vnto him fealty and homage.

cauſed him to be ſworne the lawfull heire of the Crowne, by the aſſembled at Sintra, and would haue him called Prince, a title firſt vſurped by him in Portugall, following the example of the eldeſt of other Chriſtian kings, his neighbors in Spaine. After this ſolemnitie, he cauſed the bodie of the king his father to be tranſported, whoſe obſequies were the moſt royall and ſtately that euer were made for any king of Portugall. For two moneths ſpace that he lay in the cathedrall Church, there were thirtie Maſſes ſayd euery day, and an aniuerſarie once a weeke, the bodie beeing accompanied, and watched euery night by a great number of clerkes and religious men, ſinging diuers ſuffrages for the ſoule of the deceaſed. The bodie beeing to be tranſported, it was layed vpon an high bed, garniſhed with many banners and trophees, and it was watched in the night by the Infant Don Pedro, beeing accompanied by a great number of gentlemen, Don Fernand Arch-biſhop of Braga the kings nephew, doing the ſeruice, who the next day ſung Maſſe in his pontificall habit, with great ſtate & ceremonie, after which and the Sermon made by Friar Giles Lobo the kings Confeſſor, the bodie was layed vpon a chariot, and conducted by the new ſtreet, where there was another Sermon made, & a third in S. Domingo: after which it was accompanied with a great proceſſion out of the towne, and conducted by the king and the Princes to the Monaſterie of S. Denis of Oduiella, diſtant a league and an halfe from Lisbon, where it reſted that night, where as the Infant Don Henry, Maſter of the Order of Chriſt, with his commanders watched: from thence it was carried to Villafranca, where they made another pauſe: the Infant Don Iohn Maſter of Saint Iames, with his Commanders, watching that night: Paſſing on the next day with the like pompe, they came to Arcoentre; where it reſted againe, and the bodie was watched by the Infant D. Fernand Maſter of Auiz, with his commanders. Continuing the next day, they came to Alcouaça, where they made the fourth pauſe, and there watched D. Alphonſo Earle of Barcellos, brother to the Infants aboue-named, accompanied by his two ſonnes, Don Diego Earle of Oren, and Marquis of Valencia, and Don Fernand Earle of Arroyolos, and Marquis of Villavitioſa, in all which places there was Euenſong and vigils ſayd at night when it arriued, and in the morning before it parted Maſſe being ſung pontifically by the abbot of Alcouaça, and the Biſhops of Ebora and la Garde, in all places: in the end they came to the Hermitage of Saint George in the place of battel, with the like proceſſion, pompe and ceremonie, as they came out of Lisbone. The Hermite came foorth to meet it, and did accompanie it to the royall Monaſterie of the battell, where it was receiued, and layd in a royall ſepulchre, with great and ſollemne Maſſes, and other ceremonies, and very rich offerings, where as aboue all others the pietie and filiall duty of the Infant D. Pedro, was remarkable, in which good and kind offices hee continued towards king Edward his brother, in the gouernement of the affaires of the realm committed vnto him.

Stately funerals of King Iohn of Portugal.

Modeſty of the Infant D. Pedro, and his other vertues.

This Prince is much commended by the Portugals for his modeſtie, affirming, that he would neuer ſuffer any one to kiſſe his hand, nor to ſpeake to him kneeling, nor to vſe any other tearmes of ſubmiſſion accuſtomed to great men: Hee loued learning and learned men greatly, and himſelfe did write ſome Treaties of the gouernement of Princes, and made ſome traductions out of the Latine tongue into the vulgar Portugal, not without learning and iudgement: He had a particular deuotion to Michael the arch-angell, as he was inſtructed by the Diuines of that age, wherefore he carried a ballance for his deuice, and was a great builder of Temples and holy places: He cauſed Saint Michael of Penela, and Auero to be built: and in the ſame towne he was the founder of the Monaſterie of Piety of the preaching Friars, and of the church of Tentuble: and of the hoſpitall of Saint Eloy: he made a collegiall Monaſterie, as it is at this preſent. Beſides which buildings, hee cauſed the Eſtates to be built in the city of Lisbon, to lodge Courtiers, to eaſe the inhabitants of that troubleſome, and many times preiudiciall ſubiection. This Prince was husband to Donna Izabella of Arragon, daughter to Don Iames Earle of Vrgel, and of D. Izabella Infanta of Arragon, daughter to Don Pedro the fourth of that name. Of D. Iames, I ſay, who thinking to raigne in Arragon after the deceaſe of D. Martin, rebelled againſt the determination of the arbitrators, who had choſen Don Fernand of Caſtile for King, the which coſt him his libertie, and eſtates, goods, and dignities, whereof being depriued, he dyed a priſoner. The Infant Don Pedro had by this Ladie Donna Izabella, Don Pedro who was third Conſtable of Portugall, who in the warres which the Cattelans had againſt Don Iohn king of Nauarre, heire to his brother Don Alphonſo King of Arragon, he was choſen King of Arragon, and dyed in that warre, with that title. Moreouer he had Don Iohn future king of Cypres, husband to Donna Izabella, whome Don Alphonſo the fifth of that name, her couſin germaine married: a princeſſe hauing her deuotion and hope directed to Saint Iohn the Euangeliſt, in whoſe honor ſhee cauſed the Monaſterie at Lisbon to be built, dedicated to him on the toppe of Euxobregas. With theſe two ſonnes he had D. Philippe, who liued a religious woman in the Monaſterie of Odiuelas, and was ſo giuen to ſtudie, as ſhe tranſlated into the Portugal tongue, a worke of Laurence Iuſtinians Patriarke of Venice and of Aquilea, founder of the Order of S. George of Alaga, moreouer, Don Iames and Donna Beatrix, who were retired after their fathers deceaſe, by Donna Izabella, Dutcheſſe of Bourgondie, their aunt. Don Iames was aduanced to ſpirituall liuings, afterwards made a Cardinall, and Arch-biſhop of Liſbone, and Donna Beatrix was married to the Lord of Raueſtein, nephew to the Duke of Bourgondie. This Cardinall dyed a Virgin, as they ſay, at Florence, where he was buried, in the time of Pius the ſecond.

In the beginning of the yeare 1431. there had beene a generall councell called, the which was continued by Pope Eugenius Succeſſor to Martin the fifth, in the cittie of Baſill, this yeare 1433. but afterwards the fathers were diuided, and the Pope himſelfe, finding the councell not plyable to his affections, transferred it to Ferrara, and from thence to Florence. In this councell of Baſill, the Fathers beeing aſſembled, they were ſpectaters of a combate betwixt a gentleman of a Portugal race, but borne in Caſtile, called Iohn de Merle, and Henry of Raueſtan a knight of Bourgondie, who fought on foot, and the Bourgondian was vanquiſhed. The ſame de Merle had a little before fought a combate on horſeback, with the like happineſſe, in the cittie of Arras againſt Peter of Brecemont, Lord of Charny, in the preſence of D. Philip.

Councel of Baſil.

King Edward hauing finiſhed his fathers funerals, and all ſolemnities, oaths, reception of fealtie and homage, and other accuſtomed duties, at the firſt comming of Kings, hee aſſembled the Eſtates of his Realme at S. Iren, in the yeare 1434. to conſult concerning the gouernement thereof: from thence there was an ambaſſador ſent to the councell of Baſill, which was D. Diego Earle of Oren, beeing accompanied with many learned men and Prelates of Portugal: and then the warre againſt the Moores was propounded, after the example of Kings his Predeceſſors: It was alſo held conuenient to continue that which King Iohn had begun in Affricke: for the execution whereof he obtained a Croiſado from the apoſtolike Sea of Rome, by the meanes of the Earle of Oren, who brought the Bull into Portugall.

An. 1434.

The King of Caſtile alſo ſent many of his Prelates and Diuines to the Councell, during the which Don Alphonſo Carillo, Biſhop of Siguença and Cardinall, dyed, whoſe Biſhoppricke was giuen to his Nephew, carrying the ſame name, who in time came to be Archbiſhop of Toledo. The ambaſſadors for the king of Caſtile at this councell were D. Aluaro of Oſorno, Biſhop of Cuenca, D. Iohn de Sylua Lord of Cyfuentes, Standard-bearer to the king, and Doctor Alphonſo of Carthagena, Deane of S. Iames and Segobia, ſonne to D. Pablo Biſhop of Burgos; which Biſhoppricke Don Alphonſo obtayned in his life time, he being preferred to be Patriarke of Aquilea. There falling out a great queſtion in the councell betwixt the ambaſſadors of England and Caſtile for the precedence, this Doctor Don Alphonſo of Carthagena did ſo well defend the preheminence of the crowne of Caſtile, and gaue ſuch pertinent reaſons for the dignity and prerogatiue thereof, as the fathers gaue the precedence to the ambaſſador of Caſtile, wherein the Doctor was held to haue done great ſeruice to his countrie of Spaine, whereof he himſelfe hath made a treatiſe: notwithſtanding Raphael Volaterran, in his third booke, and laſt chapter, ſayth, That in the time of D. Fernand the 5. this cauſe was pleaded againe at Rome, and ended in fauor of the king of England, who had giuen ſentence by prouiſion, without any great examination of the cauſe.

D. Frederick of Arragon Earle of Luna a priſoner in Caſtile.

Don Fredrick of Arragon, Earle of Luna, would haue ſeized vppon the citty of Seuile, A he cauſed him to be apprehended at Medina del campo, and to be carried to the Caſtle of Braçuelos, which is neere vnto Olmedo, where he ended his dayes, and many of his confederates were put to death, who for that cauſe were brought to Medina del campo. The warre begun in Granado, continued with variable ſucceſſe, for after the taking of Benamaruel, by Don Diego of Ribera, Lord of Val de Corneja, Gouernor of the fronter of Andaluſia, attempting the towne of Alora, hee had beene ſlaine by the Inhabitants, and them that defended it: after whoſe death, the King gaue the gouernement to D. Pedro Alfan his ſonne, a young man but fifteene yeares old. Don Roderigo Manriques ſomwhat to eaſe this loſſe, tooke the towne of Hueſcar by ſcalado, and the caſtle afterwards B by ſight: for the recouerie of which place, there were enterpriſes and incounters betwixt the Chriſtians and the Moores, all that yeare, 1434. in the which dyed D. Iohn of Contreras, Arch-biſhop of Toledo, and Primat of Spaine: and to him ſucceeded D. Iohn of Crezuela, brother by the mothers ſide to the Conſtable D. Aluaro de Luna.

About that time the king of Caſtile gaue vnto the Earle of Armagnac (who had alwaies ſhewed himſelf his great friend and partizan in the wars againſt Nauar) the towns of Cangas and Tinco, with the title of an Earle: and there arriued at Madrid ambaſſadors from Charles the 7. the French king, to renew the league betwixt France and Caſtile, to whom the king gaue audience in great ſtate, and ſitting on a high throne he gaue them a good and friendly anſwer, who after much feaſting, were ſent home well ſatisfied: there C they did ſee a tame lyon lying at the kings feet, a thing which is not ordinarie.

Death of Don Henry of Villena.

The ſame yeare dyed D. Henry of Villena, the kings vncle, ſon to D. Pedro, and nephew or grand-child to D. Alphonſo of Arragon, who had beene Marquis of Villena, and firſt Conſtable of Caſtile: a Prince abuſing learning, wherein he had beene bred, giuing himſelfe to infamous Magicke arts, whereof he had written many treatiſes, the which by the kings commandement, and by the cenſure of Friar Lopes of Barientos, then Schoole-maſter to D. Henry Prince of the Aſturia's, were for the moſt part burnt. The king beeing in pilgrimage at Guadalupe, D. Guttiere of Soto maior, the new Maſter of Alcantara, being entred into the Moores countrie with 800. horſe and 400. foot, was ſurprized and com-

This croſſe ſhold haue admoniſhed him of the bad office he had done his vncle, and the Infant D. Pedro: the which although they would couer with a colour of the kings ſeruice, yet was it a plotted treaſon: D. Fernand Aluares of Toledo, Lord of Val de Corneja, had bin alſo in danger, if he had not ſpeedily retired from Huelma, which hee ſought to force, hauing failed to take it by ſcalado: for a great number of Moores marched to fight with him, and hee had not ſufficient forces to reſiſt them. Hauing retyred with his men to Iaen, he entred by Guadix, ſcoured the country, and was ſharply incountred by the Moores, who notwithſtanding were vanquiſhed: D. Fernand Aluares ſpoiling two leagues round about Guadix.

4 Arragon.

The truce betwixt Caſtile, Nauarre and Arragon beeing expired in the yeare 1435. E there came ambaſſadors to the court of Caſtile, from the Queenes of Arragon and Nauar, to beſeech the king for a propagation of the truce, in the abſence of their husbands, which the king granted them for ſome moneths: the which was the ſooner obtained by their ſending of D. Iohn de Luna, the Conſtables couſin, who gouerned the king his Maſter. Theſe two kings, breethren, were gone into Italy, to purſue the realme of Naples, where matters ſucceeded as followeth: After that king D. Alphonſo (being called back into Spaine, for matters which concerned him nere, namely, for the impriſonment of his brother D. Henry) had left Naples, Queen Ioane and her adopted ſonne Lewis of Anjou, had ſome time of breathing, and means to recouer the city of Naples, and other places of the realme; there only remained Iohn Anthony of Vrſins, Prince of Tarentum, a partiſan to k. F D. Alphonſo, who made head againſt Lewis duke of Aniou: the duke making war in Calabria, was ſurprized with a burning feuer, whereof he died at Coſenza, in the yere 1434 not leauing any children: and the ſame yeare dyed Queen Ioane alſo, leauing by her will (whether it were true or counterfeit) Rene of Aniou, duke of Lorraine and Bar, brother to Lewis deceaſed, heire of the realme of Naples, who was at that time a priſoner in the

B with them, and many Noblemen and Knights, as well Spaniards, as Sicilians, King Alphonſo paſt into the Realme of Naples, and came and landed at Gayete, in which place were beſides the Inhabitants, and other ſouldiers of the countrie 300. Geneuois, vnder the command of Francis Spinola of Genoua, ſent by Philippe Maria Angelo, Duke of Milan, vnder whoſe protection the common-weale of Genoua was at that time, and who held the partie of René Duke of Anjou. The beſeeged ſeeing themſelues preſt, aduertiſed the Duke of their extremity, and what need they had of ſuccors: whereupon he preſently gaue order to prepare an armie at Genoua, of the which Blaiſe Araxeto was General, beeing accompanied by Eliſa Spinola, Iames Iuſtinian, Galiot Lomelin, and other famous Captaines & expert at ſea, who directed their courſe towards the Iland of Ponce, wher-

C of king Alphonſo, who was before Gayete, beeing aduertiſed, hauing nineteene great ſhips, and eleuen gallies, he left onely fiue to continue the ſeege, and reſolued to go in perſon with the reſt to encounter the enemie: but he muſt firſt pacifie a queſtion which was growne betwixt the King of Nauar, for the generall conduct of the armie, with his brother D. Henry, either of them aſpiring to haue it, mooued with zeale to ayde their brother.

Army ſent frō Genoua to ſuccor Gayete.

Hauing ſet ſayle, Don. Pedro hauing charge of the gallies, the Kings and the Infants euery one apart, well appointed, came to incounter the Geneuois armie, the which did conſiſt of twelue great ſhips, three gallies, one galeaſſe, and a foiſt. Being in ſight, and within a league and a halfe one of another, the Geneuois ſeemed as if they would not

D fight: the kings army kept it ſelfe together till noone, ſtriuing to get the wind, that they might fight with more aduantage: In the meane time the gallies of Arragon diſcouered the enemies armie, which approched neere vnto them, finding that they had left three great ſhips behind, as it were for a rereward. Before they came to ioyne the Generall of the Geneuois armie, ſent a trumpet in a boate to let the king of Arragon vnderſtand, that their intent was not to hurt him, but they had onely put to ſea to draw out of Gayete, their ſouldiers, cittizens, and merchants of Genoua, with their goods and merchandize, and to tranſport them to Genoua. The trumpet was detayned a good time, during their conſultation, but the concluſion was, that they muſt charge them: for it was likely, that

E the Geneuois had ſent this trumpet, for that they fainted, and feared the Arragonois army. The captaines and ſouldiers, with great demonſtrations of courage, cryed out for battell, and preſently diſcharged their artillerie, which the Geneuois did preſently anſwer, ſo as grapling ſhip to ſhip, and galley to galley, the fight was furious and cruell, and continued long doubtfull, vntil that the three great ſhips left by the Geneuois in the reereward, hauing gotten a full wind, came with great violence vppon the ſhips of Arragon, and among others giuing the ſtemme to that in which King Alphonſo was, they made it lye on the one ſide, and had ſo ſhaken and ſhattered it, as it tooke in an aboundance of water, and put the king and all them that were in it in great danger, ſo as he was forced to yeeld to Iames Iuſtinian, Gouernor of the Iland of Scio, who took him

F into Spinola's ſhip.

The ſhippe wherein King Iohn did fight, hauing loſt her maine-yard, yeelded, and was taken by Galiot Lomalin. Don Henry was priſoner to Cyprian de Mare. With theſe Princes there were taken D. Diego Gomes of Sandoual, Earle of Caſtro Xeris, and two of his ſons, D. Iohn of Sotomajor, who had beene Maſter of Alcantara, Ruy Diaz of Mendoça the bald, Fernando Auales Chamberlaine to D. Henry, and another Sonne of Don Ruy

Lopes d'Aualos, who had beene conſtable of Caſtile, with many other Noblemen and A Knights of Arragon, Nauarre, Cattelogne and Valencia, and aboue 600. ſouldiers and marriners ſlaine. The Infant D. Pedro, leaping with the helpe of a cable from one galley to another, eſcaped: there were 13. ſhips taken, and moſt of the gallies were burnt, or ſunke after they had ſpoiled them. To conclude, the Geneuois victorie was great & memorable, as well in regard of the priſoners, as of the rich ſpoyles who ſhewed all curteſie and humanity, for after the end of the fight, they did ſet at liberty aboue 400. ſouldiers, that were priſoners, beſides marriners, retayning only the chiefe men: wherein they did wiſely, and like ſouldiers, for a multitude of priſoners of meane qualitie, are but an incumber: and it is an vnprofitable charge, and doth many times make the vanquiſhed take co- B rage to rebell, and to become Maſters of them that hold them. Among the multitude that were ſet at liberty, there were many Knights of great worth eſcaped vnknowne. That which gaue the aduantage to the Geneuois army, was the 3. ſhips left in the rereward, the abundance of ſcalding lime, and wild-fire which they caſt, and finally, that they were better ſea-men then the Arragonois.

Magnanimity of king of Alphonſo.

The victorious army approching neere to the Iland of Iſchia, King Don Alphonſo being a priſoner was preſt to make it yeeld vnto the Geneuois, whereunto although he were a captiue, he would not yeeld. By this defeate the ſeege was rayſed at Gayete, and the pri-ſoners carryed to Sauona, from whence they were afterwards, by the Duke of Milans commandement, diſtributed into diuers priſons: King Don Alphonſo to Pauia, with C Don Henry and others: King Iohn, the Earle of Caſtro, and Ruy Diaz of Mendoça were led to Milan.

Theſe lamentable newes did wonderfully trouble the Queens of Arragon and Nauar, and all the people of theſe two Kingdomes, eſpecially Donna Leonora the widow-queen of Arragon, who liued in her Monaſterie of Saint Iohn de las Duegnas, without the walles of Medina del campo, very ſimply and modeſtly, who conceiued ſo great a griefe as ſhee dyed ſoone after: This did much afflict the King and Queene of Portugall, and al the Noblemen of that Realme. The impriſonment of theſe Princes and Noblemen was ſhort, for Don Philip Maria beeing courteous, and viſiting his priſoners often, hee was ſo perſwaded by king Alphonſo, that both he and his Eſtates ſhould reape more pro- D fit in maintaining the partie of Arragon, then that of France, as vanquiſhed with his Bounty of the duke of Milan reaſons, hee not onely let them all go free without ranſome, but gaue them many rich preſents, after that he had entertayned them royally many dayes, ſuffering them to go and come with all libertie, where they pleaſed. Hee cauſed Don Iohn, King of Na-uarre, and Don Henry his brother, to bee conducted to Porto Venere with ſixe hundred horſe for their guard, where they were receiued by Don Pedro their brother, and moreuer he would that the Neapolitane Knights which were then at Milan, and the ambaſſadors of townes ſhould take an oath of fealtie to King Alphonſo, acknowledging him for their king, making ſo great a change of all things, as of an enemie he became a partiſan and friend to the Arragonois: by reaſon whereof the Geneuois being incenſed, rebelled E againſt the Duke.

If the newes of the defeat and taking of theſe Princes, cauſed great heauineſſe in Arra-gon and Nauarre, the ioy was ſo much the greater, when as they vnderſtood of their de-liuerie, the which was carried into Caſtile, where as the king of Nauarre was much deſired of many, to whom the greatneſſe of the Conſtable D. Aluaro de Luna, was offenſiue and hurtfull, Don Fredericke Admirall of Caſtile, who was one of them, ſent a meſſenger to Queene Blanche, aduertiſing her that her husbands abſence was very preiudiciall to himſelf and all his friends, for that his aduerſaries grew great according to their owne deſires, and therefore ſhe ſhould do well to haſten his returne as ſoone as might be: The like aduertiſements were giuen her by many other knights of Caſtile, wherefore ſhe ſent F three knights of her houſhold into Italy, to the king her husband: which were Iohn Henriques of Lacarra, Sancho Ramires of Aualos her caruer, and the Seigneur of Vertiz, to ha-ſten his returne.

Being

A Being at Segobia, there was a Germain knight called Robert preſented himſelf vnto him, who would make triall of armes, with D. Iohn Pimentel Earle of Majorga, by whom he was vanquiſhed. The like proofe being made by other twenty Germaine knights, which came in the company of Robert, had in a manner the like iſſue, to the diſhonour of ſtrangers, and great commendation of the Spaniſh nation. D. Fernand of Gneuara, a knight of great valour, being at Vienna, the chiefe towne of Auſtria, he fought within a liſt on foot, with a Germaine knight called Vourapach, in the preſence of Duke Albert ſonne-in-law to the Emperor Sigiſmond, who caſting his ſtaffe, cauſed the combat to ceaſe, and put them out of the liſts, to the great honour of the Spaniſh knight. Don Iohn of Pimentel Earle of Majorga, deſirous to trie his valour with ſtrange Knights out of Caſtile, as he
B practiſed to play with a battell-axe with a ſeruant of his called Lope de la Torre, hee was ſtrucke by him inconſideratly on the face, ſo as he dyed ſoone after; a due reward for this quarrelling exerciſe, which was then in ſo great eſtimation, to go ſeeking honor, (without cauſe or quarrell) in the force and dexterity of the body, more then in the gifts of the mind, humanity and iuſtice.

Whileſt that King Iohn was buſie at Alcala of Henares to celebrate the funerals of his deceaſed aunt Queene Leonora, there was hot warre made vpon the fronter of Granado, where as D. Alphonſo Ianes Fajardo, receiued the townes of Velez the white, and Velez the red, which yeelded voluntarily to the king of Caſtile, the Inhabitants Moores pro-
C miſing to pay him the ſame tribute which they payed to king Mahumet, wherewith the King was ſatisfied: but he would not heare the ambaſſadours of Baça and Guadix, who came to beſeech him to giue them another king a Moore, then Mahumet, for that he did intreat them ill: but k. Iohn knowing that this was but a deuice to free themſelues from the ſpoile which he intended againſt them, he ſent them away, and commanded his captaines to forrage and ſpoile their countrie, the which was executed by D. Fernand Aluares of Toledo. The Moores of Galea and Caſtilegia yeelded to D. Roderigo Manriques, vpon the ſame conditions like vnto them of Velez. It fell out vnfortunatly for D. Henry of Guzman, the ſeege which he pretended to lay to Gibraltar: for being come by ſea with ſome barkes before the towne, whether his ſonne Iohn of Guzman ſhould come by land
D with the reſt of his forces to beſeege it, he had no patience to attend, but landed, & began to skirmiſh on the ſhoare, neere vnto the walles, with the Moores which ſallyed out againſt him, but the ſea flowing, it forced him to retire to his barke, leauing many of his Knights on land, in prey to the enemie, who began to cry out and to complaine, that he had left them there to the ſlaughter, with ſuch vehement words, as mooued to pittie, hee cauſed his barke to approch to land to receiue them: but it was ſo ouer-laden as it ſunke, and there the Earle Don Henry, with about forty Knights were drowned, whoſe loſſe was great. The bodies beeing caſt vppon the ſhoare, were drawne to land by the Moores, and the Earles was put into a coffer, and ſet vppon an high tower, to be a terrour to the Chriſtians, where it continued ſome yeares. By this pittifull ſucceſſe, the ſonne retired
E from Gibraltar, and out of all Andaluſia with teares and mourning: the bones of this Earle are at this preſent in a moſt auncient Tower made of Bricke, in the higheſt part of the caſtell of Gibraltar, which the common people beleeue was built and erected by Hercules.

D. Henry of Guzman drowned neere Gibraltar.

Whileſt that theſe things paſt in Spaine, in the yeare 1436. the Kings of Arragon and Nauarre were deepely ingaged in the warre of Naples, whither the Dutcheſſe Izabell of Lorraine, wife to Rene of Anjou a priſoner was come, and with the helpe of Pope Eugenius defended her husbands right couragiouſly. The two breethren kings beeing aduertiſed of the affaires of Spaine, by their friends and ſeruants, they reſolued to ſend a ioynt ambaſſage to the king of Caſtile, to treat a peace with him vppon ſome good conditi-
F ons. The ambaſſadors found the Court at Toledo, where hauing deliuered their charge vnto the king, it pleaſed God that after many conferences and debates, a peace was concluded vpon a promiſe of marriage betwixt D. Blanche Infanta of Nauarre, and Don Henry of Caſtile, Prince of the Aſturia's, with theſe conditions:

6 Nauarre. 1436.

That the ſolemnization of this marriage ſhould bee accompliſhed within the limite of a certaine time, betwixt Henry heire of the Realmes of Caſtile, and Donna Blanche,

Conditions of peace betwixt Caſtile, Nauar and Arragon.

eldeſt daughter to D. Iohn king of Nauarre, to whom ſhould be aſſigned the Marquiſat A of Villena, the townes of Medina del campo, Olmedo, Coca, Roa, and Aranda: the re-uenues of which lands, D. Iohn King of Nauarre ſhould receiue the foure next following yeares. That if there were no children borne of this marriage, the king of Nauarre ſhould haue ten thouſand florins of gold of yearely rent aſſigned vpon the reuenues of Caſtile.
That to D. Blanche, Queene of Nauarre, and to her ſonne D. Charles, ſhould in like manner be giuen an aſſignation of ten thouſand florens of gold yearely, during their liues.
That all knights ſhould be pardoned, which during the warres, and fore-paſſed quarrels, had followed either partie, and they reſtored to their goods and dignities, except on the part of Caſtile, D. Iohn of Soto-major, who had beene Maſter of Alcantara, and the B Earle of Caſtro Xeris: and on the behalfe of Nauar, D. Godfrey of Nauar, Earle of Cortes: Item, that to the Infant D. Henry brother to the kings of Arragon and Nauar, ſhould be aſſigned 5000. florens of gold of yearely hereditarie rent: and to the Infanta D. Catherina his wife ſhould be giuen 50000. florens of gold in ready mony for her dowrie. Theſe articles beeing accorded, a peace was proclaimed in the Realmes of Caſtile, Arragon, and Nauar, and D. Pedro of Acugna, ſon to Lopes Baſques of Acugna, Lord of Buendia, was ſent to Azagna, with ſufficient authority, to make the firſt promiſe in the name of Prince Henry, and it was concluded the ſollemne betrothing ſhould be at Alfaro, whether came at the time aſſigned, the Prince D. Henry accompanied by D. Aluaro de Luna, conſtable of Caſtile, and many other Noblemen, Knights, and Prelates, who arriuing C two dayes before the Infanta: being aduertiſed that ſhe was at Corella, he went to meete her with all his traine. The Queen of Nauarre, mother to the Infanta, Prince Charles her brother, the Biſhop of Pampelone, with many other Prelates, Peter of Peralta, Lord Steward of the kings houſe, Leon of Garro, and other knights, many Ladies and Gentlewomen of Nauarre attended her, all in equipage worthy of ſuch a ſolemnitie, the which was celebrated in Alfaro, in the yeare 1437. D. Pedro of Caſtile, Biſhop of Oſma ſtipulating and receiuing the promiſes, either of them being but 12. yeares old. The Prince D. Henry gaue many goodly and rich Iewels to the Infanta, and vſed the like bountie to the Ladies and Knights of her traine. Then hauing ſpent foure dayes at Alfaro in great feaſting and ioy, the parties ſeparated themſelues, euery one retiring into his country. By this peace D there was alſo reſtored vnto the king of Nauar, the town & caſtle of la Garde, and the ca-ſtles of Aſaturuguen and Burandon: and towards Guipuſcoa, there were yeelded the ca-ſtles and places of Gorriti, Cobono, Toro, Araciel, and Saragana, which the Guipuſco-ans had taken during the wars. Moreouer, the towne of Briones was yeelded to the king of Nauar, touching the Seigneurie and the reuenue, but the Soueraignty remayned to the king of Caſtile. This peace was promiſed and ſworne, vpon a penalty of 300000. flo-rens of gold, payable by him that ſhould breake it: and it was confirmed by the chiefe officers of either realme, both clergy and ſecular, and by the deputies of the chiefe townes.
For Nauar, there ſigned D. Martin of Peralta biſhop of Pampelona, the archb. of Tyre, the Queens confeſſor, the Prior of S. Iohn, & the Deane of Tudele, clergy-men: D. Lewis E of Beaumont, Triſtan Lord of Luçe, Peter of Peralta, Lord Steward, Philip Marſhall of Nauar, & Vicont of Ro, with other knights: moreouer, the deputies of the cities of Pam-pelona, Eſtella, and Tudela, and of the towns of Sangueſſe, Olite, Arcos, Biane, S. Vincent and others. For Caſtile, beſides the great officers of court, there did ſweare all the Noblemen of the fronter of Guipuſcoa, Rioja, and others, yea they of the families of Lazcano, Beraſtequi and Amezqueta: and theſe accords were written by Bartholomew of Renes, Secretarie to D. Iohn King of Nauar, and of Queen Blanche his wife, and by Alphonſo Peres of Biuera, high Treaſurer and Secretary to the king of Caſtile.

Imprisonment of D. Pedro Manrique.

This ioy was croſt according to the cuſtom of humane things, with great griefe in the court of Caſtile, the king hauing cauſed D. Pedro Manrique Gouernour of Leon to bee F committed to priſon, where at euery man did ſhew himſelfe diſcontented, ſo as the king cauſed 2000. lances to come for his gard, which remayned continually about the court.
He ſent the priſoner to the caſtle of Fuente Duegna, commanding that hee ſhould haue the liberty of the priſon, & that ſomtimes they ſhould ſuffer him to go on hunting, which liberty was procured by the Admirall of Caſtile, who was diſcontented for his detention.

This

A This yeare which was 1438. there were brought vnto the King ſtones, which they ſaid, were fallen from heauen in great abondance, at Maderuelo, a houſe belonging to the Conſtable, very light: the which although they were reaſonably big, yet were they ſo light as they did not hurt any one they fell vpon, a ſtrange thing, and which was held prodigious. The Articles of the peace being brought into Italy, were allowed and confirmed by King Don Alphonſo, in the preſence of Doctor Ferdinand Lopes of Burgos, one of the Kings Councell. 1438. Stones fallen from heauen very light.

The warre of Granado was managed with variable ſucceſſe: many Knights among the Moores diſliking the gouernment of King Mahumet, reuolted, taking the party of Caſtile, of the which one Aben Amar was Captaine, who ſoone after went with his B men to the King of Tunes, with leaue from the King of Caſtile, hauing receiued both pay and preſents from him: and moreouer 6000. pounds ſtarling for the charge of their voyage. Don Inigo Lopes of Mendoça Gouernor of the Fronter, Lord of Hyta and Buytrago, who was afterwards Marquis of Sentillana, tooke the towne of Huelma from the Moores, and had the caſtle afterwards by compoſition, cauſing the garriſon of Moores to be conducted in ſafety to Cambil and Halabar. But Roderigo of Perea, Gouernor of Caçorla, being entred raſhly into the Moores countrie, was ſurprized by a great number of horſe and foote, lead by Aben Sarrax, a wiſe and valiant man, among all them of his nation, by whom he was cut in peeces, ſcarce twenty of his men eſcaping, being in all foure hundred horſe, and a thouſand foote: yet this victory was not without loſſe C of bloud to the Moores, for their Captaine Aben Sarrax was ſlaine, and many Knights of note. Granado. Caſtillans defeated by the Moores.

The ſacred warre of Affrick, which was led by D. Ferdinand Maiſter of Auis, and Don Henry Maiſter of the Order of Chriſt, Infants of Portugal, had anſwerable ſucceſſe, who hauing obtained, by great importunity from the King their brother, leaue to paſſe the ſea, had beſieged the towne of Tanger, hauing brought but 6000. fighting men out of Portugal. The ſiege hauing continued thirty ſeauen dayes, being well aſſailed and well defended, there came an infinite multitude of Moores, both horſe and foote, to ſuccour the beſieged, being lead by the Kings of Fez, Maroc, Velez, and other Princes in perſon. Wherefore the Portugals ſought to retire themſelues, but beeing in a manner inueſted D by this great armie, they were forced to fortifie themſelues in their trenches, and changing their condition of beſiegers, they found themſelues beſieged, ſo as hauing no meanes to eſcape, they muſt capitulate with the Moores for their liues and liberties, promiſing to yeeld vp vnto them the towne of Ceuta, and all the captiue Moores that were in Portugall. Vpon this accord D. Henry and his men were ſent back, and came naked and ſtript to Ceuta, the Infant D. Ferdinand remaining for hoſtage in the hands of the King of Fez, vntill the accord were performed: But D. Henry being returned with this diſarmed armie into Portugall, when as King Edward had aſſembled the Eſtates of the realme at Ebora, being much grieued at this vnhappy ſucceſſe, to take ſome courſe for the deliuery of D. Ferdinand, they would neuer yeeld that the towne of Ceuta ſhould bee deliuered E vnto the Moores: but they conſented to all other meanes to free D. Ferdinand: the difficulties and delayes were ſuch, together with the death of King Edward which happened, as for want of execution of that which had beene promiſed vnto the Moores, the Infant D. Ferdinand paſt the reſt of his dayes in priſon in the hands of Infidels, with great conſtancie, and a rare example of patience and religion, comforting the other captiue Chriſtians, not onely for that they ſaw a Prince participare of their miſeries, but he did alſo incourage them by godly exhortations to continue conſtant in the faith of our Sauiour. King Edward being very penſiue for this diſhonorable loſſe, but eſpecially for the captiuitie of his brother, going out of Ebora, where as the plague was violent, hee retired to F Auiz: and to eaſe the court, and to ſpare charges, hee commanded the Infants his brethren to retire to their houſes. Hee came in perſon to Pont du Soleil, where hee cauſed a ſtrong wall to bee made, to aſſure that place from theeues, then going to the Monaſterie of Tomar, hee felt himſelfe toucht with a ſharpe and peſtilent Ague, whereof hee dyed in September this yeare 1438. beeing fortie ſeauen yeares old, and hauing raigned onely fiue: his body was interred in the royall Monaſterie of the Battaile. 7 Portugal. The Portugals forced to accept of diſhonorable conditions. D. Ferdinand in captiuity in Barbarie. Death of King Edward.

By his will he left all his moueables to the Queene Don Leonora, and made her Gouerneſſe of their children, and Regent of the Realme. A

Caſtille.

D. Pedro Manrique eſcapes out of priſon.

About that time Don Pedro Manrique a priſoner in Caſtile at Fuente Duegnas, ſlipding downe with cordes from the caſtle wall, he fled to Enzinas, a fort belonging to his ſonne in lawe D. Aluaro of Eſtuniga ſonne to D. Pedro Earle of Ledeſma, whether preſently came the Admirall Don Frederic, his brother, Don Henry and his friends, with great company. The King at one inſtant receiued this newes, and that of the death of the Infant Don Pedro of Arragon, who had beene ſlaine with a great ſhot, aſſayling the cittie of Naples, whereat he was equally grieued, but with diuerſe paſſions: the Infants body was buried in the caſtle de l'Ouo. This fort de l'Ouo, and the new caſtle at Naples, B had alwaies held good for the Arragonois. King René was come a little before to Naples, with twelue galleys of Genoua, and was there receiued with royall pompe and ſtate: after which hauing ſent back his galleys, hee filled the citty and all places thereabouts with his ſoldiars, hauing gathered together a great armie, he began to aſſaile the neighbour places, but with ſmall effect. There came a Herald in his name to King Don Alphonſo being at Caſtellucci in Abruzzo, with a gantlet dipt in bloud, challenging him to a ſingle combate: Don Alphonſo receiued the gantlet, and demanded of the Herald, if King René meant they ſhould incounter in ſingle fight, one againſt another, or with all their forces: the Herald anſwered, that the King his Maiſter would preſent himſelfe with his armie. Wherevpon King Don Alphonſo replyed, that ſeeing hee was the chal- C lenger, it was in him to make choyſe of the place, and day of battaile; and therefore he did chooſe the fields which are betwixt Nola and la Cerra, whether hee would come within eight dayes, with his whole armie, to fight as his aduerſary would. At the day aſſigned, Don Alphonſo preſented himſelfe vpon the place, and attended René, who appeared not, for that he had beene diſſwaded by his friends and ſeruants, who came to lodge with his armie at that place, from whence Don Alphonſo was parted, and tooke Caſtelluccio. Alphonſo on the other ſide tooke Arpaio in the valley of Gardano, and ſo taking places, and ruining the country, hee marcht to Naples, hauing aboue 15000. men in his armie, with which forces and ten galleys he held the towne beſieged, where happened the death of the Infant Don Pedro, as wee haue ſaid. But ſoone after, René D comming with the like, or greater forces, hee not onely preſerued the citty, but he forced the garriſons of the new caſtle, and of the fort de l'Ouo, to yeeld for want of victuals.

Returne of D. Ihon King of Nauarre into Spaine.

About which time the King of Nauarre returned into Spaine, to ouer-throw thoſe good accords which had beene made betwixt him and the King of Caſtile, and to trouble all Spaine, being of an inconſtant and turbulent diſpoſition.

8 Caſtile.

The enemies of Don Aluaro de Luna the Conſtable, relying much vpon the King of Nauarre, and his forces, had banded themſelues openly againſt him: the chiefe whereof were the Admirall Don Frederic, Don Pedro Manriques Gouernor of Leon, Don Iohn Ramir of Ariellan, Lord of Los Cameros, Don Pedro of Quingnones Merin Maior of the Aſturia's, Don Diego of Eſtuniga ſonne to the Earle of Ledeſma. Don Roderigo of E Caſtagneda Lord of Fuente Duegna, and Don Pedro Mendoça, Lord of Almacan, who drew many others vnto their league, namely the Earle of Ledeſma, who had his lands fronting vpon Eccia. The King called ſoldiars from all parts to ſuppreſſe this tumult (among the reſt hee was ſpeedily ſerued by the Nobility of Andaluſia) to whom the confederates did write very dutifull and reſpectiue letters, intreating him to cauſe the Conſtable to diſlodge from Court, before that hee grew ſo powerfull, as hee might be preiudiciall both to him and his realme. There was in truth ſome reaſon to ſuppreſſe the boldneſſe and greatneſſe of this man, who was inſolent, couetous, and not very faithfull to his Prince, the which was well knowne to the King, and to many of his Councell: but hee had them all ſo tyed vnto him, as not any one could attempt againſt F him, nor conſent willingly to that which ſhould diſpleaſe him: wherefore an anſwer was made vnto the letter, quite contrary to that which the Noblemen of the league demanded, with whom there newly ioyned Don Lewis de la Cerde Earle of Medina Celi, and Don Pedro of Caſtile Biſhop of Oſma, who had ſeazed vpon many places, as Don Pedro of Quignones had done of the Citty of Leon, ſo as the whole realme was full

A of ſeditions and tumults, all in generall imputing the fault vnto the conſtable, partly with reaſon, and partly without. The King being at Roa, vſed all dilligence to aſſemble forces, to be the ſtronger, writing letters to Toledo and other great townes, admoniſhing them of their duties, and to be faithfull vnto him.

In the meane time the Marſhall D. Inigo Ortiz of Eſtuniga, brother to the Earle of Ledeſma, entred into Vailledolit, with fiue hundred men at armes, and ſeized on the towne in the name of the confederate Lords. On the other ſide the King was aduertiſed that the King of Nauarre, and D. Henry his brother, were entred into Caſtile with fiue hundred men at armes, and not knowing vpon what pretext, conſidering the accord lately concluded betwixt them, he ſent vnto them, intreating them to ioyne with him
B and to come to court: the King of Nauarre conſented, and came to the king to Cuellar, with ſixe horſe onely, whereat the whole court did much reioyce. They came at the inſtance of the confederate Lords, and alſo incited with a deſire to recouer that which they had loſt in Caſtile, by meanes of the preſent troubles, in whoſe company was the Earle of Caſtro. The King of Nauarre beeing ſeperated from the reſt, and come vnto the king, receiued great honour and good vſage: but the Infant D. Henry aduanced not, but ſtaied with the troupes, the which hee led to Pegnafiel, where they opened him the gates, the King hauing ſo commanded, and ſoone after hee had conference with the king of Nauarre his brother at Minquela, neere to Cuellar, there beeing good correſpondency betwixt them, although they made no ſhew of it: for the King of Nauarre
C continued with the King of Caſtile, and hee retired to Vailledolit, to the Lords of the League: there was much trouble, and many enterviewes of Noblemen of either part, with great leauies of ſouldiars to the oppreſſion of the people, and yet there was no meanes to make an accord; the confederats inſiſting ſtill that the conſtable ſhould bee baniſhed from court, the which was a hard matter to effect. The Admirall and the Infant D. Henry ſent to challenge the conſtable, and he accepted the combate, but yet they did not fight. The King did ſollicit D. Henry, promiſing him that if he would bee of his party he would make him maiſter of Saint Iames, and would giue him other things, for the which the Infant gaue him thankes, letting him vnderſtand, that whatſoeuer he did, was for his ſeruice.

D In theſe treaties of pacification the greateſt difficulty was in the reſtitution of lands forfeited, the which had beene diſtributed to many: yea to ſome of the confederats, who would not reſtore them, at the leaſt without recompence. Being in theſe garboiles and out of hope of any accord, they had newes, that D. Roderigo of Villandrado, firſt Earle of Ribadeo, who had ſome yeeres before ſerued Charles the ſeuenth, the French King, with great reputation and honour, was come into Caſtile, bringing with him three thouſand ſouldiars to ſerue and ſuccor King Iohn his naturall Lord: wherefore all treaties of accord ceaſing, the Kings of Caſtile and Nauarre went as farre as Pegnafiel to meet him with ſome troupes, to aſſure him from the ſurpriſes of the confederats, who
E ſent the Earle of Ledeſma with fifteene hundred horſe, to attend him at a paſſage. This ſupply, and other occaſions, together with the dilligence of certaine religious men, who ſought to reconcile theſe Noblemen, made the parties more tractable, ſo as in October 1439. a peace was concluded, vpon theſe conditions. That the conſtable D. Aluaro de Luna ſhould abſent himſelfe from court for ſixe monthes, and that the king of Caſtile ſhould recompence the king of Nauarre and D. Henry his brother, for the lands he had taken from them: and the proceſſe and proceedings made againſt them that were in armes diſanulled: that the townes and forts held by the confederats ſhould bee reſtored. Theſe things being concluded at Caſtro Nugno, the conſtable to fullfill the Article which concerned him, parted from court, leauing moſt of the kings councell
F which fauored him, diſcontented: The Noblemen diſmiſt their ſouldiars, and the king parted from Caſtro Nugno to goe vnto Toro. In the meane time the Infanta D. Catherina, wife to D. Henry, died in child-bed.

Lands of confiſcation giuen away vnder the peace.

An. 1439.

There was no peace firmly ſetled by this accord, for the king being poſſeſt by a councel made by the conſtable, was held in diſtruſt, and the courtiers in continuall iealouſie. He cauſed ſome of them, which had followed the confederate Lords, to be impriſoned at Salamanca, lamanca, and to take Segobia from Ruy Diaz of Mendoça, who held it, he gaue it to the A Prince of the Aſturia's his ſonne. The King of Nauarre and his brother D. Henry ſeeing theſe proceedings, they went from Madrigal, towards the court, but the King ſent to forbid them to come there: and to the end they ſhould not finde him at Salamanca, he diſ-lodged and went to Bonilla de la Serra, from whence hee ſent to demaund a ſaufe-conduit of the Noblemen for Don Guttiere Gomes of Toledo Archbiſhop of Seuile, whom hee ment to ſend to treat with them, the which beeing willingly granted, the Archbiſhop came to Madrigal, with ſome of the Kings councel, but they returned without any concluſion: wherefore the King of Nauarre and the Infant his brother led ſome troupes towards Auila, where by the meanes of Aluaro of Bracamont, and Fernando of B Aualos, who had taken vpon them to defend it, they became maiſters, from thence the King of Nauarre did write a letter vnto the King of Caſtile full of good councel, accuſing Inſolencies of the Conſtable of Caſtile made knowne vnto the King. the conſtable of auarice, cruelty, tyranie, inſolency, and contempt of the Princes and Noblemen, yea of the King himſelfe, hauing preſumed to kil a ſquier in Areualo; and a groome, to flie his fury, hauing caſt himſelfe at the Kings feet, as in a moſt aſſured Sanctury, he had beaten him almoſt in his boſome, ſtretching his armes ouer the Kings ſhoulders, without any reſpect to his dignity, whom euery man (to the great diſhonor of his royal perſon) ſaid he had inchanted: and to conclude, if he did not chaſe him away and puniſh him, he could not be honored nor ſerued by the Princes, and Noblemen of Caſtile, who could not endure ſuch indignities from an vpſtart, whoſe beginning was ſcarce C knowne. The King knew well that many things contained in theſe letters were true, yet being gouerned by ſuch as fauored the conſtable, he made no anſwere: whereupon the confederats ſent the Earles of Haro and Benauent vnto him, who after many Negotiations, concluded with the Kings councel, that they ſhould make an aſſembly of the Eſtates at Vailledolit, whereas the deputies of the townes and Prouinces of Caſtile and Leon ſhould meet, and determine of that which ſhould be held expedient for the quiet of the realme, ſo as the Archbiſhop of Seuile, and his Nephew the Earle of Alba did remaine at their houſes. Before the execution of that which had beene concluded, the Infant D.

Henry entred Toledo with three hundred and fifty knights, through the fauor of D. Pedro Lopes of Ayala the Gouernor, and made himſelfe maiſter thereof, hauing good corre- D pondency with the King of Nauarre his brother, whoſe faction was very ſtrong at that time in Caſtile, his friends and confederats holding the chiefe townes of the realme: for beſides that he had vnder his command the towne of Auila, and his brother that of Toledo, the Earle of Ledeſma held Burgos and the caſtle: Pedro of Quignones was maiſter of Leon: Ruy Diaz of Mendoça commanded Segobia, with the fort: D. Henry Henriques
the Admirals brother had Zamora, and the caſtle: Salamanca was in the hands of Iohn Gomes of Anaya: Guadalajara of D. Inigo Lopes of Mendoça, Lord of Hita: Plaiſance of the Earle of Ledeſma: Vailledolit of the Earle Pedro Nugnes: other places were held by other Knights of that party, the which did much trouble the King, and his conſtable. To make the aſſembly of Vailledolit more eaſie, the Earles of Haro and Benauent returned E to Bonille, where it was againe concluded that the Kings and the Noblemen ſhould retire their troupes; and there was a general paſport giuen to al them that ſhould come to Vailledolit, with aſſurance of their goods; yea to the conſtable, who remained in his houſe at Eſcalano, where by an ill preſage, the greateſt part of the caſtle had ſome few daies before beene burnt with lightning: notwithſtanding the King would haue the paſ-port ſerue alſo for the conſtables perſon. In this aſſembly it was decreed that the cities and townes held by the confederats, ſhould bee left free at the King of Caſtiles diſpoſe, but there was not any thing effected, and the more to trouble the realme, D. Henry Prince of the Aſturia's, perſwaded by his ſpouſe, and the confederat noblemen, began to ioyne with the King of Nauarre, his future father in law, retyring himſelfe vnto the Ad- F miral D. Frederics lodging, wherewith the court was much troubled; and the King ſent the Earle of Caſtro, and Ruy Diaz of Mendoça to the King of Nauar, to vnderſtand the cauſe of this alteration; who anſwered that he knew it not: and withal went with them to the Admirals lodging, to vnderſtand the reaſon. The Prince anſwered, that he had retired himſelfe thether, by reaſon of Doctor Perjunez; Alphonſo Peres of Biuero and

A Nicholas Fernandes of Villanicar, of the Kings councel, being vnworthy of that ranke, and beſeeching the King that he would chaſe them away, elſe he would retire himſelfe. The King promiſed to diſmiſſe them, wherevpon the Prince was pacefied, and came to the Kings palace, after midnight, the King of Nauarre accompanying him. The Prince D. Henry was gouerned by a yong gentleman called D. Iohn de Pacheco, ſonne to Alphonſo Telles Giron, Lord of Beaumont, who was preferred to his ſeruice by the conſtable, and was afterwards made Marquis of Villena, and maiſter of the Order of Saint Iames. The King at the Eſtates of Vailledolit, ſetled ſome order for Iuſtice, which was but badly executed in Caſtile, and ſome thing to pacefie the Princes and Noblemen that were mutined, and to diuert their armes, hee thought it now time to celebrate the marriage of D. Henry and the Infanta of Nauarre, being three yeeres ſince they were made ſure, and either of them being fifteene yeeres old: the bond of conſanguinity, which might hinder it, was diſſolued by Pope Eugenius the fourth. The Infanta being ſent for, ſhe entred into Caſtile, in the yeere 1440. beeing accompanied by Queene Blanch her mother, the Prince of Viana her brother, and many noblemen, prelats and knights of Nauarre. Shee was receiued in the towne of Logrogno, by D. Alphonſo of Carthagena, Biſhop of Burgos D. Inigo Lopes of Mendoça Lord of Hita, and by D. Pedro of Velaſco, Earle of Haro. From thence the Prince D. Charles returned into Nauarre with his Gouernor. D. Iohn of Beaumont, who in the Princes name gouerned the realme, the Queene mother being abſent.

D. John de Pacheco gouerns Prince Henry.

An. 1440.

The Princeſſe with all her traine being come to Vilhorado, a houſe belonging to the Earle of Haro, ſhe was entertained with ſumptuous feaſts, great ſports and rare inuentions; and much more at Birbieſca, by the Earle himſelfe. D. Pedro of Acugna did the like at Duegnas, whether the Prince D. Henry came to meet his ſpouſe, whereas he preſented her with many rich iewels, and ſhee him: who hauing beene ſome foure and twenty howers with the Ladies, he returned to Vailledolit, whether they went. There went forth to meet them, the Kings, and al the principall Noblemen of the court, who made a ſtately entry into the towne, and the Queene and Princeſſe went to the King of Nauarres lodging, whoſe brother D. Henry came from Toledo to aſſiſt at the marriage, the which was celebrated with a royall pompe, D. Pedro of Ceruantes Biſhop of Auila, performing the ceremony. But the vnfortunate hap of this Princeſſe was ſuch, as the Prince D. Henry proued vnable to conſummate the marriage, the which ſhe did vertuouſly conceale for many yeeres. To honor the marriage, the noblemen ran at tilt with ſharpe pointed lances, but the ſport was ſo dangerous, as the King was forced to forbid it, for Pedro Porto Carrero a Knight of Torroy, and Iohn of Salezar loſt their liues, and others were ſore hurt in theſe incounters. This royall feaſt (which had continued many daies) being ended, the Princes and Noblemen of the court being diſperced, the Prince D. Henry was conducted to Segobia by D. Iohn de Pacheco his great mignon, who through a courtears Ingratitude, fortefied the King of Nauarres party, and that of the Noblemen confederated to ruine the conſtable, by whom hee had beene aduanced working ſo, as the Prince his maiſter ioyned with them, who reuiuing their old quarrels, ſent to beſeech the King, that without any more delay he would cauſe the conſtables proceſſe to be made, degrading him of the honour and dignity which he held, and of the gouernment of the realme. The King was much troubled to ſee new ſeditions which he thought had beene ſuppreſt, and wonderfully incenſed againſt his ſonne, would not make any direct anſwere to this demaund: beſides he had ſtill ſome of his councell which defended the conſtables cauſe: wherefore in the yeere 1441. the troubles began more violent then before. Mary Queene of Caſtile ſiſter to the King of Nauarre tooke then his part, which ſhe had not done before.

Marriage of the Prince of Caſtile and the Infanta of Nauarre.

F The Infant D. Henry, brother to the King of Nauarre, being after the marriage returned to Toledo, hee fortefied himſelfe there, and receiued Pero Lopes of Ayala, contrary to the Kings commandment: where contynuing in his accuſtomed rebellions, he ſtaied the Ambaſſadors which the King had ſent vnto him, to perſwade him to take a better courſe, yea the King being in perſon to Saint Lazaro, without the walles of the city, vpon the way to Madrid, onely with thirty horſes of his houſhold and traine, the Infant

Infant ſallied forth, and preſented himſelfe in battaile, vſing threats and proud ſpeeches, A ſo as the King was forced to returne ſpeedely. There was in his company D. Roderigo of Villandrado Earle of Ribadeo, who in this voiage obtained a goodly preuiledge for him and his family, which was, that the roabe which the Kings of Caſtile put on the firſt day of the new yeere, ſhould belong to him, and that hee ſhould that day eate at the Kings table, leauing this preuiledge to his poſterity in the King of Caſtiles court. As ſoone as the King came to Torijos from Saint Lazaro, he beganne to proceed againſt the Infant D. Henry, for the detention of his Ambaſſadors, and ſo he retired to Auila. The conſtable and his brother D. Iohn of Crezuela Archbiſhop of Toledo (againſt whom all this warre was intended) ſent to beſeech the King to ſend ſome of his councell vnto B them, to the end their might be ſome order taken for ſo many incoueniences, the which being done, they concluded that the King ſhould ſend vnto the confederate Lords, to aduiſe them to obſerue the accord made at Bonille de la Serra, and the more to eaſe the country, they ſhould diſmiſſe their ſouldiars.

Preuiledges of the Earles of Ribadeo.

That to determine all quarrels betwixt them and the conſtable, they ſhould chooſe Iudges, who ſhould examine where the fault was, and ſhould appoint puniſhment for them that were found coulpable: and that if they thought it fit, there ſhould be a generall aſſembly of the Eſtates called to that end. The Kings offred all theſe things to the confederats, who were for the moſt part in Areualo: but they anſwered, that there was no meanes of pacification, if the conſtable who was newly come to Auila, did not diſ- C lodge from court. The King hearing this anſwere, ſought to retire his ſonne D. Henry, who being councelled by the King of Nauarre, and the Queenes of Caſtile and Nauarre, went to Auila, where he proteſted to the King his father, that he deſired nothing more, then to mediate a good peace: where after ſome ſmall ſtay, he returned to Segobia, promiſing that from thence he would write vnto the Queenes, touching their meeting at Santa Maria de Nieua, there to treat with them of the meanes of an accord.

In the meane time the King receiued letters from Diego de Valera, a wiſe Knight and of great experience, who had ſeene and frequented the courts of forraine Princes, ſeeking (according to the cuſtome of Noblemen of that age) honour by armes, at Tournaies and combats, beginning for pleaſure, and ending many times with death, or ſome o- D ther misfortune; yet he had alwaies beene fortunate, and had wonne much honour and reputation, both in Spaine and elſe where. Theſe letters contained many graue admonitions, and proffitable councell, both for the King and his Eſtate. Being read in open councell, D. Guttiere Gomes of Toledo Archbiſhop of Toledo, without any great conſideration, ſtept forward to anſwere for all the reſt. Bid D. Diego ſaid he, ſend vs men and money, for wee haue not any need of councell. The King to gratefie the Prince his ſonne, gaue vnto him the towne of Guadalajara, the which by this meanes he thought to wreſt out of the hands of D. Inigo Lopes of Mendoça, Lord of Hita and Buytrago: but they made reſiſtance in the taking of poſſeſſion. This hapened at ſuch time as he came to viſit the King at Auila, or a little before. The Queenes and the Prince, according E vnto that which had beene promiſed to the King his father, met together at Santa Maria de Nieua, where D. Iohn de Pacheco was alſo preſent: they conferred long together about the pacification of the troubles, without any great concluſion.

D. Diego of Valera giues good aduice vnto the king.

From thence there was ſent vnto Auila, Alphonſo Telles Giron Lord of Beaumont, father to Iohn Pacheco, and Doctor Valdenebro, a prior, that to make matters more eaſie, he ſhould approch to Areualo, wherevnto the King would not yeeld, wherein hee was ill councelled by ſome, who feared they ſhould looſe their credit and authority, by the accords which might be made there.

Matters beeing broken off the confederats ſent the Admirall Don Frederike, the Earle of Benauent, Don Pedro of Quignones and Roderigo Manriques, with F good numbers of men, beyonde the mountaines, into the Countrie of Toledo, who ranne as farre as Eſcalona, and preſented battaile vnto the conſtable, and to the Archbiſhop his brother, who came from Illeſca to ioyne with him, when as their enemies were retired: theſe Lords of the league returned to Toledo without any blowes, whether came ſome men of authoritie from the King, to ſtay them from fighting. At that time the In-

A ſant Don Henry, at the Earle of Benauents, and the Admirals requeſt, deliuered the Ambaſſadors: but he did not forbeare to ſpoile the Conſtables and the Archbiſhops countries, putting all to fire and ſword. The Archbiſhop abandoned Illeſca in the night, going towards Madrid, whereof the Infant Don Henry beeing aduertiſed, he followed him with all ſpeed, and hauing onely ouer-taken and ſpoiled his baggage, hee returned and ſeazed vpon Illeſca: The Archbiſhop ſaued himſelfe in Madrid, where hee was receiued by the Kings commandement: the Admiral and the Earle of Benauent after theſe light exploits, returned to Arcualo. About that time Don Inigo Lopes of Mendoça, one of the Lords of the league, hauing ſurprized the towne of Alcala of Henares; Iohn de Carillo Gouernor of Caçorla, a Captaine of the Archbiſhop of Toledos and the Conſta-
B bles faction, approched neere vnto the place with fiue hundred horſe, and one thouſand two hundred foote, which he laid in ambuſh in certaine valleys, and ſent ſome to runne in view of the towne, to draw Don Inigo forth, who failed not, yet not with ſuch order and ſtrength as he ought, wherefore he hemd him in, in ſuch ſort, as hauing loſt moſt of his men, himſelfe being ſoare hurt, hee could hardly recouer Alcala. To recompence this loſſe, the Infant Don Henries men, did cut ſome of the Conſtables troupes in peeces, in Griſmonda, where notwithſtanding he loſt Laurence d'Aualos his Chamberlaine, nephew to the Conſtable Don Ruy Lopes d'Aualos.

The Infant hearing this, went preſently to field, marching towards Toledo with ſixe hundred horſe, ouer-running the country of Eſcalona, thinking that the Conſtable
C would fight with him, but hee ſtirred not, finding himſelfe too weake: wherevpon hee ſent to haue the Archbiſhop his brother to come, and beeing ioyned together, they went to charge the Infant at Torrijo, who then kept himſelfe within his fort, and whileſt that they ſpoiled the Country, euen vnto the gates of Toledo, killing men, and carrying away the prey, he aduertiſed the King of Nauarre, and the other confederat Lords of his eſtate, who parted preſently from Arcualo and Ontiueros, with one thouſand two hundred men at armes, and light horſe to ſuccour him. The King of Caſtile being much incenſed againſt the confederates, reſolued to ſeaze vpon the lands, rents, and reuenues of the King of Nauarre, beginning by Medina del Campo, neither did the proteſtations and threats of the King of Nauarre and his confederates, preuaile any thing, to whom
D the King of Caſtile made no other anſwer, but that they were all in armes contrary to his commandements, and carried themſelues as rebels.

Don Alphonſo the fift of that name, and twelfth King of Portugal.

DVring theſe tumults in Caſtile, the realme of Portugal was not without ſome croſſes. After the death of King Edward, his ſonne Don Alphonſo ſucceeded him, at
E the age of ſix years, vnder the gouernment of the Queene Donna Leonora, according to the Fathers teſtament: but many townes of the realme reiecting the gouernment of a woman, eſpecially a ſtranger, they intreated the Infant Don Pedro, Duke of Coimbra, that, as the eldeſt brother among the Infants of Portugal, hee would take vpon him the ſole gouernment of the realme. Many others, more modeſt, who would not altogether breake the will of the deceaſed King, were of opinion that hee ſhould gouerne with the Queene. Of the firſt opinion, were the Infants Don Henry Maſter of Chriſtus, and Don Iohn Maiſter of Saint Ieames, Don Pedro excuſing himſelfe of this charge, he perſwaded
Don Iohn to gouerne with the Queene Mother, wherewith he ſhould bee well ſatiſfied:
F but Don Iohn anſwered him freely, that it was not for him, who was the yongeſt amongſt the brethren, to gouerne: but that hee Don Pedro and Don Henry, ſhould aduiſe to take the gouernment of the realme vpon them, as Princes of Portugal, and worthy of ſuch a charge, and that they ſhould not ſuffer a ſtrange woman to rule ouer them, being an infamous thing, vnworthy of the houſe of Portugal, and preiudiciall to the realme: and that they muſt not regard that which the deceaſed King had ordained if it were found

To recompence this loſſe, the Infant Don Henries men, did cut ſome of the Conſtables troupes in peeces, in Griſmonda, where notwithſtanding he loſt Laurence d'Aualos his Chamberlaine, nephew to the Conſtable Don Ruy Lopes d'Aualos.

The Infant hearing this, went preſently to field, marching towards Toledo with ſixe hundred horſe, ouer-running the country of Eſcalona, thinking that the Conſtable
C would fight with him, but hee ſtirred not, finding himſelfe too weake: wherevpon hee ſent to haue the Archbiſhop his brother to come, and beeing ioyned together, they went to charge the Infant at Torrijo, who then kept himſelfe within his fort, and whileſt that they ſpoiled the Country, euen vnto the gates of Toledo, killing men, and carrying away the prey, he aduertiſed the King of Nauarre, and the other confederat Lords of his eſtate, who parted preſently from Areualo and Ontiueros, with one thouſand two hundred men at armes, and light horſe to ſuccour him. The King of Caſtile being much incenſed againſt the confederates, reſolued to ſeaze vpon the lands, rents, and reuenues of the King of Nauarre, beginning by Medina del Campo, neither did the proteſtations and threats of the King of Nauarre and his confederates, preuaile any thing, to whom
D the King of Caſtile made no other anſwer, but that they were all in armes contrary to his commandements, and carried themſelues as rebels.

Don Alphonſo the fift of that name, and twelfth King of Portugal.

DVring theſe tumults in Caſtile, the realme of Portugal was not without ſome croſſes. After the death of King Edward, his ſonne Don Alphonſo ſucceeded him, at
E the age of ſix years, vnder the gouernment of the Queene Donna Leonora, according to the Fathers teſtament: but many townes of the realme reiecting the gouernment of a woman, eſpecially a ſtranger, they intreated the Infant Don Pedro, Duke of Coimbra, that, as the eldeſt brother among the Infants of Portugal, hee would take vpon him the ſole gouernment of the realme. Many others, more modeſt, who would not altogether breake the will of the deceaſed King, were of opinion that hee ſhould gouerne with the Queene. Of the firſt opinion, were the Infants Don Henry Maſter of Chriſtus, and Don Iohn Maiſter of Saint Ieames, Don Pedro excuſing himſelfe of this charge, he perſwaded
Don Iohn to gouerne with the Queene Mother, wherewith he ſhould bee well ſatiſfied:
F but Don Iohn anſwered him freely, that it was not for him, who was the yongeſt amongſt the brethren, to gouerne: but that hee Don Pedro and Don Henry, ſhould aduiſe to take the gouernment of the realme vpon them, as Princes of Portugal, and worthy of ſuch a charge, and that they ſhould not ſuffer a ſtrange woman to rule ouer them, being an infamous thing, vnworthy of the houſe of Portugal, and preiudiciall to the realme: and that they muſt not regard that which the deceaſed King had ordained if it were found found vnreaſonable and vniuſt. They that held the party of the widow Queene Donna Leonora, were D. Alphonſo Earle of Barcellos, with his ſonnes D. Diego Earle of Oren and Marquis of Valencia, and D. Fernand Earle of Arrojolos, and Marquis of Villauicioſa, and with them the Archbiſhop of Lisbone, whoſe ſiſter D. Conſtance, the Earle D. Alphonſo had taken to his ſecond wife; D. Nugno de Goys prior of Saint Iohn, and D. Alphonſo Lord of Caſcais: who with many others their adherents, who aduiſed the Queene not to giue ouer the gouernment in the which the King her husband had placed her: vpon which quarrell the Eſtates of the realme were called, by the Princes and Noblemen, holding the chiefe dignities, where by the dilligence of the Infant D. Henry, there was this order taken. That the Queene mother ſhould be gouerneſſe of her childrens perſons, and of their reuenues and patrimonies, eſtates and Offices of the Kings houſe: and that the Infant D. Pedro ſhould haue care of the defence of the realme, and of armes, and D. Fernand Earle of Arroyolos, of matters belonging vnto Iuſtice: This did nothing pleaſe the Queene, being deſirous to command alone: wherefore the contention being greater then before, they made many new aſſemblies of the Eſtates: ſo as the laſt concluſion was that the Infant D. Pedro ſhould gouerne alone: the which was inſtantly required of all men in generall: ſo as the Queene was wholy diſpoſſeſt of the authority, whereof ſhe might haue retained a good part: Being thus fruſtrate, with extreame griefe, ſhe had recourſe to womaniſh practiſes, complaints and accuſations, as well to the Noblemen of the Realme, as to the Kings of Nauarre and Arragon her brethren: and in the end ſhe came ſorrowfull and diſcontented to the King of Caſtile, her couſin and brother in law, this yeere 1441. to complaine of the Infant D. Pedro, and to craue aide againſt him. She found the king at Gomes Naharra, a Borrough of Medina del Campo, troubled with the quarrels of the King of Nauarre, and other Noblemen, againſt the conſtable, ſo as ſhe could not obtaine any thing.

Caſtille. It was at ſuch time when as the King of Nauarre, and the confederat Lords were gone into the Realme of Toledo to ſuccor the Infant D. Henry, who hearing that the King proceeded againſt them with rigour, repaſt the mountaines, and came towards Medina del Campo, and Olmedo, townes belonging to the King of Nauarre, whereof he of Caſtile had ſeized. Approching neere to Medina, and waſting the time in demaunds and anſwers, they of Olmedo receiued the King of Nauarres men, whoſe army encreaſing daily, he came to lodge within two bow ſhootes of Medina, into the which the conſtable, the Archbiſhop of Toledo his brother, and D. Iohn of Soto Major Maiſter of Alcantara, entred the night following with 1600. horſe, ſo as for many daies there were diuerſe skirmiſhes amongſt them, in the which many good men were ſlaine and hurt. The Queenes of Caſtile and Portugall, ſiſters, and the Prince D. Henry propounded certaine conditions of peace, whereon there was long debate, without any frute. But whileſt they were buſie intreating and debating of theſe Articles, the King of Nauarre (who had Aluaro of Bracamont and Fernando Rejon, Knights well affected to his ſeruice in Medina,) delt ſo with them, as one night the conſtable and his brother beeing in gard and not caring to goe the round themſelues, but relying vpon an other, they gaue him entry by a place called Our Lady of Antigua.

Medina del Campo ſurpriſed by the confederat Lords and the Conſtable almoſt taken.

The confederats army was then growne to be aboue fiue thouſand men at armes and light horſe, and a great number of foote: wherefore the King of Nauarre and the confederate Lords, entred furiouſly into the towne with theſe forces, againſt the which there was no offer to make defence, for the King knowing well that they had no quarrell but to the conſtable, he commanded him, his brother, the maiſter of Alcantara, and others of his faction, to ſaue themſelues by an other port, oppoſite to that where their enemies entred, wherein they ſhewed themſelues nothing obſtinate. Theſe being gon, the King retired himſelfe to the place of Saint Antolin, without any care or trouble for them that entred, who came preſently to kiſſe his hands, firſt the Admirall, the Earle of Benauent, and other Noblemen and captaines; then the King of Nauarre, who as a King, made onely a reuerence, but did not kiſſe his hand, at which time there was no ſigne of diſcontentment, but the King did looke of them all with a cheerefull countenance. The conſtables lodging and of the reſt of his faction were ſackt: and the Queenes of Caſtile and

A and Portugall, ſiſters, did aduertiſe Don Gomes Guttiere of Toledo Archbiſhop of Seuile, and his Nephew Don Fernando Aluares of Toledo, Earle of Alba, the firſt of that houſe which carried that title, and Don Lopes of Bariento Biſhop of Segobia, that they ſhould retire from Court, for that they were too much affected to the Conſtables party, the which they did the next day, and all the Officers which had beene preferred vnto the King by the Conſtable were diſmiſt. And to make a good end of theſe troubles, the Kings of Caſtile and Nauarre, and the other Princes and Noblemen which were at Medina, made a compromiſe in the hands of Mary Queene of Caſtile, Don Henry Prince of the Aſturia's, the Admirall, and of Don Garcia Aluares of Toledo, who con-

B cluded as followeth. That the Conſtable Don Aluaro de Luna Earle of Saint Stephens, ſhould abſent himſelfe from Court for the ſpace of ſixe yeeres next enſuing, appointing him for his aboade, his houſes of Saint Martin of Val d'Egliſe, or Riaca: That he ſhould not write any letters to the King, but concerning his owne buſineſſe, whereof hee ſhould ſend a coppie vnto the Queene of Caſtile and to the Prince her ſonne. That during the ſaid time, hee ſhould not make any league nor confederacie: That all Knights which had followed him ſhould retire to their houſes, and none to remaine about him but his houſehold ſeruants: Notwithſtanding the Conſtable, and the Archbiſhop of Toledo his brother, might retaine for the ſpace of thirty daies after notice giuen them of this ſentence, either of them fifty men at armes: And for the

C execution thereof, the Conſtable ſhould leaue in depoſito the caſtles of S^t. Stephen, Aillon, Maderuelo, Ganga, Rojas, Maqueda, Montalban, Caſtle of Bayuela and Eſcalona, which places ſhould remaine during the ſaid ſixe yeeres in the cuſtody of certaine Knights. And for a greater caution, the Conſtable ſhould deliuer Don Iohn de Luna his ſonne and heire in hoſtage to the Earle of Benauent, during the ſaid time: That after the Conſtable ſhould haue accompliſhed the aboue mentioned conditions, the townes and places which the confederats held, belonging vnto the King, ſhould be yeelded vp, and the garriſons depart: That the King ſhould reſtore priuate men to their goods, honours, and dignities, whereof hee had depriued them, by reaſon of theſe troubles. All guifts and grants made by the King, ſince the firſt of September, in the yeere

D 1438. vnto this preſent yeere 1441. ſhould be reuoked and held for voide, except to certaine perſons of reſpect: That all that were partiſans to the Conſtable, ſhould be put out of the Kings councell, who ſhould be named by the King of Nauarre, the Earles of Ledeſma and Beneuent, Inigo Lopes of Mendoça, and Ruy Diaz of Mendoça: That all ſouldiars ſhould preſently retire, and no longer hold the field: That the King of Caſtile ſhould recompence him of Nauarre, for the loſſes he had ſuſtained in his lands in Caſtile, during the ſeditions and that he, ſhould pay the ſouldiars which the King of Nauarre and his partiſans had brought by reaſon thereof. Theſe with ſome other Articles were concluded the third of Iuly, this yeere 1441. and were confirmed by the king of Caſtile, thinking thereby to end the confuſions, whereinto he like a yong Prince, had plun-

E ged his Eſtate, by fauoring and ſupporting his mignon to much, who was both indiſcreet and inſolent, to the contempt of the Princes of his bloud, and the chiefe Noblemen of the Kingdome, who notwithſtanding vnder collour of prouiding for the publike good, tended all to their priuate. Soone after the King beeing at Caſtro Xeris, the Licentiate Alphonſo Ruis of Villena came vnto him, with procuration from the Conſtable, who allowed and accepted of the ſentence, requiring to haue men ſent to receiue the hoſtages. After all this the Kings went to Burgos, where they ſpent ſome time in feaſts and ſports, and to auoide all iealouſie which might cauſe troubles and diuiſions amongſt the Noblemen they made an accord amongſt them that not any one ſhould affect to be more familiar with the King then an other: notwithſtanding the Admirall

F D. Frederic began to be very gracious with the King of Caſtile, not without iealouſie of the King of Nauarre, who would willingly haue raiſed ſome ſtirs, after the accuſtomed manner, but his impaciency was reſtrained by the Earle of Caſtro, his ancient and faithfull ſeruant, who gaue him to vnderſtand, that it muſt needs redound to his proffit, and of other Noblemen of the league.

Conſtable diſmiſt the Court for ſix yeeres.

And to make a ſtricter bonde, hee aduiſed him, ſeeing that Queene Blanche his wife was newly deceaſed, to marry D. Ioane the Admirals daughter: and he propounded vnto him an other marriage, betwixt the Infant D. Henry his brother, and D. Beatrice daughter to D. Roderigo Alphonſo Pimentel, Earle of Benauent: theſe Noblemen ſtill practiſing the Conſtables ruine, which in the end they ſaw.

Nauarre. Blanch Queene of Nauarre after that ſhe had conducted her daughter to the Prince of the Aſturia's into Caſtile, ſhe parted no more thence. In the abſence of the King her husband, and hers, D. Charles their ſonne gouerned the Realme of Nauarre, being aſſiſted by good councell. She was a religious Princeſſe, and much giuen to deuotion, and pilgrimages, eſpecially to places dedicated to the Virgin Mary, whether ſhee made ſome voiages during the aboue mentioned troubles, wherein ſpending her time, it happened that ſhe died at Santa Maria de Nieua, in the yeere 1442. It is doubtfull amongſt the Spaniards where her body was interred, for there is not any marke or menumont found in Spaine, although ſhe ordained that it ſhould bee carried to Santa Maria of Vxue, and that the priory of Ayuar ſhould be anexed to that Church, the which notwithſtanding was not done. The Authors of the Hiſtory of Sicile write, that ſhee died in that Iſland, in the Monaſtery of Saint Nicholas des Arenes, at the foote of Mount Etna, and that ſhe is buried at Catanea, in Saint Francis Church. By the death of this Prince the ſucceſſion of the realme of Nauarre fell vnto her ſonne, Don Charles Prince of Viana, who at that time was full twenty yeeres old, bred vp by the Lords of Beaumont, whereof Lewis was the chiefe, who afterwards beeing made Conſtable of Nauarre by King Iohn, was the firſt of that houſe that was aduanced to that dignity.

Death of D. Blanch Queen of Nauarre.

Caſtile. The Conſtable of Caſtile bearing his exile from Court with the loſſe of his authority, very impatiently (wherein hee might haue maintained himſelfe, if hee could haue knowne himſelfe) beganne to make new practiſes, to grow into fauour with the confederats, ſubmitting himſelfe to Iohn de Pacheco, that hee might bring him into fauour with Prince Henry his maiſter: but the wound was to freſh, ſo as nothing was done at that time.

1442. The Eſtates beeing aſſembled that yeere 1442. at Toro, they did graunt vnto Don Iohn King of Caſtile (though with great difficulty) to furniſh him with foure ſcore millions of Marauidis, paiable at two termes, that yeere and the next following. There the confederate Lords beeing aduertiſed, that D. Pedro de Acugnas ſought all meanes to reſtore the Conſtable to fauour, the Admirall ſent to take him priſoner in his houſe at Duegnas, but ſoone after he was deliuered: and then there was an enterpriſe deſcouered, which made the Conſtable much more odious, then hee had beene: for ſome of his friends were ſo hardy, as to make a mine in Toro, the which did come vnto the Kings lodging, and to the caſtle, by the which hee would ſecretly draw in armed men, and kill, or take the King of Nauarre, the Infant his brother, and the confederate Lords, whileſt they were in councell. The Eſtates beeing ended, the King came to Vailledolit, where as he gaue vnto Don Pedro of Eſtuniga, Earle of Ledeſma, the City of Plaiſance, in recompence of Trugillo, which he demaunded, for that it had beene promiſed him by the King.

A hould attempt of the Conſtables fauorers.

There beeing great contention growne betwixt the Earle of Caſtagneda, and Don Inigo Lopes of Mendoça, about the limitation of their iuriſdictions, and vaſſals, in the lands which they held in the Prouince of Alaua by reaſon whereof their armed men, keeping the field, did ſpoile and oppreſſe the poore people: whereupon many Commonalties did riſe in armes, againſt theſe two Lords, making ſharpe warre againſt them, hauing obtained leaue from the King to doe it, to the end they might ſuppreſſe thoſe inſolencies which were committed vnder collour of their quarrels, which they might and ought for to haue ended by Iuſtice, and not by armes. This yeere died Don Iohn of Crezuela Archbiſhop of Toledo, the Conſtables brother, to the great hindrance of his affaires, in whoſe place Don Guttiere Gomes of Toledo Archbiſhop of Seuile, was choſen, by the meanes of the King of Nauarre, to whom the houſe of Toledo was reconciled.

At that time there was a change of the Biſhops of Spaine, euery one aſpiring to that which was richeſt and of greateſt dignity; the which is the greateſt care of moſt of the

A the paſtors in theſe latter times. The Archbiſhoprike was giuen to D. Garcia Oſorio Biſhop of Ouiedo, Nephew to the Admirall; the Biſhoprike of Ouiedo to the Biſhop of Orenſe; that of Orenſe, to Doctor Iohn of Torquemado, of the Order of the preaching friars, Cardinal of Saint Sixte, a great Doctor in the Cannon law. Change of Biſhops in Spaine.

At that time in Biſcay there were deſcouered ſome followers of their opinion, whom they called Fratricelli, men condemned by Pope Boniface the eight, in the yeere 1290. and afterwards by Iohn the two and twentith, for heretikes, and followers of all impurity and abuſes, hauing had their beginning at Ferrara in Italy, by one called Herman. The King of Caſtile ſent Francis of Soria a Franciſcan friar, and D. Iohn Alphonſo Cherino Abbot of Alcala the royall, one of the Kings councell, to informe of their deeds, doc- Fratricelle heretikes reuiued.

E trine and manners: and it was found by the informations which they brought to Court that he which had reuiued, and newly practiſed this Doctrine of Fratricelli, was a Franciſcan friar, called Alphonſo de Mella, and that many men and women were infected with this error, in the towne of Durango and there abouts: wherefore the King ordained that they ſhould be apprehended, ſending two Prouoſts thether, well accompanied, who brought away a great number, ſome to Vailladolit, ſome to Calçada, where they were burnt. The friar Alphonſo de Mella, the reuiuer of this ſect, eſcaped, hearing that they informed, and paſt into the Moores country, with many yong ſtrumpets, which were taken from him, and himſelfe condemned, and made a ſlaue, where hee ended his miſerable daies.

C The King of Caſtile being ſollicited by the Queene mother of Portugal, to be a means that ſhe might be reſtored to the authority, in the which the deceaſed King her husband had left her by his will; he ſent Ambaſſadors to the young King D. Alphonſo, and to his vncle D. Pedro, and to the Eſtates and councell of the realme, to perſwade and intreat them, to leaue the gouernment of the King and realm, to the widow Queene, according to the laſt wil of the deceaſed king Edward, whereof they did honeſtly excuſe themſelues, eſpecially the councell, yeelding many reaſons why they could not conſent therevnto: At that time hapened the death of D. Iohn of Portugal, maiſter of Saint Iames, & ſecond Conſtable of the realme, being 43. yeeres old, who was a great friend to Aluaro de Luna, Conſtable of Caſtile, who was alſo adminiſtrator of the Maiſterſhip of Saint Iames in D Caſtile. This Infant was grandfather by the mothers ſide, to the Queene D. Iſabella, the heire of Caſtile and Leon, who was wife to King Fernand the fifth called the Catholike. Portugal.

The ſame yeere Ambaſſadors came from D. Alphonſo King of Arragon, to the Court of Caſtile, to condole with King Iohn for the troubles and ſeditions of his realme, and giuing him councell in their maiſters name, as a Prince that was his allie and friend, to loue the Princes of his bloud, and to win them with fauors and good vſage, admitting them into his councell of State, and gouerning his realmes by their aduice, and of the Noblemen of the greateſt and moſt ancient families of Spaine. Arragon.

The Ambaſſadors did alſo make him a relation of the happy ſucceſſe the King their maiſter had in the warre of Naples: where after diuers light exploits of warre betwixt E René of Aniou and him, he had beſeeged Naples the ſecond time, in the which Renè was: and that by the good ſeruice of a certaine Maſon, who had beene denied Iuſtice by Renè, he had brought into the city by an old conduit, or ſinke, about two hundred Spaniards, to ſeize vpon ſome port, and giue entry to the reſt of the army, who beeing deſcouered and pourſued, had fortefied themſelues in a great Tower, where during the fight hee had cauſed a ſcaladoe to bee giuen, and by that meanes put ſo many men into the towne as hee became maiſter of Saint Genaios gates, which hauing forced, they drew in all the armie of Arragon: That of the men of warre of the Angeuine, party had made great reſiſtance, yea there was René himſelfe, F fighting verie valiantly, in his owne perſon, euen vnto the laſt extremity, ſo as hee had like to haue beene taken priſoner, hauing beene ſtaied by ſome certaine ſouldiars of Cattelogne, from whom hee freed himſelfe, cutting off the hand of one them called Eſpejo, who held the Rheines of his horſe-bridle, and with great difficulty he ſaued himſelfe in the fort of Caſtle-Nouo, which held for him; ſo as Rene beeing eſcaped, and his ſouldiars retired where they could, hee remained maiſter of the city, and ſoone 13 Succeſſe of the warre of Naples.

after receiued the forts of Capuana and Saint Hermo by compoſition; And that René finding that he had need of new forces, leauing a good garriſon in Caſtle Nouo, and a Geneuois called Anthony Caluo to commaund there, had gone to the Florentins, and to Pope Eugenius, his confederats in Italy, from whom not being able to draw any ſuffici. ent aide, he ſent word vnto captaine Caluo, that if he could not hold the fort, he ſhould yeeld it with the beſt conditions he could, the which was done, and by that meanes the King their maiſter remained abſolute Lord of the chiefe city of the realme, and of the caſtles, where he had beene receiued and acknowledged by the Neapolitans for their King, with great pompe and triumph, his aduerſary being retired to Marſeilles, after that he and his wife had held that realme in ſuſpence and troubles by the ſpace of ſixe yeeres. These newes were pleaſing to the King of Caſtile, who with milde and friendly words ſeemed to take in good part the admonitions and councell which the Ambaſſadors had giuen him in the King of Arragons name. Thus King D. Alphonſo remained peaceable poſſeſſor of the realme of Naples, in the yeere 1442. after that he had contended for it one and twenty whole yeeres, from the time that he was called from Corſica by Queene Ioane. And ſoone after this conqueſt, making his peace with Pope Eugenius who had need of his aſſiſtance and aide, for the recouery of the Marquiſate of Ancona, the which Cont Francis Sforza held, by the meanes of Cardinal Lewis of Padoua, and of the Patriarke of Aquileia, the Pope graunted the inueſtiture of the realme to him and his, making D. Fernand of Arragon, baſe ſonne to King Alphonſo Legitimate to that effect, hoping to ſucceed in the realme of Naples, and diſanulling all other Inueſtitures which had beene made by him or his predeceſſors Popes, to all other Princes whatſoeuer. In regard whereof, the King did aide the Pope with his forces, againſt ſuch as oppoſed themſelues in the Marquiſate, and made him to enioy it quietly. The King of Arragons Ambaſſadors did admoniſh the King of Nauarre priuatly, to keepe friendſhip with the King of Caſtile, and to doe him ſeruice: the like admonitions they gaue to the Infant D. Henry, hauing ſuch charge from their maiſter.

Alphonſo king of Arragon inueſted in the realme of Naples.

The Noblemen of Caſtile hauing with ſuch contention plunged the Conſtable and them of his party in a gulphe of miſeres, and the Courtiers hell, which is the diſgrace of their Prince, and decay of their authority, they gaue him meanes by their negligence and baſeneſſe, to reſolue and to returne to that dignity, from which he was fallne: for euery one reſpecting more his priuate profit, then the publike good, or the maintenance of their league, followed that which he held to be moſt profitable for himſelfe, beginning to iarre, and to haue factions amongſt themſelues, whereof the Conſtables friends that were in diſgrace, could make vſe; wherefore Doctor Pero Ianes, and Alphonſo Peres of Biuero, very much affected to the Conſtable, had meanes to returne to Court. D. Lopes of Barrientos, Biſhop of Segobia, beſides that he was a very deere friend to the Conſtable, hauing or fearing to haue ſome quarrell with D. Iohn de Pacheco, fauorite to Prince Henry, hee exchanged his Biſhoprike for that of Auila, with the Cardinal D. Pedro of Cerbantes, for that the Prince did ordinarily remaine at Segobia, it may bee hee would haue this exchange ſerue for a collour for that which he pollitikely pretended, making ſhew to hate and flie the Prince D. Henry, when as he had moſt deſire to bee in fauour with him, to reſtore the Conſtable, and to retire him from the King of Nauarre and the confederats league. Soone after D. Pedro Suarez of Toledo, ſonne to D. Garcia Aluares of Toledo Lord of Oropeſa, being fauored by D. Henry Prince of Caſtile, who was but of a turbulent ſpirit, fortefied himſelfe like an enemy in Talauera, the which being made knowne to the King of Caſtile, who was then at Santa Maria of Nieua, with the King of Nauarre, to celebrate the Anniuerſary of D. Blanch Queene of Nauarre deceaſed; the two Kings marched thether with ſome troupes, and hauing cauſed the Infant D. Henry to come vnto them, they forced them that held Talauera to yeeld, which place they gaue in gard to D. Fernand of Crezuela, Archdeacon of Toledo. From thence they went al together to Toledo, where by the way they did viſit the Conſtable D. Aluaro de Luna, at Eſcalona where the King and Queen were his Goſſips to a daughter, who was called Ioane, the which did wonderfully diſcontent the Admirall D. Frederic, and the other confederate Lords. A Earle of Caſtagneda, and D. Inigo Lopes of Mendoça; did much harme vnto the gentlemen of the country, and others, ruining their houſes and committing many inſolencies, as a brutiſh people is accuſtomed to doe, being a meere folly to arme them, how iuſt ſoeuer the cauſe be: yea they proceeded ſo farre, as they did beſeege D. Pero Lopes of Ayala, Lieutenant and Gouernor of Guipuſcoa in the towne of Saluatierra of Alaua, which did belong vnto him, who ſeeing himſelfe preſt, ſent to intreat his Neighbour and kinſman, D. Pero Fernandes of Velaſco, Lord of Haro, being then at a village of his, to come and ſuccor him, who hauing ſeene D. Pero of Ayalas letter, he endeuored with all ſpeed to releeue him, gathering together in leſſe then foure daies aboue foure thouſand foote B and fiue hundred Launces, with which forces he marcht towards Saluatierra. The Commons being aduertiſed of his comming, diſlodged, yet not ſo ſpeedily, but he tooke many, whom he either ſlue or carried away priſoners, hauing chaſed the reſt home vnto their townes, and burnt many of their houſes.

In the yeere 1443. D. Lewis of Guzman, maiſter of the Knights of the Calatraua died: ſo as the King of Nauarre obtained that place of the King of Caſtile, for a baſe ſonne of his called D. Alphonſo of Arragon: whereof the King hauing written to the Commonders (to whom the election did belong) D. Fernando of Padilla treaſorer of the Order (who had great credit among them, and the greater, for that he held D. Iohn Ramirés of Guzman great Commander of that Order priſoner euer ſince the ciuill warre, and C would neuer deliuer him, neither by the Kings commandement, nor for the threats of the Princes and Noblemen) wrought ſo, as without reſpect to the Kings letters, or to any thing elſe, he cauſed himſelfe to be choſen maiſter of the Calatraua, diſapointing D. Alphonſo of Arragon, and the King of Nauarre his father, of their pourſute, who for that cauſe made made great Inſtance vnto the King, and obtained many letters and commandements to the Commanders, to diſanull this election which was fraudulent, violent and againſt their Orders: for this new maiſter beeing choſen, had freed the great Commander, but hee had firſt made him to allow of his election, and to ſweare fealty and homage vnto him, as to his Superior, and maiſter of the Order. All this preuayling nothing, the King cauſed the rents and reuenues of Calatraua to be ſeized on, forbidding all D their ſubiects and vaſſals, to obey or acknowledge D. Fernand of Padilla, who notwithſtanding was fauored and ſupported by D. Henry Prince of Caſtile, & other Noblemen, who were ſomewhat iealous of the King of Nauars greatneſſe. Moreouer the King ſent the Infant D. Henry of Arragon, with an army, who did beſeege this vſurper in the fort of the Conuent of Calatraua, where he ſpent ſome daies, being defended by a good garriſon. At the laſt the war ended, by an accident which happened to D. Fernand of Padilla, who died, being ſhot vnaduiſedly by one of his Squiers, who aymed at the enemy. They that defended the place, hauing loſt their maiſter yeelded vpon compoſition. The Infant aduertiſed the King of Caſtile what had happened, who at the requeſt of the King of Nauarre, did write againe vnto the Commanders to chooſe D. Alphonſo of Arragon, the E which was done, but he enioyed it little.

Election preposterouſly made.

Vſurper enioyes his maiſterſhip little.

D. Alphonſo of Arragon baſe ſonne to the King of Nauarre, maiſter of Calatraua.

The Court remouing from Toledo, to come to Madrigal, the King being at Ramaga, the Prince D. Henry his ſon did ſollicit him to impriſon Alphonſo Peres of Biuero, Fernando Iames of Xeris, Iohn Manuel of Lando, and Pedro of Luxan Grome of the Chamber, for crimes whereof he accuſed them, and the King of Nauarre did the like, which was an occaſion to chaſe againe from Court all the Conſtables friends, fauorers and dependants, and to change many of the Kings houſhold ſeruants, yea to giue him ſo many gards, as he was diſcontented, yet he had no wil to redreſſe it, for he was faint-hearted, and had no royall reſolution, yea hee endured that D. Henry Henriques the Admirals brother, and Ruy Diaz of Mendoça were continually in his Chamber, to obſerue what hee did, and F to aduertiſe the King of Nauarre, and his ſonne in law the Prince Don Henry. It is credible that this was the practiſe of Don Lopes of Barriento, lately Biſhop of Segobia, and now of Auila, who ſought to giue the confederats ſome occaſion to vſe the King rigorouſly, whereby it ſhould appeere that they held him in vnworthy ſeruitude, wherewith the King, his ſonne the Prince of Aſturia's, and others whom hee would make friends to the Conſtable, might bee diſcontented, as it happened, for this Biſhop, being a very polletike man, vſed ſuch meanes, as he wonne D. Iohn de Pacheco, who was the heart of Prince Henry, procuring him to let the Prince his maiſter vnderſtand, how vnworthy a thing it was for him to continue in their league, who intreated his father ſo vnworthely, who hauing chaſed from court by their ſeditious armes, the conſtable, and other moſt faithfull ſeruants to the crowne of Caſtile, vnder collour of ſome youth, but in effect it was for that they oppoſed themſelues againſt their tyranie, which they did build vnder a ſhew of the publike good, they held the Kings perſon as it were in captiuity, to whom it was not lawfull to ſpeake, ſee, nor heare, but by their Organes, no not to conuerſe priuately with the Queene his wife, nor with him his ſonne, without witneſſes and gards, who went and reported all to them that he did and ſaid: a ſhamefull thing, and full of contempt, the which he ſhould not ſuffer, who ſhould be the ſupport of his father, and the hope of all faithfull ſubiects, louing the greatneſſe of the crowne of Caſtile, and the honour and reputation of their Kings; with ſuch perſwaſions hee induced the Prince D. Henry to leaue the league, the which he did cunningly, as he was councelled by the Biſhop; who vſed the happy endeuors of Iohn de Pacheco, and by other diuiſes and meanes, hee drew vnto the conſtables friendſhip (who was almoſt in deſpaire, and reſolued, ſeeing himſelfe ſo purſued, to paſſe into Portugall) the new Archbiſhop of Toledo, the Earle of Haro, Alba, Caſtagneda and Ledeſma, who now intituled himſelfe Earle of Plaiſance, Inigo Lopes of Mendoça, Pero Aluares Oſorio and other great Noblemen. The better to couer this practiſe, beeing alſo neceſſary for the Archbiſhop of Toledo to diſſemble, hauing not yet receiued his Bulls from Rome for his Archbiſhoprike, hee and his Nephew, the Earle of Alba made a new league, with the King of Nauarre: but the Bulles receiued, and beeing in quiet poſſeſſion of the Archbiſhoprike, they left the league, and ioyned with the conſtable.

Prince Henry won by the Conſtables faction.

The effects of the Biſhops of Auilas practiſes beganne now to appeere, the Earle of Haro hauing complained of the ſubiection wherein they held the King, vſing ſome word of threatning that he would remedy it: going to Curiel to the Earle of Plaiſance to conferre with him about it: wherevpon the King of Nauarre ſent after him to take him, and he had beene taken, notwithſtanding that he went by vnknowne waies, if hee had not beene very well mounted, and eſcaped by the ſwiftneſſe of his horſe, into his owne country, where hee leauied men, and inuited all his friends to ioyne with him in ſo honourable an enterpriſe, to free the King from the oppreſſion wherein they held him, ſo as within few daies hee had gathered together one thouſand horſe, there being ioyned with him the Earle of Caſtagneda, and D. Pedro Sarmiento: againſt whom Don Iohn King of Nauarre ſent fifteene hundred Launces, led by the Admirall and the Earle of Benauent, who led Prince Henry with them, who did not yet deſcouer himſelfe, but onely kept theſe two parties from fighting, making them in ſome ſort friends, and ſatisfied at that time one of an other, and then hee returned to Segobia. Whileſt that the Admirall and Earle of Benauent were abſent in this voiage, hauing left the Kings in Tordeſillas, Pero Aluares Oſorio of the Biſhop of Auilas faction, came and preſented himſelfe before the towne, being accompanied with many ſouldiars, and did endeuor to enter, but he could not, wherevpon he retired.

Theſe things made the King of Nauarre, and the confederats very iealous, that there was ſome great conſpiracy againſt them, and not able yet to diſcouer who were the conſpirators, to bee the better certefied, they ſent to intreat the Prince D. Henry to come to Tordeſillas, that they might aduiſe what was to bee done for the totall ruine of the Conſtable, as they had concluded together.

The Prince hauing therein the Biſhops aduice, who demaunded nothing more, came with an intent to make knowne vnto the King his father the league which hee had newly made, to free him from Gouernment, and to comfort him. Arriuing at Tordeſillas with the Biſhop of Auila, Iohn de Pacheco and many other Noblemen, they were receiued by the King of Nauarre, with great demonſtration of ioy. At that time there was no meanes for to conferre together, nor to treate of any affaires, for they were readie to celebrate a marriage betwixt the King of Nauarre,

A Nauarre, and the Admirall Henriques daughter, which were preparing with great ſtate, at the tower of Lobaton, whither all men went.

This marriage was accompliſhed to the great griefe of Don Charles Prince of Viana, to whoſe preiudice the king D. Iohn his father, detayned the Realme of Nauar, and wold not leaue it, although it were his inheritance by his mother, which was the cauſe of great troubles. This Princeſſe D. Ioane was of the bloud royall of Caſtile, for the Admirall Don Frederick her father, was ſonne to Don Alphonſo Henriques, and grand-child to Don Frederick Maſter of Saint Iames, who by the commandement of Don Pedro the cruell, his brother, was ſlaine at Seuile. At the ſame time Don Fernand of Aualos, Chamber-
B laine to the Infant D. Henry, was ſent to bring Donna Beatrix, ſiſter to Don Alphonſo Pimentel, Earle of Benauent, to Cordoua, being promiſed to the Infant his maſter: in which citie that mariage was celebrated, of whom came D. Henry of Arragon, called the Infant of Fortune, or the Fortunate, who came to be Duke of Segorbe.

The Court being returned to Tordeſillas, they began to treat of matters againſt the Conſtable, whereupon the Prince told the king of Nauarre, that it were good all they of the league were together, to determine of matters of ſo great importance, the which pleaſed the king of Nauarre, whereupon there were letters and meſſengers ſent to them that were abſent to draw them to Court: and for that Tordeſillas would not ſerue to lodge ſo great an aſſembly, the towne of Areualo was appointed. The Biſhop of Auila
C was very deſirous, that the king and the Prince, father and ſonne, might conferre freely together, the which was very difficult: for there were ſpies ſet by the king of Nauarre about the kings perſon in his chamber, and in all other places, who did obſerue what hee ſayd or did, and yet the king could not helpe it: yet the biſhop found meanes to aduiſe him, that he ſhould faine himſelfe to be ſomewhat ſicke, and that vppon this occaſion, the Prince, vnder colour to viſit him, and to do his duty, might deliuer many things vnto him which might pleaſe him. The king kept his bed for a time, whereby the Prince had oportunity to diſcouer the new league vnto him, and to aſſure him, that the Conſtable whom he had chaſed away, ſhould yet deliuer him from the captiuity wherein they held him: wherewith the king was ſo ioyed, as he could not containe himſelfe, but he did out-
D wardly ſhew the hope which he had conceiued, which made the gards ſuſpect, that the father and the ſonne had had ſome diſcourſe of great conſequence, whereof they did aduertiſe the King of Nauarre, who was very iealous of the biſhop. They cauſed the Admirall to aske the king, what good diſcourſe the Prince his ſonne had vſed, wherewith he was ſo ioyed. The king wiſely concealing what he knew, anſwered, that they were tales of the follies of youth.

Caſtile.

This buſines hauing ſucceeded wiſhfully for the Biſhop, the Prince tooke his leaue of the two kings, his father and father-in-law, and ſo returned to Segobia, to attend (ſayd he) the time of the aſſembly at Areualo: but it was the leaſt of his thoughts, for he had a ſpeciall deſire to breake it if he could: whereof hauing conferred by the way with the bi-
E ſhop of Auila his Councellor, he (who was a cunning politicke man) found this expedient: he went to Areualo, beeing a towne of his Dioceſſe of Auila, with a great trayne, and finding the lodgings alreadie marked, for the Noblemen that ſhould come thither, he cauſed ſome to quarrell with the harbingers, and with ſuch of the traine as were alreadie come, ſo as he put the towne into a great confuſion. Many of thoſe which were alreadie lodged, were forced to depart, and to giue place to my Lord Biſhop and his men, and then ſeeking for other lodging, there grew other contentions among them of the Court, ſo as the king of Nauarre being aduertiſed thereof, hee was much diſcontented, and growing more ſuſpitious, he would not go to that aſſembly, fearing ſome practiſe againſt him. The Prince hauing what he demanded, he wrote vnto the king of Nauarre,
F complayning much that he was not come to the aſſembly at Areualo: wherefore they ſent the Admirall Don Frederick vnto him to Saint Mary de Nyeua to draw him to another aſſembly, whereunto the Prince pretending ſome excuſes, the Admirall told him, that if he came not, it would ſeeme, that he meant to withdraw himſelfe from the vnion of the king of Nauarre and the confederate Lords.

The Prince pretended many reaſons hee had for it, but he diſſembled his intent: the Admirall

Admirall intreated him for an enterview with his father in-law at Olmedo, whereof hee excuſed himſelfe as honeſtly as he could, and ſent backe the Admirall very much diſcontented: for he ſpake not but as he was aduiſed by the Biſhop of Auila, who wiſhed him not to enter into Olmedo, nor into any place belonging to the king of Nauarre. The Biſhop being vigilant and actiue to do any thing that might giue forme and effect to his enterpriſe, for the reſtoring of the Conſtable to his firſt fauour and authoritie, poſted to Alba de Tormes, whereas he made the Arch-biſhop of Toledo, and the Earle of Alba his Nephew good friends and ſeruants to the Prince Don Henry, aduertiſing them of all that had beene done, and he gaue order in Alba, that the like aduice ſhould bee giuen vnto Don Inigo Lopes of Mendoça, Lord of Hita and Buytrago; and being returned to Segobia, he cauſed the Prince to write vnto him, and to promiſe to fauour him in the queſtion he had with the king of Caſtile for the Aſturia's of Santillana. During theſe practiſes in Caſtile, the Infant Don Henry hauing ſeized vpon the cittie of Cordoua, he ſought to draw the townes of Andaluſia into the Confederats power, and had attempted to ſeaze vpon Seuile; where finding reſiſtance, he layed ſiege vnto it, and did greatly preſſe it, at ſuch time as the Prince D. Henry did publiſh his reſolution openly in the cittie of Auila, which was, to continue vnder the obedience of the king his father, and to ſeeke to free him from them that did oppreſſe him: wherefore they of Seuile, vppon this newes, tooke courage, and did valiantly repulſe the Infant. The Earles of Caſtagneda and Haro, with many other Knights, hearing of this reſolution, ſent inſtantly to preſent their ſeruice vnto the Prince.

The king of Nauarre ſeeing this ſtorme approch, ſought by all meanes to pacifie the Prince, promiſing him all that he had formerly demanded, and not obtayned, but it was too late. He that carried this meſſage vnto the Prince for the king of Nauarre, was a wiſe man, called Aluar Garcia of Saint Mary, who hath written part of the Chronicle of this King of Caſtile. The king of Nauarre and his confederates ſeeing the Princes deſſeines, and that they muſt come to force, they aſſembled men from all parts, and ſo did the Prince: for the Conſtable, the Arch-biſhop of Toledo, and the Earle of Alba came preſently to him to Auila, whereas they might haue ſome fifteene hundred horſe, not ſufficient to beſeege Tordeſillas where the king was: wherefore they reſolued to go towards Burgos, to ioyne with the Earles of Haro, Caſtagneda, and Plaiſance, and with Don Inigo Lopes of Mendoça: whereof the King of Nauarre being aduertiſed, hauing alreadie leuied aboue two thouſand horſe, he led the king to Portillo, and hauing there left him in the guard of the Earle of Caſtro, he marched with his troupes towards Burgos, beeing reſolued to fight with the Prince and his men, and he came and camped at Pamphega in the territorie of Burgos. The Prince who was within the cittie, and had alreadie aboue three thouſand horſe and foure thouſand foote, ſallyed forth, and came and lodged within view of his father-in-lawes armie. They expected nothing but a bloudie battell betwixt theſe two factions: but they retired without any blowes, but only a light skirmiſh, the which happened, whileſt they did capitulate, at the ſollicitation of ſome good religious men: at which treatie the king of Nauarre did in a manner yeeld to all that the Prince required, leauing the king of Caſtile in full libertie to reſtore his Officers, and to do what he pleaſed. The king of Nauarre finding no meanes to make an accord beeing the weaker, he diſlodged in the night, without ſound of trumpet, and retired to Palençuela. The king of Caſtile being ill guarded in Portillo, vnder colour of going a hunting eſcaped from the Earle of Caſtro, and came to Vailledolit, whither the Biſhop of Auila came preſently vnto the Princes and the Confederates campe, which was neere vnto Palençuela. The king ſhewed the beſt countenance he could vnto the Biſhop, and acknowledging the good ſeruice he had done him in his deliuerie, he made him infinit promiſes. The King of Nauar, the Admirall, the Earle of Benauent, D. Pedro of Quignones, and other heads of their faction, ſeeing themſelues low, and at their enemies mercy, they reſolued to retire themſelues, euery one to his houſe, and there to attend the euent: wherefore the K. of Nauar, who for ſome yeares had not ſeen Nauar, went thither to prouide men and meanes, to enter ſpeedily with great forces into Caſtile, againſt his aduerſaries.

King of Caſtile deliuered.

King of Nauars league diſperſed.

15. Nauarre.

Being come into his Realme, he firſt of all furniſhed his fronter places, with all things neceſſary

A neceſſarie, to reſiſt the king of Caſtiles attempts: who had no great deſire to purſue him into Nauarre, but onely to ſpoyle him and his, of that which they held in Caſtile, and firſt of all he tooke Medina del campo, and Olmedo: then the towne of Pegnafiel was taken by force and ſacked, and the caſtle yeelded by compoſition, Roa and Aranda of Duero opened their gates vnto the Prince, who with the Conſtable (hauing nothing that made head in Caſtile the old) paſt into Andaluſia, againſt the Infant Don Henry, and forced him to flie into the country of Murcia, where he fortified himſelfe in Lorca, vntill that the Prince was retired into Caſtile, and then he paſſed into Arragon, and ſo ioyned with the king of Nauarre his brother, who leuied men to returne into Caſtile. In the yeare 1445. dyed the Queenes Leonora of Portugall, and Mary of Caſtile, ſiſters to the king of An. 1445.
B Nauarre, not without ſuſpition of poyſon: the Queene of Portugall was carryed from Death of two Queenes ſiſters poiſoned.
Toledo, where ſhe dyed, to the Monaſterie of S. Mary of the battell: and Queene Mary dying at Villacaſtin a burrough of Segobia, was interred in the Monaſterie of Guadalupe. Almoſt at the ſame time dyed Lope of Mendoça, Arch-biſhop of Seuile, whoſe place was giuen to Don Aluaro of Oſorno, Biſhop of Cuenca, and his Biſhopricke was conferred to Don Lopes of Barriento biſhop of Auila, the which was giuen to Alphonſo of Fonſeca, ſuch changes made the Paſtors of Spaine, ſeeking the beſt reuenues. In the Entrance of ſpring-time the king of Nauar entred into Caſtile by Atiença, with foure hundred horſe, B ſo paſſa...
and fiue hundred foot: where at his firſt entry, he tooke Torrija, Alcala of Henares, Alcala the old, and Saint Torquat, whither the Infant D. Henry his brother came with 500
C men at armes.

Theſe newes made the king go from Medina into the Realme of Toledo, where hauing gathered together all the ſouldiers he could, hee marched that way, where as hee thought to find the King of Nauarre, and comming neere to Alcala of Henares the towne was yeelded to him. There the King of Nauarre preſented himſelfe to fight, but he of Caſtile would not accept the battell: wherefore the King of Nauarre, and Don Henry paſt the port or mount of Tablada, and led their army to Olmedo, where as the gates being ſhut, and reſiſtance made, they entred by force, and hauing cauſed informations to be made againſt them that were culpable, Doctor Fuente, and two other Gentlemen were condemned to dye, and were executed. The King of Caſtile following the king of D Nauarre, came and camped at the milles of the Abbey, within a little league of Olmedo, hauing in his army the Prince his ſonne, the Conſtable, the Earle of Alba, D. Inigo Lopes of Mendoça, Don Lope of Barrientos, newly made Biſhop of Cuenca, and then the Earle of Haro came and ioyned with him. On the other ſide the Admirall, the Earles of Benauent and Caſtro, Don Pearo of Quignones, D. Iohn of Tobar, beeing ſent by the K. of Nauarre, entred into Olmedo with a thouſand horſe, the which being ioyned to them which the king of Nauarre and the Infant had brought, and gathered together, made about fiue and twenty hundred horſe.

Matters beeing readie to be decided by an ineuitable battell, the king of Nauarre hauing no will to hazard himſelfe, hee demaunded a parle of the king of Caſtile, of ſome Confederats beſeeged in Olmedo.
E Knights of either part, the which being granted, the Admiral and the Earle of Benauent of the one ſide, and the Biſhop of Cuenca, and the Conſtable on the other, conferred together many times, the King of Nauarre in a manner demanding no other thing, but that they ſhould reſtore to him the Infant D. Henry, the Earle of Caſtro, and others of the league, their lands and eſtates: but as for the gouernement of the Realme, and quarrels with the Conſtable, hee made not any mention. The Biſhop vſing his accuſtomed pollicy, prolonged this treaty all he could, knowing that D. Guttiere of Soto-major maſter of Alcantara, ſhould come within few daies to the campe with fixe hundred horſe, by which ſupply the king of Caſtile being euery way the ſtronger, he did hope to ſee his F enemies wholly defeated, and forced to yeeld to his and the Conſtables mercie. The conference being ended without any concluſion, the king of Nauarre, and the confederates, ſent Lope of Angulo, and the Licentiat Cuellar his Chancelor, to the campe, to acquaint the king of Caſtile with the miſeries and loſſes which do follow a battel, whereunto the Conſtable, reſpecting only his priuate intereſt, aſpired tyrannouſly, for the fruits which he gaped after by the death of the beſt Knights of Caſtile: wherefore hee ſhould Demand of the confederats of the King of Caſtile.

do

do a thing worthie of himſelfe, to chaſe away this man, arrogant of the authoritie which he held vnworthily, and decree that they might bee heard in iuſtice, in ſome citie or other place of the Realme, whither they ſhold come like men of peace, not bringing with them aboue ten men vpon moyles: elſe they proteſted, that they would make their complaints vnto the Pope, and that the miſeries which ſhould follow, ſhould be by his fault. The king anſwered, that he would take order, requiring to haue this demand in writing.

Prince Henry made to runne away.

Two dayes after Prince Henry going to view Olmedo, with certaine light horſe, hee was charged by the enemies who ſallyed out of the towne, who made him to flie ſhamefully to the campe, the which did ſo much diſpleaſe the king his father, as inſtantly refuſing to heare any more ſpeech of an accord, he cauſed his Standard to be diſplayed, and his men to be put into battell; the Conſtable leading the foreward with eight hundred men at armes: the Prince the battell with foure hundred men at armes, and the king the reereward with ſixe hundred men at arms, beſides the light horſemen, which were very many and diuided into theſe ordonances, the which hee made to ſtand firme aboue an hower, in view of Olmedo, to ſee if the king of Nauarre would come foorth: who beeing wonderfully incenſed at this brauado, although he had not equall forces to his aduerſarie, yet like a couragious Prince, he would needs go foorth to fight, contrarie to the aduice of many, it beeing late, oppoſing his ſquadron, and that which the Earle of Caſtro led againſt Prince Henry, and the Infant his brother, the Admirall, the Earle of Benauent, Pedro of Quignones, and Fernand Lopes of Saldaigne, with the reſt of the forces againſt the Conſtable of Caſtile: and ſo began the battell about two houres before Sunne-ſetting,

Battel of Olmedo loſt by the k. of Nauar

whereas the king of Nauarre and the confederates, notwithſtanding their endeauours, were vanquiſhed: and it was happie for them that approching night parted them, and kept the victors from purſuing of their enemies: ſo as notwithſtanding that they did fight with great reſolution and obſtinacie, yet there were but ſeuen and thirtie ſlaine vppon the place, and about two hundred dyed after, of ſuch as had beene wounded in the battel. The King of Nauarre and his brother D. Henry (who was ſore hurt in the left hand) retired to Olmedo: the Earle of Benauent fled as farre as Pedraza: the Admirall was taken by a Squire called Peter of Carera, who notwithſtanding brought him to his owne houſe, at the tower of Lobaton: many Noblemen and others, in number aboue two hundred were taken. Among which the chiefe were, the Earle of Caſtro, and a ſonne of his called Don Pedro of Sandouall, Alphonſo of Alarcon, D. Henry Henriques, the Admirals brother, Fernand of Quignones, Diego of Londogno ſonne to Sancho Roarigo of Aualos, nephew to Don Ruy Lopes of Aualos, ſometimes Conſtable of Caſtile, and Don Pedro of Quignones, but he found meanes to eſcape. The reſt of the confederates armie fled to diuers parts, and was not purſued by reaſon of the night.

The King of Caſtile much pleaſed with this victorie, ſent commandement throughout his whole Realme, that they ſhould make bon fires in ſigne of ioy, and hee cauſed a chappell to be built vppon the place of fight, which he named the holy Ghoſt of the battell, and hauing the day after ſent Guttiere Sanches of Aluarado priſoner to Vailledolit, he cauſed his head to be cut off. Before midnight the king of Nauarre, and the Infant his brother going out of Olmedo, with ſuch forces as they had, they tooke the way of Portillo, and by Fonte Duegna they came to Daroca, and from thence to Calatajub, where as the Infant Don Henry dyed of the wound which he had receiued in the hand, it beeing inflamed: his bodie was at that time layed in the chappell of D. Iohn de Luna, in that city, and afterwards tranſported to Poblete, whereas the king Don Fernand his father lyes. He left his wife Donna Beatrix with child, who was afterwards deliuered of a ſon, who was called Don Henry of Arragon, and by ſurname the Fortunate Infant. His death was the more grieuous to the King of Nauarre, for that it happened in an vnſeaſonable time, after the loſſe of a battell: beſides, ſeeing himſelfe depriued of ſuch a brother, it did but increaſe his griefe for the late death of his two ſiſters, the Queenes of Caſtile and Portugall, there remayning not any of ſo many children which the deceaſed King Fernand his father had left, but onely he and Don Alphonſo king of Arragon, who was in a manner continually reſident at Naples, and had no lawfull children. By this loſſe the king of Nauarre was wholy abandoned by the confederate Lords of Caſtile, who retired home to their

A their houſes to ſettle their affaires: but the King of Caſtile purſued them with all rigour of Iuſtice, cauſing them to be proclaymed Rebels, and forfeiting their lands to the crown, without reſpect of any: yet the Prince D. Henry laboured ſo, as the Admirall was put out of the roule of them that were condemned, but not without difficultie. In the caſtell of Medina of Rio-ſecco was Donna Thereſa of Quignones, with Donna Ioane wife to the King of Nauarre. The king being come thither, he receiued the place, and vſed the Ladies gratiouſly, by the Princes interceſſion, who preſerued the Admirals goods, eſtates, and family, vppon condition that he ſhould return to the kings ſeruice, within foure moneths: notwithſtanding Queene Ioane remayned in the king of Caſtiles power: and the B League againſt the Conſtable was ſo diſperſed, as there was not any towne or caſtle, but was yeelded vp into the kings power, nor any man of name that durſt oppoſe himſelfe: but ſome retired into Nauarre, and others into remote places, and little frequented by the Court: The Admirall, the Earle of Benauent, Don Diego Manrique, Gouernour of Leon, Don Pedro of Quignones, and Iohn Tobar, went towards Nauarre: by reaſon whereof the King fearing ſome enterpriſe of that ſide, came to Burgos. Don Aluaro de Luna, the Conſtable beeing freed from ſo great enemies, grew to be in greater credite then euer, and whereas he had beene but adminiſtrator of Saint Iames, he was made Maſter of that Order, which honors were but baytes of misfortune which did follow him, to plunge him in extreme miſerie.

Condemnations againſt the confederates.

Conſtable reſtored to fauor & made Maſter of S. Iames.

C He entertayned friendſhip with the Princes of Portugall as his laſt refuge: and in the time of this warre had procured for the king of Caſtile a ſuccour of 1600. horſe and two thouſand foote, the which Don Pedro the third Conſtable of Portugal, ſonne to the Infant Don Pedro, Regent of the Realme, a young Prince but ſeuenteene yeares old, brought to Majorga after the battell, where they were receiued and feaſted with great ioy: but for that there was no vſe for them, they were ſent backe payed and well ſatisfied. In this voyage, the Conſtable treated with the Portugals, to haue the King his maſter, (whoſe Queene was dead fiue moneths before) to marrie with Donna Izabella daughter to the Infant D. Iohn deceaſed, who had beene Maſter of Saint Iames in Portugall, wherD with he had not made the king in any ſort acquainted, ſo much hee preſumed of the power he had ouer him. This marriage with ſome other things, were afterwards the cauſe that the King did hate him mortally.

Beginning of the kings hatred againſt the Conſtable.

This Prince D. Henry, and many other knights conſidering how great a loſſe it wold be, if ſo many great Lords and worthie men ſhould be eſtranged from Caſtile, they delt ſo with the king (who of himſelfe was patient and tractable) as they obtained a generall pardon for all ſuch as had carried armes with the King of Nauarre: vnto the which theſe Articles following were annexed:

That a pardon was granted to the Admirall, who ſhould returne into Caſtile, when he had leaue from the king, and ſhould retire vnto the tower of Lobaton, in the which, and the limits thereof, he ſhould remaine confined two yeares: The Earle of Benauent
E had the like ſentence to remaine in his houſe at Benauent two yeares: and that he ſhould take into his charge and guard Donna Ioane Queene of Nauarre, and not ſuffer her after the two yeares expired, to depart without the kings commandement, and the conſent of Prince Henry, and after that the Earle himſelfe, and that the Admirall had taken an oath of fealty vnto the king, to ſerue him againſt all men, according to the lawes of Caſtile. Theſe things beeing thus concluded, the King being at Burgos, he gaue the title of Marquis of Santillana, to Don Inigo Lopes of Mendoça, for his good and acceptable ſeruice: to Don Iohn de Pacheco in fauour of the Prince, the title of Marquis of Villena: the gouernement of the caſtle of Burgos, held till that time by the Earle of Plaiſance, was giuen to Iohn of Luxan. Not onely the king of Nauarre, but his ſonne the Prince Don F Charles, yea Don Alphonſo of Arragon, Maſter of Calatraua, loſt at this time all they had in Caſtile. Don Pedro Giron, brother to Don Iohn de Pacheco, was made Maſter of Calatraua by the king, being at Auila, and Don Alphonſo, who was retired into Nauarre with his father, depriued thereof: yet D. Iohn Ramires of Guzman great Commander of the Order, tooke vpon him the title of Maſter, againſt D. Pedro Giron: which contention was afterwards reconciled by the Princes authority and others.

Pardon granted to the confederats fled into Nauarre and other places.

Granado. In the meane time they did write out of Murcia to the king, that they ſuſpected the Moores would make ſome attempt: wherefore it was neceſſarie to prouide for that fronter, but it was a brute without effect, for that King Mahumet Aben-Azar, then raigning, was forced to defend himſelfe in his owne Realme, againſt another called Mahumet Aben Ozmen, called Coxo, his nephew, who had rebelled againſt him, to depriue him of his Realme, as he did, hauing intelligence with many Moriſh Knights of Granado, by whoſe meanes he ſeized of the citty, and of Alhambra, and tooke King Mahumet his vncle, who at that time loſt his Realme, beeing the third time, and neuer recouered it more in the yeare, one thouſand, foure hundred, forty and fiue, hauing raigned thirteene yeares and three moneths. A B

Caſtile. The King of Caſtile went into Extremadura, and forced D. Fernand of Aualos, ſonne to the ſometimes Conſtable D. Ruy Lopes of Aualos, to yeeld him vp the fort of Albuquerque and others, which had belonged to the Infant D. Henry, in conſideration of ſome recompence which the deceaſed Infant his Maſter did owe him. The king beeing at Toledo, he tooke the Gouernement of the cittie from Pero Lopes of Ayala, who was a partiſan to the King of Nauarre, and gaue it to Pedro Sarmiento. There were many complaints made by the Officers, and leſſer Magiſtrates of the cittie, the which the king diſſembled: for that the Prince fauoured him, and was much diſcontented for that hee was put from his gouernement of Toledo. In the meane time the King of Nauarre, (who was alſo as Regent in Arragon, in the abſence of King Alphonſo his brother) prouided money, and all other meanes to renue the warre in Caſtile, whereas hee yet held two ſtrong places, Atiença and Torrijo, and by the meanes of Gaſton Earle of Foix his ſonne-in-law, (who had married D. Leonora his ſecond daughter, to whom afterwards the ſucceſſion of the realme of Nauarre fell) he pretended to draw ſome great ſuccours out of France. In Atiença Roderigo of Rebolledo was Gouernor, with a garriſon of two hundred horſe and foure hundred foot: who by their continuall courſes held the country for many leagues round about in continuall alarme, killing, burning and carrying away all they incountred, whereof there came daily complaints vnto the king of Caſtiles eares: wherefore there were ſome troupes of horſe ſent to reſtraine their courſes, vntill there might bee a ſufficient armie raiſed to beſeege the place: and the better to attend this warre, the King reconciled certaine pettie quarrels, which the Prince his ſonne did cauſe; and he granted libertie to the Admirall, and Earle of Benauent for their perſons, reſtoring them to their Lands and Eſtates freely: and moreoueer he ſuffered that Queene Ioane, wife to the king of Nauarre, ſhould be deliuered into her fathers hands, and kept by him, vntill that the king of Caſtile ſhould determine of her deliuerie to the king her husband. D. Diego Gomes of Sandoual was alſo pardoned, the King retayning his forts ſtill for two yeares: the like pardon was granted to his ſonnes, and to D. Iohn of Tobar, Lord of Berlanga: the fort of Berlanga did alſo remaine two yeares in the kings hands. C D

Seege of Atienſa. Theſe things beeing thus ordered, the king went in perſon to the ſiege of Atiença, the which was furiouſly battered and aſſayled with engins of warre, and alſo with ſome iron Ordinance; for the caſting of braſſe Ordinance was not then vſed in Spaine: ſo as Roderigo of Rebolledo, Captaine of the Garriſon, ſeeing himſelfe thus preſt, gaue the King of Nauarre to vnderſtand, that if he were not releeued, he could not hold it long: wherupon the king of Nauarre, (who was not in caſe to rayſe the ſeege) ſent to propound ſome meanes of a truce with him of Caſtile, the which was granted vpon condition, that the townes of Atiença and Torrijo ſhould be deliuered into the hands of Mary Queene of Arragon, for a certaine time limited: during the which they ſhould conferre of the meanes to make a good peace betwixt the two kings: and if their quarrels could bee determined, then the Queene ſhould reſtore thoſe two places to her brother-in-lawe the king of Nauarre. E F

Choler of the King of Caſtile All hoſtility ceaſing by this meanes, the king entred into Atiença, whereas mooued by ſome vnknowne occaſion, without regard of that which had beene capitulated, hee cauſed ſome houſes to bee ſacked and ruined, and others to be conſumed with fire, ſo as a good part of the towne was burnt: whereat the King of Nauarre was much offended, and would no more ſtand to the accord, nor deliuer the Caſtles and places to the Queene of

A of Arragon, reproching the King, that he had broken his promiſe, and giuing commandement to his ſouldiers, that they ſhould vſe all acts of hoſtilitie, and commit what ſpoiles they could in Caſtile, the which they did, and with ſuch exceſſe, as the king of Caſtile ſent backe in the yeare 1446. Don Charles of Areillan, Lord of los Cameros, a great and famous Captaine, to ſuppreſſe the robberies and inſolencies of the Nauarrois in Atiença: and againſt them of Torrijo, Don Alphonſo Carillo of Acugna, newly made Arch-biſhop of Toledo, by the death of Don Guttiere Gomes of Toledo, either of them hauing three hundred Lances: but they of Torrijo made no great eſteeme of the Arch-biſhop nor of his followers, making roades daily into the countrey, and bringing great booties into their forts. They of Atiença were held more ſhort and curbed by Charles 1446.

B of Areillan.

The Arch-biſhop hauing beene often beaten by the Nauarrois, and loſt many of his men, the King commaunded Don Inigo Lopes of Mendoça, that taking the Arch-biſhoppes forces, with ſome new that were aſſigned him, he ſhould continue the ſeege of Torrijo, the yeare 1447. beeing well aduanced: The ſeege was long, notwithſtanding that the towne was battered both with Artillerie and Engines, for Iohn de Puelles who defended it, was a valiant and couragious Captaine, and of great experience: yet the continuance did ſo tyre him, as finding daily the want of men, victuals, and other neceſſarie munition, to endure a ſeege, and beeing out of hope of ſuccours from the king of Nauarre, hee reſolued to yeeld vp the place vppon very honorable conditions, and retired his men and baggage ſafe into Arragon: the towne and caſtle of Atiença remayning ſtill in the power of the Nauarrois, who in deſpight of Charles of Areillan, iſſued forth and ſpoiled the country; and moreouer they tooke Pegna of Alcaçar, a fort in the territory of Soria, from whence they did forrage, and carry away aboundance of cattaile and other things, which they ſent to ſell in Arragon, where they had a ſafe retreat, as in a country belonging to their Princes brother, who was then at Naples, well aduertiſed, to his great griefe, of all the troubles of Caſtile, and the ſucceſſe thereof, doing what hee could to pacefie them, both by letters and Ambaſſage, yet fauoring his brother D. Iohn King of Nauarre. Torrijo beſeeged.

C

This yeere 1447. the King of Caſtile was married at Madrigall, to D. Iſabella, daughter to the Infant D. Iohn of Portugal, Maiſter of Saint Iames, who was ſonne to the King D. Iohn, who was maiſter of Auiz. This marriage was the Conſtables ruine, the Queene being his enemy. The King of Nauarre being come to the Eſtates of Arragon, which were held at Saragoſſa, at that time, there to preſide as Gouernor Generall in the abſence of the King his brother, he was ſommoned by Doctor Surban, and a Prouoſt of the Court, ſent Ambaſſadours from the King of Caſtile, to deliuer vp Atiença, as it had beene concluded: which Ambaſſadours complayned to the Eſtates, that they that ſpoiled the countrie of Caſtile, had their retreat into Arragon: whereunto anſwer was made that they would ſend an anſwer to the King of Caſtile by expreſſe Ambaſſadours: and ſoone after they diſpatched Don Iames de Luna, Biſhop of Tarraſſone, and Don Iohn of Ixar, who found the king at Soria, hauing charge to treat of a peace betwixt the two kings: The King of Caſtile appointed them to follow him to Vailledolit, whether he was preſt to go, the which they would not do, and ſo they returned to Sarragoſſa, without any concluſion. Second marriage of Don Iohn King of Caſtile.

In the meane time the Captaine, who had ſuffered Pegna of Alcaçar to be ſurprized, beeing aſhamed to ſhew himſelfe before the King, by reaſon of his error, hee ſought to repaire it, and ſurprized the fort of Verdejo in Arragon, the which he gaue to the king his maſter, who hauing ſet good garriſons vppon the fronters of Arragon, hee went in great haſt to Vailledolit.

This yeare dyed Pope Eugenius the fourth at Rome, who had bin condemned by the Councell of Baſill, and in his place Amadeus D. of Sauoy was choſen, who at that time was Deane of Saint Maurice of the congregation of Saint Auguſtin, the hermitage of Ripaille, in the Dioceſſe of Geneua, who carried himſelfe as Pope, all the time that Eugenius liued, notwithſtanding that hee had retayned his dignitie: after whoſe death Nicholas the fift being choſen at Rome, he renounced his Popedome, hauing held it 9. years Amadeus of Sauoy called Pope Felix.

and fiue moneths, the reſt of his dayes hee paſſed with the title of Cardinall of Santa Sabina. A

The reaſon which drew the king of Caſtile in ſuch haſt to Vailledolit, was, for that hee had beene aduertiſed there were ſome knights would ſtirre vp new troubles: thither 1448. came Ambaſſadors againe to him from Arragon, in the beginning of the yeare, 1448. who hauing treated of many things, in the end they concluded a truce for ſeuen moneths, betwixt Caſtile and Nauarre: whereof the garriſons of Nauarre, beeing not aduertiſed in time, they continuing their hoſtility in Caſtile, they ſurprized the towne of S. Cruz of Campeço by ſcalado, it belonging to Lope of Rojas, whom they carried away, with his wife and many others. And moreouer, the Gouernour of Albarazin ſeazed vpon the caſtell of Huelamo, in the Biſhoppricke of Cuenca, the which hauing beene ill guarded by the Caſtillans, was well worſe by theſe, ſo as Iohn Hurtado of Mendoça, recouered it by the meanes of a Caſtillan ſouldier, who was there in gouernement among the Nauarrois. B

The king of Caſtile ſent into Nauarre to ſummon Prince Charles in conſequence of the truce, to deliuer Don Lope de Rojas, and the towne of Santa Cruz, the which was A combate. done. At that time a knight of Bourgondie called Iames of Lalain, did fight a combate, without any cauſe of quarrell, but onely to make triall of his valour, as it was the maner in thoſe times, againſt Don Diego de Guzman, brother to the Lord of Torrija, at Vailledolit Don Diego was ſore wounded in the fore-head with a battell-axe, after which they cloſed, but the King caſting his ſtaffe, parted the combate, and did great honour to the Bourguignon. C

Ambition and couetouſneſſe, as they ſay, haue neither bounds nor bottome: the which ſhewes it ſelfe chiefly in ſuch as haue the gouernement of great Eſtates, whereof at that time Don Aluaro de Luna, Conſtable of Caſtile was a notable preſident, who not content with the happineſſe to haue ſeene a dangerous League, conſpired to his ruine, by ſo many Princes, and great Noblemen broken, himſelfe reſtored to the Princes fauour, and to triumph ouer his enemies, but hee would plunge them into the like miſerie, as hee had eſcaped, and wholly gouerne the king and Realme with Don Iohn de Practiſes of the Conſtable D. Aluaro de Luna. Pacheco the Princes Minion, and ſo diuide all the honours, fauours, and greatneſſe of Spaine betwixt them. Don Alphonſo of Fonſeca, newly made Biſhop of Auila, was an apt Councellor for their deſleigne, who was of opinion, that they ſhould cauſe ſome of the great ones, who were offenſiue vnto them, to be committed to priſon. Hauing therefore mediated an enterview of the king and Prince betwixt Tordeſillas and Villeverd, the Court beeing very great and ſtately, there were apprehended the Earles of Benauent and Alba, Don Pedro and Suero of Quignones, and Don Henry brother to the Admirall Don Frederick (who was alſo vppon the rowle, but beeing ill diſpoſed, he came not to this enterview) ſo as hee eſcaped, and ſo did Don Diego Gomes of Sandoual, Earle of Caſtro Xeris, who beeing either aduertiſed, or doubting of ſome practiſe, ſtayed at home: and afterwards hauing aduice, that the king came to Aguilar del campo, and the Prince to Lerma, to take the Admirall and him, they both left their houſes, and retired to Nauarrette, and from thence paſſed to Tudele, where the King of Nauarre was, whoſe faction was the accuſation and colour of theſe impriſonments: the Conſtable ſaying moreouer, that they had conſpired to kill him. D E

The Admirall and Earle of Caſtro, were very kindly entertayned by the King of Nauarre, who led them with him to Sarragoſſa, where it was reſolued, that the Admirall ſhould go to Naples to the King of Arragon, to acquaint him with the gouernement of Caſtile, and to ſollicite him to come into Spayne, to ayde them to recouer their rankes, dignities and lands, or elſe that he would giue them leaue to vſe his forces of Arragon. According to this Councell the Admirall embarked at Barcelona, and went to Naples. The king of Caſtile hauing no great confidence in Don Diego Manrique, who had the guard of the frontier of Nauarre, he forced him to leaue the forts of Ocon, Nauarret, and Treuigno, and gaue them himſelfe in guard to the Earle of Haro his Brother-in-law for one yeare. Theſe things thus done, all the lands of them that were abſent were ſeized on, and put into the kings hands, many Noblemen in Court beeing much offen- F F offended at theſe violences: but aboue all others they found the Earle of Albas impriſonment very ſtrange, who had alwaies ſhewed himſelfe a faithfull ſeruant to the king, and a partizan to the Conſtable: and euery man examined his conſcience: many beeing terrified, remembring that they had offended the King, or the Prince in ſome light matters: ſo as there were retreates made daily from Court without leaue, with other confuſions, which made the king to ſee from whence the miſchiefe came: beſides, throughout all Spaine they ſpake plainely and boldly, that the Conſtables ambitious deſire to raigne in Spain, had cauſed this tumult in Court, and ſo wronged the Noblemen that were priſoners. Don Alphonſo King of Portugall, ſonne to Donna, Leonora ſiſter to the king of Nauarre, beeing dead in Caſtile, as it was thought, of poyſon, beganne to apprehend it: yea the King of Granado ſtirred in fauour of them that were ſo vnworthily purſued by the Conſtable: wherewith the king of Caſtile beeing mooued, hee had a deſire to ſeize vppon the Conſtable: yet diſtruſting the inconſtancie of the Prince his ſonne, he durſt not do it.

18. Moores of Granado incited by the king of Nauarre againſt Caſtile.

There were ſome troupes of horſe and foote ſent to the frontiers of Nauarre and Granado, eſpecially againſt the Moores, who ſpoyled the Countrie of Murcia, King Mahumet Aben-Ozmen beeing ſollicited by the King of Nauarre, to do the worſt hee could to the Chriſtians of Caſtile, where all was full of ſeditions: but theſe were practiſes vnworthie of a Chriſtian Prince, yet vſuall among the Princes of this world, that are at warre, who oftentimes make religion a vaile to couer their couetous, and inordinate paſſions and affections.

Mahumet Coxo, the 17. king of Granado.

THis Mahumet called Coxo, beeing come to the Crowne of Granado, by the violence hee vſed againſt his vncle Mahumet, maintained himſelfe with the like art, wherat many of the Knights of Granado beeing incenſed, they retired themſelues to Montefrio, a place which onely reiected the command of this tyrant; beeing held by Andilbar, who had beene high Marſhall to King Mahumet the left-handed, who entertayned an enemie to King Coxo, to diſpoſſeſſe him of the Crowne, as hee had done his Vncle. Granado.

It was the Infant Aben Izmael, who hauing followed the warre in the ſeruice of the King of Caſtile, had retired himſelfe, with his leaue and fauour, to Montefrio, to this Marſhall, and there had beene ſaluted for King, yet weake, and ill prouided to make any attempt againſt Granado, and the Alhambra, the ſeate royall, which was held by Coxo: but God prepared him the meanes, and ſtirred vp occaſions in time. King Coxo embracing the confuſions and quarrels of Caſtile, which made them neglect the guard of the frontiers, and animated by the factions of Nauarre, entring into Andaluſia, had taken the towne of Banamaruel by force, and carried away Iohn de Herrera, who commanded in the place, with many other Chriſtian priſoners, after that hee had ſlaine many: hee then beſeeged Bançalema, which was defended by Alnaro of Pecellin; the which he forced in like manner, putting all hee found in it to the ſword: for which loſſes the Captaines were not to bee blamed, for wanting pay they could not keepe the Garriſons of thoſe forts full and compleat: and moreouer, hauing demanded ſuccours from them of Iaen, Vbeda, and Baeça, they could not obtaine it, by reaſon of the diuiſions and quarels betwixt the King and the Prince, father and ſonne, which could not be ſo well and conueniently compounded, but vppon euery occaſion they brake: ſo as the time beeing fauourable for the Mooriſh King, hee made daily and ordinarie roades into Caſtile, carrying away infinite ſpoyles of men, and innumerable multitudes of cattell and other goods, beſides the taking and ſacking of the Townes of Arenes, Hueſcar, Exploits of the Moores in Andaluſia.

Places vpon the frontier of Caſtile abandoned by bad councell.

Velez the white, and Velez the red, with their forts and caſtles, all through the negligence of ſuch as had the managing of affaires about the kings perſon, whereof ſome were ſo ill aduiſed, as to giue their opinions in councell, that they ſhould not trouble themſelues for thoſe pettie places, which coſt more the keeping, then they were worth, and that it was more for the profit, and the eaſe of his treaſure, to ſuffer them to bee loſt: for with that which ſhould be ſpent in keeping them, they might fortifie other places of greater importance.

This yeare 1448. after the former loſſes, King Mahumet Aben-Ozmen, was newly entred into the country of Murcia, making cruell ſpoiles: wherefore Don Alphonſo Telles Giron, couſin to Don Iohn de Pacheco, being newly made Gouernor of Hellin and Chumilla, deſirous to make triall of his good command, went haſtily to field, where finding ſome of the Moores troupes disbanded, he charged, and cut ſome of them in peeces, where the ſouldiers began preſently to ſpoyle the dead, not caring to keepe any order or diſcipline, or to ſee if all danger were paſt. The Moores which eſcaped, and others that were not farre off, being aduertiſed of this defeat of their men, came vnto the place where the fight had beene, and finding the Chriſtians diſperſed like beaſts, and buſie at the pillage, they charged them furiouſly, ſo as moſt of them were ſlaine. Don Alphonſo Telles with ſome few knights ſaued themſelues by flight in Hellin, and by this route giuen vnto the Chriſtians, the way was open for the Moores to ſpoyle and burne the countrie at their pleaſures.

Chriſtians beeing Victors, & buſie at the ſpoile, are vanquiſhed.

Caſtile.

The King of Caſtile could hardly preuent theſe miſeries, beeing continually afflicted with ſeditions and mutinies in his Court and houſe, the Prince Don Henry giuing him infinite croſſes, and for light occaſion: the which did much diſpleaſe the Conſtable, fearing that their diſcord would redound to his loſſe and preiudice, wherefore hee made them conferre together at Tordeſillas. At that time the Eſtates were held at Vailledolit, where the King hauing declared, that hee went to ſee the Prince his ſonne, to haue him concurre with him, to the end they might puniſh Rebels, and reward the good, euery man hauing ſpoken ſomething concerning that matter, Diego of Valera, Deputie of Cuenca, a wiſe Knight, did highly commend the Kings holy reſolution, to ſeeke the vnion of his royall houſe, and to put in practiſe the act to diſtribute rewards and puniſhments in equall proportion, according to euery mans merits: but hee did aduertiſe him, as a faithfull vaſſall, that to do it without errour and miſpriſion, hee muſt take the courſe of Iuſtice, and examine euery mans actions, and iudge with good aduice, the parties being duly called and heard, both preſent and abſent.

The King tooke great delight in Diego's ſpeech, and much more in a letter which hee writ vnto him afterwards vppon this ſubiect, full of good and holeſome councell and aduertiſements, whereof there were infinite copies taken by the Noblemen in Court, who diſperſed them ouer all Spayne: but this wiſedome was offenſiue to the Conſtable and his faction; wherefore Diego de Valeras his recompence was, that the King took from him a penſion which he before had giuen him, and moreouer, hee was diſappointed of his entertaynment for the voyage hee had made to the Eſtates at Vailledolit, with Gomez Carillo of Albornoz, as Deputie of the Dioceſſe of Cuenca, to teach him to bee a Courtier, and not ſo zealous of the good of his Prince and country.

This good Knight was receiued into houſe by Don Pedro of Eſtuniga, Earle of Flaiſance, who made him Gouernour of his Nephew Don Pedro, ſupplying with his owne, the Kings ingratitude: who hauing ſeene the Prince, and ſomewhat reconciled their diſ-ioynted affaires, paſt to Ocagne in the Realme of Toledo, where hee was aduertiſed, that the Earle of Benauent had eſcaped out of priſon from Portillo, and retired into his countrey, where hee had put a garriſon, armes and victuals into his Caſtle of Benauent, and other places: Wherefore ſeeing himſelfe engaged in a new warre, hee came diſcontented to Areualo, and ſent for his ſouldiers and vaſſalles to come thither, meaning to go againſt the Earle, who ſtayed not in Caſtile, but retired to Morgadojo, a fort of Portugall, where hee was well entertayned by the commandement of King Don Alphonſo, who did not greatly like the gouernement of Caſtile.

Ciuill diſſentions make many attempt things againſt reaſon, and oftentimes ſuch as

A as are in ſhew honorable, and of good conuerſation, who otherwiſe would not vnder- take any thing that were diſhoneſt: the which appeared at this time in Don Bertrand of Gueuara, Lord of Ognate, a Knight of great authority in Spain towards the North ſeas, who deſirous to ſeize vppon the towne of Mondragon, in the Prouince of Guipuſcoa, by reaſon of the ſeditions of Caſtile, he vſed ſuch practiſes and meanes as hee thought would ſerue him: wherein he found the inhabitants contrarie to his will, incenſed and ſupported by Gomes Gonçales of Butron, a Knight of great allyance and power in Biſcay, of the Ognazin faction, contrarie to Don Bertrand, who held the partie of Gamboyn, who ſeeing himſelfe diſappointed of that which hee pretended, fell into ſuch hatred of them of Montdragon, as he cauſed the towne to be fired in diuers parts, by ſome that he B had ſet on: ſo as he made in a manner all to be moſt inhumanly burnt. Don Bertrand being apprehended by the kings commandement for this fact, and accuſed to haue ſet fire of a towne belonging to the Crowne, was in danger to haue loſt his life: yet as in a time of confuſion, money and fauour can do more then iuſtice, he had his life ſaued, making ſatisfaction to them that had beene burnt and damnified: to value the which there were arbitrators appointed, who by ſentence adiudged moſt part of Don Bertrands lands to the towne of Montdragon, and more they had giuen, if the foure arbitrators, choſen for the Inhabitants, had not beene corrupted with money. This towne of Montdragon endured this calamity, for that it would not bee alienated from the Crowne, for that they maintayned their liberties better ſo, then in beeing ſubiect to any ſubalternall Lord: and C without doubt if Don Bertrand could haue ſeized theron, he would haue kept it, in this time, full of reuolts and exceſſe, when as the confirmation or the pardon, had beene eaſie to haue beene obtayned by a peace or otherwiſe. In cleargie matters this towne hath alwaies beene ſtout to maintaine her rights and priuiledges, ſtill refuſing to accept any Lay patron, as well in that which concernes the fruits, as the right of preſentation in the towne and iuriſdiction.

19. Ciuill warres corrupt the beſt men.

Ognazins and Gamboyns, factions in Guipuſcoa and Biſcay.

In the yeare 1449. the truce betwixt Caſtile and Nauarre beeing ended, the garriſons of Atiença and of Pegna of Alcaçar went to field, and made the cruelleſt warre that might be. The King of Nauarre being exceeding glad that the Earle of Beneuent had eſcaped into Portugall, he fortified himſelfe with the fauour of king Don Alphonſo by his D meanes: and hauing drawne out of Nauarre and Arragon, and from the Moores in the Realme of Valencia, which were ſubiects to Arragon, a good number of fighting men, ſent them vnder the conduct of Don Pedro of Vrrea, Don Iohn Fernandes of Heredia, Rodrigo of Rebolledo, Don Fernand, and Don Diego, ſonnes to the Earle of Caſtro, and of the iuſtice of Arragon, againſt the towne of Cuenca, making his baſe ſonne Don Alphonſo of Arragon, late Maſter of the Calatraua, Generall of this armie: the which ioyning with the troupes which Iohn Hurtado of Mendoça, and Lope of Mendoça his brother, ſonnes to Don Diego, had rayſed for his ſeruice, for that they were entred into quarell with the Biſhop of Cuenca, and were become his enemies, might amount to ſixe thouſand men horſe and foot: with theſe forces the cittie of Cuenca was beſeeged, the E which was defended by the Biſhop Don Lope of Barriento, a better ſouldier then a Diuine, although he had ſome fame for that facultie in Spaine, and by Alphonſo Cherino ſon to Fernando Alphonſo Cherino, Syndic of the citty, and by Lopes and Iohn of Salezar breethren, Captaines of the garriſon, and the Inhabitants who made ſuch reſiſtance, as notwithſtanding that the Nauarrois had taken Saint Anthonies tower, at the bridge, and giuen great aſſaults in other places, yet they defended the place, and repulſt the enemie; who deſpayring to take it, raiſed the ſeege, the which they did the rather, for that they were aduertiſed, the Conſtable came with great forces to ſuccour it. Towards Requena and Vtiel, the king of Nauarre ſent Don Baltazar ſonne to the Earle of Huelua, with 200 F horſe and 500. foot, who running along the riuer of Xorquera, tooke a bootie of about 10000. head of ſmall cattell: and the Inhabitants of Requena and Vtiel going foorth to reſcue the prey, they were incountred and defeated, thirty of their Knights beeing ſlaine vpon the place, and ſeuenty caried away priſoners by the Nauarrois, and the reſt were all diſperſed.

20 Exploits of war betwixt the Nauarrois and Caſtillans.

Theſe were the King of Nauarres exploites, attending the returne of the Admirall

Don Frederick who was gone to Naples with the Biſhop of Lerida, where they were ſo A well receiued by king Alphonſo, and heard in their requeſts, that not beeing able to come into Spaine as he deſired, he ſent letters and commandement to the Eſtates of Arragon to furniſh the king of Nauarre his brother, with men, armes, victuals, money of his rents and reuenues, and all other things, in ſuch quantitie as he ſhould need, to make warre againſt the King of Caſtile, to recouer from him his lands and Eſtates, and to de-liuer the Noblemen which were derayned priſoners, by the Conſtables practiſes and ſlanders: with this prouiſion the Admirall and Biſhop imbarked to returne into Spaine: hauing receiued gifts and preſents with all other good vſage from king Alphonſo. The biſhop dyed vppon the way: ſo as the Admirall returned alone to the king of Nauarre, who B was much pleaſed with this fauourable diſpatch, calling the chiefe men of Arragon to Saragoſſa, where he acquainted them with their kings command: whereupon the Arra-gonois hauing held a Councell, they beſought the king of Nauarre, not to draw them into quarrell with Caſtile, with which Realme they deſired to maintaine peace, as long as they might. The king of Nauarre vſed many intreaties and proteſtations to perſwade them: but he could not induce them to go to the warre with him, yet he drew from them what ſummes of money he would, and ſeeing that he could not perſwade them in generall, he induced ſome knights in particular to ſerue him: and to make his way more eaſie to that which he pretended, being ſufficiently aduertiſed of the inſolencies and tollies which the Conſtable committed daily to the great diſdaine of the Noblemen of Ca- C ſtile, he ſought by all meanes to draw ſome into his league, letting them vnderſtand, that if they did any longer indure this mad man to gouerne the Realme of Caſtile in that maner, they would repent it too late, and when as they ſhould not bee able to preuent the ruine of their houſes, which he ſought, hauing no other end but to root out the great families of the Realme, to ſettle his familiars, and men of his ſort. The king of Nauar had a ſpeciall deſire to draw D. Pedro de Velaſco Earle of Haro into this league, beeing a good Knight, louing iuſtice, rich and mighty both in meanes and friends, to whom the Conſtables vnlimited ambition, and the vniuſt detention of ſo many good men, was diſplea-ſing. To draw him to his faction, he fed him with hope to marrie his ſonne Prince Charls vnto his daughter: ſo as the greatneſſe of the royall Eſtate wherein D. Pedro ſhould ſee D his daughter, if this marriage tooke effect, blinded his eyes, and made him open his eares.
This beeing in ſome ſort concluded, they ſent wiſe and diſcreet men to the Prince Don Henry, and to his great minion D. Iohn de Pacheco, Marquis of Villena, and his brother D.
Pedro Giron Maſter of Calatraua, to D. Inigo Lopes of Mendoça Marquis of Santillana, to D. Pedro of Eſtuniga Earle of Plaiſance, and to D. Rodrigo Manrique great Commander, and who cauſed himſelfe to be called Maſter of S. Iames, to haue them ioyne in this new league againſt the Conſtable, who was the cauſe of ſo much iniuſtice, impriſonments, exiles, and the confiſcations of the goods of ſo great perſonages, wherunto they ſeemed willing, and it was likely that the Conſtable would be now ruined: but all goodly beginnings haue not the like ſucceſſe. The king of Granado beeing aduertiſed of all theſe pra- E ctiles, ſent to make offer to be of the partie, promiſing to enter into Andaluſia, with all the forces of Granado, to fauor the confederates.

League made againſt the Conſtable D. Aluaro de Luna.

12. Whileſt theſe things were working, there happened a great tumult in the citty of To-Sedition at Toledo. ledo, growing by the importune repetition which the Conſtable made of a million of Marauidis lent, vnder colour that the king wanted mony: ſo as an artiſan went and rung the bell, and put the people into furie, in the which a rich Merchant called Alphonſo Coſta was ſlaine, and other inſolencies committed: the which the Conſtable at that time could not redreſſe. Don Pedro Sarmiento Captaine of the cittie, beeing iealous, embraced this occaſion to make his profite, and ioyned with the people, pretending the Kings ſeruice, in that he did reſiſt the Conſtable who was Gouernour of the cittie aboue him: F where hee committed ſo many outragious extorſions and theſts, as what Pero Lopes of Ayala had done before him, was nothing in reſpect of him.

The King aduertiſed of this diſorder, drew neere vnto Toledo, to whom they refuſed the entrie into their gates, and Don Pedro Sarmiento ſent him certaine vnreaſonable Articles to ſigne, if hee would enter, wherewith the king beeing wrathfully incenſed, he cauſed

A cauſed the city to be ſommoned by a King of armes, proteſting to ruine the Inhabitants if they did not obay: to whom they made anſwere with their ſhot and artillery, vſing words of diſgrace and contempt againſt the King, who leauing ſome companies about the city to cut off their victuals and to anoy them, he came to Torrijo, whether the Inhabitants of Toledo and Pedro Sarmiento ſent Ambaſſadors, to beſeech him to take the gouernment of that great city from the Conſtable, whom they termed a tyrant, elſe they ſhould be forced to deliuer it into the hands of the Prince his ſonne, wherewith the King was more offended then at the refuſall they had made (for that the Prince D Henry and he ſeemed to be diuided) ſo as he made them no anſwere: whereupon D. Pedro Sarmiento ſent to Segobia to the Prince, and cauſed him to come to Toledo. The King hearing
I of this, he commanded them that he had left about the city, to retire. But the Prince deſired to enter into Toledo with the good leaue and liking of the King his father, but hee could not obtaine it, wherefore he entred as he might, and gaue a generall pardon, to all men, namely to Pedro Sarmiento, for all the villanies which he had committed, and left him Gouernor graunting him all that he deſired, promiſing that he would not ſend him to the Court, nor he ſhould not preſent himſelfe before the King, but in his company. The Prince ſtaied ſome time at Toledo, where going forth one day a hunting, he was aduertiſed that ſome treated to deliuer the city vnto the King, wherefore he returned ſpeedily, and after information, ſome of the offenders were taken and executed, and two Chanoins kept in priſon.

Pedro Sarmiento deliuers Toledo to Prince Henry.

C In the meane time the King had taken the caſtle of Benauent, and then loſt it againe, by a ſurprize which the Earle himſelfe made, againſt whom hee prepared an army: but the Earle finding himſelfe to weake, returned to his exile in Portugal. The Prince leauing Toledo, returned to Segobia, and hauing aſſigned a day to the Noblemen practiſed by the King of Nauarre and the Earle of Haro, at Crugna, a houſe belonging to Pero Lopes of Padilla, they there reſolued to make ready their men, and ioyne all together at an appointed time, to beginne the warre againſt the Conſtable. The Prince was ready, and there ſpeedily ioyned with him the Earle of Haro and the Marquis of Santillana, but the reſt appeered not; yea the King of Nauarre was not ready to march ſo ſoone: wherefore the enterpriſe was broken off, and euery one beeing returned to his quarter, the D Prince D. Henry reconciled himſelfe to the King his father, and ſo did the Earle of Haro and the Marquis of Santillana; whereby the treaty of marriage betwixt Prince Charles and the Earle of Haros daughter, was broken. Notwithſtanding all this the King of Caſtile did not ſtirre, and the frontiers of Caſtile and Nauarre where reaſonably quiet in the yeere 1450. and yet ſuch as fled into Nauarre and Arragon were there receiued, amongſt the which was D. Pedro Sarmiento, whom the Prince D. Henry was in the end forced to thruſt out of Toledo, for his violences and treacheries. He gratiouſly commanded him to be gone, and gaue him leaue to carrie away all his baggage, whereof hee had two hundred moiles or horſes laden, to the great griefe of the Toledains, ſeeing this
E theefe thus inriched with their ſpoiles, and to carry it away freely before their faces. But Pedro Sarmiento was much more greeued, to quit ſo rich a poſſeſſion, whoſe fleece was very proffitable. God would not permit him, to enioy that long, which hee had gotten ill, for being come with this booty to Segobia, they did not onely ſpoile him, but he was forced to ſaue himſelfe by flight in Arragon, whether he carried nothing of all his thefts, but the ſinne and ſhame thereof. By the King of Nauarres permiſſion, he dwelt a while in the city of Pampelone, with his wife and children, poore and needy, and ſcarce could they get a retreat in the towne of Baſtide neere vnto Haro. The Marquis of Villena following the Conſtables ſteps, hauing giuen the Prince his maiſter occaſion to be diſcontented with him, he had like to haue beene ſeized on, by the practiſes of D. Pedro Portocarrero, of the Biſhop of Cuenca, and of D. Iohn de Sylua, ſtandard-bearer to the King, F but he auoided it. Afterwards it was pacefied by the marriage of Donna Maria de Pacheco the Marquiſes daughter, and D. Pedro Portocarrero, who for that cauſe was made Earle of Medellin. The King fearing new conſpiracies to the preiudice of his eſtate, being well acquainted with the Conſtables arrogancy and miſdemeanors, he reſolued to make ſome accord with the King of Nauarre, to the end hee might haue the Prince his ſome (who was light and inconſtant) vnited vnto him, cutting off all occaſions of factions and leagues, which might diſtract him, attending a fit oportunity to make the Conſtable feele his iuſt indignation: whileſt this was working, D. Henry Henriques, the Admirals brother, eſcaped from his priſon of Langa, ſlipping downe by a roape tied with many knots. The Ambaſſadors of the two Kings being met, it was concluded that the Admirall and the Earle of Caſtro ſhould returne into Caſtile, to whom and to D. Henry their goods ſhould be reſtored; Iohn of Tabor de Luna ſhould bee reſtored, and D. Alphonſo of Arragon put againe in poſſeſſion of the Maiſterſhip of the Calatraua, the which D Pedro Giron held, againſt whom the King and all others would aide and ſupport D. Alphonſo, if he would not leaue it. Theſe matters agreed vpon, were partly effected, for D. Pedro Giron, being in poſſeſſion of the places which belonged to the maiſterſhip, and well aſſiſted and followed, was the ſtronger.

Houſes of ſtrength retreats for theeues ruined in Guipuſcoa.

In Guipuſcoa, they of the towne of Montdragon, being not yet well pleaſed with D. Bertrand of Gueuara, did ruine, by a Conuocation of the Commons, and the Kings permiſſion, the tower and ſtrong houſe of this Knight, which was in a medow called Caldiybar, which is to ſay, the valley of horſes, whether many theeues and bandoliers retired themſelues, whereby the towne was much damnified, and D. Bertrand was condemned in a thouſand florins of gold, for their paines that were there aſſembled. The like was done vnto an other houſe belonging vnto the ſaid Bertrand, neere vnto the towne of Salines, two leagues from Montdragon. Many of Pedro Sarmientos ſouldiars being laied hold on, in diuers parts of Caſtile, they were executed, yea a Gonner who had ſhot at the herauld, which the King had ſent to ſummon the city of Toledo, who was drawne and quartered.

In the yeere 1451. Queene Iſabella was deliuered of a daughter at Madrigal, who was alſo named Iſabel; ſhee was Queene by inheritance of Caſtile and Leon, and wife to D. Fernand King of Arragon, a Princeſſe indowed with great vertues. The accord made betwixt the King of Caſtile and the Noblemen did not hold long, for the Prince D. Henry had his priuate opinions, ſupporting D. Pedro Giron, Maiſter of the Calatraua, againſt D. Alphonſo of Arragon, which made his attempts to returne into the Maiſterſhip vaine. D. Pedro at the inſtigation of the Toledans, ſeized vpon Torrijos and Orgas, places belonging to D. Alphonſo of Guzman, chiefe Marſhal of Seuile. The Admirall and the Earle of Caſtro, finding no ſafety for their perſons in Caſtile, returned into Nauarre, and the rather for that they performed little, of many things which they had promiſed them. The Prince D. Henry cauſed the Earle of Alba and D. Pedro of Quignones to be conducted to the caſtle of Toledo, commanding they ſhould bee well kept: for whoſe deliuery the people of Toledo, being turbulent, made great ſtirres, but without effect, yet within few daies hee deliuered D. Pedro of Quignones, making him to ſweare that he would follow him, and ſerue him well and faithfully: for they prepared to make warre againſt Nauarre, cauſing him to promiſe to imploy himſelfe, to draw the Admirall and the Earle of Benauent to his ſeruice, who had either of them married a ſiſter of D. Pedros. The Court being at Zamora, the King propounded to his Councell, in the preſence of the great men of Caſtile, an accuſation againſt Pedro Sarmiento, who was, by the aduice of them all, condemned as a rebell and guilty of high treaſon: which ſentence being confirmed by the Pope, they did confiſcate all his goods, and they did ſeize to the Kings vſe vpon Salinas of Agnana, Ocio, Pont Lara, and other places of his in Guipuſcoa, Alaua, Biſcay and elſewhere in Caſtile. From Zamora the King came to Toledo (being at it ſeemed in good termes with the Prince his ſonne) to goe and make warre againſt the King of Nauarre, giuing the Gouernment of that city to the Conſtable, who at his departure left D. Lewis de la Cerde, one of his breeding vp there, and did accompany the Prince, who marched towards the frontiers of Nauarre.

23 Nauarre.

The Caſtillan army entred into Nauarre by Viana which they could not force, the King of Nauarre hauing well furniſhed and fortefied the places of the frontier, and therefore they paſt to Torralba, where the garriſon making a furious ſally vpon the Caſtillans, had almoſt put them in diſorder, and to flight, D. Iohn of Beaumont prior of Saint Iohn in the realme of Nauarre, being Gouernor in Torralba. Finally he defended it ſo well,

A well,as they left it,and going through the territory of Berrueça,they went and beſeeged Eſtella, whereas Lope of Baquedan was Gouernour for the King of Nauarre. There the King of Caſtile came and ioyned with the Prince his ſonne, bringing a great power with him.

It is likely that the caſtle of Buradon was taken and razed at this voiage : whereat the Prince D.Charles, who with the royall councell gouerned the realme in the abſence of the King his father,was ſo greeued, beeing the beſt fort of Nauarre, as hee held the whole realme to be loſt : and they ſay,that as one out of hope, hee tooke a deuice of two grey-hounds gnawing of a bone,ſignifying, that the realme of Nauarre, figured by the B bone,is ſcituated betwixt Caſtile and France,and that the Kings of theſe realmes,which were the two grey-hounds did either of them deuour of his ſide. The city of Eſtella being furiouſly battred and aſſaulted, the Prince D. Charles was of opinion to goe and ſpeake with the King and Prince, in their campe; hauing therefore obtained a paſport, he was courteouſly receiued by them, and his well-ſpoken reaſons ſo fauourably heard, as they were in a manner forced by his modeſty and good behauiour to raiſe the ſeege, the which a great army could hardly haue done: ſo great force hath vertue, which is faſhioned by good education,in a Noble diſpoſition:and in truth, there was not to bee found(according to the report of Authors)in that age, a more generous Prince nor better taught,then D.Charles of Nauar : for beſides the naturall guiſts of beauty, mildneſſe, C affability to al men,and greatneſſe of courrage at need,he was learned in the Scriptures, which gouerned his maners,hauing alſo the knowledge of many good & commendable ſciences,by the which he was admirable in his life time, and famous after his death : Hee loued poeſie, hee was well read in Hiſtories, and a ſubtill Philoſopher for his young yeeres : ſo as he tranſlated Ariſtotles Ethikes into the Caſtillan tongue, turned into Latin by Leonard Aretin, who floriſhed at that time : wherein hee ſhewed great dexteritie and iudgement,treating of that ſubiect in ſuch fit termes, as without all doubt Ariſtotle hath not written better in Greeke,nor Aretin ſo wel in his traduction in Latin: this book was dedicated by him to his vncle D. Alphonſo King of Arragon. Moreouer hee did write a breefe Chronicle of the Kings of Nauarre his Progenitors, beginning with the D moſt ancient time, vnto King D. Inigo Ariſta, and from thence hath continued the Hiſtory vnto the reigne of King Charles his Grandfather, which Chronicle is to bee found at this day in written hand, but full of errors,made by them that haue coppied it,for it was neuer printed. He did alſo write ſome verſes, imploying the time which he could ſpare in the gouernment of the realme, in theſe honeſt exerciſes : ſo as this Prince was cheriſhed,beloued and bleſt of euery man but of his own father, of whom he demanded the realme of Nauarre,being his mothers Inheritance, which bred him great troubles, and aduerſity,wherein he made proofe of his courrage and ſingular patience,the which was better knowne and lamented after his death.

The King of Caſtile and the Prince his ſonne hauing raiſed his ſeege from before E- Caſtille.
E ſtella, left Nauarre, without doing any other harme, and returned to Burgos, from whēce ſoone after they led an army againſt Palençuela,whereas D. Alphonſo Henriques, the Conſtables ſonne, had fortefied himſelfe, and committed infinite ſpoiles round about. The ſeege beeing before this place,the Conſtable going neere the walles, to view the ſcituation thereof,a ſeruant of the Admirals, called Fernand Tremigno,ſallied out of the towne,with thirty men well armed,who came and charged the Conſtable and them that were with him(beeing vnarmed) ſo ſodainely,as they put them all in daunger of their liues. It behoued the Conſtable to ſhew his reſolution, who like a valiant and hardy Knight (as in deed hee was) with his rapier and cloake, made head againſt this troupe, and the reſt by his example putting themſelues alſo in defence endured the F charge,vntill that ſuccors came vnto them from the next lodging of the army; which made the enemies to turne head, and retire towards the towne with ſome loſſe, the which yeelded afterwards vpon compoſition. From thence the King went vnto Madrigall, where hee had newes that the affaires vpon the Moores frontier ſucceeded verie well.

The Conſtable charged and in danger to bee ſlaine.

King Mahumet Aben Ozmen,called Coxo, that is to ſay,the Halting, had made offer to Moores.
the

the King of Nauarre, to fauour his quarrels, promiſing that when he ſhould inueſt Caſtile by Nauarre and Arragon he would enter by Andaluſia, and aſſaile the city of Cordoua with all the power of his realme. This Moore hearing afterwards that there had beene ſome accord made betwixt the Chriſtian Princes, did not forbeare to make warre on his part withall violence, ſending troupes of horſe and foot diuers waies to ſpoile, whereof a band of ſix hundred horſe and eight hundred foot were incountred nere vnto Arcos, by D. Iohn Ponce de Leon, Earle of Arcos, who made a notable ſlaughter. This Nobleman beeing ſomewhat ſickly in Marchena, had beene aduertiſed of the diſorder which theſe ſpoilers cauſed by a Chriſtian renegado, ſometimes called Benedict of Chincilla, and then he was named Manfarres: wherevpon drawing together about 300. horſe and 600. foot, he went that way, being led by his ſpy, where hauing marcht foureteene leagues that day and night, he came the next day where the Moores were, who expected him not, who hauing put their foot-men before, to recouer ſome place of ſafety, the horſemen made head againſt the Chriſtians, and fought long, whileſt that their foote retired: but in the end the Earle of Arcos had the victory, there being aboue foure hundred horſemen ſlaine vpon the place, and fiue and fifty taken priſoners, with a hundred good horſes of ſeruice. The Moores fainted not for this route, but within a while after, and the ſame yeere 1452. they entred by Murcia, hoping to haue better ſucceſſe in that country, being ſix hundred horſe and fifteene hundred foote, who hauing ruined a great part of the country, vſing al kinds of cruelty, they draue away aboue 40000. head of cattaile great and ſmall, and about fifty priſoners: whereof D. Alphonſo Fajardo being aduertiſed, hee wrate ſpeedily to D. Diego of Ribera, Gouernor of Murcia, Marſhall of the Kings lodging, that he ſhould come forth of the city with all that were fit to beare armes, the which he did preſently, and came to Lorca with ſeuenty horſe and fiue hundred foote, whereas D. Alphonſo Fajardo met him with two hundred horſe and 1500. foote, with theſe forces they went to affront the Moores, and charged them, breaking them three times, but they rallied themſelues twice againe together, yet at the third they were victors, with the ſlaughter of aboue eight hundred of their men, and twelue captaines; and of Chriſtians there were forty ſlaine vpon the place, and aboue two hundred wounded: by which victory, the booty was reſcued. There is no other mention made in our Hiſtories of the deeds of this King Mahumet Aben Ozmen the Lame, but that hee was depriued of his Realme by the Infant Aben-Izmael, who kept at Malaga, being aſſiſted and fauored by the King of Caſtile, but the yeere is not certaine.

24 Nauarre.

D. Frederic Henriques Admirall of Caſtile, being retired againe to his ſonne in law the King of Nauarre for that they kept not the promiſes made in the aboue mentioned accord, did alſo thinke that it was lawfull for him to ſay, that for his part hee would not be bound to performe to the King of Caſtile that which he had ſworne and promiſed: wherefore he led with him Queene Ioane his daughter, and deliuered her to the King her husband. This married couple being together, it was not long before the Queene was with child, ſhe remayning at a place called Freſne in Arragon: where King Iohn beeing exceeding glad of theſe newes, he cauſed her to goe into Nauarre, there to be deliuered. She made her reſidence in the towne of Sangueſſe, the remainder of the yeere 1453. and there ſhe applied her ſelfe, with the Prince Don Charles, and the Councell of the Realme, to the gouernment of the State, the King her husband conſenting therevnto, but it was not very pleaſing to many Knights of Nauarre, who were affectionate ſeruants to the Prince, namely to the family and faction of Beaumont: holding that the authority of a mother in law could neither be good nor proffitable for the Prince nor Realme.

25 Caſtile.

The time of the Conſtables puniſhment did now approch, the meaſure of his villanies being full, whereof he himſelfe did ſeeke Iuſtice, by his impudency, and vnlymited deſire of reuenge. He hated D. Pedro of Eſtuniga Earle of Plaiſance deadly, and was in like manner hated by him. The Conſtable laied an ambuſh for this Earle, to take him priſoner, which was the greateſt matter he could doe to be reuenged his mighty enemies; for being once taken, it was eaſie for him who had the authority and force of the Realme in his power, to finde them guilty.

The

A The Earle being aduertiſed of this practiſe, he did impart his deſeigne to the Prince, the Marquis of Santillana, and to the Earles of Benauent and Haro, with others: which was, to looſe his life, or to make the Conſtable looſe his. The Prince Don Henry made him no anſwere, as the reſt did, who by the negotiation of Diego de Valera, laied a plot amongſt them, that the Earle of Plaiſance and the Marquis of Santillana, ſhould ſend their eldeſt ſonnes with fiue hundred Launces, vnder pretext of a quarrell which was betwixt the Earle of Benauent, and D. Pedro Aluares Oſorio; and that paſſing neere vnto Vailledolit, whereas the King and the Conſtable were, they ſhould finde means to ſeize vpon a gate, & drawing their men into the town, they ſhould take or kil the Conſtable, publiſhing, that it was done by the commandement of Prince Henry. But it ſucceeded
B not, for the Conſtable beeing aduertiſed hee cauſed the King to diſlodge and lêd him to Burgos. Theſe things beeing imparted by the King of Caſtile to Queene Iſabel, who was no friend to the Conſtable, ſhe imbraced this occaſion, and induced the King to let theſe Noblemen doe what they had reſolued, the which was eaſie to effect for that the King was already diſtaſted of his Conſtable.

Queene Iſabel fauors the Lords againſt the Conſtable.

The Queene did not only this good office, but ſhe did ſollicit the confederates to make haſt, whileſt the time was fit; ſending the Counteſſe of Ribadeo vnto them, vnder colour to viſit the Earle of Plaiſance her vncle, who had fortefied himſelfe in Bejar, carrying letters of credit, who did informe them, as ſhee was commanded, of the time, place, and meanes they ſhould hold, to ſeize vpon the Conſtable, or to diſpatch him. This
C Ambaſſage deliuered vnto the Earle, reioyced him much: and for that he was lame himſelfe, he preſently ſent D. Aluaro of Eſtuniga his eldeſt ſonne, with Diego of Valera, a Secretarie and a Page, to leauy men in Curiel, where they could not for the ſhortneſſe of time aſſemble aboue ſeuenty Launces, with the which D. Aluaro went towards Burgos: and going before vpon a Mule, with one man that did attend him, hee entred into the Caſtle of Burgos, commanding his men to follow after, giuing it out in the Country, that they did belong vnto the Conſtable, but aboue all, that they ſhould ſo obſerue the time, as their comming into Burgos ſhould bee by night, and that they ſhould not offer to come into the caſtle, vntill they had newes from him; the which was duely executed, and theſe ſeuenty Knights entred into the caſtle on Monday at night, the firſt of May in D the yeere 1453. whereas D. Aluaro had already drawne in the ſame night two hundred of his friends of the towne well armed.

Preſage of the Conſtables end.

The day following there was an vncertaine brute, that the Conſtable ſhould bee apprehended, who had many other preſages of his ruine, if hee could haue fore-ſeene it. The King being priuy to all theſe matters, had a conceit that this apprehenſion could not be made without great ſcandale, and therefore he ſent commandement to D. Aluaro, that hee ſhould returne to Curiel, for that he could not execute that, for the which hee was come, but D. Aluaro, a valiant and hardy Knight, made anſwere, that vpon his life hee would ſeiz vpon the Conſtable, and deliuer him vnto him, ſo he would be pleaſed to giue him a decree, or warrant to apprehend him, the which the King cauſed to be made in this
E forme. D. Aluaro of Eſtuniga, my Alguazil Maior, or Marſhall, I command you to apprehend the body of D. Aluaro de Luna, Maſter of Saint Iames, and if he offer to defend himſelfe, that you kill him. And moreouer the King commanded the Rectors and Aldermen of the city, to put the people in armes, according to their regiments and bands, and to keepe them in battaile in the Biſhops place, at the breake of day. At which time D. Aluaro going out of the caſtle, to inueſt the Conſtables lodging, and to take him, hee receiued diuers commandments from the King, that he ſhould not fight, but onely beſeege him, and ſet gards about his lodging, that he might not eſcape, which did much diſcontent him. Comming neere the place, his men beganne to cry, Caſtile, Caſtile, for the F Kings liberty: At which noyſe the Conſtable came to the windoe, and his men put themſelues in defence, many ſhot, both with bowes and harguebuſes, wherewith there were ſome ſlaine, and others hurt. D. Aluaro of Eſtuniga ſent often to intreat the King, that hee would giue him leaue to fight, for they ſlue his men from the windoes of the Conſtables lodging, but he would neuer grant it. Therevpon arriued D. Alphonſo of Carthagena Biſhop of Burgos, and Ruy Diaz of Mendoça Lord Steward, to whom the Conſtable, VVarrant to apprehend the Conſtable.

Conſtable, who was armed and on horſe-backe, yeelded himſelfe priſoner, hauing promiſed him, in the Kings name, that there ſhould be no harme done vnto his perſon nor goods, but by the courſe of Iuſtice. Being taken, he was giuen in gard by the King, to Ruy Diaz of Mendoça, and by him to his brother Iohn Hurtado of Mendoça, who carried him to Portillo, whereat D. Aluaro of Eſtuniga was very much diſcontented, and the city likewiſe, ſo as ſome offred to goe and take the Conſtable away by force from Iohn Hurtado, and to deliuer him into his hands to keepe, hauing more right therevnto then any other, ſeeing he had taken him: but D. Aluaro, who was a diſcreet Knight, pacefied them with thankes. After this the King went to Portillo, and cauſed a great quantity of treaſure, belonging to the Conſtable to be ſeized on, and carried to Vailledolit, and he gaue him in gard to D. Diego of Eſtuniga, ſonne to the Marſhall D. Inigo Ortis of Eſtuniga, who was Earle of Nieua, commanding that his proceſſe ſhould be made, and that his Attorney Generall ſhould informe againſt him.

Nauarre.

This yeere was remarkable in Spaine, for the birth of the Infant D. Fernand, ſonne to D. Iohn King of Nauarre, by D. Ioane Henriques his wife, who being vnwilling to be deliuered in Nauarre going towards Arragon, ſhe was forced to ſtay at Sos, a ſmall place of Arragon, where ſhe had this Prince, who was famous, for the great things he did: for by him the Moores were chaſed out of Granado, and all Spaine clenſed of that vermine; the Weſt Indies diſcouered, with many Iſlands in the Ocean ſea: the Realmes of Caſtile, Leon, Arragon, Nauarre and Granado, vnited vnder one crowne; many places conquered vpon the coaſt of Affrike, and ſubiected to the crowne of Spaine: And that which may ſerue to make him famous, the Inquiſition was inſtituted vnder him, the only ſupport of the authority of the Sea of Rome, and of the Clergy in Spaine. The yeere of Prince Fernands birth 1453. was the laſt of the Chriſtians Empire in the Eaſt, the city of Conſtantinople being then taken by Mahumet Emperor of the Turkes, whoſe poſterity doth hold it at this day, with many other great Realmes and Prouinces, conquered ſince by that infidell Nation.

Birth of D. Fernand, who was King of Caſtile and Arragon, and husband to D. Iſabel.

Caſtille.

D. Iohn King of Caſtile, hauing reſolued to be rid of the Conſtable D. Aluaro de Luna, whom he had raiſed to that greatneſſe, he ſought to ſeize vpon his places and caſtles, hee got Maqueda eaſily, but not the reſt: for whileſt he liued, he had men at his deuotion, who would not abandon him, hoping that he ſhould recouer both his liberty and grace, as he had formerly done; wherefore the King, to take away all theſe lets, reſolued to put him to death, and therefore he gaue charge to them of his Councell, to make an end of his criminall proceſſe. The which was done at the Inſtance of the Kings Attorney, by twelue lawiers that were deputed; who hauing conuicted him to haue attempted againſt the crowne of Caſtile, to haue taken and conuerted to his owne vſe the Kings treaſure, and committed many tyranous acts, he was condemned to looſe his head, the which being ſet vpon a high pole, ſhould remaine vpon a ſcaffold nine daies together, as an example and ſpectacle for all the Noblemen of the Realme. This ſentence beeing confirmed by the King, D. Aluaro de Luna was brought from Portillo to Vailledolit, by D. Diego of Eſtuniga, being accompanied by a great number of men, where hauing ſtaied one night, his ſentence of death being read vnto him, he was carried vpon a little Mule, an Officer crying out with a loude voice before him, that it was the Iuſtice which the King cauſed to bee done vpon that cruell Tirant, vſurper of the royall crowne &c. Being come to the place of execution, he was beheaded: his head continued there nine daies, and his body three, then they carried it to Saint Andrewes Hermitage, where malefactors are vſually buried: but ſome daies after both his body and head were tranſported to Toledo, and buried in a Chappel built by him, in the quier of the Cathedrall Church. A man in whom we may obſerue the inconſtancy of humaine greatneſſe, but what auailes inſtruction to them, who from little come to great Eſtates, to make them maintaine themſelues with modeſty, and to relie vpon a good conſcience: for Princes fauours haue deceiued many, whereof both antient and moderne hiſtories are full, and the examples ordinary. All his goods were forfeited, and applied to the crowne, the which were very great; for beſides the dignities of Conſtable and Maiſter of Saint Iames, he was Duke of Trugillo, and Earle of Saint Stephen de Gormas, he held the held the Cities of Oſma and Truxillo, the townes of Cuellar, Maqueda, Montalban, Valdoliuas, Alcocer, Salmeron, Saint Peter of Palmiches, Tremble, Zebreros, Villalua, Alamin, la Tour Pre, Colmenar, Arenas, Adrada, Caſtel Valuel, Figuiere, Albuquerque, Azagala, Aillon, Sepulueda, Riaca, Maderuelo, Caſtel-nouo, Eſcalona, Saint Martin of Val d'Egliſe, with other places and forts, to the number of 70. and fiue Earldomes, ſo as he might number twenty thouſand Vaſſalls, beſids the dependances of the Maiſterſhip of Saint Iames, and the Vaſſalls thereof, from all which places and lands, he drew aboue an hundred thouſand double ducats of rent, beſids the eſtates, offices and infinit preſents, and other profits and commodities which he found out: being a man which hunted after great gaine, yet he hid not ſcorne ſmale preſents, after the manner of thoſe that grow great of nothing. All which things came vnto him, by the Kings bounty, fauour and ſuffrance. Hee was ſubtill, and a great diſſembler, pleaſing himſelfe much in ſuch practiſes, he was ſuſpitious, enuious, an enemy and perſecutor of great men, the which coſt him his life: A glorious vanter of his race and progenitors, not remembring his mothers courſe of life, which made his beginning doubtfull. Hee was a good man at armes and an actiue Knight, ſtrong of body, though little of ſtature, yet well ſet: hardy in warre, aduiſed, very affable and familiar in Court, gratious to his friends, diſcreet in his ſpeech, eloquent, and furniſhed with good reaſons; giuen to pleaſures, dauncing, and in ſome ſort a Poet. And for that the King had ſeazed vpon all that did belong vnto him, they did ſet a ſiluer baſon whereas his head ſtood, to the end that ſuch as would giue any thing for his buriall, might caſt in it there: whereby they gathered much mony. It is ſtrange that hauing on a time inquired of certaine diuines of his future fortunes, they anſwering him that hee ſhould die vpon a ſcaffold, which the Spaniards call Cadahalſo, hee then remembred that hee had a place called Cadahalſo; into the which hee would neuer ſet his foote, but he mounted vpon another Cadahalſo, which hee doubted not. In the death of this Conſtable, and the diſgraces of Ruy d' Auales his Predeceſſor, in the ſame dignity, wee may note that Kings doe many times ruine men with the like error that they haue rayſed them: for it is certen, that they were both caſt downe from that high degree of fauour, for that they were ſtrangers, ſeeing that they alone did not trouble the realme, nor vſurpe the rights thereof, but kindred, allyances and friends did preſerue many, who had deſerued no leſſe then theſe: and there is no doubt but Don Iohn King of Caſtile would haue winckt at all the Conſtables miſdemeanors, and borne with them ſtill, had not the perſwaſions of his wife, the diſhonor which they layed before him, and feare drawne him vnto it. He therefore put him to death as a rebell, and guilty of high treaſon (notwithſtanding that he neuer brake lance, nor carryed armes againſt the ſtandard royall) whome hee had ſo deerely loued, more to pleaſe another, then for any deſire he had to doe iuſtice, and moued therevnto rather through baſe couardiſe then by any vertuous reſolution. This execution paſt, the King beſeeged Eſcalona, and ſent letters to all the great Citties and townes of the realme with an ample declaration of the iuſtice he had done vpon Aluaro de Luna, ſetting downe his offences particularly, aduertiſing them that hereafter hee would haue iuſtice duly adminiſtred, expreſly forbidding them to aſſiſt, or to giue any fauour and ſupport vnto Iohn de Luna his Sonne. The fort of Eſcalona was yeelded vpon theſe conditions, that the Counteſſe, the Conſtables widow, ſhould haue halfe the treaſor and iewells that was within the place, and the King the reſt; and to D. Diego of Auellaneda, who was gouernor thereof, ſhould bee giuen two thouſand doublons of gold, with the towne and caſtle of Langa. During his ſmall aboad in this place, hee had newes that Queene Iſabel his wife was brought in bed of a Sonne, at Tordeſillas, who was named D. Alfonſo.

Birth of D. Alfonſo of Caſtile.

The yeare following the King beeing at Auila hee ſent for D. Lopes of Barriento Biſhop of Ciquença and Friar Gonçal of Illeſca Prior of the Monaſtery of Guadalupe, to make them of his counſell to the ende that hee might by their aduice reforme the great abuſes paſt: to effect the which hee reſolued to rayſe a power of eight thouſand lances with an ordinary entertaynment, and many other things. Being in this diſcours, hee felt himſelfe to be much troubled with a quartaine ague, which had held him ſome-time, yet hee did not forbeare to trauell to Madrid, and from thence to Vaylledolit, would willingly haue made heire of his crowne, and King of Caſtile and Leon, if it had beene lawful, ſo much he did miſlike Prince Henry his eldeſt ſon, for his diſobedience and lightneſſe. To his daughter D. Iſabella, he gaue the towne of Cuellar, with a great quantity of gold for her dowry. He did not long ſuruiue his Conſtable, but died of the violence of his quarten ague, at Vailledolit, in Iuly the ſame yeere 1454. hauing held the Realm 47. yeers, being 49. yeeres old and fiue months: his body was for that time laied in B the Monaſtery of St. Pablo of Vailledolit, to be tranſported to the Carthuſians of Mire-fleurs at Burgos, as he had ordained by his teſtament. The Conſtables death had reconciled the King of Nauarre vnto him, and reſtored all the other Noblemen to fauour, yea the Admiral D. Frederic, who was then fled into Arragon: notwithſtanding hauing made to much haſt to re-enter into Caſtile, without an ample licence from the King, hee had commandment to goe backe, and not to returne into Caſtile, vnleſſe he were ſent for, vp-on great penalties. This King had reſolued to make warre againſt D. Alphonſo King of Portugal, for the deſcoueries which he made vpon the Weſterne coaſt of Affrike, beyond Cap Verd, towards Guinee, ſaying theſe conqueſts did belong to the crowne of Caſtile, but death brake of this deſſeigne, and continued the peace of Portugal. C

27 Portugal. The Eſtate of which Realme after the death of King Edward had beene gouerned by the Infant D Pedro, in quality of a Regent, choſen by the Eſtates, by reaſon of King Don Alphonſos yong yeeres. D. Pedro had for his greateſt Aduerſary his brother D. Alphonſo
Earle of Barcellos, and his ſonnes, the Earles of Oren and Arroyolos, notwithſtanding which contention, King D. Alphonſo beeing come to the age of ſixteene yeeres, married at Saint Iren, with Donna Iſabella, daughter to the Infant D. Pedro, receiuing the nuptial bleſſing from the hand of D. Fernand Archbiſhop of Braga. D. Alphonſo Earle of Barcel-los, ſonne to King Iohn, had obtained in the yeere, 1448. of his brother D. Pedro Regent of the realme, although they were in quarrell, the Eſtate of Brangance, in title of a Dutchie, and the caſtle of Lotero, by the deceaſe of Don Gonçalo, who held all thoſe D places.

This good turne was ill requited by the new Duke: for he ſeeing him make no ſhew to giue ouer his Regency, notwithſtanding that the King had beene declared capable to gouerne his realme himſelfe, and being married, he put a conceit into the Kings head, that the Infant D. Pedro had cauſed Queene Leonora his mother, to be poiſoned in Caſtile, and that he ſought to doe the like to him, that he might ſeize vpon the crowne. For this cauſe the king did perſecute D. Pedro his vncle: ſo as he forced him to retire to Coimbra, of which hee was Duke. Being much incenſed at this iniury, hee had certaine practiſes with them of Lisbone, to giue him entry and ſupport in that city, with his par-tiſans and friends, whereof he had many, meaning to rebel againſt the king his Nephew. E Theſe practiſes being diſcouered, the king gathered together all the men he could with great ſecrecy, to ſurpriſe D. Pedro vpon the point of the execution of his enterpriſe: and came and incountred him as he was comming to Lisbone, at a place called Aforrobeira, where hauing fought with him, vanquiſhed, and ſlaine him, hee ended thoſe troubles.
Deſeat and death of the Infant D. Pedro Duke of Coimbra. It may be the Infant was innocent of the death of Queene Leonora: but if it be true that he cauſed poyſon to be giuen her, hee was paied with the like money, for hee was ſlaine with a poiſoned arrow. There died many good knights in this battaile, and amongſt others D. Alaaro of Almada, Earle of Abranches.

They did for a long time refuſe to burie the Infants bodie in the royall Monaſtery of the battaile, an argument of the kings great hatred, and of the Duke of Bragan- F ça's againſt him: yet they had cauſe to lament him, for they wanted him in the Go-uernment; The duke of Braganee ſoone after demaunded the City of Porto, and the towne of Guimaranes of the king, the which hee gaue him: Guimaranes re-ceiued him, but Porto would not in any ſort: for they would maintaine themſelues for the king, and ſo did Portalegre, which the king had giuen vnto the Earle Don

Sancho

A Sancho of Logrogno, brother to D.Conſtance, the Duke of Braganca's ſecond wife, being ſiſter alſo to D.Pedro Archbiſhop of Lisbone.

In the yeere 1451. Donna Leonora the Kings ſiſter was married to the Emperor Frederic the third duke of Auſtria, and the betrothing was in the city of Lisbone, by the Noblemen that were deputed by him, hauing ful power and authority, who afterwards conducted their Empreſſe by ſea to Piſa, being accompanied by the Marquis of Valencia, by D.Lewis Coutin, Biſhop of Coimbra, D. Lope of Almada Earle of Abrantes, and other Noblemen of Portugal: whoſe marriage was celebrated at Siena, the yeere following 1452, In the which King Alphonſo had a ſonne by his wife, called D.Iohn, which liued little. That yeere the body of the Infant D.Pedro, vncle and father in law to the King, was
B taken from Alberca where it had beene interred, and tranſported to the caſtle of Abrantes, or at the leaſt his bones.

Marriage of the Emperor Frederic the 3 and D.Leonora of Portugal

The coaſt of Affrike, towards the Weſterne and South ſeas, were at that time deſcouered by the Portugals, who brought gold from Guinny, whereof King D.Alphonſo cauſed a certaine coyne to be made, which hee called Croiſats, by reaſon of the Croiſadoe graunted by Pope Nicholas the fifth to make warre againſt the Infidels. D.Aluar Gonçales Biſhop of Lamego, was the bringer of this Croiſadoe into Portugal. D.Iohn the ſecond King of Caſtile, being growne iealous of theſe nauigations and conqueſts, as I haue ſaid, ſought to hinder them, ſending word vnto the King Alphonſo that they did belong vnto the crowne of Caſtile, and therefore he did forbid the Portugals to goe thether a-C ny more, elſe he would make violent warre againſt him. King Alphonſo anſwered his Ambaſſadors (who were D.Iohn de Guzman, and Doctor Fernand Lopes of Burgos) very mildly, that he had alwaies held that the conqueſts and deſcoueries of thoſe coaſts did belong vnto the Realme of Portugal: yet he would alwaies, if need were, ſubmit himſelfe to iudgement, and would deſiſt, if it were ſaid, that it did belong to any other: and therefore he intreated him that, without good information, hee would not breake the peace betwixt the two realmes: Herevpon the King of Caſtile died, in the yeere 1454. at which time King Alphonſo had a daughter borne, called D.Ioane, which was a very vertuous and religious Princeſſe.

Deſcouerie of the coaſt of Affrik by the Portugals which diſcontented the Caſtillans.

In the end, the body or bones of the Infant D. Pedro, hauing remained ſome time in D the caſtle of Arantes, and remoued from thence to Saint Eloy at Lisbone, they were buried, at the interceſſion of the Pope, the Duke of Burgondy, of the Ducheſſe his wife, and of the Queene D.Iſabella, and of many Noblemen and Prelats, in the Monaſtery of the battaile: ſo great account they made of a ſmall matter in theſe ceremonies, as the whole world muſt of force bee therein imployed. The funeralls were celebrated with great pompe and ſolemnity.

CASTIL, and LEON.	ARRAGON and NAVARRE.
19. D. Henry the 4. and XL.	18. D. Iohn 2.----himſelfe.

F KIng Iohn the ſecond being dead, his ſonne Henry the fourth of that name ſucceeded him in the Kingdomes of Caſtile and Leon: who by diuers was ſurnamed the liberall: for he was not onely bountifull, but a great water and prodigall, the which he did inherit from the King his father. The ſurname of vnhable was giuen vnto him, by reaſon of his naturall weakeneſſe, being in the company of women, the which his Queenes had experience of: and yet thoſe which haue written of his ſtature and proportion, ſay, that he was ſtrong and bigge, of a manly aſpect, fierce and hairy. Surnames of liberal and vnable.

This Prince was light-headed, variable & inconſtant: yet for all that of faire demeanure, curteous and affable to his familliar friends, in ſo much as he neuer ſaid thou to any one Qualities and manners of the King D. Henry the fourth.

he did euer maintaine his grauity with Princes: he was a louer of peace and did naturally put of from himſelfe the managing of matters of State. Hee would at one time bee bold and confident, without ſuſpition, and within a while after contrary to himſelfe, ſolitary, and an enemy of company; moſt of which quallities he had by inheritance from his father. He did take great pleaſure in hunting, in muſicke, and in buildings of houſes of pleaſure, and he did likewiſe erect monaſteries with other religious houſes: he would oftentimes ſit and ſing in Churches with ſinging men: he was a great eater, but he did neuer taſt any wine. By his bounty and liberality he raiſed diuers to great honors and riches who were iſſued from baſe and obſcure families. Thus King Henry, at the age of one and thirty yeeres was proclaimed King at Valiodolite in the preſence of D. Iohn of Pacheco Marques of Villena (his moſt priuate and familliar friend) and his brother D. Pedro Giron Maiſter of Calatraua, D. Ruy Diaz of Mendoza, great Maiſter of the houſehold to the late King D. Iohn. D. Pedro d' Aguilar, Lord of Priego and of Cagnette, the Marſhal D. Diego Fernandes of Cordoua Lord of Baena, and other Noblemen which were then at the Court.

The beginning of his reigne was very plauſible, by reaſon that he did enlarge of his owne accord, without being therevnto ſolicited by any one, D. Garcia Aluares of Toledo Earle of Alua, and D. Diego Manriques Earle of Treuigno, reſtoring them to all their former riches honours, and dignities; and hauing made a certaine ſpeech to the Lords that were then about him, they gaue him great and humble thankes, reputing that demonſtration of his clemency as an high fauour, and ſo with al reuerence kiſſed his hands. He diſplaced none of all thoſe which were in any office or place of dignity during the life of his father, but receiued them into his ſeruice in the ſelfe ſame quality that they were in before. In regard whereof all men thought the Kingdome happy being fallne into the hands of ſo good, ſo curteous and liberall a Prince, and they did yeeld infinite thankes vnto God, the only giuer of ſo deſired and neceſſary a fauour for the Realmes of Caſtile and Leon.

Diuers great Lords ſo ſoone as they heard of the death of King Iohn, came in all haſt to mourne with him for the ſame, to do him reuerence and to take the oth of alleageance due to the new King. The Eccleſiaſticall perſons were, D. Alphonſo Carillo d' Acugna; Archbiſhop of Toledo, D. Roderigo de Luna Archbiſhop of Saint Iames, D. Alphonſo Fonſeca Archbiſhop of Seuil, D. Alphonſo de Carthagena Biſhop of Burgos, Frier Lopes de Barriento Biſhop of Cuenca, D. Alphonſo de Madrigall, called Toſtado the moſt renowned Biſhop of Auila, D. Pedro Baca Biſhop of Leon, D. Pedro of Caſtile Biſhop of Palença, D. Gonçall of Illeſca Biſhop of Cordoua, D. Lewis d' Acugna Biſhop of Segobia, D. Inigo Manrique Biſhop of Ouiedo with diuers other prelats. The ſecular Lords were D. Fernand de Velaſco Earle of Haro, D. Alphonſo Pimentell Earle of Benauent, D. Gaſton de la Cerde Earle of Medina Celi, D. Diego Manrique Earle of Treuigno, D. Iohn Manrique Earle of Caſtagneda, D. Roderigo Manrique Earle of Paredes, D. Gabriell Manrique Earle of Oſorno, D. Aluaro of Eſtuniga Earle of Plaiſance, whoſe father was newly dead, much about the time of the Conſtables deceaſe, D. Pedro Aluares Oſorio Earle of Tranſtamara, D. Pedro d' Acugna Earle of Valencia, an other D. Pedro d' Acugna Lord of Duegnas and Tariego, brother to the Archbiſhop D. Alphonſo Carillo, D. Iohn de Sylua Standard-bearer to the King, and many others, who with the deputies of townes and Prouinces there aſſembled, ſware to the Kings fealty and homage after the accuſtomed manner.

The King of Nauarre and other Lords pacified, recompenced & repealed by the new king D. Henry.

Now the King being deſirous to ſuppreſſe al fore-paſſed quarrels, and to ſettle a firme peace in his dominions, did at his comming to the crowne ſend Ambaſſadors to the King of Nauarre, who greatly complained becauſe of the confiſcation of all his goods in Caſtile, wherevpon it was concluded that in recompence of all the wrongs that hee could pretend, he ſhould haue certaine yeerely penſions aſſigned him out of the ordinary reuenue of the Kingdome of Caſtile, in regard of which aſſignation he ſhould deliuer vp into the King of Caſtiles hands, the townes of Atiença, La Pegna de Alcaçar: it was likewiſe agreed vpon that the Admirall D. Frederic, D. Iohn of Touar Lord of Berlanga, the children of the Earle of Caſtro lately dead, and all the Knights and others which were

A were fled out of the Kingdome by reaſon of the late warres, ſhould be repealed and reſtored to all their goods and lands. Theſe things were ſoone effected, and the Admirall with the reſt returned to Valiodolit to kiſſe the Kings hands, who receiued them very graciouſly, and yet for all that did put them in minde of the faith and obedience due to Kings, to the end they might the better remember it afterward, and ſo with his free pardon diſmiſſed them. And beſides all this the better to confirme his peace on all ſides with Chriſtian Princes, he ſent Ambaſſadors into Italy to Alphonſo King of Arragon, to the end to renue the leagues and antient alliances betwixt the crownes of Caſtile and Arragon, who were receiued and entertained with great honour; a notable ar-

B gument whereof was, that as the Ambaſſadors of Caſtile and the Commiſſioners of Arragon ſtood vpon termes who ſhould be firſt named in the inſtruments and writings, the King D. Alphonſo decreed that the precedency ſhould be giuen to Caſtile, in regard that he himſelfe reigning ouer the Arragonois was a Prince iſſued from the ſtocke of Caſtile, an antient race of the Kings of Gothes: ſo that in all the writings which did concerne the league and alliance, the King of Caſtile was firſt named, the which his Ambaſſadors at their returne certified to him and his councell to their exceeding ioy and contentment.

Caſtile preferd before Arragon.

But notwithſtanding theſe good beginnings, if the reigne of the late King Iohn was turbulent and troubleſome, and if euer Spaine was ſeene to be ſhaken with furious tem-

The gentlenes of a Prince not accompanied with iuſtice & ſeuerity, is both hurtful to himſelfe and his Eſtate.

C peſts, it was now moſt of all by the miſerable gouernment of his ſonne King Henry, whoſe clemency and careleſſe gentleneſſe was the onely cauſe thereof, making him to forget the other part of the duty of a Prince which is Iuſtice, by meanes whereof he fell into the contempt of the great ones of his Court, and namely of his moſt priuate minions, ſo that both hee and his Kingdome fell into very dangerous ſtreights. At the beginning he and his affaires were gouerned by D. Iohn de Pacheco Marquis of Villena, a wiſe, rich, and diſcreet perſon, and one well ſeene in the mannaging of ſtate-affaires, likewiſe by the Archbiſhop of Seuil, D. Alphonſo de Fonſeca, a prelate of an excellent wit, but leſſe graue then beſeemed the place and ranke he held; by whom for certaine yeeres ſpace the Kingdome was well gouerned to the contentment of all men.

Moores and Caſtile.

D The firſt martiall enterpriſe attempted in the reigne of King Henry was againſt the Moores of Granado, ouer whom reigned Iſmael, the ſame who had taken the crowne from Mahumet the Lame: for the execution whereof King Henry aſſembled the Eſtates of his kingdome in the city of Cuellar, vnto whom hauing propounded what he ment to doe, D. Inigo Lopes de Mendoça, Marquis of Santillana in the the name of them all, anſwered him in ſuch eloquent and diſcreet termes, as did highly pleaſe and content him. The warre beeing reſolued and decreed in that aſſembly, euery man went home to his houſe to make preparation, and in the beginning of the yere 1455. they began to march towards the frontiers of Andaluzia. The King parting from Segobia ordained viceroys in Caſtile and Leon for matters of Iuſtice, D. Alphonſo Carillo Archbiſhop of Toledo

E and D. Pedro Fernandes de Velaſco Earle of Haro, who ſhould keepe their reſidence at Valiodolit. The army being in a redineſſe entred into the Moores country, being in number fiue thouſand horſemen, and a great company of footmen making great ſpoile euen to the walles of the city of Granado, notwithſtanding that Iſmael had beene eſtabliſhed King by the helpe and fauour of the King of Caſtile D. Iohn deceaſſed. On the fourth day the Chriſtian army returned to Eccia, and ſome few daies after went towards Malaga, burning and ſpoyling as before, albeit that a great company of Mooriſh horſemen did oftentimes preſent them the combate, which the King by the wiſe and diſcreet councell of his captaines did euermore refuſe, and brought backe his army in ſafety to Cordoua loaden with all manner of ſpoiles.

The Pope granting his requeſt, ſeparated them, albeit it was very well knowne that the fault was in himſelfe, and not in the Ladie, who with great griefe returned home into Nauarre, hauing loſt the title and dignity of Queene of Caſtile: but King Henry, great beauty, who was betrothed vnto him, notwithſtanding ſhe had ſufficient notice of the kings inſufficiencie, yet ſhee conſented thereunto, beeing tickled with a deſire to bee Queene of Caſtile. The king Don Henry without receiuing any thing with her, did en-medo, and their lands, and for her ordinarie expences, a million, and 500000. maruidouzin Ladies of noble parentage, vnto whom the King would giue husbands fitting their degrees, and of theſe the Ladie Beatrix de Norogno ſhould be gouerneſſe, who for her part had leaue to bring with her foure yong Gentlewomen, with like hope. All theſe things promiſed and confirmed by the king, Don Iohn de Guzman the firſt Duke of Medina Sidonia, and Earle of Niebla, was ſent to meet the Infanta, who brought her to Cor-doua where the marriage was ſolemnized with great magnificence: the Arch biſhop of Tours beeing then Ambaſſadour in the Court of Spaine for the French king Charles the at ſuch feaſts were there performed, ſauing that in the opinion of all men, the Bride re-

Queenes were his couſin germaines once remoued, daughters, the one to the king of Nauar, the other of Lady Leonora of Arragon his ſiſter, couſin-germains to his father.

About this time Pope Nicholas, by his death, gaue place to a Spaniard borne in Xati-ua, a towne in the kingdome of Valencia, called Don Alphonſo Borgia, Cardinall of the title of S. Sixtus, who was named Calixt the 3. a man of 77. yeares of age, who had beene a Counſeller to Alphonſo K. of Arragon. By him was made Cardinall a nephew of his and to a ſiſter of Pope Calixts, he did intitle him Cardinall of S. *Nicholas in carcere Tul-

Ambition of D. Ioane of Portugall. Whileſt that the mariage laſted at Cordoua, great numbers of ſouldiers were drawne from all parts of Caſtile into Andaluſia, the number of them amounting to about fourteene thouſand horſe, and foureſcore thouſand foot, whoſe chiefe Commanders were the Admirall Frederic, the Duke of Medina Sidonia, the Marquis of Santillana, hee of Villena, the Earles of Alba de Tormes, Benauent, Arcos, S. Eſteuan, Alba de Liſta, Valence, Cabra, Caſtagneda, Oſorno and Paredes, and the Arch-biſhop of Seuile, beſides others of leſſer note: with theſe forces the king entred into the Moores country, and with out diſ-banding his army, or giuing aduantage, or hope to the enemy to come to battell, hee made roades vp and downe for 20. dayes ſpace, ſo as it was thought, that the Moores would not be able in many yeares to gather any profit or fruit in their country, E the which the king thought to be the ſureſt and eaſieſt way vtterly to ruine & ouercome them. Hauing brought backe his army to Eccia laden with ſpoiles, not long after, he diſcharged the greateſt number of them, and diſmiſſed the Marquis of Santillana, the Earles of Benauent, Alba, Plaiſance and others home to their houſes, he himſelfe remaining in Andaluſia with the people of the country, and the town garriſons did make continuall roades vpon the Moores all that Sommer, at the latter end whereof he returned to Auila and Segobia, to giue order for the war of the yeare following.

Wars againſt the Moores. Alphonſo king of Portugall hauing by the marriage of his ſiſter confirmed the peace and auncient alliances with the Crowne of Caſtile, determined with himſelfe to vex the Moores in Affrica: the ſame yeare in the city of Lisbon was born vnto him a ſonne, who F at his chriſtening was named Don Iohn: the baptiſme was ſolemnized by Don Fernand Arch-biſhop of Braga, the Infant was carried by Don Fernand his vncle, his Godfathers were the Earles of Arroyolos, and Don Vaſco of Attaydo, Prior of S. Iohns, and D. *Payo

In

Nauarre.

A In theſe times began the troubles and calamities in Nauarre, occaſioned by the factions in that kingdome, after this manner. The Prince of Viana Don Charles was in his flouriſhing age, and in the abſence of his father had, very vertuouſly, with great iuſtice, and to the liking of all men, gouerned the Realme of Nauarre, by the good councell of the Lords of the countrey: and namely by the Lord Lewis of Beaumont: now the king his father hauing married to his ſecond wife the Ladie Ioane Henriques, daughter to the Admirall of Caſtile, would haue made her a partaker in the gouernment, the which was diſtaſted by many, who did ſtirre vp the Prince, beeing lawfull heire of the Kingdome, not to ſuffer his mother-in-law to thruſt her ſelfe into the command of his poſſeſſions.

Don Charles cannot endure his mother-in-law partaker with him in the regencie.

The deſire of rule which tickleth all great and magnanimous natures: did ſo farre poſ-

The deſire of rule, an affection of a magnanimous nature.

B ſeſſe the Prince Don Charles, hitherto obedient to his father, as hee declared vnto him the purpoſe that he had to enioy alone the right of his mothers inheritance, in which his mother-in-law had no part, and thereupon made preparation to ſend her foorth of the countrie, and to reſiſt the king his father, if he oppoſed himſelfe againſt his determination, and in concluſion to haue by way of armes that which he purpoſed. From this pernitious quarrell, which prooued ſo ſucceſſeles to the ſonne againſt the father, did ſpring the two factions of thoſe of Beaumont and Grammont, which ſo many yeares did infect the kingdome of Nauarre, names taken from two mighty families, to wit, that of Beaumont beyond the Pirenean hils, and that of Grammont on the hither ſide neere vnto France, albeit that the houſe of Beaumont had his originall from Normandy, and was firſt of all Factions of Beaumont and Grammont in Nauarre.

The houſe of Beaumont called of old, Luſa.

C called Luſa; neuertheleſſe both of them of old iſſued from the bloud royall of Nauarre, the which the armes of both thoſe houſes do witneſſe, and namely, the chiefe of the faction of Grammont, who are the Marſhals of the kingdome, the Marques of Cortes, do not intitle themſelues of Grammont but of Nauarre. Now the Lord Lewis of Beaumont Conſtable of Nauarre, beeing chiefe of his houſe, he and all his followed the Princes: on the contrarie, the houſe of Grammont and their adherents, did maintain the Kings quarell againſt his ſonne, and of this houſe were chiefe, the Lord Peter of Peralta, who by reaſon of theſe tumults was made Conſtable, and the Marſhall Don Pedro of Nauarre. The ſonnes reaſons were, that beeing ſonne and lawfull heire to Lady Blanche the right Queene and heire of Nauarre, he ought to gouerne, ſeeing that the king his father had

D made a ſecond marriage, which barred him from any pretence of right or claime. On the contrarie the king ſayd, that by agreement of his firſt marriage, it was concluded, that whether he had any children or no by his wife Queene Blanche, that he ſhould raigne during his life: to the which article the Lords and States of the kingdome were ſworne, and therefore it ought to take place.

The Prince diſputed againſt this poynt, as beeing made to his preiudice, not good in law, and therefore of no force: for as by the lawes of the Realme, two beeing married, the ſuruiuer enioyeth the goods of the partie deceaſed, ſo long as they continue in widdow-hood, but ſo ſoone as they marrie againe, they loſe that right. Now the queſtion was, whether the condition agreed vpon in the contract of marriage, in the behalfe of K.

E Iohn, made againſt the lawes of Nauarre, and to the preiudice of the Prince his ſonne, were good or no: but how iuſt ſo euer it was, they fell to armes. Queene Ioane remaining in Eſtella, beeing aduertiſed of Prince Charles his conſpiracie, gaue foorth-with notice thereof to the king her husband, who came out of Arragon into Nauarre with a great company of men at armes, vnto whom thoſe of Grammont ioyned themſelues. Firſt of all he tryed by meſſages and ambaſſadors, if hee could diuert the Prince his ſonne from this diſhonorable pourſute, whereby (as he ſayd) he did blemiſh the ſhining luſter of the races of Nauarre, Caſtile, Arragon, and France, from whence he was deſcended: the queſtion betwixt the father and ſonne was brought to very good termes, by the reaſons al-

F leaged by King Iohns Ambaſſadors, had not the counſel of the chiefe of the part of Beaumont hindred it, who kept the Prince in his firſt reſolution, to haue the abſolute rule of his kingdom without any exception: and thoſe of Grammont did incite the king againſt his ſonne, both parts thinking (as it is very likely) to increaſe their honours, riches, and dignities rather by theſe troubles, then by the peace of the kingdome.

All treaties and negotiations of peace ceaſſing, the Prince aſſembled his forces, as wel

Knights

An. 1456. The Prince of Viana Don Charles cauſed himſelfe to bee called king of Nauar.

Knights as the common people of his partie, and carried himſelf as king the yeare 1456, giuing gifts, priuiledges, and liberties, with other royall acts, the letters and writings whereof were found in theſe times in the citie of Toralba, and other places of the country: he called alſo from Caſtile diuers of his friends, of whom certaine troupes entring by Logrogno into Nauarre were ouerthrowne neere to Viana, by the King Don Iohn; who like a wiſe and a diſcreet Captaine went and met them, not ſuffering all his ſonnes forces to ioyne together, before that he had fought with them: after which exploit there were diuers encounters betwixt them with doubtfull victorie, neere to Eſtella, Pampelona, Olite, and Lombier: ſo as the laſt battell of this firſt ciuill warre, was fought neere to the citie of Ayuar, in the which, by the proweſſe and valour of Peter of Peralta, and Lopes of Caſtillo, and others of the faction of Grammont, thoſe of Beaumont were vanquiſhed, and Prince Charles taken priſoner, who was carried to Tafalla by the commandement of the king, who came thither ſoone after, and did labour to bring him to ſome agreement of peace, the which the ſonne (beeing ill aduiſed) did contemne: and that which was worſe, he going about to incite his neighbour kings to take in hand the defence of his cauſe, a packet of letters was taken which he ſent to king Alphonſo of Portugall, wherein diuers matters were diſcouered, by reaſon whereof hee was ſhut vp in the caſtle of Mont-Roy. Hereuppon the factions were ſo fleſhed one againſt the other, as through all the cities of the kingdome, betweene neighbors and townſ-men, whole families did ſo bandie themſelues, that infinite cruelties, murthers, burning of houſes, and other inſolencies and impieties of ciuill warres were committed. The impriſonment of the Prince was ſo irkeſome to the Lord Lewis of Beaumont, Earle of Lerin, as he did not ceaſe by all meanes, and aſſurances that he offered, till that he had obtained his deliuerie of the King, for the which he himſelfe (ſo dearely did he loue him) gaue his owne perſon in hoſtage, and remained in priſon the ſpace of ſeuen yeares. But when the Prince was at libertie, he wanted no counſellers to animate him to a new warre: for the deſire of rule will not be bridled, eſpecially in Kings children. Leauing then the Earle of Lerin as hoſtage, hee ranne to armes, and entred the field the ſecond time, and then the factions of Beaumont and Grammont, returned euery one to his ſide, and made more cruell and barbarous warre then before, which the Realme did feele many yeares after. The end was, the Prince was againe defeated neere to Eſtella, and his people diſperſed, but hee eſcaped by the ſwiftneſſe of his horſe, and hauing reſolued neuer more to pourſue this warre, he went to Naples to the king Alphonſo his Vnkle, leauing his friends in Nauarre in great trouble and danger, where the ſeede of diſcord betwixt the two factions did encreaſe and ſpring vp diuers times afterward.

The great loue of the Earle of Lerin to the Prince Don Charles.

Arragon.

The Prince Don Charles paſſing thorow France and Italy, was euery where receiued with great honor, and namely at Rome by Pope Calixtus a Spaniard: but chiefly his vncle D. Alphonſo did feaſt and welome him, admiring his graue wiſedome and kingly qualities, anſwerable in euery point to the report that had beene made of him: and beeing deſirous to ſee him reconciled to the King Don Iohn his father, hee laboured very much therein, performing thereby all the Offices of a louing kinſman and Chriſtian Prince: for he did daily put him in mind of the duty of children towards their fathers, whereunto Princes are more bound than other men, in regard that their ſubiects do commonly faſhion themſelues after their examples: and on the other ſide, hee did write to the King D. Iohn, alledging all reaſons that might be auaylable to induce him to loue and deſire the preſence of his ſonne: but this good and vertuous king had not the meanes to accompliſh ſo holy and laudable a work, beeing preuented by death, which ſeazed on him in the new caſtle of Naples, the yeare 1458. hauing raigned two and fortie yeares and two moneths in Arragon, and foure and twenty yeares in Naples, in the 65. yeare of his age.

This Prince, after that Reneé of Aniou had retired himſelf into France the yere 1442, finding himſelfe maſter of the whole kingdome of Naples, had contention with the Venetians, in the behalfe of Philip Maria Duke of Milan, then againſt his ſonne-in-lawe Francis Sforza, who was duke of Milan, and laſt of all againſt the Venetians, Geneuois, and Florentines in league together, in which wars he alwaies maintained the reputation of

A of a great and excellent Captaine. And againe, in the yeare 1453. he had ſome likelihood of a future warre about his kingdome of Naples, againſt Reneé of Aniou, who had repaſſed the mountaines, and was come downe into Lombardy accompanied with Lewis the Daulphin of France, with two thouſand men at armes, hoping by the fauour of the duke Francis Sforza, and the Florentines to be able to re-enter into his loſt kingdome, and to driue Alphonſo out of it, but that iourney proued vaine: then the King D. Alphonſo being a king in peace, purchaſed the friendſhip of the Duke Francis Sforza, and contracting allyance with him, he cauſed D. Alphonſo, ſonne to his ſon D. Fernand of Arragon, duke of Calabria, to marry with Hippolita Maria daughter to the Duke Sforza: and hee did be-

B troth D. Leonora, daughter to his ſon Fernand, to Sforza Maria ſon to the ſame Duke Sforza, notwithſtanding that his ſecond mariage took no effect, for D. Leonora was afterwards married to Hercules de Eſté, the ſecond Duke of Ferrara. The king D. Alphonſo being in league and friendſhip with the moſt part of the Potentates of Italy, Pope Calixtus a Spaniard borne in Xatiua, his ſubiect, and one that had beene of his councell, did euer carry a particular hatred againſt him, the which hee declared by the anſwer which hee made to the kings Ambaſſadors at Rome, at ſuch time as they came to congratulate his aſſumption to the papall dignity: for they asking him in their maſters name, how they ſhould carry themſelues one toward another: the Pope ſayd; Let him gouerne his kingdome, and let me alone with my Popedome. And he did more openly manifeſt it after

C the death of D. Alphonſo: for he did as much as in him lay, to miniſter all hinderances to D. Fernand his ſon and ſucceſſor in the kingdome of Naples, diſputing with him about his right therein, ſaying, that D. Alphonſo his father could not appoint a king in the kingdome of Naples, which held of the Church, and that it was in the Popes power to inueſt therein whome he pleaſed: and the king D. Fernand could neuer haue other remedie of him, who afterward was confirmed and eſtabliſhed by Pope Pius his ſucceſſor. Now D. Alphonſo had beene abſent halfe the time of his raigne out of his kingdome of Arragon, leauing his wife D. Maria of Caſtile Gouernor in his Realmes and Dominions in Spain, a vertuous and chaſt Princeſſe, aſſiſted by his brother D. Iohn of Nauarre. By this Lady he had no children, and he parted from her the ſecond time in great anger, by reaſon of

D her iealouſie wherewith ſhe was greatly poſſeſſed, the which made her to commit an act inhumane, cruell, and in no ſort royall: for ſhee vnderſtanding that the king her husband made loue to one of her Ladies, named D. Margaret of Ixar, ſhe cauſed her one night to be ſtrangled in her bed, beeing with child in the citie of Valencia, the king beeing at that time for his pleaſure abroad on hunting, which was a ſpeciall cauſe that hee cared neuer after to liue with her. By other wiues he had D. Fernand. who ſucceeded him in the kingdome of Naples, D. Maria of Arragon married to the Marquis of Ferrara, D. Leonora of Arragon, Princeſſe of Roſſano wife to Martin Marzan. At his death hee left for heire in his kingdomes of Arragon, Valencia, Sardynia, Majorca, Minorca, and Sicill, his brother the King D. Iohn of Nauarre.

Ingratitude of Pope Calixtus.

A cruell act.

Genealogie of Arragon.

E The gifts and qualities of this Prince comprehended in few words, although they deſerue a great volume, were theſe: concerning the bodie, he was of meane ſtature, actiue and well proportioned, of colour ſomewhat pale, quicke-ſighted, and gracious, he had a hawke noſe, a ſigne of an haughtie nature: hee was briefe and ſuccinct in his ſpeech, but neate and eloquent, ſweet and amiable in his anſwers, and oftentimes quicke and pleaſant: few kings had their minds more diſpoſed to goodneſſe then he: the Religion according to thoſe times, and the ceremonies belonging thereunto hee had in ſingular recommendation, ſo that it is reported of him, that beeing on a time at Maſſe, by meanes of a great Earth-quake the church wherein he was, was ſo ſhaken, as the people fearing to be ſlaine by the fall thereof, fledde out at the doores, hee onely remayned vnmooued

F and feareleſſe. And ſeeing the prieſt which ſung Maſſe readie to runne away for companie, hee ſtayed him and enforced him to make an end of his ſeruice. He was liberall to all men, and magnificent in gifts, eſpecially to Princes and their Ambaſſadours: Hee was a louer of iuſtice, and yet neuertheleſſe mercifull, full of commiſeration, and ſlow to condemne any man to death, the which he could temper ſo well, as his clemencie profited, and redounded to the benefite of diuers: yet offenders were puniſhed and corrected, in ſuch

ſuch ſort, as his Realmes were neuer ſince his time ſo well gouerned, and cleanſed from A all manner of violence and outrage. When hee had ouercome his enemies, hee did alwaies ſhew himſelfe meeke and gentle, hee tooke delight in all excellent things, vſing alwaies great modeſtie therein: hee was ſumptuous in mooueables, in gold and ſiluer plate, iewels, and other ornaments of rare eſteeme, except about his owne royall perſon, which was euer apparelled according to the common vſe and faſhion of his Gentlemen, not delighting in rich and coſtly ſtuffes, nor new faſhions: hee was ſtately and magnificent in martiall playes and ſhewes, which were frequent in his Court, and no leſſe in buildings, whereof the royall pallace, the bridge, and great Hoſpitall of Sarragoſſa do make mention. B

The new caſtle at Naples, brought into the forme which now it is, is a worke of his: he made the fortreſſe of the Egge habitable and commodious: hee cauſed the marſhes about the cittie to be dryed vp: hee builded ſhippes of no meane greatneſſe, which ſeemed like caſtles vppon the ſea, he entertayned a great number of huntſmen: but his chief delight and pleaſure was in hawking. And beeing a warlike Prince, hee made two enter-priſes into Barbarie, the one to Zerba, anciently called the Iſle of the Lotophages, the which he tooke, and defeated in battell Butifer king of Tunis, who came to driue him thence with aboue an hundred thouſand Moores: the other againſt the towne properly called Affrica, the ſituation whereof hee very well viewed, hauing a purpoſe to returne thither, where he burned all the ſhippes and veſſels that he found in the hauen: when hee C was at peace in the kingdome of Naples, he gaue ayde and ſuccour to the Deſpotto of Acarnania aſſayled by the Turkes, and to Scanderbeg Prince of Albania warring vpon the ſame nation, where his ſouldiers gaue ſufficient proofe of braue warriours, which did greatly redound to the Kings honour. A man would ſcarce beleeue what honour and reſpect he did beare to learning and learned men, beeing oftentimes wont to ſay, That a King without learning, was like a crowned Aſſe, the which ſentence he had read in the preface before the Spaniſh Tranſlation of Saint Auſtens booke Of the Cittie of God, and therefore he employed part of his time in the ſtudy of letters, although he were of good yeares before he beganne: and he did neuer neglect the reading of Bookes, nor his conference and diſputations with learned men, how great affaires of State or warre ſoeuer D hee had.

Learning and learned men beloued of king Don Alphonſo. Sentence of D. Alphonſo.

Beeing well ſtricken in yeares, hee euer had in his company an old Grammarian called Maſter Martin, with whome hee delighted greatly to diſcourſe both abroade and at home, and he did ſo profit at his ſtudie, that hee did tranſlate Seneca's Epiſtles, a worke very hard, intreating of morall Philoſophie, into the Spaniſh tongue: hee tooke ſuch pleaſure in reading the holy Scriptures, as hee would often vaunt, that he had read the old and new Teſtament fourteene times ouer. To ſhew the ſingular affection hee did beare to learning and learned men, hee gaue for his Deuice in armorie an open booke, and hee would ſay, that Bookes were Princes beſt Councellors, with proteſtation, that he had receiued beſt counſell of the dead, meaning of his bookes. E

In the deuaſtations and ſpoyles of Cities during his warres, hee reſerued for his part of the ſpoyle, bookes, which were carefully ſought for and brought vnto him, hee would reade with great delight Titus Liuius, and Cæſars Commentaries, ſo that beſides the ſundry reparations of Schooles and Auditories, where hee aſſigned penſions to the Doctors, Regents, and ſchollers, his Court was daily frequented with the learneſt men of his time, to wit, Bartholomew Facio, George of Trebiçonde, Laurentius Valla, John Auriſ-pa, Antonio of Palermo, and others. Hee did honour the great Captaines and worthie men in the Art militarie, of what nation ſoeuer they were, likewiſe Grauers, Architects, excellent Enginers, skilfull Marriners, and generally any man of worth and deſert in what art or ſcience ſoeuer: ſo that hee left behind him the eternall and euer-during me- F morie of a Prince truly vertuous, valiant, bountifull, and eſteeming vertue as it rightly deſerued.

Learned men welcome to K. Alphonſos Court.

Now King Don Alphonſo beeing dead, and his ſonne Don Fernand beeing in trouble at his firſt comming to the Crowne, diuers cities, and ſome great Lords of the kingdome of Naples, did mooue and ſtirre vp the Prince Don Charles of Nauarre to take

to

A to himſelfe the ſame Crowne which they offered vnto him: but he made them ſuch an anſwer, as they perceiued thereby, that he had learned to be modeſt, to follow equity and right, and not raſhly to caſt himſelfe into another mans poſſeſſion. And for that hee would not giue any euill ſuſpition of himſelfe, hee went into Sicill, a Kingdome fallen by the death of Don Alphonſo to the King his father, with thoſe of Arragon, Sardynia, Majorca, Minorca, Valencia, and the Principalitie of Cattelogne, in the which by right belonging to the eldeſt ſonnes of the Kings of Arragon, hee obtayned in eſſe the principalitie of Girona, and the right of ſucceſſion in all theſe Kingdomes afterwards: He remained and continued a while in Sicill, greatly honoured and beloued of the Sicillians, during which time he was amorouſly familiar with a very fayre and beautifull Gentlewo-

Hee had alſo a daughter named Donna Anne of Nauarre and Arragon, who was Dutcheſſe of Medina Celi, and wife to Don Lewis de la Cerde: but it is vncertaine whether ſhee was borne of this mother. Genealogie of Nauarre and Arragon.

Therefore the King Don Henry was aduiſed to go thither in perſon; the which he did, and there by the aduice of his Councell, and vppon information made of thoſe troubles and outrages, he razed and ouerthrew diuers towers, and ſtrong houſes belonging to the chiefe of the Factions, which ſerued for places of retreat and harbour for murtherers and euill-diſpoſed perſons, who committed infinite inſolencies and outrages in the Countrey. In which number were the tower of Olaço in the iuriſdiction and confines of Elgoiuar, the houſe of Leſcano, the houſe of Inigo de Saldibia in the Cittie of Tholouſa, that of Fernand D'Aſtagarriuia in the towne of Guettaria, and others in the Countrey of Anduayn, in the towne of Vergara, and elſe-where, as well in Guipuſcoa, as in Biſ-

D cay, in which iourney hee tooke into his ſeruice in the Cittie of Durango, the ſonne of an Inne-keeper, named Perucho of Munſaras, who afterward became a man of great repute and eſtimation. Strong houſes in Biſcay and Guipuſcoa ouerthrowne.

So ſoone as hee came to Victoria, hee called before him out of euery towne of Biſcay and Guipuſcoa, two or three men deputed, with whome hee intreated about the gouernement and iuriſdiction of the ſame countrey, hee confirmed diuers and ſundrie Liberties and Priuiledges graunted by the Kings his Predeceſſours, and left there for Gouernour and Commaunder Iohn Hurtado of Mendoça, one of his priuie Councell. Notwithſtanding all theſe demoliſhments, with that of the ſtrong and inexpugnable Caſtle of Montdragon, the murthers, theſts, deuaſtations, factions, and rebellions in

E Biſcay and Guipuſcoa did continue, countries in all times infamous, becauſe of theſe matters, vntill the raigne of the King Don Fernand the fifth, and Queene Izabell, who rooted out the factions of Gamboines and Ognazines: by meanes whereof iuſtice began to take place there.

At the Kings departure from Victoria, hee came by great iourneyes to Cordoua, hauing a great deſire to the warres of Granado, into the which Kingdome he made a furi- 9 Moores.

ous entrie, finding often reſiſtance by the Moores who kept his armie cloſe, not ſuffering them to ſtraggle, who vpon a day did ſurprize certaine Caſtillan troupes, where amongſt other of note, Garcilaço de la Vega, a valiant Knight, and welbeloued of the king,

F was ſlaine: by reaſon whereof he commanded, that all the vines, oliue trees, and all other kind of trees bearing fruite throughout the whole territorie of Granado ſhould bee cut downe. He beſeeged and tooke the towne and ſtrong caſtle of Ximena, and did ſuch hurt, that King Iſmael was conſtrained, not being able to reſiſt, to begge a truce, and to ſubmit himſelfe to ſuch tribute, taxation, and other conditions as ſhould beſt pleaſe him. Truce between Granado and Caſtile.

It was then agred vpon that the Moore King ſhould pay to King Henry twelue thouſand doublons of gold for tribute, and ſhould become his vaſſaill: that hee ſhould giue him yearely during the time of the truce ſixe hundred Chriſtian priſoners, and where they were wanting as many ſlaue-Moores to bee deliuered at Cordoua at a day appoynted: And that the warre ſhould continew open on the ſide of Iaen: In regard of which things, and the preſent payment of the firſt yeares tribute, the Chriſtian army diſlodged out of the territories of Granado. The King returned to Cordoua leauing the Earle of Caſtagneda for Gouernor of the frontiers of Iaen, with two thouſand lances, & diſcharged the reſidew of his army. Albeit he vſed great dilligence in theſe warres againſt the Moores, yet it was not of ſo great importance as the wars made by his predeceſſors, whether it were through the Kings negligence, who was ſoone weary of buſineſſe, or through any other occaſion, ſo as he began to fal into the contempt of his owne people. The Earle of Caſtagneda left vpon the frontiers, to repreſſe the inuaſion of the Moores, was a Lord as careleſſe and negligent as his maiſter, and there-withall couetous, by reaſon whereof, within a while he found him-ſelfe very meanely accompanied which the Moores vnderſtanding they laid a ſtrong ambuſh for him, into the which they craftily drew him, hauing ſent ſome to forrage the fields, who beeing purſued by the Earle, hee perceaued him-ſelfe, to bee hem'd in on euery ſide, and ſo with great loſſe of his people he himſelfe was taken priſoner, whereof the King beeing aduertiſed ſent in his place another Captayne called Michael Lucas de Françu, with commiſſion and charge to change the truce, made with King Iſmaell, into a peace, prouided the payment of the tribut-mony agreed vpon by the truce, the which did greatly pleaſe the Moore King: and ſo ended the warres of Granado, the Earle of Caſtagneda beeing redeemed with a great ſumme of mony.

A ſword bleſſed by the Pope on Chriſtmas Euen.

Pope Calixtus taking pleaſure in theſe warres againſt the Moores, did about that time ſend to the King Don Henry a Hatte and a Sword, which they vſe to bleſſe vpon Chriſtmas Eaue, at night, laying them vpon the Altar where they ſay Maſſe, which they terme the Maſſe of the Cocke: and hee did write vnto him, exhorting and annimating him to purſue ſo holy a warre. About this time died D. Alfonſo of Carthagena, Biſhoppe of Burgos a Prelat highly eſteemed of the Spaniards, who wrote an Hiſtory of Spaine intitled Anacephaleoſis with other workes.

The King contemned by his ſubiects.

Now the ſmall eſtimation of the King was manifeſt ouer all Spaine and came vnto his owne eares, which made him become ſuſpitious, and hee began againſt his nature to diſtruſt the great ones, to counterpoſe whome, hee aduanced diuers of his ſeruants of baſe and meane degree to great honours, and authority. Hee made Gomes de Caceres and Solis, Maiſter of Alcantara, and gaue the Citty of Coria to a brother of his: he made Bertrand de la Cueua, Sonne to Diego de la Cueua of Vbeda, great Maiſter of his houſe and Viſcount of Huelma, who hauing beene his page, and carried his lance, became one ſo greatly in his fauour, as no man ſo much. The office of Conſtable was giuen to Michael Lucas of Erançu borne in Beaumont, a meane gentleman, and with that the towne of Agreda, the Caſtles of Verato and Voſmedian, with the Captaineſhip of Iaen, the towne of Andujar, with other rents and poſſeſſions: and to one of his brothers the commandery of Montizon, and that of Orjea to another; which are the beſt places belonging to the order of Saint Iames: he gaue the Priory of Saint Iohn, to Iohn de Valençuela, the Biſhoppe-ricke of Iaen to Alfonſo de Peleas, and that of Auila to Martin de Vilches, euery one of theſe places to bee ſurendred ſo ſoone as they ſhould be voyde.

Giſts giuen by King Henry the ſorth.

The Marques of Santillana Don Inigo lopes de Mendoza being dead, who was alſo Count de Real de Mançanares, his Sonne Don Diego Hurtado was confirmed by the King in his Fathers dignities, but hee was compelled to come and ſtay at the Court, and to bring thether his brethren, Don Pedro Gonçales de Mendoza, Biſhoppe of Calaorra, who was ſince the Arch-Biſhoppe of Toledo, and Cardinall. Don Inigo Lopes de Mendoza, Don Lorenzo Suares, Don Iohn Hurtado, who hauing kiſſed the kings hand, were with the Marquis commaunded not to ſtirre from the Court.

Beeing

A Beeing at Madrid the yeare, one thouſand, foure hundred, fifty eight, where hee celebrated with great coſt and royall magnificence, the Funerals of the King Don Alphonſo of Arragon, dead at Naples, hee committed an act in the behalfe of the Marquis of Villena, ſcarce well digeſted. This Marquis in regard of the affaires and gouernement of the kingdom had the ſame power, and almoſt equall boldneſſe which the Conſtable Aluaro de Luna had in the time of the King Don Iohn, and hee would let nothing fall to ground which was profitable or commodious for him or his: Now hee had a great deſire to make a marriage betweene his eldeſt ſonne Don Diego Lopes de Pacheco with the Counteſſe of Saint Steephen de Gormas, daughter and heire to Don Iohn de Luna, and Grand- An. 1458.

B child to the Conſtable Don Aluaro, who at that time was in the gouernement of an vncle of his named alſo Don Iohn de Luna, Nephew to the Conſtable, who was Captaine of Soria, and the Marquis did not onely practiſe the marriage of his eldeſt ſonne with his Neece, but alſo to diſpoſſeſſe him of his Captaineſhip of Soria, with other lands which he held: For the obtayning whereof, hee cauſed the King to haue him in ſuſpition, ſaying, That hee was one of the conſpiratours which were ioyned in league and confederacie againſt his ſeruice. Violent marriage of the Counteſſe of S. Stephen de Gormas, and D. Diego Lopes Pacheco.

The King did eaſily and willingly beleeue this report made by the Marquis, and feigning to ride on hunting, hee came to Aillon where Don Iohn de Luna kept his reſidence, who did receiue and feaſt both him and his trayne very ſumptuouſly, and with great

C magnificence, who riding amongſt the reſt of the companie, hee was no ſooner entred into the fields, but he was arreſted as priſoner, without knowing any cauſe or reaſon thereof. In the end hee was enioyned to diſpoſſeſſe himſelfe of Soria, and other fortreſſes and places of ſtrength, and to receiue into them ſuch garriſons as ſhould pleaſe the king: whereunto hee muſt needes obey, on paine of looſing his head, ſo as hee did not onely yeeld vp Soria, but all that which did belong to the Counteſſe his Neece, and her perſon alſo: and ſo the Marquis had that which he deſired.

The contempt of this Prince encreaſing daily, Don Alphonſo Faiardo, the chiefeſt Knight of Murcia, holding a long time Carthagena, Lorca, and other places againſt the Kings will, and theſe that ruled and gouerned him, had likewiſe in a manner taken to

D himſelfe by force, the Maſter-ſhippe of Saint Iames, and the Marquiſate of Villena, committing many outrages and inſolencies vppon the lands and reuenues belonging to the King and Marquis, beeing ayded and releeued ſometimes by the Moores of Granado. Againſt him Gonçalo de Sahauedra was ſent with ſixe hundred horſe, by whoſe care and diligence, Don Alphonſo loſt all that which he held of his owne and other mens, and ſo became a poore and miſerable Knight, hauing nothing left him but onely his ſword and his cloake, accounting and eſteeming it for a great fauour and extraordinarie kindneſſe to haue his life ſaued. Don Alphonſo Faiardo, a contumelious rebel chaſtiſed.

This man had his deſerts, and the King continued in his careleſneſſe, ſo as he was no more feared. Aboue all the townes of his Kingdome, the abode at Segobia and Ma-

E drid pleaſed him beſt, becauſe hee louing hunting better then affaires of conſequence, this Countrey beeing woody was very fit for it, as alſo abounding in victuals and prouiſion for his Court, which was very great: for he did daily carrie about with him, a guard of horſe-men to the number of three thouſand and ſixe hundred Lances, with an incredible expence, wherewith his reuenues was charged to the vttermoſt; the which his chiefe Treaſurer Don Diego Arias, like an honeſt and faithfull ſeruant, put him in mind of on a time, beſeeching him to cut of ſo ſuperfluous an expence: you ſpeake (quoth he) like Diego Arias, but I will liue like a King, and that was all the anſwer hee could receiue. By his bountie and liberalitie he was well ſerued and attended on by diuers, and in thoſe dayes thoſe of his Councell, Chancerie, and Iudges, did diſcharge their duties very ſuf- The Kings Guard burthenſome and ſuperfluous. An anſwer of K. Henry ſauouring of ſmall iudgement.

F ficiently. In Arcualo one of his Secretaries named Pedro de Tieda was put to death, and others of his complices, for counterfeiting the Kings letters, and ſelling them for great ſummes of money. Beeing in the cittie of Leon, hee cauſed certaine Gentlemen to bee brought out of Gallicia which had diſpoſſeſſed a Knight of his houſe, hauing commanded their proceſſe to be made, they were there for the ſame put to death. Such iuſt executions were ſometimes done, but he did greatly faile in other matters.

At the end of the yeare 1458. Queene Ioane made hir magnificent and royall entrie into the Cittie of Leon: then they came to keepe Chriſtmaſſe at Eſcalona, where the Kings chiefe delight and recreation was in hunting, and ſinging in the Church, where he himſelfe in his owne chappell would beare a part, which in thoſe dayes was the beſt furniſhed with cunning and experienced Muſitians of any one particular place in the whole world.

Portugal. The ſame yeare Don Alphonſo King of Portugall led his armie into Affricke, where he tooke the towne of Alcaçar, diſtant ſixe miles from Ceuta, his Vncle Don Henry, and his brother Don Fernand Duke of Viſeo accompanying him in that expedition. Alcaçar was taken by meanes of certaine honeſt conditions, and Don Edward de Meneſes baſtard ſonne to Don Pedro de Meneſes, Earle of Viana, who ſucceeded his father in the Earledome, was left there as Gouernour. After the kings returne into Portugall, the Moores did indeauour, but in vaine, to recouer the place: for the repayring and fortifying whereof, the King cauſed a great quantitie of ground, betweene the towne and the ſea, to be encloſed with a great and ſtrong wall, defended and guarded with towers, the ſtone, lime, and other prouiſions neceſſarie for ſuch a worke of worth, was by him brought from Portugall.

Caſtile. An. 1459. The yeare 1459. the King Don Henry of Caſtile, ſent Don Inigo Lopes de Mendoça, ſonne to Don Inigo, and brother to the Marquis of Santillana, Ambaſſadour to the Councell held at Mantua by Pope Pius the ſecond, before times called Æneas Syluius Picolomini, who had newly ſucceeded Calixtus the third. There with great deliberation and hope, the warres againſt the Turkes was debated, which in the end came to nothing, and Don Inigo returned into Caſtile, carrying home onely a Iubile of full remiſſion of ſinnes, the collections whereof were ſo great and ineſtimable, as hee therewith builded and erected the Monaſterie of Saint Anne de la Pegna, in his towne of Tendilla, of the Order of Saint Ierome. The King beeing returned to Madrid, entertayned himſelfe there a long time with feaſts, playes, and ſhewes, where the Arch-biſhop of Seuill Don Alphonſo de Fonſeca, hauing feaſted the King, Queene, and the Ladies, among other ſingularities, there was ſerued in after dinner for the banquet, two plates filled with rings of gold, ſet with rich and pretious ſtones for the Ladies, amongſt whom Donna Guiomar was held, next the Queene, to be the fayreſt and moſt beautifull Ladie of Spaine without compare: to her the king ſhewed many amorous fauours at this feaſt, which the Queene perceiuing, grew very iealous, and euer after vſed the Ladie vnkindly and rigorouſly, by reaſon whereof the King ſhewed himſelfe ſtrange to her, and appoynted her a Court and trayne apart, not ſuffering her to come neere his Court by two leagues: Whereunto the Arch-biſhop of Seuille, who was well ſeene and experienced in ſuch buſineſſes, did willingly employ his beſt endeauours in the behalfe of Guiomar: for whatſoeuer the king did, was but fayned and imaginarie ſhewes, who was ſo farre from beeing offended and diſpleaſed with his friends in ſuch affaires, as hee was content to ſpare them his owne wife: for the common rumor was, that not beeing able to endure that men ſhould eſteeme him vnapt for venereall acts, which he reputed a great and ignominious diſgrace, hee dealt with the Queene his wife to receiue Don Bertrand de la Cueua into her bed, (his baſe and degenerate mind deſiring and conſenting that this Knight ſhould lye with her, to the end ſhee might prooue with child by him, and ſo by that meanes ſuppoſe an heire to the kingdome in his owne name, though vnlawfully begotten by another.)

12. The loues and vanities of D. Henry the vnable king of Caſtile.

Baſeneſſe of K. Henry the vnable.

It was credibly reported, that at the firſt the Queene would by no poſſible meanes bee drawne to agree and giue her conſent to ſo vile, deteſtable, and diſhonorable a deede, but yet afterwards, ſhee had more neede to haue beene curbed in with raines and bridle, then of ſpurres. Now Don Bertrand de la Cueua, was a gallant and moſt accompliſhed Knight in all points belonging to an excellent Courtier, and ſo eſteemed and beloued of the King, as for his ſake, becauſe he ſo valiantly, and with ſuch an vndaunted courage, defended a paſſage at the arriuall of an Ambaſſadour of Brittayne: hee builded a Monaſterie on the high way from Madrid to Pard, which for him was named, the Monaſterie of Pas.

The

A The King the better to couer his owne naturall weakneſſe, made ſhew of loue to diuers Gentlewomen in ſundry places: for before he made loue to Ladie Guiomar, he had profeſſed himſelfe ſeruant to another Ladie, named Catherina de Sandouall, whom he had oftentimes entertained priuatly, but ſhe not contented with his vaine embraces, and beeing deſirous to furniſh her ſelfe with a more able Knight, ſhee grew familiarly acquainted with a young Gentleman named Alphonſo de Cordoua, whom ſhe kept companie with a long time ſecretly, which turned to his deſtruction: for the King hauing notice thereof, commanded Alphonſo to be beheaded at Medina del campo. In this ſort did this King behaue himſelfe in his moſt priuate affaires, giuing occaſion to all men to ſpeake euill and vncharitably of him, which beeing reported vnto him, hee entred into diſtruſt
B and hatred againſt the great perſons of his realme, and oftentimes for ſleight occaſions he would rayſe great troubles.

And not beeing pleaſed, that Don Diego Hurtado de Mendoça Marquis of Santillana ſhould hold the cittie of Guadalajara, where hee did not onely commaund the towne and caſtle, as Gouernour both in matters of State and warre, but alſo had authoritie and preheminence to beſtow publike Offices, hee cauſed him to bee taken by the Commander Iohn Fernandes Galindo, who entred into the towne with ſixe hundred men at armes, by meanes of intelligence that he had with one of the Marquis his Captaines, called Alphonſo de Gaona, who was corrupted with money, and the Marquis was compelled to leaue that Gouernement to the Kings diſpoſe, hauing giuen him no iuſt nor
C lawfull cauſe of offence or iniurie, and ſo hee retired and with-drew himſelfe to Hita. Soone after, the King and the Queene came thither, and left Alphonſo de Gaona Gouernour there.

Don Iohn the ſecond of that name, and the eighteenth King of Arragon.

D WHileſt theſe affaires continued in Caſtile, the King Don Iohn of Nauarre tooke quiet poſſeſſion of the kingdome of Arragon, fallen vnto him by the death of his brother: vnto whome came Ambaſſadours from the Prince Don Charles his ſonne, to beſeech him that all faults paſt might be forgotten, and that it might pleaſe him to receiue him into grace and fauour: the which requeſt the father eaſily graunted, for he was very kind and gentle to his children, but eſpecially to the Prince Don Charles, who beeing daily ſollicited by thoſe of the faction of Beaumont, who continued and maintayned the warres in certaine forts and ſtrong holds in Nauarre, not beeing able without him to bring their buſineſſe to effect, hee deſired to returne into Spayne, either
E to helpe them to make their peace, or to defend them by force of armes. 13 Nauarre, and Arragon.

Hauing then had a pleaſing anſwer from the King his father, hee departed that yeare 1459. from Sicill, beeing accompanied with a great number of Sicillian Lords and Gentlemen, and landed at Barcelona, where beeing welcommed and receiued with great pompe, magnificence, and honour, by the Barcelonois, hee dealt ſo wiſely, that for his ſake the King pardoned thoſe of Beaumont, and declared that his pleaſure was, that all former matters of what kind ſoeuer, ſhould be buried in perpetuall obliuion: thoſe of Cattelogna beeing ſureties for the ſonnes faith and obedience to his father, and for the fathers loue and good-will to his ſonne. Agreement betweene the King D. Iohn of Arragon, & his ſonne Don Charles.

This reconciliation beeing made to the great ioy and contentment of the whole kingdom, the King D. Iohn knowing himſelf to be a mightie Prince, thought vpon fit and conuenient meanes how to recouer his lands which were confiſcate in Caſtile: for the effecting whereof, hee entred into league and confederacie with Don Alphonſo King of Portugall, and agreed vppon a marriage betweene the Prince his ſonne, and the Ladie Catherine of Portugall, ſiſter to King Alphonſo, and to Donna Ioane Queene of Caſtile: into the which league entred Don Alphonſo Carillo, Arch-biſhop of Toledo, New deſſeignes to trouble Caſtil.

the Admirall Don Frederic father-in-law to King Iohn, Don Pedro Giron Maſter of Calatraua, and all the Manriques of Caſtile, with others: whereof when the king of Caſtile Don Henry had notice, by the aduertiſement of D. Alphonſo de Fonſeca, Arch-biſhop of Seuill, he was aduiſed by his councell, to ſend the biſhop of Cité Rodrigo, and Diego de Ribera Ambaſſadours into Arragon, vnder pretence of congratulating in his name the welcome-home of Prince Charles, and his reconcilement with the king his father: but they had commiſſion to deale vnder-hand ſecretly with Prince Charles, to offer him all friendſhip, and to treate of a marriage betweene him, and Donna Izabella of Caſtile, the Kings ſiſter. A

The Ambaſſadours hauing cunningly executed their commiſſion, poſſeſſed the mind of Prince Charles with new thoughts, and made him hope to bee able by meanes of his marriage with Caſtile, and friendſhip that he ſhould gaine thereby, to obtaine his kingdome of Nauarre. Therefore hee did forſake the Infanta of Portugall, who for griefe thereof retired her ſelfe into the Nunnerie of S. Clare at Lisbone, where ſhee ſpent her time in Virginity, dying ſoone after, when as ſhee was betrothed to Edward the fourth, King of England. Alſo this other marriage came to no effect, by reaſon of the ſhortnes of Prince Charles his life, God hauing ordayned that Princeſſe to be wife to his younger brother. B

The deſire of rule an vntamed fury.

Prince Charles vppon hope of ayde from Caſtile, began againe to encourage thoſe of the faction of Beaumont, and to ſollicite certaine of Cattelogna to begin new troubles in Nauarre and Arragon: for the mind of man beeing once bewitched with the deſire of rule, cannot be contained in any bounds. In theſe times the Cardinall Beſſarion a learned man, a Greeke by nation, was perpetuall adminiſtrator of the church of Pampelona, by the death of the Biſhop of D. Martin of Peralta. C

14. Caſtille.

The King Don Henry of Caſtile, hauing with wiſe councell and diſcretion broken the league of Portugall, determined to perſecute thoſe of his kingdome which had any hand therein. And becauſe hee was aſſured, that the Maſter of Calatraua was of the number, hee ſhewed very bad countenance to his brother the Marquis of Villena, but hee was ſo wiſe and cunning, as he ſoone excuſed himſelfe to the King, and wiped out of his mind all ſuſpition conceiued againſt him. That was the occaſion why the two brethren, the Marquis, and the Maſter of Calatraua did conceiue ſuch mortal hatred againſt the Arch-biſhop of Seuile, who about that time obtained for a nephew of his named alſo Alphonſo Fonſeca, Deane of Seuile, the Arch-biſhoppricke of Saint Iames: but vnderſtanding that Don Lewis Oſorio, ſonne to the Earle of Tranſtamara, had intruded himſelfe into the ſame, with the fauour and ſupport of the whole Countrie of Galicia, he made a feigned bargaine with his Nephew, and reſigned to him the Arch-biſhoppricke of Seuile, taking that of Saint Iames for himſelfe, with this condition, that matters beeing pacified, they would each of them returne to their former dignities: for the vncle thought that by meanes of his great credite and authoritie hee ſhould be beſt able to deale with Don Lewis Oſorio. D E 1460. An importunate manner of reforming Nunnes in caſtile.

The yeare 1460. the King Don Henry did expell the Abbeſſe of Saint Peter de las Duegnas out of Toledo, named Donna Marqueſada de Guzman, a Ladie of a religious and holy life, ſaying, That he did it to reforme the Nunnes of that place, who had the report to liue diſſolutely, and he gaue them for their Abbeſſe and Gouerneſſe, the Ladie Catherine de Sandouall his quondam Miſtris, wherewith the Arch-biſhop and the whole Clergie beeing offended, the houſe was interdicted, and diuers of the Clergie degraded and baniſhed, but the King made an end of the matter.

15 Nauarre, and Arragon. The K. of Nauar & Arragō aduertiſed of all the enterpriſes of Prince Charles.

This yeare running on, king Iohn of Nauarre and Arragon did aſſemble the Eſtates of the principalitie of Cattelogna at Lerida, and aſſigned thoſe of Arragon to meete at Fraga. At the aſſembly at Lerida, the Prince Don Charles arriued, where whileſt they conſulted of the affaires, a Gentleman named Iohn Carillo, preſented letters of credit to the King, from the Admirall of Caſtile Don Frederic his father-in-law, and he was by him aduertiſed of all that which had paſſed betweene the Prince his ſonne, and the king Don Henry: adding thereunto, that thoſe of the faction of Beaumont, incited and ſtirred vp by the Prince Don Charles, did prepare to armes, and addreſſe themſelues F

A for the warres, vnto whom the Cattelans ioyned themſelues, the which did greatly trouble the King who hauing had therevpon the aduice of his moſt priuate and faithfull councellors, he cauſed the Prince to be called into a Chamber a part, and there hauing declared vnto him what he knew of his dealings and practiſes, he did ſharply reprehend him, ſaying, that he thought that he had begotten a fury, who did torment and trouble his Kingdomes, falling ſo often into rebellion, and abuſing his fatherly pitty and meekeneſſe, but that now the time was come, wherein it behooued him to vſe fit remedies to repreſſe his madneſſe, and to puniſh him in ſuch ſort, as the vnhappy example of a father, liuing in continuall feare and ſuſpition of his ſonnes treacheries, ſhould now ceaſe in his family: wherevnto the Prince would haue replied, but he could not bee heard; and by

B the appointment of the King his father, being areſted, he was condemned to cloſe priſon in the caſtle of Mirauet: Neuertheleſſe at the earneſt requeſt of diuers great Lords, vnto whom it ſeemed ouer rigorous, hee was committed vnder ſure keeping to a more eaſie priſon in the Aljaferia of the city of Saragoſſa, to the great diſcontentment of the Realmes of Nauarre and Arragon, and likewiſe of the King of Caſtile, who being in the towne of Madrid was ſoone after aduertiſed of the durance of Prince Charles. With him was likewiſe impriſoned Don Iohn of Beaumont, brother to the Conſtable Don Lewis.

Impriſonment of Prince Charles.

The Cattelans who were ſureties for the reconcilement made betweene the father and the ſonne at Barcelona, hearing thoſe newes, ſent ſpeedily fifteene men of great

C authority in Ambaſſage to the King, to know of him the reaſon of the Princes captiuity, becauſe it ſeemed to them that the King therein had infringed the aſſurance which they had giuen for him, and that his promiſe was to intreat him louingly like a father. Hauing heard by the King that it was for conſpiracy and intelligences with his enemies, againſt his Eſtate and perſon, being the third time that he had fallne into open rebellion, they vſed many praiers and intreaties for the behoofe and deliuery of the Prince: but ſeeing it to be in vaine, they returned with the Kings anſwere to them that ſent them. Then the Cattelans being very much mooued, added to theſe fifteene Ambaſſadors, three ſcore more, and ſent them backe to Lerida to the King, vnto whom the Abbot of Ager (being chiefe) hauing ſhewed with great liberty how grieuouſly the Cattelans did

D take the impriſonment of his ſonne the Prince of Viana and Girone, who expected to haue beene well and kindely intreated by him, vpon the promiſes and ſurety which they had giuen for him, and did hope thereby to haue beene ſufficiently defended againſt the ſlanderous and malitious attempts of his Aduerſaries, chiefly of the Admirall D. Frederic, who openly and by all meanes did labour to extirpe the eldeſt ſonne and lawfull heire of the Realmes of Nauarre, Arragon and other Dominions annexed to the ſame crowne, to the end to raiſe and aduance to thoſe dignities his daughters children againſt all right and piety, and he proteſted that the whole ſtate of the principallity of Cattalogna would imploy their goods, liues, meanes, and friends (which he knew to be very great

E in that Prouince) to defend Prince Charles from wrong, and to deliuer him from ſo vniuſt a captiuity: wherefore he beſought him to conſider thereof with a fatherly affection, and at their requeſts to ſet him at liberty, and to heare how he could iuſtifie himſelfe, and not to truſt ſo much to his owne opinion in affaires of ſo great importance onely to pleaſe the Queene his wife and her father, and to preuent by wiſe and good councell the great troubles and miſeries which might thereby enſue. To this rough diſcourſe, full of threats, the King anſwered with great grauity and moderation, concluding, that hee knew how to doe Iuſtice, and that hee was not determined to giue ouer his purpoſe in puniſhing his rebellious ſonne, who had ſo often abuſed his clemency, for any paſſionate or importunate ſoliciting of his ſubiects.

A free remonſtrance of the Cattelans to their King.

The King of Nauarre and Arragon his anſwere to his ſubiects of Cattalogna.

F The Ambaſſadors hauing written and ſent backe this anſwere, there followed forthwith a manifeſt reuolt of the Cattelans, who hauing leauied a great company of men of warre, and obtained by their Ambaſſadors, ſent to Segobia, aide from King Henry of Caſtile, of fifteene hundred horſe, vnder the conduct of the Commander Gonçalo de Sahauedra, they aduanced their forces towards Lerida, with intent to ſeaze vpon the kings perſon, and to put to death all thoſe of his priuy councell. And for the more eaſie

execution of their enterpriſe, they had ſecret intelligence with diuerſe courtiers, the chiefe of whom were Francis de Eſpla, Gerrard Ceruillon, and Iohn Agullen: but God preſerued the King and his from ſo furious a conſpiracy, diſcouered at the inſtant when it ſhould haue beene executed, and yet ſo happily as the King had leaſure to get away thorough the gate of the preaching friers, notwithſtanding that D. Pedro d'Vrrea Archbiſhop of Tarragon, one of the Ambaſſadors of Cattalogna had councelled him not to leaue the towne of Lerida, but there to make head againſt his enemies, whoſe aduiſe was approued by all the other Lords there aſſembled. The King was no ſooner gon, but the conſpirators entred the pallace with intent to haue committed their purpoſed maſſacre, but to their great diſcontent they found it empty. The King retired himſelfe to Fraga, whether the Ambaſſadors determined to haue followed him, and to try once againe if they could induce him to forgiue his ſonne, hoping that the taſt and new beginning of the troubles, which he had ſeene, would make him more mild: but they altering their purpoſe returned home into Cattalogna. The rebels forces marched towards Fraga where the King was, who from thence went to Saragoſſa, and left them the ſpoile of that place.

In the meane time thoſe of Barcelona tooke their Gouernor D. Lewis de Requeſens priſoner, thoſe of Valencia, Arragon, Sicil and Majorca, aſſiſting them, and ioyning with them for the Princes deliuery. But aboue the reſt, the faction of Beaumont in Nauarre ſhewed themſelues violent in the purſute of their enemies of Grammont which held the Kings party, cauſing ſuch ruines and calamities in the Kingdome as can hardly be expreſſed, the mindes of the multitude of each ſide being ſo inflamed againſt their contrary faction, as they knew not vpon what termes, nor for what occaſion, they had taken arms: for if one ſhould haue demaunded of thoſe of Beaumont or Grammont, wherefore they were ſo animated one againſt the other: they could make no other anſwere, but that they did it becauſe their neighbours, friends and kinſ-folkes did the ſame. The ruines and deſolations increaſing on euery ſide King Iohn feeling himſelfe touched in conſcience, as if ſuch troubles had falne vpon him by the iudgement of God, who would haue him to taſte and ſee in his owne Kingdomes, that which he the yeeres before had cauſed the Realme of Caſtile to endure, he did therefore harken, to the admonitions which were newly made to him by diuerſe wiſe men, namely by a Charterhouſe Monke of the Monaſtery of Scala Dei in Cattalogna, held at that time for a Prophet, whoſe name is ſuppreſt or forgotten by the Authors, and through their perſwation he did reſolue to ſet the Prince at liberty, and to giue him to the Cattelans who did ſo earneſtly deſire it: He was then taken from the Aljaferia of Saragoſſa by his mother in law Queene Ioane, who by the commandement of the King went with him into Cattalogna, and in the City of Villa-franca deliuered him vnto them: The common and conſtant report was, that from the time the Prince came forth of priſon, hee neuer had one daies health, but his life did daily conſume and decay, and diuerſe did impute the cauſe thereof to Queene Ioane, who (as they ſay) poyſoned him, to the end to aduance and raiſe her ſonne D. Fernand Duke of Momblancke, to the ſucceſſion of the Kingdome of Arragon and dependances of the ſame, a certaine ſtranger phyſitian being actor of ſo impious a deed, and the ſickneſſe wherewith the Queene was ſoone after afflicted, being an vlcerous canker ouer her whole body was attributed to the iuſt iudgement of God, who did puniſh her for committing ſo execrabld an act: others, reiect this accuſation as falſe, and counterfeited by thoſe of the faction of Beaumont, who notwithſtanding the Princes deliuery, continued in armes againſt thoſe of Grammont, namely in the towne of Lombier which by Charles d'Artieda, in the name of Prince Charles, was taken: againſt whom this King ſent his ſonne D. Alphonſo of Arragon Duke of Villa Hermoſa with a great number of ſouldiers, who beſeeged the towne, and ſoone after the King came thither in perſon, with thoſe of Sanqueſſa and other townes of the faction of Grammont. Charles of Artieda perceiuing himſelfe to be ouerlaied with numbers, demaunded aide of the Caſtillans, who forthwith marched thither, to meet the troupes of the Commander Gonçalo de Sahauedra, and thoſe of Rodrigo de Marchena, who raiſed the ſeege. The King D. Iohn hauing put garriſons into Pampelona, Lerin, and other places belonging to Don Charles Prince of Viana, deliuered out of priſon, but poyſoned by his ſtepmother.

Queene Ioane puniſhed by the hand of God.

A to them which he diſtruſted, came to the Eſtates at Catalajub, leauing the gouernment of Nauarre to his children D. Iohn, and Alphonſo of Arragon, fearing and foreſeeing the warre againſt Caſtile.

During theſe ſtirres in Nauarre and Arragon, the country of Andeluzia was aſſailed by Mulei Albohacen, or as ſome others termed him Hali Muley Hacen eldeſt ſonne to Iſmael King of Granado, contrary to the peace betwixt the Realmes of Caſtile and Granado, which his father King Iſmael deſired ſincerely and inuiolably to obſerue and keepe. This young Prince impatient of reſt, with fifteene thouſand footemen, and two thouſand fiue hundred horſemen came into Caſtile ouer-running and burning the country 16 Moores.

B of Eſtepa, from whence he led away many Chriſtian priſoners, and a great number of cattaile: to repreſſe whoſe ſpoile and robberies D. Roderigo Ponce of Leon, eldeſt ſonne to the Earle of Arcos, and Lewis de Pernia captaine of Oſuno, came in all haſt to Eſtepa, with about two hundred and threeſcore horſe, and ſix hundred choſen footmen onely; who being come to the riuer of las Ieguas, eſpied the Moores going vp the hils of Madrogno, who hauing diſcouered this ſmal Chriſtian troupe, they ſent out two thouſand three hundred horſe in three Squadrons to make head againſt thē, commanding the reſt of their people to goe on their iourney with the priſoners and ſpoile: the Chriſtians at the firſt were amazed at their enemies force; but being incouraged by the captaines, they marched brauely againſt them, and charged them ſo valliantly as they brake them

The Moores defeated at Madrogno.

C and put them to a ſhameſull flight, with an incredible ſlaughter: for the dead bodies being viewed, there was found ſlaine on the Moores part foureteene hundred, and of the Chriſtians onely thirty horſemen and a hundred and fifty footmen. The little victorious army of the Chriſtians hauing reſted and rallied their troupes, at the fountaine of ſtone, perceiued the herds of cattaile as they returned toward the places of their accuſtomed paſture, being forſaken by the flying Moores; the which they tooke and brought backe, with their booties and ſpoiles, which were great and rich: and ſo they returned home to their garriſons and houſes, bearing along with them in great ioy and triumph, the colours, trumpets, and drums of the Moores: for the which victory, publike & general proceſſions were made ouer al Spaine: King Iſmael on the other ſide was

D much greeued for the great loſſe of his raſh and vnexperienced ſonne: but moſt of all, for the breach of the peace betwixt him and the King of Caſtile, which was the occaſion of the totall ruine of the ſtate of the Moores in Granada, as ſhalbe hereafter declared.

D. Henry King of Caſtile did graunt this yeere to diuers valleies and places of Guipuſcoa, the rights and cuſtomes of the towne of Saint Sebaſtian of the ſame Prouince, correcting and reforming thoſe which they had of olde times, as the royall priuiledge of the yeere 1461. dated at Segobia doth teſtifie, ſigned by Garcia Mendes, ſecretary to the King. From Segouia the Court remoued to Sepulueda, where the King reſtored D. Diego Hurtado de Mendoza Marquis of Santillana, to the rights which he claimed in 17 Caſtille.

D. Diego Hurtado de Mendoza reſtored to his right in Guadalajara.

E Guadalajara, as he had enioyed them in times paſt, with this condition, that his brother D. Pedro Gonçales de Mendoza Biſhop of Calaorra, with the eldeſt ſonne of the Marquis D. Iohn de Mendoza, ſhould follow the court: which things were practized and brought to paſſe by the Archbiſhop of Siuil, D. Alphonſo de Fonſeca, and by D. Iohn de Pacheco Marquis of Villena. Theſe two were the principal perſons about the King, by whoſe councel the whole Kingdome was ruled; and yet for all that they were enemies, and extreamely iealous the one of the other, as it is ordinary among great men in court: as alſo for the reaſons, which we haue heretofore mentioned. Now the Marquis being deſirous to driue the Archbiſhop, his coriuall, from the Court, the better to manage his affaires alone, he ſolicited the King his maiſter to make warre vpon King Iohn of Nauarre and

F Arragon, ſeeming therein to agree with the Archbiſhop, who had councelled the ſame euer ſince the impriſonment of Prince Charles, which was by reaſon of the league which hee had with Caſtile. For the effecting whereof, it behoued him to take ſome aſſurance of the Admirall D. Frederic, and the Archbiſhop of Toledo, D. Alphonſo Carillo de Acugna, who remained together at Yeſpes, making ſhew to fauour the King of Nauarre and to be of that party.

The

The Marquis laboured to bring them to agreement with the King Don Henry, and did promiſe that his brother Don Pedro Giron Maiſter of Calatraua, ſhould bee ready to doe him all ſeruice; but that it did behoue him to leaue ſome one of great authority at Valiodolit, as Gouernor and Viceroy, knowing very well that this charge could be layd on none other but the Arch-Biſhoppe of Siuill. Theſe things were brought to paſſe in Aranda of Duero euen as the Marques had deuiſed and aduiſed: for the King gaue credit to whatſoeuer he ſayd, and was wholy ruled by him. About this time Don Pedro of Caſtile Biſhop of Palencia departed this mortal life, Don Guttiere de la Cueua being promoted to the ſame dignity: hee was brother to Don Bertrand de la Cueua the King and Queenes chiefe minion, who at that time prooued to be with child, to the Kings great ioy and content, albeit hee knew very well, that Don Bertrand had done the deede, he himſelfe being altogether vnable to performe ſuch an act.

The Queene of Caſtile got-ten with child by D. Bertrand de la Cueua.

Don Pedro Grion Maiſter of Calatraua arriued at Aranda with two thouſand fiue hundred horſe, which forces beeing ioyned with king Henry his great gard, made vp the liſt of a mighty army, wherewith the king marched towards Logrogno where hee aſſembled all men fit for the warres out of the Prouinces of Alaua, Biſcay, and Guipuscoa, from the age of twenty to threeſcore yeares, declaring by his ordonances and proclamations, that hee did vndertake that warre in his owne perſon in the behalfe of his welbeloued Coſin Charles Prince of Viana, the proper heire of Nauarre. The Kings forces were ſo great as the Nauarrors which held the part of the King Don Iohn, being terrefied with ſo mighty an army, did yeeld vp diuers places without any fight at all, ſpecially la Garde, Arcos, and Saint Vincent: As for Viana it was furiouſly battered and aſſayled, and as brauely defended but in the end, Don Pedro of Peralta at that time Conſtable of Nauarre, was forced to yeeld it vp to Don Gonçall de Sahauedra generall of the Kings army at that ſiege, a Nobleman very expert in the art of warre: the Conſtable being in mourning habit went out at one gate, and at another the Caſtillans entred, in which place the King appointed Don Iohn Hurtado de Mendoza to be gouernor. The Prince Don Charles remayned at that time in Barcelona, reuerenced and well entertayned by the Cattelans, who vnderſtanding the ſucceſſe of that warre of Nauarre, ſent a Gentleman of Cattalogna called Iohn Traillas to the king Don Henry, with charge to conclude the Articles of the marriage betweene him and the Infanta Donna Iſabell the kings ſiſter: the which this knight hauing effected, beeing accompanied with the Biſhop of Aſtorga, by the Kings leaue hee paſſed on to Areuallo, where the Infanta lay with Queene Iſabell her Mother, whom in the Princes name he viſited, and ſo returned: but not long after, Prince Charles languiſhing euer ſince his laſt impriſonment, dyed, not without ſuſpition of beeing poyſoned by the practiſes of his mother in lawe Queene Ioane, as hath beene already declared. The Barcelonois perceiuing the Princes end to draw on, did entreate him to marry La Cava his concubine, by whom hee had two ſonnes, Don Phillip, and Don Iohn, to the end that by the ſame marriage, they might bee ligitimated, and ſo conſequently become capable to inherite after him, the which tooke none effect. There was no manner of vowes, prayers, or pilgrimages omitted for the recouery of the Princes health, but there was no remedy, natures debt muſt bee payed, and ſo hee departed this life, to the great griefe of the Cattelans. It is reported that vpon his death bed he did confeſſe to haue greatly offended in banding himſelfe againſt his father, vnto whom hee owed his eſtate, goods, and his proper life, crauing pardon of him before ſundry witneſſes: forgiuing likewiſe all thoſe which in any ſort had offended him: he died in the fortith yeare of his age, and his body was interred in the monaſtery of Pobleta, where the ancient Kings of Arragon were wont to be buried. A litle before his death, by agreement made betwixt him and the King his father, by the meanes of Queene Ioane his ſtep-mother, hee had obtayned the gouernment, iuriſdiction and reuenew of the principality of Cattalogna reſeruing onely to the King, the title of ſoueraigne: and by the ſame agreement, were deliuered out of priſon by exchange, Don Iohn of Beaumont on the one part, and Don Lewis of Requeſens on the other. By the deceaſſe of Don Charles, the Principallity of Viana, with the right of ſucceſſion in Nauarre, returned backe againe to the Lady 18 Nauarre, The King of Caſtill makes warres vpon Nauarre.

A Lady Blanch his sister the some-time Queene of Castile, diuorced from King Henry then reigning, and his brother the Infant D. Fernand Duke of Mombланc, sonne to King Iohn by his second wife Lady Ioane became heire apparant to the crowne of Arragon.

The King D. Henry being aduertized of the Princes death, made account to keepe still the towne of Viana, and continuing the warre, he went to beleege the towne of Lerin, which place by reason of the inexpugnable scituation thereof, he could not take: wherefore he brought backe his army to Logrogno, hauing lost certaine of his troupes as they forraged the country, who were incountred and defeated by D. Alphonso of Arragon, and other captaines committed to the guard of Pampelona, and the country neere to Abbarçuça. From Logrogno the King went to Aranda of Duero, where the Castile.

B Queene lay, vnto whom he gaue that towne: there he receiued letters from D. Iohn Pacheco Marquis of Villena, by the which he certified him, that by his endeauor, the Archbishop of Toledo and the Admirall, were returned to his seruice, by reason whereof he aduised him to come backe to Madrid: to which place D. Alphonso of Fonseca, Archbishop of Siuill came, beeing weary of so long absence from the Court: but finding his entertainment to bee cold, hee returned much discontented to Valliodelit: for the King had wholy abandoned himselfe as a prey to the Marquis, at whose entreaty hee came to Ocagna, whither the Archbishop of Toledo came first and kissed his hand, bringing along with him all the Mauriques.

These being gonne backe to Yespes, the Admirall Don Frederic came likewise to

C salute the King, who receiued them all very gratiously and promised them all fauour. The Archbishop of Toledo, returned to Court to be of the Kings Councell, and it was decreed that once euery weeke vpon the Friday, the councell for Iustice should be held in his house: which was continued a while, with great hope that Iustice would florish in Spaine more then euer: but as these Courtiers, intent were not iust and pure, but onely shewes and maskes to couer their enuies and emulations, this lasted not long, and the Realme was as badly gouerned and troubled as before: the Marquis of Villena and the Archbishop of Toledo practizing nothing more, then to remoone him of Siuil.

Now the King being returned to Madrid, hee sent Roderigo of Marchena to Aranda 19

D to accompany and bring thither the Queene, to the end that she might there be deliuered of child, whither she came with a great traine, the King and the whole Court going forth to meet her, of whom she was receiued with great ioy, and loue of all those which knew not her behauiour; which continued, till by her vndiscreet and open carriage, she discouered her filthy life. The Infant Don Alphonso and the Infanta D. Isabella were likewise by the councell of the Marquis and the Archbishop brought to Court, the gouernment and bringing vp of the Infant was giuen to Diego de Riuera, and the Infanta remained in the palace in the company of the Queene, the King making great shew of brotherly loue to them, albeit that a little before, he had continually placed a gard of two hundred horse about their persons.

In the beginning of the yeere 1462. the Queene was deliuered of a daughter, with 1462.

E hard labour, betweene the armes of Don Henry Earle of Alua de Lista: the King, the Archbishop of Toledo, and the Marquis of Villena being present; for ioy of whose birth, great triumphes were made ouer all Spaine: the eight day following shee was christned in the chappel of the Kings house, by the Archbishop of Toledo, accompanied with the Bishops of Calaorra, Osma and Carthagena, and shee was called Donna Ioane by her mothers name: her Godfathers were the Earle of Armignac, Ambassador at that time in the Court of Castile for the French King Lewis the eleuenth, and the Marquis of Villena; the Godmothers were the Infanta Donna Isabel, and the Marqueſſe of Villena, the child was carried and held at the font by the same Earle of Alua de Lista, with great sure, did create him Earle of Ledesma: the office of great Maister which hee held, was giuen to Andrew of Cabrera, a young man, very wise and discreet: The new Earle was inuested and receiued into the number of the Lords of the councell, with the fauour of all men: and being a noble and bountifull Knight, he kept open Court for certaine daies with great feaſting and pompous ſhewes. The Infanta being ſcarce two moneths old, the Kings pleaſure was that ſhe ſhould be ſworne and declared Princeſſe, and inheritrix of his Realmes in the aſſembly of the generall ſtates aſſembled at Madrid for the ſame purpoſe; the Infants D. Alphonſo and Donna Iſabella his ſiſter being the firſt that did ſweare in this ſolemnity: there grew a contention at this parliament about the precedencie of the citties, who ſhould firſt ſweare: but the Kings pleaſure was that Segobia ſhould ſweare firſt before any of the reſt, without preiudice to their rights and preuiledges. The Court remained certaine months at Madrid and Segobia, the King taking great delight to hunt in thoſe wooddy countries: from thence he went to Alfaro, to treat of the affaires of Nauarre and Arragon, and hee left the Queene at Segobia three monthes gonne with child, but ſhe miſcarried ſoone after the Kings departure, being

Nauarre. and Arragon.

King Henry being at Alfaro, the Archbiſhop of Toledo, and the Admirall D. Frederic began to mediate a peace betweene the two Kings of Caſtile and Arragon: and for that purpoſe King Iohn came to Tudela, vnto whom the Marquis of Villena was ſent, the King of Caſtill hauing firſt taken D Iohn of Arragon as oſtage for him. At Tudela, diuerſe meanes were propounded for the concluſion of the peace, which taking no effect, it was thought fit that the Marquis ſhould goe with King Iohn and the Queene his wife to Saragoſſa to conſult more amply of thoſe affaires. The Marquis made ſumme ſtay there, but King Iohn had occaſion to goe in all haſt into Cattalogna; in the meane time the Queene did entertaine him very ſumptuouſly, and among other fauours, ſhe cauſed him to eate at her owne table, which as then was ſerued onely with Ladies and gentlewomen without any men at all. At the Kings returne to Saragoſſa, the peace was concluded, vpon the deliuery of oſtages and certaine places for aſſurance on each ſide, to weet La Gardo, Saint Vincent, Arcos and Larraga by the King of Arragon, and on the part of Caſtil, Lorca in the Kingdome of Murcia, and Comago in the territory of Soria. The Nauarrois were diſcontented that King Iohn ſhould giue any places of the Realme of Nauarre in pawne, rather then thoſe of the Kingdome of Arragon: but of neceſſity it behoued them to bee content therewith. The Cattelans alſo were reconciled to the King, and they did acknowledge by oth the Infant D. Fernand being then nine yeeres old, for heire and lawful ſucceſſor to the crowne of Arragon, who from thenceforth was intituled Prince of Girona.

Peace betweene Caſtile and Arragon.

Sedition in Cattalogna.

This peace, betweene King Iohn and his ſubiects laſted not long, whether it were becauſe they were certified of the Princes vntimely death whom their did ſo deerely loue, and which they deſired to reuenge, or for any other occaſion: but it fell ſo out that in the country of Roſſillon, Ampurdam and other places of Cattalogna, there aroſe great tumults and mutinies, the Earle of Pallars being chiefe of that rebellion: there was a rumor ſpred abroad, that Prince Charles his ghoſt did nightly complaine in the ſtreets of Barcelona, crauing vengeance on Queene Ioane his ſtep-mother, who by poiſon had parted his ſoule from his body.

Queene Ioane beſeeged in Girona.

The Queene to reſiſt thoſe diſorders came to Girona, where ſhe was forthwith beſeeged by the Earle of Pallars, and conſtrained, with the Prince D. Fernand her ſonne, to fortifie her ſelfe with great daunger of their liues in the tower of the Cathedral Church of the ſame city. At the ſame time the Barcelonois did driue al the Kings officers forth of their city, and as many as did loue and affect him, reſoluing neuer more to obey him, but to become ſubiects to the King of Caſtile. The Inhabitants of Girona did greatly fauour the beſeeged Queene, who vnder the conduct of Du Puy maſter of the order of Monteſa made great reſiſtance, but the Earle of Pallars entred the city by force, and did furiouſly aſſaile and batter the ſtrong tower, deſirous to take the Queene and the Prince her ſonne:

but

The King being much troubled with the reuolt of the Cattalans, and other places alſo of his Kingdomes, ſent into France, to intreate of King Lewis aide of men and money, vnto whom he engaged, for the ſumme of three hundred thouſand crownes of gold for the paiment of his ſouldiars, the Earledome of Roſſillon and Cerdagne. He obtained of him two thouſand fiue hundred horſe, amongſt whom were ſeuen hundred Launces furniſhed, of which forces, Gaſton Earle of Foix, and Lord of Bearn, ſonne in law to King Iohn was Generall. In this warre, which was long and troubleſome, diuers

B Knights of the faction of Grammont did good ſeruice to the King, the chiefe of whom were Don Peter de Peralta, Conſtable of Nauarre, Sanches of Londogno ſonne to the Marſhall of Nauarre, Fernand of Angulo Stephen of Garro, Roderigo of Puelles, the Viſcount Bertrand of Armendaris, Iohn Henriques of Lacarra, and Gyles de Aualos, Iames Diaz of Armendaris Lord of Cadreita, Pedro of Anſa, Iohn of Aquerri, and Sancho of Erbiti ſurnamed the obſtinate, who did beare for his motto or deuiſe, So, or no: glorying in that he was contentious: by reaſon whereof, this Knight had in his time many quarrels to maintaine. The comming of the French, cauſed the Earle of Pallars to raiſe his ſeege from before Girona. So the Queene beeing freed, ioyned with the army of the Earle of Foix, and purſued the Rebelles, cauſing diuerſe of them to craue pardon.

C The King hauing leauied men at armes, ſent them vnder the commaund of his ſonne Don Alphonſo of Arragon to ioyne likewiſe with the Earle of Foix his forces: hee himſelfe following after, ſtaied a while in the City of Bellaguer to appeaſe the tumultuary Inhabitants, into the which towne he entred in armes, and there receiued newes of the yeelding vp of Tarraga, whether he forthwith went, but ſoone after he was conſtrained to diſlodge from thence, being aduertized that Don Iohn de Agullon with certaine Regiments came thitherward to ſurpriſe him, and ſo he returned to Bellaguer. And by a decree of the three Eſtates of the country, they ſent an Ambaſſage to the King of Caſtile, to the end they might be receiued, maintained and defended, by him againſt the power of King Iohn.

The Ambaſſador was a Gentleman very learned, named Copus, who in diſguiſed habit paſt into Caſtile, and found the King Don Henry at Atiença, who came thither to recreate himſelfe, after the marriage made by him of the youngeſt daughter of the Marquis of Santillana, with his Minion. Bertrand de la Cueua Earle of Ledeſma and one

E of his priuy councell. The Ambaſſador ſpake with the King, and declared vnto him the cauſe of his comming, which was to giue him notice of the title which hee had to the principallity of Cattalogna as alſo to the crowne of Arragon, the which was much better then King Iohns, becauſe hee was iſſued from the eldeſt ſonne of Donna Leonora of Arragon, Queene of Caſtile, whereas King Iohn and his brother King Alphonſo, came of the yonger ſonne, and that he had now a fit occaſion offered him for the recouery thereof, by the meanes of the Cattelans, iuſtly prouoked by the wrongs and tirannies of the King D. Iohn. The King hauing heard theſe things, referred the Ambaſſador to his councel at Segobia, whither he ſhortly came, and propounding there in the open aſſembly of the great Lords, and of his councel, that which the Ambaſſador of Cattalogna had decla-

F red vnto him, their opinions were diuers. In the end the Ambaſſador was called, and being asked wherefore he came, hee told them that hee was ſent to requeſt two things, to weet, that it might pleaſe the King of Caſtile to receiue the Cattelans for his ſubiects, and to aide them with certaine number of ſouldiers to defend them from their enemies, ſhewing the charge and commandment which he had from the three Eſtates to take the oth of obedience to him in their names.

Nauarre. Thither came an Eſquier of Nauarre dwelling in Tudela, who told Don Bertrand de la Cueua, Earle of Ledeſma, that if King Henry would well reward him, he would deliuer vp into his hands the city of Tudela: promiſe was made to this Squire of certaine lands neere to Agreda, and according to the agreement made, at an houre appointed, Pedro de Guzman was ſent, with twenty braue ſouldiars to ſeize vpon one of the gates, B and by the ſame to let into the towne a certaine number of ſouldiars which ſhould follow after him. Pedro de Guzman and his men were no ſooner entred into the city, but they were all taken, whereat King Henry being greatly mooued, ſent his troupes to ſpoile all the contry round about Tuleda, with commandement to burne all places, and to put the people to the ſword: but this ſpoile ſoone ceaſſed by reaſon that they of Tudela deliuered the priſoners.

The King Don Iohn beeing aduertized of all theſe things, fortified himſelfe on euery ſide, and had in readineſſe an army ſufficient to aſſaile the rebells, with their allies and protectors, Don Iohn Archbiſhop of Tarragon the Earle of Prades, Don Mathew de Moncada, Don Anthony of Cardona, Don Guillen Arnau Ceruillon and ma- C ny other Cattelan Knights beeing ioyned with him. Therevpon hee came and beſeeged Lerida, which they of Tarraga endeauoring to releeue, they were defeated by Don Iohn of Arragon, who was ſent by the King his father to incounter them, who led away diuerſe priſoners with him to the campe: Neuertheleſſe the King raiſed his ſeege from before Lerida, beeing aduertiſed that a captaine called Martimon came to the aide thereof with tenne thouſand ſouldiars; and that in an other place Iohn de Agullon was in field with forces, for the ſame purpoſe, and that Don Hugo of Cardona held his ſeege before Miralcampe, a ſtrong towne and greatly importing the affaires of Arragon, wherefore with all ſpeed hee haſted thitherward, but Don Hugo was departed from thence, not beeing able, by reaſon of the great heate in thoſe parts, to continue D his ſeege: then the King ioyned his forces with the troupes of Don Alphonſo his ſonne, who held Iohn d' Agullon beſeeged in Caſteldas: thither alſo came the Earle of Foix with the French men at armes. By theſe forces the towne and caſtle of Caſteldas were ſo beaten, as Iohn d' Agullon was conſtrained, for all his propounding of diuers conditions, to yeeld himſelf to the Kings mercy, who cauſed him, with other captaines, to be executed by forme of law at Bellaguer: and he committed the towne to the keeping of D. Iohn de Londogno.

21 Complot betweene King Iohn and his ſonne in law Gaſton de Foix to the hurt and ruine of Lady Blanch the true heire of Nauarre.

Gaſton Earle of Foix had married Donna Leonora the ſecond danghter to King Iohn, by his firſt wife Queene Blanche of Nauarre; and becauſe the ſucceſſion in that King- E dome, by the death of Prince Charles did belong to Donna Blanche her eldeſt ſiſter, who was married and diuorced from Henry King of Caſtile, becauſe ſhee had no children, the father in law, and the ſonne in law practiſed together, how they might keepe this forſaken Queene of Caſtile from marrying any more, that ſhee might haue no children, by meanes whereof the Realme of Nauarre ſhould fall to the Lady Donna Leonora and to the houſe of Foix: wherefore ſhe was deliuered into the hands of Earle Gaſton her brother in law, who ſent her into France to the towne of Leſcar, vnder the power and keeping of the Counteſſe Leonora her ſiſter.

Among the captaines which did ſerue the King Don Iohn, there was a Caſtillian called Iohn of Sarauia, who did greatly annoy the enemy, who found a time to ſurpriſe him: for vpon a day as hee ſpoiled and ouer-runne the country neere to Ceruera, hee F was charged by Hugo of Cardona, accompanied with about foure thouſand men as well horſe as foote, ſo as hee was conſtrained to leaue his booty, and to aſſure himſelfe in the caſtle of Rubinate, where hee was furiouſly beſeeged and beaten with ſtore of Artillery and Engins: hee fearing to bee forced to yeeld vp the caſtle, found meanes to aduertiſe the King of his neceſſity, who came thither with all his forces:

A by reaſon whereof Don Hugo hauing left fiue hundred of his people at the ſeege of this caſtile, retired himſelfe to a ſtrong hold; from whence euery day he offered the King battaile, beeing come to fight the victory remained for a while doubtfull on either ſide, but at the laſt it fell to the King: there died as well in this incounter, as in the skirmiſhes of the ſeege, more then fifteene hundred of the enemies, and very neere as many on the Kings part: ſo as hee had ſmall occaſion to reckon this victory in the number of his happy ones. From thence the Kings army marched to the aide of the Archbiſhop of Tarragon whom thoſe of Lerida and Ceruera held beſeeged in a place very diſcommodious, who freed him from thence. In an other place Don Alphonſo of Arragon obtained a great victory neere vnto the towne of Saint Colomba, with whom the Kings
B army ioyning, that place yeelded: beſides this the towne of Ceriall was taken by force, and all the country thereabout whileſt the Queene and the Earle of Foix in an other place, tooke the towne of Moncada by aſſault, with many other places which for feare yeelded vnto them.

A bloudy fight betwixt the Kings army, and that of D. Hugo de Cardona.

Whileſt the affaires of King Iohn ſucceeded well in Cattalogna, the King of Caſtile made open warres vpon the frontiers of Granada, ſince the defeate of the Infant Haly Muly-Hacen, wherein Don Iohn de Guzman the firſt Duke of Medina Sidonia, ſonne to Count Henry of Niebla, who was drowned before Gibralter, made excellent proofe of his valor and good conduct, and he had the good hap to ſubiect the city of Gibral-
C tar to the crowne of Caſtile, which his father had attempted in vaine. The newes of this conqueſt were ſo pleaſing to King Henry as amongeſt his other titles hee would bee called King of Gibraltar: for this city had beene the chiefe in the Kingdome of Abomelech the Infant of Marocco, ſonne to King Alboacen of the kindred of the Merins. This happie exploite was accompanied with the taking of the City of Archedona by the Maiſter of Calatraua Don Pedro Giron, brother to the Marquis of Villena. The keeping of Gibraltar was committed for that time to Pedro de Porras.

Gibraltar taken by the Caſtilians.

About this time diuers Princes and Potentates ſent their Ambaſſadors to the King of Caſtile, namely from his coſin King Fernand of Naples, from Pope Pius and the Colledge of Cardinals, and from the Venetians, who deſired his perpetuall friendſhip and confederacy. The Geneuois offered him fealty and homage, and withall to be-D come his ſubiects: but King Henry contenting himſelfe with his owne eſtates, not being by nature ambitious, did not deſire to meddle in thoſe forraine buſineſſes, albeit there wanted not diuers of his councell to animate him therevnto.

Caſtile.

King Iohn hauing, at Moncada, ioyned his army with that of the Queene his wife, and his ſonne in law the Earle of Foix, the councell thought it fit to ſend to beſeege the City of Barcelona, and it was ſo concluded, notwithſtanding that the King was of a contrary opinion. The Barcelonois had receiued the aboue mentioned aide from Caſtile, and reſoluing neuer more to obey the King of Arragon, they had ſet vp the ban-E ners of Caſtile: the citty was very rich, and greatly furniſhed with men and munition, very ſtrong in their walles and towers, and excellently wel prouided of al things belonging to the ſea, by reaſon whereof they made ſundry ſallies and skirmiſhes with the Kings army, to the great loſſe and hinderance thereof as well by land as by ſea: and namely they gaue chaſe to captaine Vilago, who kept the ſea from them with eight Gallies of Arragon: ſo as the King thought it the beſt way to raiſe his ſeege, after that hee had beene before it by the ſpace of twenty daies, cauſing his ſonne Don Alphonſo of Arragon to ſpoile the country round about the citty. From thence the army marched to Villa-franca, which was taken by force: and there the King cauſed to be executed by order of law foure hundred of the Inhabitants; beeing prouoked therevnto by the death of two French captaines which were ſlaine at his entery into the towne, which be-
F came ſuch a terror to the reſt of the townes thereabouts, as diuerſe yeelded, without any reſiſtance at all.

Nauarre. and Arragon.

Barcelona erecteth the banners of Caſtile.

They beſeeged the city of Tarragon, which at the firſt made reſiſtance yet neuer ſallied forth of their wals: but when they beheld their fields burnt, and the continual battery and aſſaults of the enemies, their courage began to ſhrinke, eſpecially when the aide, which was ſent them from Barcelona, was at their landing conſtrained to flie backe to their

Gallies, then with very eaſie conditions they yeelded to the King, who left Roderigo of Rebolledo for their Gouernor, he himſelfe going backe to Ballaguer. A

The Cattelans thus diſtreſſed, ſent new Ambaſſadors into Caſtile, one of them was the Archdeacon of Girona, who being ioyned to the Ambaſſador reſident with King Henry, made new offers of ſubmiſſion and full obedience vnto him, beſeeching him to intitule himſelfe King of Arragon and Earle of Barcelona, ſeeing that hee was aſſured that thoſe dominions did by all diuine and humaine right belong vnto him, and that now the voluntary conſent of the people did inuite him therevnto, requeſting moreouer aide of ſouldiars. The King of Caſtile, beſide this publique Ambaſſage, was ſolicited therevnto by ſundry Lords, and other cities of Valencia and Arragon; and B to ſpeake truely, hee did greatly incline to their demaunds: but the Archbiſhop of Toledo and the Marquis of Villena, the Kings chiefe councellors, after whoſe appetite the whole affaires of the Kingdome were gouerned, were of a contrary opinion, and peraduenture they had intelligence with King Iohn of Arragon, but it was not certainely knowne whether it were ſo or no; wherefore the buſineſſe beeing debated on by the councell, the Ambaſſadors receiued this anſwere, that if they ment to haue any aide of ſouldiars, it did then behoue them to bring ſtore of money with them, and as for the title to the crowne of Arragon, and county of Barcelona, King Henry would conſider thereon with more mature deliberation.

The Ambaſſadors replied, that if it would pleaſe the King to take their cauſe in hand, C and to ſhew himſelfe openly in their defence as his ſubiects, they would venture their heads, if within threeſcore daies after, they did not bring into the Kings coffers the ſumme of ſeuen hundred thouſand florins of gold. This ſeemed a dreame to the Archbiſhop and the Marquis, for the ſumme was exceeding great for thoſe times; and they two hauing an other purpoſe, wrought ſo well, as king Henry not onely refuſed their offers, but withdrew himſelfe wholy from the warre of Arragon: giuing them to vnderſtand, that he had rather with the helpe of the French King, mediate a good peace for them.

The King of Caſtile attempts to deceiue the Barcelonois, and king Iohn likewiſe.

Now the Marquis and the Archbiſhop did purpoſe, and hope to deale in ſuch ſort, as the Realme of Nauarre, or a great part thereof, ſhould by the treaty of peace fall D to the crowne of Caſtile: To giue a certaine forme wherevnto, they ſent word to King Iohn and to the Earle of Foix, to ſend vnto them certaine French captaines, of thoſe which were in Cattalogna, to conferre about meanes of agreement with the King of Caſtile; and they vſed other practizes to giue the French a diſtaſt of that warre, ſeeking their owne profit, vnder collour of making an agreement betweene the King of Arragon and his ſubiects: whileſt the broiles continued in Cattalogna, the Earle of Pallars, and the Lord of Cruillas, with a great number of ſouldiars, hauing againe beſeeged Girona, were ouerthrowne and put to flight by Peter of Roquabertin Gouernor of the City, and they loſt many of their people with their baggage. The French marching towards Morella, brought diuers places on the coaſt of Vrgel vnder the Kings obedi- E ence, but meeting neere Ixar with the Caſtillians, hauing good meanes to charge them, it is ſaid that they gaue them to vnderſtand, that in regard of the friendſhip and perpetuall confederacy betweene the Kings of France and Caſtile, they would couch their Launces againſt the Caſtillian ſtandard, and thereof they excuſed themſelues to the King of Arragon, ſaying that they were ſo commaunded to doe, and therefore beſought him to take in good part, if they went about to appeaſe the differences betwixt them.

The French refuſed to fight with the Caſtillians

The King of Arragon faſhioning himſelfe to their aduice, and hauing great hope in the good iudgement of the French king in thoſe buſineſſes, hee did conſent that one of the French captaines ſhould paſſe into Caſtile to the towne of Mountagu, where F king Henry ſhould meete to conferre with him about fit meanes to compoſe all thoſe differences: the Archbiſhop of Toledo, and the Marquis of Villena brought the king thither vnder collour of hunting: and it was agreed vpon, that the French king ſhould be entreated, to ſend an Ambaſſador into Caſtile, to cauſe the warre to ceaſe. The captaine being returned, related to the king of Arragon and to his ſonne in law the Earle

A Earle of Foix, what hee had concluded with the King of Caſtile: and at their entreaty the French King Lewis the eleuenth, ſent an Ambaſſadour to the King of Caſtile, who found the Court at Almaçan; and hauing had audience, a day was taken for the enterview of the three Kings of France, Caſtile, and Arragon, vpon the frontiers betweene Fontarabie, and Saint Iohn de Luz: and in the meane time there was a ceſſation from armes on all ſides; the Cattelans were excluded from this accord remayning doubtfull betwixt hope and feare, attending the iſſue of that enterview.

The King Don Iohn allowing all theſe things, came to Saragoſſa, with intent to meet at the day appointed for the Kings enterview. The Earle of Foix, the preſumptiue heire of Nauarre in the right of his wife went thither, being very honourably receiued, B eſpecially of the Beaumonts faction.

Now the time of the enterview being come, the King of Arragon, for diuers reaſons, could not, or would not appeare, relying in the Archbiſhop of Toledo, and the Marquis of Villena, with the King of Caſtile, and vpon his ſonne in law Gaſton of Foix, who knew very well how to maintaine his honour and to increaſe his profit with the French King. About the end of March in the yeere 1463. the King Don Henry arriued at Saint Sebaſtians in the Prouince of Guipuſcoa, and king Lewis came the ſame time to Bayonne, vnto whom were ſent as Ambaſſadours from the king of Caſtile, the Archbiſhop of Toledo and the Marquis of Villena, with Aluar Gomes of Ciudad-reall
C his principall ſecretary (they hauing ſo councelled him) to the end to treate with him about the agreement and pacification of the troubles betweene the kings of Caſtile and Arragon, the vncle and Nephew, and betweene the king of Arragon and the Cattelans his ſubiects. It is reported, that the Marquis of Villena made an agreement with the French king, being by him recompenced with a yeerely pention of twelue thouſand crownes.

The Marquis of Villena, becommeth pentionar to the King.

Matters beeing then thus handled by them, king Lewis as Iudge and arbitrator betweene both parties, ſet downe his ſentence in this manner: That King Henry of Caſtile ſhould wholy abſtaine from medling in the buſineſſe of the Cattellans; that within twenty daies hee ſhould call all his ſouldiars out of Cattalonia and that for the D expences which hee had beene at in the ſame warre the King of Arragon ſhould giue vnto him the towne of Eſtella with all the demaines belonging therevnto, which is one of the fiue members of the Kingdome of Nauarre, with a certaine ſumme of doublons of gold, all which he ſhould be bound to performe within ſixe monthes, in which meane time, Queene Ioane of Arragon ſhould bee held as oſtage in the towne of Larraga vnder the ſafe keeping of the Archbiſhop of Toledo: That the Cattelans ſhould become obedient to their King, vnto whom a generall pardon ſhould bee graunted of all that was paſt; for aſſurance whereof King Iohn ſhould giue them ſufficient oſtages. This ſentence, hurtfull to the Kingdome of Nauarre, odious to the Cattelans, and little to the King of Caſtiles honour, was allowed of and receiued by the three
E Ambaſſadors aboue named, who wrote to King Henry, aduiſing him to ſet forward with his Court and traine to Fontaraby, and at that inſtant the Marquis of Villena arriued, bringing along with him the Earle of Comminges Admirall of France, who came from the King his Maiſter to entreate the King of Caſtile that they might ſee one an other vpon French ground; the which they had before concluded vpon at Bayonne.

King Lewis beeing come to Saint Iohn de Luz, the two Kings met at the riuer of Vidaſo, which in that place parteth both the Kingdomes: the which riuer (as the Spaniards ſay) which all that which the flowing of the ſea couers, belongs to Spaine. King Henry with diuerſe great Lords and Knights beeing in diuerſe boates did paſſe
F the riuer, amongſt whom were Don Pero Gonçales of Mendoza Biſhop of Calaorra, Don Iohn de Pacheco Marquis of Villena, Don Gomes of Caceres Maiſter of Alcantara, Don Iohn of Valençuela Prior of Saint Iohns, Don Lewis de Acugna Biſhop of Burgos, Don Bertrand de la Cueua Earle of Ledeſma, with others verie brauely and richlie appointed: The French King and his Courtiers beeing meanly cloathed, were by the Spaniards derided and ſcorned. louingly ſaluted and imbraſed one an other vpon the ſhoare, with diuerſe kinde ſpeeches and ceremonies vſuall at ſuch times; King Henry ſpeaking firſt, they went to a village called Endaya belonging to the French King, where in the preſence of the two Kings, the arbitratiue ſentence was read by the ſecretary Aluar Gomes, the Ambaſſadors being preſent: and after ſundry complements, and friendly ſpeeches, they departed the one from the other with great content, and ſo returned each of them into his owne territories. The Castelans complaine of the ſentence and treachery of the king of Caſtile.

King Henry being come to Fontaraby called the Ambaſſadors of Cattalonia into his preſence, who had followed him in that iourney, and declared vnto them the contents of the ſentence, and that which they were bound to doe by the ſame, whereat they were much amazed and diſcontented; ſo that being ouer-come with impatience, by reaſon of the indignity which they thought was offered them, they vttered in choller many proude and high words, preſaging miſery and future calamity to the Realme of Caſtile, accuſing the King of careleſſeneſſe, for conſenting to the ſame ſentence, and his councellors and Ambaſſadors of treaſon. According to this ſentence, the King withdrew his ſouldiars from Cattalonia, and did wholy giue ouer the warre. B

A Iew collecter to the kings reuenues ſlaine in Guipuſcoa by the nobility.

Whileſt the King remained at Fontaraby, it happened that a certaine Iew named Gaon, who was a farmer of his reuenues, comming from the towne of Victoria where he dwelt, to exact, by reaſon of the kings preſence, the tribute called Pedido, in the Prouince of Guipuſcoa (which was euer denied and reſiſted by the nobility of the country) was ſlaine in the city of Tolouſe, the gentlemen being mooued to commit ſuch an outrage, to the end it might ſerue as an example to other exacting receiuers, not to attempt vpon their antient liberties and priuiledges: whereat the king was greatly offended ſo as after the enterview, he came to Tolouſe with diuers men at armes being reſolued ſeuerely to puniſh ſuch an act: the Inhabitants being very fearefull, left the city and retired themſelues into the mountaines giuing place to their Princes fury, who at his firſt arriuall into the towne, commanded that the houſe wherein the Iew was murthered, ſhould be ouerthrowne to the ground: but proceeding on, hee was fully and certainely informed, that the tribute, then in queſtion, was a thing not due, not neuer paied by the gentlemen of that country, ſo as hee conuerted his wrath into clemency, and gaue a generalll pardon to them all, decreeing, after the example of the Kings his predeceſſors, that from thence forth on account ſhould bee made of ſuch like money; and hee did for euer acquit his receiuers, treaſurers and exactors of his reuenues, of any ſuch receipt. 24. Nauarre, and Arragon.

Hauing ordered the affaires of that Prouince, he went to Segobia and the Archbiſhop of Toledo came to Larraga, a towne in the Kingdome of Nauarre, there to receiue the Queene Donna Ioane, who, according to the ſentence of King Lewis, was to remaine in his keeping, till the King of Arragon her husband had fully performed all that which by the ſame hee was bound vnto. The Eſtates of Nauarre were much diſpleaſed with the alienating of the towne of Eſtella, it being a portion of the Kingdome: but they knew not the drift thereof, for none of the parties did gaine ſo much by the ſentence, as the king of Arragon, who held himſelfe aſſured of the King of Caſtile, by meanes of the good offices which the Archbiſhop of Toledo and the Marquis of Villena performed for him, they being wholy at his deuotion: in ſo much as hee tooke no great thought for the committing of the Queene his wife into their hands. As for Eſtella, he neuer ment to giue it to the King of Caſtile, and the better to couer his intent, he cauſed the whole body of the Eſtates to proteſt againſt that ſentence, as giuen by an incompetent Iudge, the parties beeing not heard, and directly preiudiciall to the patrimony of the crowne of Nauarre: Therevpon Don Pedro of Peralta, who was Conſtable of Nauarre, ſeized vpon the towne and caſtle of Eſtella, as though it had rebelled againſt the King: then the king of Caſtile beganne to bee very highly diſpleaſed with his counceil, and in ſome ſort to diſcouer their practizes, greatly repenting that hee had forſaken the Cattelans. The Archbiſhop of Toledo and the Marquis of Villena hauing had experience of his choller, thought for to redreſſe all by giuing the king and the Archdeacon of Girona (who was one of E F

B imbra, being deſcended by the mothers ſide from the kings of Arragon, for his mother was daughter to Iames Earle of Vrgell, and to Donna Leonora of Arragon, daughter to King Peter of Arragon the fourth of that name.

Don Pedro of Portugal elected king of Arragon.

Deſcent of Portugal.

The Marquis of Villena on the other ſide, acquainted King Henry with the reuolt of thoſe of Eſtella, and with the difficulties which hindred the execution of the ſentence, propounding other recompences to be made, rather then to fall out vppon ſo ſlight an occaſion: the which the king did not very well taſte, yet for all that beeing deſirous to play with leaſt loſſe, hee ſent into Nauarre Don Bertrand de la Cueua, Earle of Ledeſma, and Don Pedro Gonçales of Mendoza Biſhop of Calaorra, who afterward was Cardinal, and Arch biſhoppe of Toledo, to deale with King Iohn, and the Queene his wife about
C theſe matters, who excuſed themſelues by reaſon of their ſubiects rebellion, which (as they ſayd) was the cauſe why they could not performe that which they had purpoſed: they diſcouering theſe diſſimulations, aduertiſed King Henry thereof, who aduiſed them to negotiate as well as they could; who after diuers conferences returned without doing any thing at all, diſpoſing the King of Caſtile to a truce, which ſoone after was effected.

The King of Caſtile beeing at Madrid, an obſeruant Friar named Fernand de la Place, with other of his zealous companions, did greatly trouble him and his Councell, by gi-
D uing foorth, that diuerſe Chriſtians of his countrey were become Apoſtata's, forſaking the holy Catholicke faith, and were become Iewes: whereof if hee would make diligent ſearch, the crime would bee auerred. And this audacious Monke did conſtantly affirme in one of his Sermons, that hee had in his keeping more then an hundred fore-skins of Chriſtians children, which had beene circumciſed, crying out, that the king ought to puniſh them very grieuouſly: the King cauſed him to bee brought into his preſence, and commaunded that he ſhould deliuer vp thoſe fore skinnes: the Friar ſayd that hee had them not but that he was ſo informed by diuers of good name and place, the king willed him to tell their names, the which he could not, or would not doe, and ſo was diſmiſſed without any other puniſhment, then to be held a notorious lyar.

26 Caſtile.

The Arch-biſhop of Toledo Don Alphonſo Carillo of Acugna, and the Marquis of Villena, beeing returned from Nauarre, where they had left Queen Ioane at libertie, per-
E ceyuing that the King did finally fauor them, beganne to fore-ſee ſome future miſchiefe to light vpon their ſtates, honor, and perſons: to preuent which, they entred into leagues, which the king vnderſtanding, did diſſemble, committing in the meane time the gouernement of his affaires to Don Bertrand de la Cueua, and to the Biſhop of Calaorra, whoſe Neece Don Bertrand had married. The Court beeing at Seuille was very much troubled with a popular tumult, occaſioned by two Prelates, namely, the old Arch-biſh. of the ſame cittie Don Alphonſo of Fonſeca, and his nephew, who had made betwixt them a fained exchange of the Arch biſhoprickes of Seuill and S. Iames, for the reaſons before mentioned, the nephew beeing at that time in poſſeſſion of that of Seuill, the F which he ought to haue yeelded vp to his vncle, who had cauſed him peaceably to enioy that of S. Iames, till then held by D. Lewis Oſorio and his faction: Now Alphonſo of Fonſeca hauing brought all matters to the paſſe which he promiſed, thought to re-enter into his former dignitie of Arch-biſhop of Seuill: but the nephew, who found himſelf well at eaſe, would by no meanes leaue it, albeit that the Pope vpon paine of Excommunication had enioyned him ſo to do, ſo as thereupon aroſe a very dangerous ſedition, each of them hauing his partakers amongſt the Nobility, Clergie, and the common people, the the vulgar ſort in generall held with the Nephew, and had ſeazed vpon the great church and other ſtrong places of the cittie, holding it againſt the Gentlemen, and the Clergie, who fauoured the old Arch-biſhoppe, and the raſcall multitude had well-neere gained the hauen with the Galleys that lay there, intending to fight both by ſea and land, had not the King ſpeedily preuented it, who hauing made inquirie of the matter, apprehended ſundry of the Rebells, who were ſeuerely puniſhed: the Nephew Arch-biſhop was committed to priſon in his owne houſe, and within ſixe dayes after, the old Arch-biſhop was reſtored to his former Sea, and diuers of the offenders were hanged out at the windowes of their owne houſes, and ſome others ſent to receiue puniſhment at Madrid. An other outrage was there committed at the ſame time, which did incite and ſtirre vp diuers againſt the king: for his Court beeing greatly frequented with Noblemen Moores, whome he did highly fauour, one of them named Moſarras, (who did lodge in the houſe of an honourable Cittizen called Diego Sanches of Orihuela) was ſo farre tranſported with a libidinous appetite, as his hoſt and hoſteſſe beeing abſent, hee rauiſhed and carried away with him into Granado a very beautifull daughter of theirs, keeping her with him ſo long as he pleaſed. The ſorrowfull father and mother at their returne home finding their houſe diſfurniſhed of their beſt ornament, accompanied with diuers of the beſt Cittizens, went to make their complaynt to the king, who told them that the fault was their owne, in leauing their daughter behind them, and ſo put them off with this impertinent anſwer: whereunto the parties grieued did reply, crauing iuſtice, but the King beeing diſpleaſed with their importunate exclamations, commaunded that they ſhould be thruſt out of his gates, ſet vppon aſſes, and publikely whipped vppe and downe the Cittie: this vniuſt ſentence ſhould haue beene executed, had not the Earle D. Gonçal of Guzman, gone to the King and asked him, what reaſon the Officer ſhould giue to the multitude for the whipping of thoſe innocent people: then the King finding his owne errour, was aſhamed thereof, and went into his chamber, making him no anſwer at all, the Moores fault remayning vnpuniſhed, to the great ſcandall not onely of that Cittie, but of the whole kingdome.

Not long after, the King made a iourney to Gibraltar, newly conquered and ſacked, where he gaue another proofe and teſtimonie of a mind little fauouring of equitie, for he tooke away the gouernement thereof from Pedro de Porras, whome hee had placed there at the requeſt of the Duke of Medina Sidonia, who had taken the ſame cittie, and did giue and appropriate it to Don Bertrand de la Cuena, Earle of Ledeſma, who placed there for Gouernour Stephano de Villacreces, who had married an Aunt of his: the which the Duke tooke very impatiently, and ſo it continued all the time of the troubles of the kingdome, vntill he had brought it againe vnder his owne power and iuriſdiction, and ioyned it to the other poſſeſſions belonging to the houſe of Medina Sidonia, who hath alwaies enioyed it, till the entire conqueſt of the kingdome of Granado: at which time it was for euer annexed to the Crowne.

The ſame time the King Don Alphonſo of Portugall making warre vppon the Moores of Affricke, came from Ceuta to Gibraltar at the intreatie and perſwaſion of King Henry, where theſe two Princes remayned and continued together the ſpace of eight dayes, eating at one table, and ſhewing great tokens of loue and brotherly friendſhippe one to the other.

28 Portugal.

This yeare 1463. the Infant Don Henry of the houſe of Portugall, the kings Vncle, Maſter of the Order commonly called of Chriſt, of the age of three-ſcore and ſeuen yeares, dyed in the cittie of Sagres in Algarbe, who was buried in the Church of Lagos, and afterwards tranſlated and carried away from thence to the Abbey of Battayle, built by his father king Iohn the firſt, and they report in Portugall, that this Prince dyed a virgine: he out-liued all his breethren that were legitimate, to wit, Don Iohn Maſter of Saint Iames, Don Fernand Maſter of Auiz, and Don Pedro Duke of Coimbra: their elder baſtard-brother Don Alphonſo Duke of Bragança dyed alſo not long before, leauing behind him for his ſucceſſours in the Dutchie, his ſonnes Don Fernand, Earle of Arrojolos, and the Marquis of Villa-vicioſa, who was (by lawfull ſucceſſion, and by the right of inheritance) the ſecond Duke of Bragança, begotten on Donna Beatrix, daughter Houſe of Braganſa.

A daughter to Don Nugno Aluares Pereyra Earle of Barcellos, and firſt Conſtable of Portugall: Now the loſſe of theſe great perſonages was very grieuous to the King Don Alphonſo, who at that time by reaſon of his warres againſt the Moores, had great need of their helpe and Councell: hee had conducted a great army into Affricke againſt the citty of Tanger, beeing followed by all the Nobility of Portugall, namely, by his brother the Infant Don Fernand Duke of Viſeo, his brother-in-law Don Pedro the third Conſtable of Portugall, ſonne to the Infant Don Pedro, Duke of Coimbra aboue-mentioned, D. Edward de Meneſes Earle of Viana, Don Gonçal Coutin the firſt Earle of Marialua, the Earle of Villa-reall, and other great Lords: but Don Pedro the third, Conſtable of Portugall, was at that time ſollicited by the Cattelans to name himſelfe King of Arragon, for
B the reaſons heretofore declared, who conſented thereunto, and went with the Ambaſſadors of Cattalonia to the cittie of Barcelona, where he was proclaymed King of Arragon, and Earle of Barcelona, vnto whom the Eſtates were ſworne: but hee had to deale with a boyſterous aduerſarie, paſſing ouer his dayes in difficult warres, and finiſhing them by poyſon (as it was thought) as ſhall be hereafter more at large declared. After the departure of the Conſtable Don Pedro, the King Don Alphonſo came to Gibraltar, and in his abſence his people receiued an ouerthrow as they went about to ſcale the towne of Tanger, where diuers men of worth were ſlaine and taken. Among the priſoners were the Earle of Marialua, and Gomes Freyra, who were afterward redeemed for great ranſomes.

Expedition into Affricke against the citty of Tanger.

C After his returne from Gibraltar into Affricke, hee entred in perſon into Penaca, a mountainous and woddie countrie, from whence hee was conſtrayned to retire to his great loſſe, where he left behind him D. Edward de Meneſes Earle of Viana, who to ſaue the kings life being in great danger, loſt his own. The Earle of Villa-reall did at that time, by his valour, ſaue the army, fighting brauely in the rere-ward, defending it againſt an infinite multitude of Moores: inſomuch as the king beeing deſirous to acknowledge his proweſſe, did publikely prayſe him, and gaue him the honor of beeing the ſhield and defender of the faith the ſame day: or to ſpeake more properly, Gods inſtrument for the deliuerie and helpe of the Portugals. Theſe aduerſe fortunes cauſed King Alphonſo to returne into Portugall with ſmall honor, where he applyed himſelfe to vowes and pilgri-
D mages, thinking hereby to appeaſe the Saints, patrons and conductors (as he thought) of his vnhappie and diſaſtrous enterpriſes.

King Alphonſos misfortunes in his expedition into Affricke.

29 Caſtille.

King Henry of Caſtile at his departure from Gibraltar, came to Eccia, where he gathered together all the cauallerie of the garriſons and countries neere about, ioyning them to his great armie, which he commonly carried about with him, wherewith he entred into the territories of Granado, where the Ambaſſadours of king Iſmael the Moore met with him, and preſented vnto him the tribute, with ſundrie other gifts, ſo that he paſſed on no further, but diſmiſſed his forces, and came to Iaen, whoſe Gouernor was the Conſtable Don Michael Lucas d'Irinçu. At Iaen remayned Don Pedro Giron, Maſter of Calatraua, who beeing deſirous to offend the Earle of Ledeſma, and to ſet him at variance
E with the Conſtable Don Michel Lucas, he told the King that he heard ſay, that he meant to beſtow the Maſterſhip of S. Iames, (which the Infant Don Alphonſo held onely in name) vppon the Earle of Ledeſma: and thereuppon ſhewed him diuers reaſons to perſwade him to giue that dignitie rather to the Conſtable, who was a valiant Knight, and one greatly affected to his ſeruice: but the King ſeemed to giue no eare to his ſpeech, knowing very well whereunto it tended. Don Pedro perceiued by many other reaſons, that he was not very welcome to the King, who (as he ſuppoſed) did ſuſpect him to bee of the league with the Marquis of Villena his brother, and the Arch-biſhop of Toledo: wherefore he returned thence, and then began they to treate of great leagues and con-
F federacies, to the preiudice of the eſtate of Caſtile, preſaged by great tempeſts of wind, which at Seuile did ouerthrow a great quantitie of the citty walls, and did blow away a great bell out of the Church of S. Auguſtine, aboue a bowes ſhot from the place where it did hang, tooke vp into the ayre a payre of Oxen yoaked together at the plough, and plucked vppe by the rootes diuers ſorts of trees, ſcattering them here and there in very fearefull manner: In the ayre was ſeene the proportion of armed men fighting, and three

Prodigious winds and other tokens of future calamities.

Eagles

Eagles ſtriuing together, with great furie fell downe dead to the ground. Matters ſtanding in theſe tearmes, the King returned to Madrid, where he continued ſtill careleſſe of that which concerned the good of the Realme: there was no audience nor admittance for petitioners, nor any adminiſtration of iuſtice: he permitted his porters, and thoſe of his guard to offer indignities to ſuch as he did not loue and to thoſe that did ſue vnto him, and he would winke at them when as many times they would ſhut the gates againſt the Arch-biſhoppe, and the Marquis of Villena, who were oftentimes ſent from thence with many iniurious ſpeeches. Theſe things with other of greater importance would he giue ayme to, ſo as he willingly made a readie way to the greateſt miſeries and calamities that could be imagined. And hearing that the king Don Alphonſo of Portugall was entred into Caſtile to viſit, for deuotion-ſake, the Monaſterie of Guadalupa, he departed from Madrid with the Queene his wife, and the Infants his brother and ſiſter, and went to meet him at a place called the Arch-biſhoppes bridge, not making the Marquis of Villena, nor the Arch.biſhop of Toledo acquainted with any thing to bee treated of in that enterview.

Enterview of the kings of Caſtile and Portugall at Guadalupa.

There were newly ſtrengthened and confirmed the auncient leagues and allyances betweene the two kingdomes, by the agreement of future marriages with the king Don Alphonſo who was a widdower, and Donna Izabella ſiſter to the king of Caſtile, and betweene the Infant Don Iohn of Portugall, eldeſt ſonne and heire to that Crowne, of the age of eight yeares, and the Queene of Caſtiles daughter, who was tearmed the Princeſſe Ioane. Theſe things promiſed and agreed vppon, the king of Portugall returned to Guadalupa to finiſh and performe his vow, and from thence into his owne countrey. In the meane time the Arch-biſhop and the Marquis beeing forewarned by the tokens of diſgrace, which they well perceyued, and by their own conſciences, abſented themſelues from the Court, fearing to bee taken and puniſhed, and with-drew themſelues to Alcala of Henares, where they ſollicited their friends, and ſtrengthened their league, into the which, by the meanes of the Arch-biſhop, entred very ſecretly the Admirall Don Fredericke, the Earle of Benauent, Don Alphonſo Pimentell ſonne-in-law to the Marquis, Don Roderigo Manrique Earle of Paredes, Don Inigo Manrique Biſhop of Coria, with all his breethren: on the other ſide the Marquis of Villena went in perſon to draw into their league Don Garcia Aluares of Toledo, Earle of Alua de Tormes, and Don Aluaro of Eſtuniga, Earle of Plaiſance, whom he drew into the number. In like manner the Maſter of Calatraua played his part thorough the whole countrie of Andaluſia with great ſecrecie: for their deſſeigne was to get the Infants, Don Alphonſo, and Donna Izabella from the Court into their power, to ſerue for a colour to their proceedings, not caring at all for Donna Ioane, who was tearmed the Princeſſe of Caſtile, whom they all held to be begotten in adulterie by Don Bertrand de la Cueua of the Queene. The king wanted no aduertiſement and information of the progreſſion of theſe matters, but he was negligent and careleſſe.

D. Ioane borne in adultery, the ſubiect of all the ſlirs in Caſtile.

At his returne to Madrid hearing of the Arch-biſhoppes and the Marquiſes retreate, hee beganne to thinke vppon their dangerous practiſes, and ſent to commaund them to come to the Court, to vnderſtand what hee had agreed vppon and concluded with the king of Portugall, but they excuſed themſelues, and deſired to talke with the king in a place and companie not ſuſpected. The King and the Marquis did ſee one another, and talked and conferred together betweene Madrid and Alcala of Henares, without any concluſion.

Soone after it was decreed, that the Marquis of Santillana, and the Earle of Haros ſonne ſhould be giuen as hoſtages to the Arch-biſhoppe of Toledo for the Marquis of Villena his ſafe-comming to the Court, who gaue the king to vnderſtand, that he would not come, vnleſſe hee would commit the Arch-biſhop of Seuile Don Alphonſo of Fonſeca to priſon, for the reaſons which hee had ſhewed vnto him: endeauoring by his perſecution, to keepe the reſt of the kings ſeruants in ſuſpition, the which came to paſſe: for the King who did alreadie diſtruſt the Arch-biſhoppe of Seuille, ſent Iohn Fernandes Galindo, Gouernour to the Queene to take him, who beeing aduertiſed thereof by the Marquis himſelfe, who played with both hands, eſcaped, whereat all the Lords of the Councell,

A Councell, and others which were employed and negotiated in matters of State, were greatly offended: and then the violences and tyrannies which did afflict the kingdome during this kings life, began to appeare.

After this tricke the Marquis came to Court, and with him the Earles of Benauent and Paredes, and Don Alphonſo Henriques, eldeſt ſonne to the Admirall, euery one of them well accompanied with their acquaintance, friends, and ſeruants, with intent and purpoſe to ſeize vppon the perſons of the King, the Earle of Ledeſma, and the Infants. The King, as ill aduiſed as he was, did diſtruſt them, and therefore cauſed the Infants to be ſhut vp in the tower of homage, with ſufficient guard: and as hee was doing hereof, B the confederates, who ſhould execute that enterpriſe, came haſtily to the Pallace, and violently breaking open the gates, entred into the hall: then the King fearing and diſtruſting what might happen, withdrew himſelfe by a priuie way, with the Earle of Ledeſma, hauing made the Infants ſafe. The Marquis who was wiſe and ſubtill, perceiuing their proiect and purpoſe to faile, with a ſtedfaſt and aſſured countenance, as though he had had no hand therein, preſented himſelfe to the King, and was one of thoſe that did ſollicite him rigorouſly to puniſh ſuch an offence, which the King might eaſily haue done in himſelfe, if he had beene poſſeſſed with an heroicke ſpirit: but all that hee ſayd vnto him, was: How now Marquis, do you thinke that this which is attempted in my " houſe, is well done? aſſure your ſelfe that I will be now no longer patient. The Mar- " C quis who was thoroughly acquainted with his humour, found meanes to appeaſe him, and ſo returned to his lodging. But this ſenſleſſe King thought that he ſhould be ſufficiently reuenged if hee ſhould giue ſharper ſpurres to thoſe who were alreadie to much gauled with enuie and emulation to ſee the Earle of Ledeſma ſo honored, aduanced, and enriched.

His determination then was, in deſpight of all his enemies, to honour him with the Maſterſhip of Saint Iames, which was kept, ſince the death of the Conſtable Don Aluaro de Luna, by the King Don Iohn, and by this King Don Henry his ſonne, as an appendix to the Crowne, with the diſpenſation of the Popes Nicholas the fifth, and Calixtus the third, vntill that time. And for to obtaine the conſent and Bull of Pope Pius the ſecond, D he diſpatched one of his Chaplaynes called Suero de Solis to Rome, who caried with him fourteene thouſand golden Henryes, to get expedition. Before this Chaplayne returned, the Secretarie Aluar Gomes, who had written the Kings letters to the Pope, went and reuealed it to the Marquis, whoſe familiar friend and partiſan he was, the which did the more enflame the confederates to the ruine of the King, his Minion, and the whole kingdome.

The Marquis who was very expert in all points belonging to a cunning Courtier, perſwaded the King to remoue to Segobia, ſaying, that there the affaires in hand might bee better managed then at Madrid: but the truth was, he did it of purpoſe to haue him neerer vnto the countries of the Confederates, if the matter ſhould happen to come to E ſtrokes. And he dealt in ſuch ſort, making ſo great a ſhew of diſtruſt, as the Biſhoppe of Palença, brother to the Earle of Ledeſma, was giuen in hoſtage to the Maſter of Calatraua, and kept in the towne of Pegnafiel. When they were all come to Segobia, the Marquis fained to beare a great grudge to the Earles of Plaiſance, Alua, and others: in which meane ſpace arriued the meſſenger from Rome, bringing with him the Popes Bull for the Maſter-ſhippe of Saint Iames for the Earle of Ledeſma, whereat the king greatly reioyced, and told the Marquis that now he muſt needes allow and tolerate the Popes graunt to the Earle: who anſwered, that hee was well contented ſo to do: neuertheleſſe hee ſhewed vnto him diuers reaſons of the manifeſt and apparent wrong done therein to the Infant Don Alphonſo, the which the King ſleightly paſſed ouer, and did F not regard: and the day following hee did inueſt the Earle in that place and dignitie, giuing and willingly ſurrendring vnto him the Enſignes and Ornaments thereunto beelonging.

Conſpiracie againſt the K. Queene, her daughter, and D. Bertrand. de la Cueua.

This deed did ſo highly diſpleaſe the Marquis, as from thencefoorth hee did ſollicite the Confederates to arme themſelues, and to practiſe how they might take the king, Queene, her daughter, together with the Infants Don Alphonſo, and Donna Izabella, and and to kill the new Maſter of Saint Iames: and the better to execute their plot, they A dealt with a Captaine of the Kings named Fernand Carillo, that his wife (who was one of the Ladies attending on the Infanta Donna Izabella) ſhould in the night open a doore of the Queenes lodging: and it was decreed amongſt them, that the Earle of Paredes ſhould take the King, the Earles of Plaiſance and Alua ſhould ſeize vpon the Queene and his daughter Ioane, the ſuppoſed Princeſſe, the Marquis ſhould leade away the Infants, and his brother, the Maſter of Calatraua ſhould diſpatch the Earle of Ledeſma.

Treaſon diſcouered but not puniſhd. Theſe matters thus concluded, they were diſcouered and reuealed to the King ſome three howers before they ſhould haue beene executed, who was as ſlacke in redreſſing this, as other former matters, for if he had ſo pleaſed, hee might eaſily haue taken or ſlaine the B Marquis beeing in the Court: but he ſayd, that he would keepe the promiſe which hee made him, and ſo he onely ſent Gonçal of Sahauedra, and the Secretarie Aluaro Gomes vnto him to reproch his trecherie, which did much trouble the Marquis, who neuerthe-leſſe denyed the matter, and ſayd, that God forbid, that euer he ſhould be partaker in ſo vile a treaſon, whereof he would enquire, and if he found any of his people to haue a hand therein, that hee would deliuer them ouer into the hands of Iuſtice: and with this ſhew hee departed from the Kings houſe, and went directly to the Abbey of Parrall, where hee gathered together great companies of his followers and partiſans, meaning to keepe the ſame, and not intending any more to enter into the Cittie, ſo that if the king meant to talke with him, it behooued him then to come foorth willingly and meete C him.

The Confederates perceiuing this enterpriſe of theirs to prooue vaine and of no effect, did intreate the King to heare the Marquis ſpeake, and to come foorth of the cittie into ſome place not ſuſpected, but their intent was to ſeize vppon him abroade in the Countrey, ſince they could not bring it to paſſe in the cittie: The King conſented, and appointed to meete them betweene Villa Caſtin, and the Monaſterie of Saint Peter de las Duegnas, to the which Monaſterie the King came, but he had there notice giuen him of two things: the one, that the Admirall Don Frederick had in Vailledolit erected banners in the name of the Infant Don Alphonſo, naming him king, and that the towne had withſtood it, and in ſuch ſort reſiſted the Admirall, and his people, as they had driuen D him thence: The other was, that hee ſhould by no meanes go on to meete with the Marquis of Villena, becauſe the Maſter of Calatraua, and diuers of the Manriques were in the fields with ſixe hundred horſe to take him.

The king beeing highly mooued at theſe practiſes, did prouide a remedie in time: for hee diſpatched Conçal of Sahauedra with fiue hundred horſe of his owne Guard for to ſuccour thoſe of Vailledolit, and for the preſent danger, he ſent the Biſhop of Calaorra to Villa Caſtin, and the Licentiat Diego Henriques del Caſtel, his Councellor and Chro-nicler to the Earles of Plaiſance and Alua, to diſcouer that which was done there. Theſe hauing met with others, who came to warne the king of the ſelfe ſame danger, they ſe-parated themſelues, and the Licenciate returned with ſpeed to the Monaſterie, to cauſe E the king to diſlodge, who at that inſtant departed from thence and returned to Segobia, entring into the cittie with fiue thouſand men gathered together from the places thereabouts. The Biſhoppe went on, and met with the Earles, who marched in Armes and militarie Order, with whome he had ſome ſpeech and conference to no purpoſe, and ſo returned to Segobia. The new Maſter of Saint James, beſides his owne people, hauing with him the kings Guard, came neere to the Maſter of Calatraua, beeing in a place fitte for a fight, and was reſolued to charge him, if the night had not hindred him, notwithſtanding that he had commandement from the king not to do ſo, wherefore he brought backe his troupes to Segobia.

Burgos in the power of the Confederates. The knights of the League ſeeing their enterpriſes to bee diſcouered, marched towards F the Cittie of Burgos, the Caſtle whereof was vnder the commaund of Don Aluaro of Eſtuniga, Earle of Plaiſance, one of the Confederates. The Cittie being mooued with theſe ſtrange newes, would not conſent to ought that they propounded: but Don Iohn de Pacheco Marquis of Villena, could ſo well ſet foorth the iuſtice of his cauſe in eloquent tearmes, as they did beleeue that hee and his complices were in the right, but diuers of
the

A the inhabitants who were of good iudgement, did very well perceiue, that each of theſe confederate Lords, was carried away with enuie, hatred, iealouſie, and other diſeaſes of Court, and with a deſire of their owne priuate good, rather then that of the Commonwealth.

Now at the requeſt of the Marquis certaine chiefe men of the citty met together, who ſigned the letters which they wrote to the King, which contained foure principall accuſations, which they required to haue redreſſed: The one was, that the king kept ordinarily in his Court Moores which were enemies of the faith, whome hee did animate to commit infinite out-rages which were vnpuniſhed: as the rape of the daughter of Diego Sanches of Otihuela d'Seuill. Againe that the places of Iudges with other Offices were be-
B ſtowed vppon perſons wholy vnworthy of them, by meanes whereof diuers exactions and tyrannies were committed: Thirdly, that to the manifeſt contempt and hinderance of the Infant Don Alphonſo, vnto whome that dignitie did belong, he had beſtowed the Maſter-ſhip of Saint Iames vppon Bertrand de la Cueua Earle of Ledeſma: The fourth, and moſt important, which could not be excuſed, was, that he cauſed Donna Ioane to be ſworne vnto, as Princeſſe and heire of the kingdomes of Caſtile and Leon, whome hee very well knew to be none of his daughter, highly wronging the Infants Don Alphonſo, and Donna Izabella, by depriuing them of their patrimonie and inheritance: to remedie which, it was requiſite to cauſe the Eſtates of Spaine to make a new oath, in the behalfe of the Infant Don Alphonſo, and to reſtore to him the Maſter-ſhip of Saint Iames. Theſe
C reaſons were indeed of great moment, if they had beene proſecuted by lawfull and iuſt meanes, and with a true zeale of the good and reputation of the Crowne of Caſtile, but there is ſeldome any good order kept in ſuch raſh proceedings.

Accuſations propounded by the colleagues.

The king reproched with the adulterat birth of Donna Ioan

The letter was preſented to the King at Vailledolit, whither he was come with a great traine: but notwithſtanding that moſt of the articles contayned matter of truth, wherein his honour was highly touched, he neuertheleſſe made ſuch ſmall account thereof, as moſt of his Councell, and ſeruants were greatly aſhamed thereof: and yet for all that he had then about him forces ſufficient to diſſolue and ſcatter that league without any danger at all: but it was Gods will to puniſh both the king and the people. The chiefe poynt
D that the Confederates ſtood vppon, was, that Donna Ioane the ſuppoſed Princeſſe, wrongfully reputed Princeſſe of Caſtile, ſhould be declared to bee the daughter of Don Bertrand de la Cueua.

The opinion of the Biſhop of Calaorra, of Friar Lopes de Barriento, of the Maſter of Saint Iames, and others which were preſent at the reading of the letter, was, to go preſently and find out the rebells, and to offer them battaile, alleadging diuers reaſons, as namely the ſmall forces which they had then together: but the King would not conſent thereunto, deſiring perhaps to bee reputed meeke and gentle, rather then warlike and valiant: whereuppon the Biſhoppe of Calaorra, told him plainely, that hee very well perceyued, hee did not deſire to raigne peaceably, ſeeing that hee made ſo ſmal account
E of the defence of his honour, in not reuenging the wrongs and iniuries which were done vnto him, and that for his part he did verily beleeue, that hee would neuer leaue behind him the fame and report of a generous and magnanimous King, but that he was aſſured, that hee would become the moſt vnhappie King that euer raigned in Spayne, and that he would repent his cowardize when it was too late. Notwithſtanding this free admoniſhment, hee remayned cold, and gaue eare to the agreements which they offered him: Hee ſent word to thoſe of the League to meete at Duegnas, the which they did, and thither came the Admirall, and the Arch-biſhop of Seuill. There they beganne to treate of diuers matters: but the better to conferre, it was thought fit and conuenient, that the King ſhould come to Cabeçon, and the Confederates to Cigales, and places thereabouts, which beeing done, the King and the Marquis of Villena ſpake and conferred together in the open fields, each of them beeing accompanied with three perſons, and fiftie horſe on each part, to diſcouer, viſite, and make ſure the Countrie round about.

The King will rather ſeeme meeke than valiant.

Sharp ſpeeches of the Biſhop of Calaorra to the king.

After long conference together, it was concluded, That the king within twelue daies after, ſhould deliuer into the Marquis his hands, the perſon of the Infant Don Alphonſo, who ſhould be acknowledged for Prince and heire of the kingdome of Caſtile, and oath made vnto him in that nature at the ſame inſtant according to the cuſtome of Spaine, by the Lords and Deputies of the townes and Prouinces that ſhould be there preſent: and that the Lords and Knights ſhould promiſe, that the Infant Don Alphonſo, who was then eleuen yeares old, ſhould marrie Donna Ioane the Queenes daughter, ſo ſoone as ſhee ſhould come to age: againe, that the Earle of Ledeſma ſhould giue ouer the Maſterſhip of Saint Iames, the which ſhould be reſtored to the Infant Don Alphonſo: That for the gouernement of the affaires of State, and other great buſineſſes of the kingdome, two Knights of each ſide ſhould be choſen, Don Alphonſo of Oropeça Generall of the Ieronomites ſhould be as vmpire betweene the two parties: on the Kings part for the aſſurance of the deliuerie of the Infant, ſhould be giuen in hoſtage for the kings fidelitie, the Maſter of Saint Iames, and the Earle of Benauent for that of the confederates.

Articles agreed vpon for the pacification of the troubles.

Theſe things beeing agreed vppon, the King came to Segobia, in the caſtle of which cittie, the Queene and the Infants lay, and he cauſed the Infant Don Alphonſo to depart thence to be deliuered to the Lords of the League, albeit it was fore-told him, that the Infant ſhould be declared King of Caſtile: but the Secretarie Aluar Gomes, who was wholly at the Marquis his deuotion, aſſured him of the contrarie: vnto whome the charge to conduct the Infant to Sepulueda was committed, where he deliuered him into the hands of the confederate Lords. The King returned to Valiodolit, from whence the next day, he returned to Cabeçon. The confederates on the other ſide, brought the Infant into the fields, where he was ſworne vnto, and acknowledged Prince and heire of thoſe kingdomes, being eleuen yeares of age.

Don Alphonſo the kings brother acknowledged heire to the crowne.

The Prelates and Knights of the league which were preſent at this ceremony, were D. Alphonſo Carillo of Acugna, Arch-biſhop of Toledo, Don Alphonſo of Fonſeca Arch-biſhop of Seuile, Don Inigo Manrique Biſhop of Coria, Don Frederick Henriques great Admirall of Caſtille, Don Aluaro of Eſtuniga Earle of Plaiſance, Don Garcia Aluaro of Toledo Earle of Alua, Don Rodrigo Manriques Earle of Paredes, the Earles of Saint Marta and Ribadeo with others, who promiſed that the marriage betweene the Infant, and Donna Ioane ſhould be accompliſhed. And on the Kings ſide to conſult vppon the adminiſtration of the affaires was choſen, Don Pedro of Velaſco, eldeſt ſon to the Earle of Haro, Don Pedro Fernandes of Velaſco, and Gonçal of Sahauedra: the Confederates appoynted the Marquis of Villena, and the Earle of Plaiſance: and for a third perſon Friar Alphonſo of Oropeſa was named.

The King beeing come backe to Valiodolit, did handle the matter ſo with the Earle Don Bertrand de la Cueua, as he for quietneſſe ſake renounced the Maſter-ſhippe of Saint Iames, and yeelded it vp into the Popes hands: For which deed of his, the King vſing his accuſtomed bountie, gaue him in recompence the towne of Albuquerque, with the title of Duke, with the townes of Cuellar, Roa, Molina, Atiença, la Pegna d'Alcaçar, and beſides all this, three millions and fiue hundred thouſand Marauidis of yearely rent, to be leuied vppon Vbeda, Baeça, and other places of Andaluſia: we will therefore hereafter call him Duke of Albuquerque, and Earle of Ledeſma.

Thoſe things beeing accompliſhed, the king went to Olmeda, and the Iudges or arbitrators which were choſen to Medina del campo, where whileſt they conferred and diſputed about the affaires, the Confederates had inuented new meanes to continue the troubles. The Arch-biſhop of Toledo, and the Admirall Don Frederick made ſhew to be diſpleaſed with the Marquis, and made a craftie reconcilement with the King, making him beleeue, that they had both will and meanes to ruine the Marquis: the King receyued them very fauourably, and for ioy thereof ſent to Don Gomes of Caceres, Maſter of Alcantara, and to Don Pedro Puerto Carero Earle of Medellino, whome hee very much truſted, to come to him with as many ſouldiers as they could leauie. Thereupon hee was aduertiſed, that the arbitrators had giuen vp their ſentence, by the which there remayned nothing to him but the name of King onely: for the Marquis beeing a man very wiſe, eloquent, and well experienced, did ſo handle the other Deputies, as he made them to condiſcend to whatſoeuer he pleaſed, hauing the Secretarie Aluar Gomes wholy at his deuotion, by whoſe meanes he drew Gonçalo of Sahauedra to his party.

The

A The King being greatly troubled therewith, ſent for Aluaro and Gonçalo to come and ſpeake with him: but they beeing kept backe with ſhame, and their owne euil conſcience, durſt not appeare in his preſence, but ſecretly tooke an other way, where by chance they met with the maiſter of Alcantara and the Earle of Medellin who were going to the King with a thouſand horſe, whom theſe two run-awaies made beleeue, that the King had giuen charge to take them, and that he did greatly diſtruſt them, and therefore aduiſed them not to ſhut them-ſelues vp in a place from whence they could not eſcape at their pleaſures.

The King betrayed on all ſides.

They knowing the king, by many like examples, to be apt enough to do ſuch a matB ter, did eaſily beleeue what the ſecretary and Gonçalo had told them, and at their intreaty they went altogether and ioyned them-ſelues with their confederats, the which did wonderfully trouble the King, who had great cauſe to complaine of the ingratitude of Aluar Gomes de Cité Reall aboue the reſt, becauſe hee had truſted him with his greateſt ſecrets, and had highly aduanced him, hauing giuen him the Lordſhippe of Maqueda, and enabled him, by meanes of his fauour, honours and offices, to purchaſe Saint Silueſter and Torrejon de Velaſco, and other-waies aduanced him, although hee were of no Noble parentage. Apprehending then this treaſon of Aluaro, hee confiſcated all his goods, and gaue the towne of Torrejon de Velaſco, to Pedro Arias de Auila, ſonne to Diego of Segobia, his high treaſorer. And afterward made an edict, whereby hee

Aluar Gomes perfidious and diſloyall to his King.

C declared the deputies and arbitrators, aſſembled at Medina del Campo, ſuſpect, and enemies to his crowne, reuoking, and declaring their ſentence to bee of no force. Afterthat, hee came to Segouia, and the confederates went to Playſantia, carrying with them the Prince Don Alfonſo.

The King diſanuls the Arbitratots ſentence for the peace.

Matters being broken of, the Maiſter of Calatraua went into Andaluzia to drawe the Lords of that country into the league. In the meane time the Arch-Biſhoppe of Toledo and the Admirall, the better to aſſure the king of their fidelity, remayned in their houſes, making no ſhew of cleauing to any ſide in thoſe latter tumults, and they ſayd, that they ſtayd there expecting when the King would ſend for them: Now the King, the better to oblige them to his ſeruice, had promiſed to giue vnto the

D Archbiſhop la mota of Medina del campo, and the Citty of Auila, and to the Admirall the Captenſhip of Valiodolit, and of Val de nebro, with a certaine ſumme of Henries of gould to pay their ſoldiors, to weete the Arch-Biſhoppe fourteene hundred Launces, and the Admiral eight hundred, the which they obtained within few daies after. The king hauing left in Segobia, with a good and ſure guard, the Queene his wife, with her daughter, and the Infanta Donna Iſabell, hee went to Madrid whether the Arch-Biſhop came as it were flying, becauſe, (as hee ſayd) the Marchiones of Villena had cauſed him to bee purſued by the commandement of her huſband, and the other confederates: beeing receaued and welcommed by the whole Courte, the King, the day following, held a counceil, wherein hee complayned of the diſobedience and rebellion of the Marquis

E and his confederats, who had made ſundry attempts againſt his perſon, & the welfare & quiet of his realmes, which was wholy diuided in armes, & was ſo troubled, that without a fit and ſpeedy remedy, both he himſelfe, who was King, & the Lords, Citties, and other eſtates, ſhould bee expoſed to the appetite of ſuch as gaped after their liuings, places, and dignities: wherefore hee craued aduice what was to bee done in a time ſo troubleſome, wherein hee himſelfe, with his faithfull friends, and councellors, were ready to fall into extreame daunger.

The Arch-Biſhop as a Prelate of greateſt authority, & who was the mouth of the reſt, aunſwered, and gaue the King counſell to demand the Prince Don Alfonſo of the confederate Lords, ſaying that hee ſhould liue better according to his dignity, beeing with

F him than in their company, ſeeing that the troubles were encreaſed by meanes of his deliuery vnto them, were as peace and quietneſſe was expected: and if that they ſhould refuſe to ſend him, that then the King ſhould proceed againſt them by rigor of armes, as rebells and guilty of treaſon.

This counſell was receyued and allowed of them all: and therefore the King went towards Salamanca, ſuppoſing to take the Rebels vnprouided. By the way, the Earle of Alua, who was in his houſe, lodged and entertayned the King and his Court very ſumptuouſly, and with great magnificence, and did ſincerely reconcile himſelfe vnto him, vterly forſaking the League, vnto whome the King promiſed to forget what was paſt, and great fauours in time to come: The fourth day after hee went from thence and came to Salamanca, with the Arch-biſhop of Toledo, the Biſhop of Calaorra, the Duke of Albuquerque with others of his priuie Councell, from which place he did write to the confederate Lords, according as he was aduiſed by the Arch-biſhop of Toledo. Then did the Arch-biſhop ſollicite the King to giue vnto him and the Admirall, Auila, and the other places, with the money promiſed for the leauying and payment of their men at armes: the King promiſed him the places, and willed them in the meane time to aſſemble their forces.

The Earle of Alua forſaking the league, reconciled to the King.

The Lords of the League who were at Plaiſance, hauing receyued the Kings commandement, anſwered him, that they would ſerue him no longer, and there withall aduiſed him not to marrie the Infanta Donna Izabella to the King of Portugall, without the conſent of the three Eſtates of the Kingdome. The letter beeing read, diuers told the king that he ſhould well conſider the tenour thereof: for albeit the Confederates ſayd, that they would no longer ſerue him, it was euident by the diſcourſe thereof, that they did not intend to ſequeſter themſelues from the ſeruice of the Crowne, but onely from that of his owne perſon, and that they would for a certaine eleƈt his brother Prince Don Alphonſo for their King. And moreouer, they did aduiſe him not to truſt ouer much to the Arch-biſhop of Toledo; for they were ſufficiently aduertiſed, that the Admirals intent and his was, ſo ſoone as they could get the caſtles and places, which they demaunded, in their owne power, to retire then with all their forces, to his enemies: but the King who was not ſuſpitious, but by accident, and by nature credulous, did for all that giue the Arch-biſhop whatſoeuer he demanded. Hauing then debated how to beginne this warre, the Councell was of opinion, and amonſt the reſt the Arch-biſhop, that Areuallo ſhould bee beſeeged, a cittie belonging to the Confederates, who before they would looſe that place, would perhaps come to any honeſt agreement: this being ſo ſet downe, the Arch-biſhop was ſent away to gather his forces together, with commaundement, that he himſelfe and the Admirall ſhould with their troupes meete before Areualo: in the meane ſpace the Biſhop of Calaorra, and the Duke of Albuquerque remayned at Salamanca, to giue order for things neceſſarie for the ſeege: that beeing done, the King departed thence accompanied with the horſe-men of his guard toward Medina del Campo, but before his comming foorth of Salamanca, there aroſe ſo terrible a tempeſt of wind, as blew vp the whole roofe in the great place there, bearing it more then a ſtones-caſt from thence, the which was held prodigious by the Mathematicians and Aſtrologians of the ſame place.

Prodigious wind.

The King cauſed the Queene his wife, and the Infanta Donna Izabella, to come to Medina del campo, and Donna Ioane his ſuppoſed daughter was left in the caſtle of Segouia, vnder the keeping of Perucho of Muſarras, Gouernour and Captaine thereof. The King came from Medina del campo to the campe before Areualo, and perceiuing that the Arch-biſhop came not, he ſent one of his Secretaries to bid him make haſt. This Secretarie called Fernand Badajos, found the Arch-biſhoppe with his troupes going towards Auyla, where after he had deliuered his meſſage, the Arch-biſhop ſayd vnto him, Tell your King from me, that I am wearie both of him and his affaires, and that ſhortly the true King of Caſtile ſhall be knowne. The Secretarie hauing reported theſe ſpeeches to the King, at the ſame inſtant newes came, that the Admirall Don Fredericke, had made himſelfe Maſter of Vailliodolit, where he had openly proclaimed Don Alphonſo King: and that the the Marquis of Villena, and all the Lords which were in the cittie of Plaiſance were come to Auila, there to make the Prince Alphonſo king. Then this miſerable and infortunate King Henry, being touched with the feeling of his offences, and acknowledging the iudgement of God, all ſorrowfull and humbled with-drew himſelfe apart, (as the Licenciate Diego Henriques who wrote his life and deedes doth report) kneeling vpon the ground, and lifting vp his hands to heauen, he prayed in this manner:

The Arch-biſhop of Toledo betrayeth the king his maſter

K. Henry deſtitute of humane helpe, hath recourſe to God.

O Lord

A O Lord God vnto whome belongeth the defence and protection of Kings, and by whome they raigne, I recommend my cauſe vnto thee, and commit my life into thy hands: I yeeld thee infinite thankes, for that it hath pleaſed thee to puniſh mee in this ſort for mine offences, which are worthie of a ſharper ſcourge, and I confeſſe that the ſame which I ſuffer is very ſmall in reſpect of my deſerts: May it pleaſe thee (O Lord) that theſe troubles may diminiſh the paines which are due to my ſoule in regard of my ſins, and if it be thy will that I ſhall paſſe thorough theſe miſeries and afflictions, I beſeech thee from the bottome of my heart to giue me patience to endure them, and reaſon and vnderſtanding to guide my ſelfe in them.

This prayer beeing ended, he commaunded to ſound to horſe-backe, and rode to Me-
B dina del campo, from whence hauing taken the Queene his wife, and the Infanta, hee came backe to Salamanca. At the ſame time the Arch-biſhoppe was buſied in taking of Auila, whether the confederates came, to wit, the Marquis of Villena, the Maſter of Alcantara, the Earles of Benauent, Paredes, Plaiſance, and Medellin, with others. There in a playne field without the cittie a great ſcaffold was ſet vp, vppon the which was placed an effigie or picture repreſenting King Henry in a mourning habite, ſitting in a regall throne, the Crowne vppon his head, the Scepter in his hand, and the ſword laid before him. Into the ſame fields the Lords and Knights of the league came, bringing the Prince Don Alphonſo with them: the Marquis, the Maſter of Alcantara, the Earle of Medelin, Gonçalo of Sahauedra, and the Secretarie Aluaro Gomes, ſtood a great ſpace from C the ſcaffold: the reſt went vp, and ſtanding round about the ſtatue, a certaine writing was read, by the which King Henry was degraded, and condemned to looſe his royall dignitie; contayning foure chief points, according to which, and as each of them were reading, the Arch-biſhoppe of Toledo, did firſt take the Crowne from his head, as deſeruing to bee depriued from the dignitie of King: then the Earle of Plaiſance tooke away the ſword, when they read the Article, that he was no more worthy to adminiſter iuſtice: afterward, the Earle of Benauent, euen as the Cryer pronounced, that he was vnfitte to gouerne the kingdom, tooke the ſcepter out of his hand: and finally, when they came to the chiefe point, which did depriue him of his royall throne, the ſtatue was thrown down from his ſeate, with many vnworthie and outragious ſpeeches, by Diego Lopes of Suni-
D ga, or Eſtuniga brother to the Earle of Plaiſance. After that this ceremonie was ended, the other Lords drew neere with the Prince Alphonſo, and mounting the ſcaffold, they tooke and liſted him vp on their ſhoulders, and began to cry, Caſtile, Caſtile for the king Don Alphonſo: then the trumpets did ſound, and they all were to kiſſe his hand, as their King.

King Henry ſhamefully degraded in effigie at Auila.

D. Alphonſo the kings brother declared king of Caſtile.

This was done in the moneth of Iune, in the yeare 1465. which when King Henry vnderſtood, he tooke it very patiently, and rehearſed the verſe of the Prophet Eſay: I haue nouriſhed and brought vp children, and they haue deſpiſed me: but although theſe trecherous and diſloyall ſeruants, haue ſo wronged and ſcorned me by the ſtatue which they
E haue degraded, and throwne away all reſpect and duty which they owe vnto me: yet they cannot keepe me, who am the true king from hauing ſtrength and courage to chaſtiſe and diſperſe them: for I hope in our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, which is the iuſt Iudge of Kings, that their wickedneſſe ſhall be deſtroyed, and my innocencie made knowne to the whole world. Then he wrote to the three Eſtates, citties, and communalties of Caſtile, concerning theſe diſorders, and leauied men at armes from all parts, promiſing exemptions, liberties, priuiledges, and recompences to ſuch as would ſerue him in that extremity; for he knew very well, that Toledo and Burgos had erected Don Alphonſo's banners, and that the Maſter of Calatraua, who was ſtrong in Andaluſia, had cauſed Seuile and Cordoua to rebell, and had drawne the Duke of Medina Sidonia, the Earle of Arcos, and Don Al-
F phonſo of Aguilar, with many others, to their league: wherefore this poore vnfortunate King would oftentimes ſay: Naked I came out of my mothers wombe, and the earth muſt receiue me naked: no man can become ſo poore as he was born: and if God do now chaſtiſe me for my ſinnes, he will comfort and preſerue me hereafter; for his infinite power killeth, and giueth life, hurteth and healeth, giueth kingdomes, and taketh them away, lifteth vp kings, and throweth them downe againe euen as he pleaſeth.

Patience of king Henry.

31 Arragon. and Nauarre.

Whileſt that Caſtile was thus troubled, the kingdome of Arragon was not at reſt: for King Iohn hauing made a truce with the King of Caſtile, ſince the yeare 1464. being contented to liue at peace on that ſide, albeit he was depriued of that which was adiudged him by the ſentence of the French King Lewis the eleuenth, he did notwithſtanding ſince continually preſſe the Cattelans, and other Rebels by force of armes, to the end to reduce them to their former duties and allegeance: This truce was ſworne vnto by Commiſſioners on either ſide, namely, by Gaſton the Earle of Foix, in the name of the king Iohn his father-in-law, and by Donna Leonora his wife, heire to the Crowne of Nauarre, who to obtaine the right of ſucceſſion (if we may beleeue the Spaniſh Authors) was not affraid to cauſe Donna Blanche the Queene of Caſtile, her eldeſt ſiſter, to be poyſoned, who was kept for a time by her and her husband priſoner at the towne of Leſear in the Countrey of Bearne, by the conſent of King Iohn her father, to the end to keepe this poore Princeſſe from marrying any more.

A cruell appetite of rule in the Counteſſe of Foix

32 Continuance of the warre of Cattelogne.

As concerning the warres of Cattelogne, the eſtates of that Country did not faint, although they were forſaken by the King of Caſtile, nor abated any iotte of their hatred againſt their Prince, but reiecting him as a wicked murtherer of his owne ſonne, they chooſe (as hath beene alreadie ſayd) Don Pedro the third Conſtable of Portugall, ſonne Don Pedro Duke of Coimbra, vnto whom for the ſame effect they ſent Ambaſſadors to Ceuta, where he remayned with the King Don Alphonſo of Portugall, warring vppon the Affricane Moores: whileſt they attended his comming, (the Spaniards ſent to their ayde by the king Don Henry, not beeing yet departed) the warre continued cruelly in the countries of Cattelogne and Arragon with variable ſucceſſe.

The Knights of the Order of Monteſa taking the Kings part, did greatly trouble the towne and countrey of Tortoſa, and tooke the cittie of Eſmereta, which the Caſtillans had wonne in the laſt warres, who had giuen many ouerthrowes to thoſe of Tarraſſona and Borja, and others which were on K. Iohns ſide. Thoſe of Barcelona, being maſters of the ſea, and ſtrong enough by land, did obtaine ſundrie victories, and defeated the Prior of S. Iohns. Thoſe of Lerida rebelling againe, conſtrayned the king to beſiege their towne, wherein commanded as chiefe Pedro de Deça, who dared to offer the king battell, where they fought ſo valiantly, that albeit the king obtained the victorie, yet hee loſt more men then the beſeeged, who made diuers furious ſallies vppon the Kings armie, leauing ſtill behind them bloudie markes: but in the end beeing conſtrayned by famine, they yeelded with condition, to haue their liues and goods ſaued, which the king graunted them, becauſe he would not appeare ouer rigorous, and to the end that hee might bring others to do the like, by that example of clemencie. Iohn de Lazcano a Knight born in Guipuſcoa was left Gouernour of Lerida; the army marching againſt Ceruera, to inueſt which place Don Alphonſo and Don Iohn of Arragon the kings baſtard ſons were ſent before. In the meane time, D. Pedro of Portugall beeing arriued, receiued, and crowned King at Barcelona, according to the vſuall ceremonies of Arragon, hee determined with the forces which he found in Cattelogne, thoſe which he had brought from Portugall, and with certaine Caſtillan Knights who of their owne accord remayned in that countrey, to ſuccour Ceruera: but beeing come to Igualada, and vnderſtanding by his ſpies, that his forces were not ſufficient to raiſe Kings Iohns army from before that place, he returned to Barcelona with great difficultie. Afterward to diuert the Earle of Pratas, who did furiouſly batter the towne of Tarraga for King Iohn, he brought his army into his countrie, where he tooke Pratas, and committed diuers ſpoyles there, which king Iohn hauing notice of, he cauſed the Earle to depart from before Tarraga, and ſent him more ſouldiers, conducted by his ſonne Don Fernand, with commaundement to meete with Don Pedro, whoſe armie conſiſted of ſixe thouſand and fiue hundred men at the moſt, beeing Cattelans, Portugueſes, Nauarrois, Burgondians and others: with theſe forces he came foorth of Pratas, and met with the enemie about Calaf. As both the armies were in ſight, an infinite multitude of ſtorks appeared flying in the ayre, which troubled the minds of all men on either ſide, reputing it as prodigious: The battayles beeing ioyned, D. Pedro was ouer-come, and ſaued himſelfe by fauour of the night in Pratas, where he had left a ſufficient Garriſon.

Don Pedro of Portugal crowned king at Barcelona.

Don Pedro and the Cattelans defeated neere to Calaf.

To

A To this battaile of Calaf came Don Henry of Arragon, ſonne to the Infant D. Henry, and Lady Beatrice Pimentel who was ſurnamed the fortunate Infant. D. Pedro who intituled himſelfe King, left Pratas; and retired himſelfe to Manrreſa, from whence he ſent a captaine named Bertrand of Almendrades, to the ſuccour of Ceruera, and he himſelfe entred into the Prouince of Ampurdan, where he fortefied his campe with new ſuccours from the towne of Beſalu; he battred and tooke Tibrana, and came to beſeege Bisball, the which hauing beaten to no purpoſe, and ſpent many great ſhot, hee raiſed his ſeege, and came to Poblin: thither on euery ſide came King Iohns people in ſuch numbers, as D. Pedro was conſtrained to fight againe, where againe he was ouercome, and loſt a thouſand foot men, and two hundred and threeſcore horſe.

D Pedro and the Cattelans againe diſcate t before Poblin.

B As theſe exploits were performed in Cattalonia, the Earle Gaſton de Foix who gouerned Nauarre, with his wife Donna Leonora, called the Princeſſe of Viana, by the aduiſe of thoſe of his councell, reſolued to enterpriſe ſomething vpon Caſtile, in counterchange of the townes of La Garde, Arcos and Saint Vincent, which the Caſtillans had withheld ſince the laſt warre, againſt the ſentence giuen by the French King. Hauing then with great dilligence and ſecrecy aſſembled great forces, he forced eaſily and without loſſe of his people, the City of Calaorra to yeeld, wherein he did a thing very pleaſing and agreeable to the confederate Knights againſt King Henry, which were within Auila with Prince Don Alphonſo, whoſe Ambaſſador remained in the Court of Nauarre.

Calaorra taken by Gaſton de Foix from the Spaniards.

C This being done, the Earle was aduiſed to ſend to the King of Caſtile, to giue him to vnderſtand, that what he had done, was not to breake the peace betweene Caſtile and Nauarre, but onely in manner of repriſall, in ſteed of the aboue mentioned townes, which hee withheld, belonging to the Kingdome whereunto he had right: and if it might pleaſe him to ſend ſome one or other to him, to agree vpon ſome good compoſition, according to right and equity, he would then ſubmit himſelfe therevnto. King Henry ſent forthwith thither the licenciat Diego Henriques, who ſpake proudly and audaciouſly to the Earle and the Princeſſe his wife about the taking of Calaorra: They were chiefly ruled by the counſell of Nicholas, of Echauarri Biſhop of Pampelona, and by his aduiſe Diego Henriques was ſent backe, and with him an other of the ſame coate, D to intreate King Henry to redeliuer the three townes of La Garde, Arcos, and Saint Vincent and that Calaorra ſhould be forthwith reſtored backe: and beſides, that the Earle and the Princeſſe ſhould aide him with forces from Nauarre againſt his owne rebels, and would in no ſort fauor nor aide them. This Ambaſſage deliuered to the King of Caſtile, at Segobia, did much content him, and he ſent backe the licenciat Diego with the Ambaſſador of Nauarre to accompliſh theſe reſtitutions, ſo that for aſſurance of what the Earle and the Princeſſe ſhould promiſe, they ſhould giue their children D. Iohn and Donna Mary for oſtages: The two Ambaſſadors being on their way, he of Caſtile ſtaied at Logrogno, and he of Nauarre came to the Earle, vnto whom hee gaue ac-E count of his charge: and according to that which was ſet downe, the Earle and Diego Henriques met ſince in a certaine place, yet they agreed vpon nothing, the Earle of Foix being importuned to the contrary, by the league of Caſtile.

The Caſtillan Ambaſſador foreſeeing that the Earle ment to beſeege Alfaro, hee gaue order ſpeedily, that a hundred horſemen, with ſtore of victuals, ſhould enter into the ſame towne: within a while after, the Earle being at Tudela, he ſent for the Caſtillan Ambaſſador, to the end to treat againe with him about an agreement, and he cauſed the Biſhop of Pampelona, and Martin de Peralta to deale with him; but there was leſſe done at this meeting then before, for the Biſhop vſed many iniurious ſpeeches againſt King Henry, ſo as all men were aſhamed of him: but the Ambaſſador of Caſtile did car-
F ry himſelfe ſo modeſtly, and did refute the Biſhops words with ſuch good reaſons, as in the end he made him to acknowledge his fault, and to excuſe himſelfe. In concluſion, the end of their diſputation, was, that the Earle would not ſend his children, and that if the King of Caſtile would not yeeld vp the towne, which hee held in Nauarre, he would then beſeege Alfaro: with this reſolution the Ambaſſador departed, and in foure daies ſpace that he remained at Alfaro, he cauſed it to be fortified with rampiers and defenſes,

as much as his ſhort ſtay would giue him leaue: from thence he went into Soria, and leauied ſouldiers there, for the defence of the ſame place. Alfaro being beſeeged and furiouſly battered by the Earle, did hold out, notwithſtanding that it is ſcituated betweene Calaorra and Tudela, wherein were great garriſons of French-men and Nauarrois, ſo as within the ſpace of twelue daies, the ſuccors of Caſtile appeared, conſiſting of one thouſand three hundred horſe, and fiue thouſand footmen, conducted by Alphonſo de Areillan Lord de los Cameros: by reaſon whereof the Earle raiſed his ſeege, and brought backe his people to Tudela: and ſoone after he receiued newes that the Inhabitants of Calaorra had maſſacred the French Garriſon there, and returned to the obedience of their Prince King Henry. Theſe diſorders did greatly diſpleaſe the Earle, the Conſtable Lord Peter of Peralta, and others, who laide the whole fault vpon the Biſhop of Pampelona who was the cauſe that the townes of La Garda, Saint Vincent and Arcos, which of old times belonged to Nauarre, haue euer ſince remained in the power of Caſtile.

The Biſhop of Pampelona cauſeth the townes of La Garde, Saint Vincent and Arcos, to remaine vnder the power of Caſtile.

King Iohn after the victory, which his ſonne had obtained at Poblin, receiued diuerſe Inhabitants of the Prouince of Ampurdan, which yeelded to him, ſome willingly, others for feare. And deſiring ſtraightly to beſeege Ceruera, a ſtrong place by nature, hee ſent thither the troupes of D. Alphonſo, and thoſe which the Queene held before Valdecona, a towne ſeated within a mile of Tortoſa: but D. Alphonſo, before he marched to the campe, vnderſtanding that the Inhabitants of Igualada were at diſſention among themſelues, ſome of them cleauing to the new King D. Pedro, the others to King Iohn: hee drew nere to it, and found meanes to take it whileſt they were at variance: Hauing gotten in, he vſed them kindely that held with King Iohn, the others hee ſeuerely puniſhed: then he went to Ceruera, which was ſo ſpeedily battred and aſſailed, as in the end it yeelded vpon compoſition to haue their liues and goods ſaued, and their priuiledges entirely maintained: the which was graunted. The gouernment of that place was giuen to Iohn de Carraxona, then they went to Pratas, where the new King D. Pedro had left a garriſon, he himſelfe being retired to Barcelona: Pratas was yeelded, and Rodona likewiſe vpon conditions, and the army paſſed on to Tortoſa, the Prince D. Fernand conducting the formoſt troupes, who beganne to encampe before Ampoſta, hauing with great difficulty paſſed the riuer Ebro, hich was greatly ſwelled and riſen. The ſeege of Ampoſta was long and difficult, winter drawing neere, which prooued that yeere ſo exceeding cold, beyond the cuſtome of the country, as it is reported that wolues came into the ſouldiars tents and cabanes as though they had beene tame: and great numbers of ſundry ſorts of ſnakes were found in the fields, which did no hurt at all, which did greatly amaze the ſouldiars who held theſe things for ſtrang prognoſtications: ſo as King Iohn was conſtrained to comfort and animate his people with orations and friendly ſpeeches, wherein a Sicillian Gentleman named Scipio Patello, who was wiſe and eloquent, did him good ſeruice. By the great labour of the ſouldiars, and extreame dilligence of the captaines, Ampoſta was taken by force, where the King executed ſome of the principall Inhabitants, and pardoned others, as namely the Gouernor who with diuers others had taken the caſtle.

Ampoſta taken by King Iohn.

After this they beſeeged Tortoſa which the King greatly deſired, who ſent thither D. Alphonſo his ſon, to ſhut in the Inhabitants, and to prepare things in readineſſe to batter it. The townes-men perceiuing it was in good earneſt, ſent forty of their Citizens to the King, to perſwade him to deſiſt from that enterprize, and to aſſure him that Tortoſa would not rebel againſt him, if the other townes of Cattalonia would compound and yeeld: therefore they entreated him to go to ſome other place, and to leaue them in peace; other-wiſe, he ſhould thinke, that if the taking of Ampoſta coſt him ſo deere, that Tortoſa, which was much ſtronger, and greater, would ſtand him in no leſſe. The King knowing that the Tortoſans were none of the valianteſt, anſwered them, that if they did not ſubmit themſelues to his obedience, he would ſeuerely puniſh them: which they refuſing, the warre beganne to be very ſharpe in euery place about the City, with the dayly loſſe of many on either ſide: the towne was battered with great fury on all parts, and the beſeeged made diuerſe braue ſallies vpon the enemies. D. Pedro who named himſelfe himſelfe King, did deſire to ſuccour Tortoſa; but being with his forces on the way, he died by poiſon (as it is reported) in the City of Granol, fiue miles diſtant from Barcelona. King Iohn being aduertized of the death of his enemy, did not diſſemble the ioy that he felt, nor the Barcelonois their griefe and ſorrow: but thoſe of Tortoſa were eſpecially greeued for the hope of ſuccor which they expected from him: ſo as being out of hope of helpe, and extreamely beaten euery day, they yeelded vpon reaſonable termes.

D. Pedro of Portugal ioyſoned.

Tortoſa yeelded to King Iohn.

These things were done in Cattalonia, at the ſame time that the Prince Alphonſo was proclaimed King of Caſtile at Auila, and King Henry degraded by the confederate Lords, vnto whoſe ſeruice and readuancement, from ſundry parts of the Realme diuers Noble men reſorted: but Don Garcia Aluares de Toledo Earle of Alua de Tormes was he that ſhewed the greateſt loue and affection towards him, for he brought to his aide one thouſand footmen, three hundred men at armes, and two hundred light horſe or genets: he dwelt nere to Salamanca. The King ſent the Earle of Alua and his troupes to Zamora with Iohn Fernandes Galindo, who had commaund of the reſidew of the army: he himſelfe with the Queene, and the Infanta Iſabella, went to Ledeſma, where he was ſumptuouſly entertained and feaſted by the Duke of Albuquerque for the ſpace of eight daies: from whence hauing aſſembled three hundred men at armes and two hundred genets, they accompanied the King to Zamora. The Queene and the Infanta Iſabell went into Portugall to requeſt aide of the King, whereof there was great need, but their labour was in vaine. At Zamora daily arriued great numbers of ſouldiars for the Kings ſeruice. The Earle of Tranſtamara brought thither two hundred men at armes, and two hundred genets, the Earle of Valencia, a hundred men at armes, and two hundred genets, others brought more or leſſe according to their habilities. The King ſent three hundred Launces to Segobia, to accompany the Lady Ioane his ſuppoſed daughter to Zamora, where with great pompe hee entred the City vnder a canopy and in a Kingly habit.

33 Caſtile.

In the meane time the Maiſter of Calatraua, ſtirred vp all Andaluzia for the contrary part, and drew ſome by perſwations, guifts and promiſes, & others by threatnings, force and violence. Hauing done his beſt (but in vaine) to enduce D. Iohn de Valençuela to ioyne himſelfe with the confederate Lords, he tooke him priſoner and would not releaſe him, till he had ſnatched diuers fortreſſes from him, with the which not being ſatiſfied, he tooke from him all the places belonging to the priory of Saint Iohn, and gaue them to D. Aluaro de Eſtuniga third ſonne to the Earle of Playſance; He diſpoſſeſſed alſo the Biſhop of Iaen, the Kings faithful ſeruant, from all that he held, notwithſtanding that he vſed his goods and houſes, boldly and familliarly as his gueſt. The Conſtable of Caſtile D. Michael Lucas de Irançu, D. Pedro de Cordoua Earle of Cabra and his children, the Marſhall of Caſtile D. Diego; the Commandor de Eſtepa D. Martin, and Martin Alphonſo Lord of Alcaudete, did oppoſe themſelues againſt the Maiſter of Calatraua. The intent of the confederate Lords was to goe and beſeege Simancas, and being gone from Valiodolit for the ſame purpoſe with great ſtore of men and munition, by the way they tooke Pegnafleur: where whileſt they were buſied, the King cauſed Iohn Fernandes Galindo to enter into Simancas with three hundred horſe: and not long after the towne beeing inueſted by the enemy, it was a hard matter to ſay, whether the beſeegers or the beſeeged were in moſt feare.

D. Pedro Gyron, Maiſter of Calatraua, ſtirs in Andeluzia againſt the King.

In the meane ſpace whileſt they lay before that towne, the knauiſh boies and lackies which were within the ſame did gather themſelues together vpon a day, and in deriſion of the league, they made an image repreſenting the Archbiſhop of Toledo, which they named the new D. Opas the Apoſtata, in the daies of Count Iulian, who brought the Moores into Spaine againſt King Rodericke: then they made one amongeſt them a Iudge, who ſitting in a ſeate, commanded the image ſhould bee impriſoned: and afterward he pronounced ſentence, which was, that Alphonſo Carillo Archbiſhop of Toledo, following the ſteps of the old Biſhop Opas, the ruine of Spaine, for that he had betraied the King his naturall Lord, rebelling againſt him, and detayning his money, townes and fortreſſes which he had committed to him, was condemned to be drawne vp and and downe the ſtreets, and publike places of Simancas, a trumpet going before, who A ſhould proclaime, that the King did command this iuſtice to bee done to the traitor Opas, as a recompence due for his treacheries and treaſons, and that then it ſhould bee burned. This ſentence being pronounced aloud, the image was carried forth of the towne, accompanied with more then three hundred boies and lacquaies, and burned nere to the confederats army and in their ſight. The Lords of the league perceiuing that they could not take Simancas, did raiſe their ſeege and brought their forces backe to Valiodolit.

The Kings army which was aſſembled at Toro did daily encreaſe, to the which their ioyned the Earle of Medina Celi, with fiue hundred Launces, the Marquis of Santillana B with ſeuen hundred, D. Pedro de Mendoça, Lord of Almaçan, with two hundred, and a great number of footmen; diuers others alſo came thither, ſo that there were reckoned to be foure ſcore thouſand footmen and foureteene thouſand horſe, as well men at armes as light horſe: who were all of them very deſirous to fight and to doe the King good ſeruice, who by the aduice of the Lords and captaines of his army, cauſed the campe to diſlodge, and to aduance towards the enemies, the Earle of Alua de Tormes leading the vantguard, and the battaile was conducted by D. Pedro Gonçales de Mendoça Biſhop of Calaorra.

The army marching neere to Tordeſillas, a captaine of the Vantgarde, named C Garci Mendes of Badajos, disbanding with about two hundred horſe, met neere to Valiodolit with Iohn Carillo, a Knight of the Admiralls, leading a band of fifty horſe, whom he fought with, vanquiſhed, and tooke Iohn Carillo priſoner, beeing grieuouſly hurt, who was brought into a Chappel thereby, where hee entreated to ſpeake with the King before he died, for he felt himſelfe wounded to the death. The King at the intreaty of his friends came to viſit the priſoner, whoſe end drew neere: he craued pardon of the King for bearing armes againſt him, and told him that he was come from Valiodolit the ſame day, by the commandement of thoſe that had power ouer him, to finde meanes to kill him, and he did moreouer reueale to the King ſundry other vilde practiſes; the King ſaid, that he pardoned him with all his heart, and prayed God to pardon him likewiſe, and he enquired further of him, who thoſe were which ſought his life, and which did D ſet him a worke; he entreated the King to ſend away them that ſtood by, and then in great ſecrecy he told their names, which could neuer after be knowne, for the King neuer told it to any man liuing: the next day after Iohn Carillo died of his hurts. The King being at Simancas, his great and mighty army ſtretched it ſelfe euen to the gates of Valiadolit, where the confederats did remaine, neuertheleſſe the affaires were drawne out at length, without any matter of note. Thither came the Queene Donna Ioane, with the Infant Donna Iſabella, who were returned from Portugall, where they had obtained nothing at all for the good of Caſtile: for notwithſtanding that they had endeauored for to renew the treatie of marriage mentioned at the enterview of the Kings at the Archbiſhops bridge, neuertheleſſe the King Don Alphonſo did abhorre E to marry his ſonne to Donna Ioane, whoe was begotten in adultery, of the Queene of Caſtile his coſin, by the Duke of Albuquerque Don Bertrand de la Cueua

Theſe things ſtanding at a ſtay, the King and the Marquis of Villena did ſee one an other, and by the aduice of Don Diego Hurtado de Mendoça Marquis of Santillana, and of Don Aluaro of Eſtuniga, chiefe Iuſtice of Caſtile, called and choſen on both parts, it was concluded, that euery man ſhould lay by his armes and returne to his owne houſe: and that during the truce, which ſhould continue for the ſpace of ſome fiue monthes following, they ſhould treate of a peace, and of the meanes how to giue content to all men; but chiefely, to cauſe the Prince Don Alphonſo to renounce his royalty. This was proclaimed through the campe, neere to Montejo F in the territory of Areualo, ſigned and ſealed by the King, the Archbiſhop of Toledo, and the Marquis of Villena, and vnderneath by the ſecretrary Garcia de Arcareſo de Montdragon.

The King knowes not how to profit himſelfe by his great forces.

The King had ſmall reaſon to yeeld to theſe things, hauing an army of a hundred thouſand fighting men; whereas his enemies were very weake in reſpect of him, and vnprouided

A vnprouided of money, victuals, munition and other things neceſſary for ſuch an enterpriſe, but God would haue it ſo. The King being come backe to Simancas, diſmiſſed his ſouldiars with liberall payment; then at Medina del Campo, whether hee came ſoone after, he recompenced the Lords after this manner: He gaue to D. Peco Gonçales de Mendoça Biſhop of Calaorra the thirds of Guadalajara with the reuenue thereof: to his brother D. Diego Hurtado de Mendoça Marquis of Santillana, he gaue the towne of Saint Andrew, ioyning to the lands of his Marquiſat, with a yeerely pention of ſeuen hundred thouſand Marauedis: to the other brother D. Inigo de Mendoça, and to Don Lorenzo de Suares Vicont of Torreja, and to D. Iohn Hurtado de Mendoça, penſions according to their degrees, to D. Lewis de la Cerde Earle of Medina Celi, the City of A-
B greda with the territory: to D. Garci Aluares de Toledo Earle of Alua, Carpia, with ſundry places nere to Salamanca: to D. Aluar Peres Oſorio Lord of Villalobos and Earle of Tranſtamara, the City of Aſtorga with the title of Marquis, to D. Iohn de Acugna Earle of Valencia, the Earldome of Prauia and Gijon, with the title of Duke of Valencia: to D. Pedro de Mendoça, Lord of Almaçan, a yeerely pention of 300000. Marauedis, aſſigned him, on the hill of Mountagu: to D. Aluaro de Mendoça, captaine of his men at armes, the City of Requegna, with the reuenue and proffit of the port and hauen thereof. Other guifts and recompences did the King make to his Knights, the which, or at leaſt the moſt part of them, haue euer ſince remained in their families.

Recompences made by the King to the Lords that followed him.

The one and twentith Booke of the Hiſtory of Spaine.

NOtwithſtanding the agreement made at Montejo, the Kingdome of Caſtile was neuer the more at quiet: for the Infant Don Alphonſo called himſelfe King neuertheleſſe; and in his writings and letters patents (diuers of which are to be ſeene in Spaine at this day, as namely at Valiodolit and Arcualo) he named himſelf King of Caſtile, Leon, Toledo, Galicia, Siuil, Cordoua, Murcia, Iaen, Algarua, Algezire, and Gibraltar, and Lord of Biſcay and Molina: neither did the confederate Lords lay downe their armes, according as they had ſworne and promiſed: perceiuing very well that all King Henries great forces and meanes would come to nothing through his negligence and careleſneſſe: by meanes whereof the Realme of Spaine grew infamous through the robberies and oppreſſions which the ſouldiars did dayly commit in euery place without any puniſhment at all.

1 Thoſe of Valiodolit free themſelues from the confederates ſubiection, and ſubmit to the King.

It happened on a day as the confederates went out of Valiodolit to Alfaro, they were no ſooner out of the towne but the Inhabitants ſhut their gates againſt them, putting themſelues againe vnder King Henries obedience, and did driue all thoſe out of their city which had any correſpondence with the league. The King being aduertized thereof, came ſodainely thither, where hee was receiued with great ioy. In recompence of the loſſe of Valiodolit, the confederates made an enterpriſe vpon Simancas, thinking to haue taken it by ſcalado, but they themſelues were taken, and diuers of them ſent backe to Valiodolit, where they were cut in quarters. The King did for all this harken to the agreement which had bin reſolued among them, and did bend his eare to whatſoeuer was propounded by the Marquis, whoſe onely drift was to take him, if hee could haue but drawne him into any place fit for the purpoſe: but the King hearing thereof, ſtood ſtill vpon his guarde, and when at any time there was any occaſion of meeting to conferre, he alwaies ſent the Biſhop of Calaorra and Iohn Fernandes Galindo vnto them. They concluded vpon nothing, ſo that many Lords which followed the Court, tooke their leaues, and returned to their owne houſes. There remained continually with the King the Biſhop of Calaorra the Marquis of Santillana and his bretheren; the Earles of Haro, Valence, and Cabra, the new Marquis of Aſtorga, the Conſtable D. Michael Lucas de Irançu, and the Duke of Albuquerque.

2 The Prince D. Alphonſo choſen King, in miſerable captiuity in the keeping of the confederates.

The King hauing left a good garriſon in Valiodolit, returned to Segobia: at the ſame time the affaires of the confederates, were in bad termes, and if the King or they which were neere about him had truely vnderſtood themſelues, he might very eaſily haue diſſolued that league, for the Marquis through want of meanes, was very badly and vnwillingly followed by thoſe which were about him.

The Prince Don Alphonſo diſtruſting the end of their enterpriſes, would willingly haue made an attonement with the King his brother: but they held him very ſhort, and threatned him, that if hee made but the leaſt ſhew to bend that way, to preſent him with a cuppe of poiſon: therevpon by meanes of the Archbiſhop of Siuill, a very vnſeemely agreement was made, to the which neuertheleſſe the King gaue eare willingly: which was, to marry the Infanta Donna Iſabella his ſiſter to Don Pedro Giron Maiſter of Calatraua vpon condition that hee ſhould promiſe to cauſe Prince Alphonſo to giue ouer the title of King, and to furniſh a certaine ſumme of money with

An other agreement not well digeſted.

A with three thouſand launces for the Kings ſeruice: beſides this, it was concluded that the Biſhop of Calaorra and the Duke of Albuquerque ſhould leaue the Court, who forthwith without any contradiction did ſo. The Infanta Donna Iſabella was wonderfully afflicted with griefe when ſhe vnderſtood theſe newes, conſidering the inequality of the marriage, and the indignity offred her by the King her brother, and like a noble and couragious Princeſſe, ſhe determined rather to kill her ſelfe then euer to yeeld vnto it: but firſt of all, ſhee thought it fit to trie all poſſible meanes how to ridde this new husband of his life: ſhee had a very truſty Gentlewoman named Beatrice of Boadilla, who offered with the help of her husband Andrew de Cabrera, to kill the Maiſter vp-

B on the wedding night, as ſoone as hee ſhould offer to lie downe by the Princeſſe: this Lady was by the Infanta at her comming to the crowne of Caſtile created Marqueſſe of Moya.

Magnanimity of the Infanta D. Iſabel.

Theſe things being thus plotted; it happened that as the Maiſter D. Pedro Giron was on his way to the Court to ſollemnize his marriage, bringing with him great numbers of horſemen, he was taken with a greeuous ſickneſſe, whereof hee died at Villa-rubia, hauing held the Maſterſhip of Calatraua one and twenty yeeres: whether this happened accidentally, or otherwaies, it remaines doubtfull; but his death was very diſpleaſing to the King, who thought by meanes of this marriage to giue an end to all the miſeries and troubles of his Kingdome, and to re-enter into his former authority and quiet. In

C his place, his ſonne Don Roderigo Tellez Gyron was choſen Maiſter of Calatraua, by vertue of a grant which he obtained from Rome, who was the laſt Maiſter of that order ſauing one: a brother of his called Don Alphonſo Tellez Giron ſucceeded in the Lordſhip and Earledome of Vruena, both of them remayning vnder the gouernment and protection of their vncle D. Iohn de Pacheco, Marquis of Villena. Theſe things happened in the yeer 1466. at which time there were ſeene in Caſtile ſuch huge numbers of Storks, as they did darken and hinder the light of the Sunne, the which did greatly affright the people, who did interpret it for a ſigne of miſery and miſhap to the kingdome.

Death of Don Pedro Gyron Maiſter of Calatraua.

An. 1466. A Prodigie.

In theſe times liued D. Roderigo Sanches of Areualo, who was very familliar with Pope Paul the ſecond, and by him made captaine of the caſtle of Saint Angelo, where he wrote

D an Hiſtory of Spaine, which at this day is common with euery man, and is called the Palentine Hiſtory, becauſe a Biſhop of Palença was author thereof, and it was dedicated to this King Henry. The city of Victoria, for that it had, during all the troubles, remained faithfull to the King, did obtaine this yeere a free-market, once euery weeke vpon the Thurſday, whoſe priuiledge was deſpatched by the Secretary Pedro Arias: it is one of the moſt frequented markets in the whole country.

After the Maiſter of Calatraua's death: the troubles were a little calmed, by reaſon that no man was reſolued what to doe: the Earle of Benauent acknowledging the offence which hee had committed againſt the King, did ſecretly withdraw himſelfe from the league, and returned to his ſeruice: the King to recompence him, gaue him the

E towne of Portillo, which hee had taken a little before his reconcilliation. About the ſame time, the Prince Don Alphonſo, who was termed King, accompanied with the Archbiſhop of Toledo, and many other Knights, came to Portillo, where being receiued, hee was lodged in the caſtle, and the others in the towne: on the morrow as the Archbiſhop and the other Lords came to waite vpon the Prince at his riſing, they found the gates ſhut againſt them, and they were willed to get them thence, for that Don Alphonſo did no longer regard their company, whereat the Archbiſhop was greatly troubled, and from that time did conceiue an extreame hatred againſt the Earle, who had put that trick vpon him, the better thereby to inſinuate himſelfe into the Kings fauour: yet for all that the Marquis of Villena, who was very wiſe

F and ſubtill, and did deſire for to maintaine the league vnited, vſed diuerſe meanes to reconcile them, and to applie a plaiſter to that wound, which in ſome ſort did heale outwardly.

The Earle in recompence of the good ſeruice which hee had done to the King, demaunded of him the Maiſterſhip of Saint Iames, at that time vacant, the which was granted to him: but perſwading himſelfe to make vſe of the Marquis of Villena's fauour, who was his father in law, whom he made beleeue that he was ſtill of his ſide, he inwardly found the contrary. A

The continuall robberies and outrages committed ouer all Spaine by theſe Lords and their followers, not onely ſuffred in the country, but euen in townes and houſes, by reaſon the warres did conſtraine the Inhabitants of the townes and cities to make ſocieties, and fellowſhips, to oppoſe themſelues againſt theſe tyrants and robbers; and the better to bring it to paſſe, they drew certaine chiefe points and Articles, and choſe places to meet at, at daies appointed, the King backing and aſſiſting them therein, notwithſtanding that ſundry of his followers, as well as of the league, did goe about to hinder ſo proffitable an enterpriſe, whereby the Realme was defended from many euills; it being Gods pleaſure that the King ſhould perſiſt in his determination to maintaine his communalties, and to doe Iuſtice, which beganne to be ſincerely adminiſtred. B

Hermandades, or brotherhoods in Caſtile, vnion of the Prouinces and communalties holding together for the adminiſtration of iuſtice.

The concluſions of theſe ſocieties was made in the City of Tordeſillas, where the Deputies of all the Prouinces were aſſembled, where that of Guipuſcoa, moſt of all ſhaken and troubled by the factions of the Gamboins and Ognazins, did receiue the greateſt benifit. They did eſtabliſh captaines and gouernors ouer each of them: theſe are the Hermandades or brotherhoods (as they call them) who in ſome ſort may be likened to the Prouincial prouoſt Marſhalls in ſundry places of France; but that they execute their duties with greater care.

During the aſſembly at Tordeſillas, the King remained at Coca, a towne belonging to the Archbiſhop of Siuill, conferring with the confederates vnder the Bithops ſafe-conduct: but there was nothing of worth concluded on; ſo as the King returned to Segobia, and the league to Areualo. C

4 Aſſembly at Madrid.

An other aſſembly, at the requeſt of diuers, was aſſigned at Madrid, the ſame towne being for ſixe monthes giuen to the Archbiſhop of Siuill, to the end that euery man might come thither in ſafety and without ſuſpition: The King Henry, the Marquis of Villena, and the chiefe Lords of either faction did meet: the Prince D. Alphonſo remained in the meane time at Ocagna, whether the Archbiſhop of Toledo (who was reconciled to him) had brought him: This other conference was as fruteleſſe as the former. The Lady Leonora Pimentell Counteſſe of Playſancia came to Madrid, beeing called thither by both ſides to mediate the peace: this Lady was held to be greatly affected to King Henries ſeruice. D

King Henry oppreſſeth his truſty ſeruants, and dares not touch the rebels.

The Lords beeing buſied about theſe affaires, the Marquis beeing deſirous to entertaine the troubles and to extract diſcord from diſcord, went about to corrupt Pedro Arias de Auila the Kings good ſeruant: finding him firme and conſtant, he handled the matter ſo, as the Archbiſhop of Siuill, by ſlanderous and falce reports, did excite the credulous King in ſuch ſort againſt him, as he committed him to priſon beeing ſore hurt, and cauſed him to bee ſhut vp in the baſe court of the caſtle of Madrid. And not contented therewith, the King went expreſly to Segobia, thinking there to ſurpriſe the Biſhop of the ſame City, called Don Iohn de Arias, brother to Don Pedro, but the Biſhop hauing notice of what was done to his brother, retired himſelfe thence: wherefore the King ſeeing that he was eſcaped, diſſembled his intent; neuertheleſſe all honeſt people were greatly offended to ſee the King without diſcretion to oppreſſe his faithfull ſeruants, and not dare to lay hand vpon rebels. E

The Deputies of the townes, and the captaines of the communalties made meanes for Don Pedro's deliuerance, which the King granted, all men beeing pleaſed therewith, except the confederates, who neuer left practizing with the King till they drew him to condiſcend to goe along with them to Playſance, there to conferre with more eaſe and better commodity: which beeing allowed of by diuers of his councell, hee would needs depart thence with the Queene his wife, the Infanta Donna Iſabell, and Donna Ioane his ſuppoſed daughter, vpon the ſafe-conduct of the Earle of Playſance. reſolution being vnderſtood by others of the Kings faithfull ſeruants, which were not made acquainted therewith, they aſſembled in the Church of Saint Gines, where it was reſolued, that ſeeing that the King would needs goe on to his deſtruction, the lower Colonells or Captaines of the communalties, with foure other of his owne ſeruants ſhould bee ſent vnto him, to aduertize him of the daunger of ſuch a conference, at the

A place whether he ment to goe and if he would perſiſt in his determination, then to proteſt, that they would hinder his iourney by armes. The King tooke this meſſage in good part, and feigning to conſent thereto, debated againe with thoſe which did allow of that iourney: wherefore holding his purpoſe, there aroſe ſuch a tumult in the City as the Archbiſhop of Siuill and the Counteſſe of Playſance, fearing that the people would fall vpon them, in all haſt ranne out of the towne, and waited for the King on the other ſide of the riuer, right ouer againſt the caſtle, accompanied with three hundred horſe: the King being ready to come forth, the mutiny did ſo encreaſe, as the people and thoſe of the Court who were diſcontented with that iourney, running to arme
B themſelues, went out of the towne, crying out, kill thoſe traitors that lead away the King, whom they compaſſed about and withheld by force. The Archbiſhop and the Counteſſe being in great feare, fled to Illeſca, where the Infant Don Alphonſo lay, with whom they paſſed ouer the mountaine, and retired to Arevalo. King Henry being brought backe to his lodging, receiued a guarde to preuent the practizes of the confederates. The Court ſoone after remooued to Segobia, whether Pedro of Hontibero was ſent, by the league, hauing in charge to trie if hee could draw Pedro Arias de Auila to their party, but he loſt his labour: and where force could not preuaile, treaſons and deceits were ſet on foote of all ſides, for Pedro de Silua captaine of Olmedo deliuered vp that place to the confederates, who preſently lodged therein: by reaſon whereof the King
C ſent to will the Marquis of Santillana to lie with fiue hundred horſe at Saint Chriſtofers, a Bourrough halfe a mile diſtant from Segobia. The King at the requeſt of the Marquis, committed Donna Ioane, whom he maintained for his daughter, to the keeping of D. Inigo Lopes de Mendoça Earle of Tendilla his brother, who vnder good guarde, placed her in the caſtle of Buytrago: the Marquis of Santillana, the Earle of Tendilla and the Biſhop of Calaorra brethren, were at that time of the councell of State and did rule the Kingdome.

The king will'd held by force and kept from the aduerſaries of the reuels whereunto he headlong ran.

Thoſe of Medina del Campo, beeing continually vexed by the garriſons of the confederats which held La Mote; demaunded aide; wherefore the King in their behalfe drew neere to Cuellar. Thither came ſecretly D. Pedro de Velaſco, eldeſt ſonne to the D Earle of Haro, by the commandement (as hee ſaid) of his father, who craued pardon of the King for offending him, proteſting euer afterwards to become his faithfull ſeruant, and to bring ſeuen hundred horſe to his ſeruice, three hundred of which ſhould bee genets; and a certaine number of footmen for the ſuccour of Medina. The King, who of his owne nature was but to milde, and at that time had need of men, did freely pardon him, and ſent him backe for thoſe men which hee offred. Other Noblemen were alſo ſent for by the King, namely the Earle of Alua who made no great haſt.

Don Pedro de Velaſco beeing returned with the ſeauen hundred horſe, all the forces came to Cuellar. It is reported, that Don Pedro vſed theſe ſpeeches to the King. Sir, the Earle my father hath commanded mee to preſent this writing vnto you (it was a gift for the E tenths at ſea) beſeeching you to ſigne and grant it, and to receaue from him this ayde of horſe and foote: and if you ſhall refuſe him this grant, hee hath put it to my choyce to doe as I ſhall thinke good. The King did very eaſily yeeld to his requeſt, conſidering what great need hee had of his ſeruice. By this time the Kings Armie was very ſtronge, and diuerſe of the great Lords of the Kings Councell, being tired with ſuch toyles which were to no purpoſe, and would neuer bee ended, vnleſſe ſome violent proceedings might be vſed, were of opinion to ſeeke meanes to come to blowes, and therefore they drew neere to Olmedo, prouoking the confederates (who had there aſſembled their forces) to battaile: the which was reſolued and determined, albeit the King withſtood it.

F As the army marched to Olmedo, there arriued in the Kings campe a King at armes, ſent by the Archbiſhop of Siuill to D. Bertrand de la Cueua Duke of Albuquerque, to giue him to vnderſtand that there were forty Knights of the confederates of Prince Alphonſo's traine, that had vowed vpon the daie of battaile to ſeeke him out in the middeſt of the rankes, and to kill him: wherefore hee wiſhed him to fight that day in diſguiſed armor.

This valiant and generous Knight, whom King Henry with better reaſon might haue made a ſharer in his Scepter then in his bed; anſwered the Herauld, that he did highly thanke the Archbiſhop for the good will which hee ſeemed to beare him, but yet neuertheleſſe he would not diſguiſe himſelfe: then he lead him vnto his lodging and ſhewed him the armour and coate of armes which he ment to weare on the day of battaile, ſaying that he eſteemed his honour before any daunger, and therefore he intreated him to view and marke dilligently the faſhion of his armes, and the blaſon and deuices about them, to the end hee might make the better and more certaine report thereof to the forty Knights, who by that meanes ſhould be ſure to know him in the battaile: then giuing him a garment of ſilke with a good handfull of duckats, he diſmiſſed and ſent him backe, who did not faile to relate what he had ſeene, or heard the Duke ſay: Beſide this, as King Henries army drew neere within two ſmall leagues of Olmedo, D. Garcia of Padilla being come forth of the towne, with fifty light horſe to diſcouer their forces, the Duke ſent to ſpeake with a certaine Knight of that troupe who was borne in Vbeda, who with his captaines leaue came and talked with him.

The Duke of Albuquerque deſirous to come to battaile.

The Knight being come into the Dukes preſence, was by him queſtioned what the confederate Lords in Olmedo ment to doe, and whether that to his knowledge they would come to fields to offer battaile: he anſwered him, that he did not onely beleeue it, but that he did aſſuredly know, that if they came nere the city, they would then preſent them battaile: the Duke againe asked the ſame queſtion, and was againe by him anſwered in the ſame manner: and if they doe ſo quoth the Duke, I will giue you ten thouſand Marauedies of yeerely rent. The Knight accepted the offer, and gaue him great thankes, and was ſtaied their, vntill the Kings whole army arriued, to the end that he might ſee it: Now the Duke had notice, that halfe the confederates forces were not ioyned, and therefore he was the more curious to vnderſtand their reſolution: but ſoone after there came vnto them the Admiralls troupes, with thoſe of the Archbiſhop of Siuill, of the Earle of Playſance, and his daughter the Counteſſe of Belalcaçar, they themſelues remayning at home in their owne houſes, whileſt theſe things were a doing, the Marquis of Villena, who was a great vndertaker and very pollitike in all his enterpriſes, hauing drawne the prior of Vdes and the thirteene Electors of the order of Saint Iames to Ocagna, he cauſed himſelfe to be choſen Maiſter of the ſame order, in cannonicall manner, without the councell aduiſe or conſent of King Henry, Prince Alphonſo, nor the Sea of Rome, and without any approbation of the Eſtates of the Kingdome, and intituled himſelfe Maiſter of Saint Iames, to the great admiration of the Earle of Benauent, who laied claime therevnto by reaſon of the Kings promiſe: yet in proceſſe of time the Marquis Don Iohn de Pacheco was confirmed therein by the Pope.

The Marquis of Villena D. Iohn de Pacheco cauſeth himſelfe to bee choſen Maiſter of Saint Iames.

The confederate Knights who were within Olmedo, with the Infant Don Alphonſo, being aſſured that the Kings army came vnder the walles of Olmedo with intent to giue them battaile, if occaſion were offered, came forth to fields to make reſiſtance, and then diuers meſſages and negotiations for peace were ſent from ſide to ſide, but to no purpoſe.

The battaile of Olmedo.

Amongſt thoſe which endeauored to pacifie matters and to keepe them from fighting was Don Pedro of Peralta, Conſtable of Nauarre, whoſe daughter was married to Troylus Carillo of Acugna ſonne to the Archbiſhop of Toledo: all treaties ceaſſing, the two armies made themſelues ready to fight, being deuided (as the manner then was) into ſundry ſquadrons, the one following the other, the King was not there in perſon, but the Infant Alphonſo appeared armed at all points, mounted vpon a ſtrong braue courſer, riding from troupe to troupe encouraging his army. The Archbiſhop of Toledo did weare vpon his armor a white ſtole, poudered with red croſſes, leading a ſquadron of three hundred and threeſcore horſe, where Alphonſos ſtandard ſtood, and that day hee approued himſelfe a better ſouldiar and man at armes then an Eccleſiaſticall paſtor, for he was hurt in the left arme, and yet for all that hee would not giue ouer fighting ſo long as he could ſit on horſe-backe, the battaile beeing cruell and furious for the ſpace of three houres, inclining to neither ſide.

On the other ſide the Duke of Albuquerque behaued himſelfe verie valiantlie; but

A but if he had not beene reſcued in time by his father-in-law the Marquis of Santillana, he had remayned a ſpoyle to the Knights which had conſpired his death, who did furiouſly pourſue him: but he freed himſelfe very nobly, and ſlue with his owne hand D. Fernand of Fonſeca, who dyed within foure dayes after.

Thoſe which write of this battell fought in the yeare 1467. two and twenty yeares and three moneths after another fought in the ſame place, do not certainely affirme whoſe ſide got the victorie: for they of the Kings part tooke Don Alphonſos ſtandard, with Don Diego de Melo that carried it, who was ſore hurt: the Standards of the Earle of Plaiſance, and his daughter the Counteſſe of Belalcaçar, thoſe of the Arch-biſhop of
B Seuill, and Don Garcia of Padilla, who conducted the troupes of the Marquis of Villena, Maſter of Saint Iames then abſent, fell likewiſe into the Kings power, diuers Knights of theſe bands were ſlayne, and about threeſcore and tenne taken, among whome was the Earle of Luna, and likewiſe Don Henry Henriques, third ſonne to the Admirall Don Frederick. The Confederates alſo tooke King Henryes banner, although it was not diſplayed, but found wrapt vp among the baggage, a great part whereof they brought to Olmedo, and beſides that, they tooke ſeauen other ſtandards, they ſlue two hundred and eight horſe-men, and tooke more than foure hundred priſoners, and yet for all that, the one ſide as well as the other, publiſhed the victorie for his owne, and bone-fires were made in token of ioy, as well at Medina del campo, as at Olmedo. All men affirme that
C they fought there in great diſorder, and in manifeſt contempt of all martiall diſcipline: the footmen on either ſide were raſcally people, who thought vpon nothing but pillage, or flight.

1467. An vncertaine victorie.

The King who was abſent from the Battell, hauing gathered his people together, made the ſame night a triumphant entrie into Medina del campo, giuing reſt to his ſouldiers who had need thereof, the guard of the towne beeing committed to the inhabitants, againſt thoſe which held la Mote. The Enſignes and Standards which were won, were carryed by the councell of the Biſhoppe of Calaorra, againſt the Kings will, into the Church of Saint Andrew and there left.

The victorie publiſhed and beleeued generally to bee on the Kings ſide, drew diuers
D Lords to his ſeruice: neuertheleſſe others did ioyne themſelues with the Confederates, in the number of whome was the Earle of Alua, whome the King had a long time expected in vaine, hoping to meet him at that encounter, who receyued of the Arch-biſhop and the Marquis the townes of the Arch biſhops bridge, and Montalban, for the which he was greatly blamed. The Maſter of S. Iames, who was abſent from the battell, being come from Ocagna to Olmedo, was greatly diſcontented that they had fought, and did greatly complaine of them that had giuen conſent thereunto.

Certaine dayes after, Antonio de Veneris Biſhop of Leon arriued at Medina del campo, ſent as Legat from the Pope and the Conſiſtorie of Rome, with ample authoritie, but no way limited, eſpecially to treate about the pacifying of the warres of Caſtile: king
E Henry receyued him very honorably, and with great modeſtie and reuerence to the Sea of Rome from whence he was ſent, he did anſwer his Legacie, telling him neuertheleſſe that he doubted his iourney would prooue fruitleſſe, becauſe of the rebels obſtinacie. Firſt of all the Legate enioyned both ſides vppon paine of excommunication, to lay by their armes for one whole yeare, to the end they might the better treate of peace: but the Confederates thinking that theſe State-matters and temporal differences were no game for the Pope, made no account of Eccleſiaſticall cenſures in that point. It was thought fit that the Legate ſhould conferre with the confederate Lords betwixt Medina and Olmedo. The appointed day beeing come, the Legate came to the place, where with great inſolencie, he was compaſſed about with aboue three hundred horſe of the league, which F did greatly amaze him, for he was none of the ſtouteſt Prelats. Preſently after, Don Iohn de Pacheco, Maſter of Saint Iames, the Earle of Luna, the Biſhop of Coria, with other Lords of the ſame faction came in place, vnto whome the Legate ſhewed his faculties and authoritie, to do in Spaine what he thought good: Wherupon the Maſter of Saint Iames made him this anſwer, that thoſe which had informed the Pope, that hee had any power or authority to diſpoſe of the eſtate of the Kingdomes of Spaine or Leon, had deceiued deceyued him: for that did belong onely to him, and to the other great Lords of the A ſame countrie.

At this meeting, nor yet at another which was made nere to Montejo de la Veja, was there any thing concluded on: Wherefore hee beganne to proceed againſt the Confederates by Eccleſiaſticall cenſures; but the Lords of the League did appeale to the firſt generall Councell, the Licentiate John d'Alcoter, and the Doctor Alphonſo of Madrigal throwing in their appeales. The Legate perceyuing his labour to bee loſt, would haue gone backe to Medina, but diuers of the Rebells followed after him, crying out, Wee appeale, we appeale, and with great outrages brought him backe to Olmedo: the Arch-biſhoppe of Toledo, and the Maſter of Saint Iames ſeeming to bee diſcontented therewith, tooke vppon them to defend him: Whileſt the Legate was thus handled, the Confederates practiſed how to draw to their ſide Pedro Arias of Auila, and the Biſhop Don John of Segobia his brother, who beeing alreadie offended with the wrong, which the King had offered them, (whereof wee haue ſpoken heretofore) were eaſily perſwaded thereunto: the chiefe doers in this buſineſſe were Lewis de Meſa, Pedro Arias his familiar friend, Perucho of Munſaras Captaine of the Caſtle of Segobia, Fryar Rodrigo of Meſa Abbot of Parral, and brother to Lewis, with other Monkes and Church-men, who did lay a plotte to deliuer the cittie of Segobia to the Confederate Lords.

Queene Ioane, Donna Izabella, with other Ladies and Gentlewomen of great place, were lodged in the pallace of the ſame Citie, where they had notice of this practiſe, ſome C of them with great feare beganne to diſlodge: the Queene withdrew her ſelfe into the Cathedrall Church, where thinking her ſelfe not ſafe enough, ſhee entreated to bee receyued into the Caſtle, with the Dutcheſſe of Albuquerque and other Ladies: but the Infanta Donna Izabella had no will to remooue: for beeing incenſed againſt king Henry her brother, ſhee had intelligence with the Prince Don Alphonſo, and did wholy adhere to the Confederates, who entred into the Cittie in armes, through a falſe port of the Biſhoppes lodgings, and made themſelues maſter thereof without any reſiſtance, to the great griefe of the Inhabitants.

The cittie of Segouia deliuered to the confederate Lords.

The Lords of the League went directly to the pallace to ſalute the Infanta, who committed her ſelfe wholly into their hands. The king hauing notice hereof, departed very D melancholy from Medina, with ſuch troupes as hee could get about him, and marched towards Cuellar, where in the mid way, the Caſtle of Iſcar was aſſayled (at the intreatie of the Earle of Treuigno) in which Caſtle the Earle of Plaiſance kept the Earle of Treuigno's mother in diſhoneſt manner: the place beeing taken, the Counteſſe was ſent away priſoner by her ſonne into his countrie. The loſſe of Segobia did much grieue the the King: for his aboade there pleaſed him aboue all other, as well becauſe hee was brought vp there from his infancie, as for the wood of Balſain, and other places thereabouts fitte for hunting, and alſo in regard of his treaſure which lay in the caſtle thereof: and the griefe and feeling of his aduerſities, did ſo oppreſſe him, as beeing deſperate and almoſt beſides himſelfe, he was contented to be drawne by the deuices of the Maſter of E
Saint Iames to the towne of Coca, vnder the promiſe and aſſurance of the Archbiſhoppe of Seuille, not telling, or making it knowne to any of the Lords or Knights of his trayne, and taking but a very few of his houſhold ſeruants with him.

The King forſaken of his people.

Wherefore all men beeing diſcontented with theſe courſes, which did manifeſtly tend to the ruine of the King, and of thoſe which did him ſeruice, they with-drew themſelues diſcontented to their owne houſes. The Kings Officers and houſhold ſeruants ſeeing themſelues forſaken and left in ſo pittifull and miſerable eſtate, were aſhamed to tell vnto whome they did belong, when they came to any place.

The Licentiate Diego Henriques, the Kings Chronicler, hauing obtayned a ſafe conduct, came to Segobia, where hee had a houſe, wherin were diuers goods and papers F of great conſequence: but neuertheleſſe he was taken, and ill intreated, his goods ſtolen, and his writings ſcattered abroade, to the great danger of his perſon, if God had not drawne him out of their hands: for the Rebels were greatly mooued againſt him, becauſe that in his written memories and chronicles hee had ſet downe the truth of their proceedings.

The

A The king beeing come to Coca, they changed the place, and their opinion was to conferre at Segobia, in the caſtle of which cittie hee was lodged and entertayned by the Earle of Alua, and the Maſter of Alcantara, albeit that Perucho de Munſaras, Captaine of the place, was not well contented therewith.

The King and the Maſter of Saint Iames meeting afterward in the great Church, after diuers reaſons on either ſide, it was agreed, that the king ſhould conſent, that the fort of Segobia ſhould remayne vnder the command of the Maſter of Saint Iames, the kings treaſures and mooueables to be kept ſafe and reſtored to him, who ſhould ſend them to the caſtle of Madrid, the Captaine-ſhip of which, with the keeping of thoſe things, the King ſhould graunt to Perucho de Munſaras: Moreouer, that the Queene ſhould bee gi-
B uen in hoſtage and left in truſt with the Arch-biſhop of Seuile for ſixe moneths, within which time the King ſhould be reſtored to all his former honour and dignitie. Theſe articles were afterward performed, the treaſures tranſported to Madrid, and Queene Ioane was ſent to the caſtle of Alaejos, where holding on the courſe of life which the King had taught her, ſhee fell in loue with a certaine young man, by whome ſhee had two children, which was the cauſe of many vnworthie outrages, as ſhall bee hereafter declared. After this treatie, the King beeing in as lamentable an eſtate as before, went vppe and done his kingdome, no otherwiſe than if hee had beene a poore Gentleman. In this meane equipage, he arriued in the territories of Don Aluaro of Eſtuniga, Earle of Plai-
C ſance, who with the Counteſſe his wife did intertaine him very honorably, according to his degree, much compaſſionating his miſeries and aduerſities, wherewith beeing mooued, they comforted him as much as lay in their power: but it ſtood him in no ſtead againſt the power and obſtinacie of the Maſter of Saint Iames.

Other agreement betwixt the king and the rebels.

Euill life of Queene Ioane of Caſtile.

This yeare 1468. died Don Fernand of Buxan, Biſhop of Siguença: the Deane of the ſame Church, named Don Iohn of Madrid, ſeized both vppon the goods of the partie deceaſſed, and vppon the Cittie likewiſe, and hauing learned that a good Biſhoppricke is a thing worthie to bee deſired, hee cauſed himſelfe to bee choſen Biſhoppe by the Chapter, ſtrengthening himſelfe with the partie of Don Alphonſo, and the Confederats: but Pope Paul the ſecond reiected this election, and gaue the Biſhoppricke to the Car-D dinall Don Iohn de Mella Biſhoppe of Zamorra, who pourſuing the poſſeſſion thereof by armes, (the Deane not obeying, and appealing from the Pope to a Councell) dyed. Then the Pope beſtowed it vppon Don Pero Gonçales of Mendoza, Biſhop of Calaorra, the kings loyall and faithfull ſeruant, and excommunicated the Dean and his Chanons, graunting their benefices and Prebendſhipps to others. For all this the Deane would not yeeld, but made greater reſiſtance than before, notwithſtanding that the King offered him, if he would leaue the Biſhoppricke of Siguença, to giue him that of Calaorra with the Abbey of La Huerta to boot.

An. 1468.

Contention for the Biſhoppricke of Siguença.

Now ſeeing that neither right, force, threatnings, nor kind and louing proffers would preuayle with this Deane, a polliticke deuiſe was thought vppon: for they practiſed with an houſhould ſeruant of the Deanes named Gonçal Braue, who on a night ſhold
E find meanes for Pedro d'Almaçan, Captaine of the Caſtle of Atiença, to ſcale the fort of Siguença, where the Deane and his brother were taken and brought to Atiença. The Biſhop Don Pero Gonçales hauing notice hereof, poaſted thither in all haſt, and made himſelfe Maſter of the cittie and fort: the King confirmed to Pedro of Almaçan the Captaine-ſhippe of Atiença, and the Pope gaue him a good Channonrie in the Church of Siguença in recompence of the good ſeruice which hee had done to the king and the Apoſtolike ſea of Rome.

In the meane ſpace that theſe Eccleſiaſticall buſineſſes were mannaged with ſuch violence, the Earle of Plaiſance had oftentimes treated with the Marquis and the Confe-
F derates in the Kings behalfe, that the matters agreed vpon at Coca and Segobia might be performed, but they had no deſire thereunto: Wherefore hee ſent vnto them a gentleman of his, named Pedro d'Ontiberos to draw them to ſome concluſion, beeing then at Areualo with the Prince Don Alphonſo. This Gentleman brought backe no anſwer: for after that hee had negotiated with the confederate Lords, as hee returned towards Plaiſance, hee was vppon the way aſſayled and ſlaine by Gyles of Biuero, the quarrell beeing beeing about their wiues, and at the ſame time Garcia Mendez of Badajos, one of the Kings Captaines, was ſlayne at Burgos by the people, for as he had made warre vppon the inhabitants, who held the part of the League, his friend Pedro de Maçuelo drew him into the towne to conferre together about the peace: his death did greatly diſpleaſe his friends, and other good men, but the rude and tumultuous people could not be contained within any bounds.

Garcia Mendez de Badajos ſlayne in Burgos.

Pope Paul hauing notice of the ſmall reſpect which the Confederates in Caſtile had made of his Legate Don Antonio de Veneris, Biſhoppe of Leon, was highly diſpleaſed therewith: but hee wrote neuertheleſſe to King Henry, aduiſing him to pardon his rebels if they did acknowledge their faults, and returne to his obedience, comforting him beſides, concerning his aduerſities, by examples drawne from the holy Scriptures to the ſame purpoſe: he ſent likewiſe a briefe to the Confederates, enioyning them, vpon paine of his curſe, no longer to call Don Alphonſo King, but to acknowledge King Henry for their naturall and lawfull Prince, and to craue his pardon: The Confederates ſent the Abbot of Paraces, and the commaunder Fernand d'Arze, the Infants Secretarie to the Pope, to giue him reaſon for what they had done, and to informe him of the iuſtice of their cauſe: but for certayne dayes ſpace, the Pope would not ſuffer them to enter into the Cittie of Rome. At the laſt, vppon their great and earneſt intreaties to haue audience, they were permitted to enter, vppon this condition, that they ſhould haue an eſpeciall care, in any of their ſpeeches, not once to name Don Alphonſo King. Hauing deliuered their meſſage, they were by the Pope ſharpely reprehended, who threatened them and the Confederates more bitterly than hee had done by his briefe, and it is reported, that in a Propheticall ſpirit, hee declared the death of the Infant Don Alphonſo to be neere, after which hee told them, they would find themſelues greatly perplexed: with ſuch like ſpeeches the Ambaſſadors returned into Spayne.

Sedition in Toledo.

The Cittie of Toledo taking part with the League, the Secretarie Aluar Gomes of Citéreall commaunded therein, who ſtood excommunicate, by reaſon that hee was one of the chiefe of the League: it happened vppon a day, that he came into the great Church, at ſuch time as the Prieſts ſang diuine ſeruice, who perceyuing him, preſently left off their ſinging: but hee ſent vnto them, and commaunded them to go on, which they refuſed, ſending a certaine Clearke to him, who vſed many proud words, wherewith a ſouldiar of Don Aluars trayne, beeing mooued, drew his ſword, and thruſt him thorough the bodie, ſo as hee fell downe dead in the place: whereupon aroſe ſuch tumults and ſeditions in the Cittie, as after diuers murthers, burnings, and other execrable outrages, the Cleargie and their partakers remayned maſters of the cittie, chaſing away and baniſhing the oppoſites. Then they ſent the Licenciate Don Fernand Calderon with a meſſage to the Infant Don Alphonſo, to intreate him to allow of that which they had done, and to requeſt him to graunt vnto them the goods which they had ſeized on, and taken from thoſe which were ſlayne in the tumult.

Magnanimitie and iuſtice of Don Alphonſo.

The Prince hauing heard the demaunds of thoſe of Toledo, albeit hee was but very young, made them a noble and iuſt anſwer: Firſt he ſhewed the Licenciate, that it did very ill become him, who was a learned man, and therefore ought to be wiſe, to be employed in ſuch a meſſage: then deteſting the outrages of the Toledains, he told him freely, that hee would neuer authorize their wickedneſſe, nor giue away other mens goods ſo vniuſtly: the Licenciate replyed, and told him, that he vndertooke that meſſage with a deſire to do him ſeruice, and for to acquaint him with the good affection which thoſe of Toledo did beare vnto him, who would not fayle to reuolt from his obedience to the King his brother, if hee graunted not their requeſt: Whereunto hee anſwered, that therein they might do as they pleaſed, for he was reſolued neuer to commit ſo vnreaſonable and diſhoneſt an act, hatefull to God and man, and that they ought to bee ſatisfied and contented, that their offences were winked at and not puniſhed, which perhappes time would bring to paſſe.

The Infant perſeueres in being iuſt.

Deſire to be rich, takes away all natural and ciuill reſpect.

Wee haue ſhewed heretofore, how that Don Alphonſo Pimentell Earle of Benauent, had beene diſappoynted of the Maſter ſhippe of Saint Iames, whereunto he layd claime by his father-in-law Don Iohn de Pacheco, Marquis of Villena: from thence aroſe deadly hatred

A hatred againſt them, which prouoked and ſtirred vp the Earle to lay diuers traynes to take away his life: and this yeare the Earle miſſed very narrowly of his purpoſe and determination, in the Infant Don Alphonſo's houſe at Areualo, but the Marquis hauing intelligence thereof, did euer after ſtand vppon his guard, and went abrode ſecretly, and well accompanied.

The Earle neuertheleſſe diſſembled, and ſpake kindly to his father-in-law, as though he had no ſuch intent at all, ſtill wayting for a fit time and place to diſpatch him: then departing from Areualo, hee came to Plaiſance, where King Henry did lye, and was there well and kindly entertayned both by the King, the Earle Don Aluaro, together with the
B Counteſſe his wife. There the Arch-biſhoppe of Seuille, the Earles of Plaiſance, Benauent and Miranda held a councell: for they had diſcouered how that the Marquis of Villena, Maſter of Saint Iames, ſought by all meanes to deceiue the King, and namely, that hee practiſed with Perucho of Munſarras, who was Captaine and Keeper of the Kings Treaſures in the Caſtle of Madrid, to deliuer vp the place and treaſure into his hands. In this Councell it was concluded, that they would all go thither, and carrie the King along with them, to diſappoynt the Marquis of his deſſeigne. The Captaine who had ſome doubt, that they meant to bee ridde of him, ſtood vppon his guard, and would let the King come but ſeldome, and with a ſmall company attending vppon him into the fortreſſe.

A practiſe againſt the Maſter of S. Iames.

C In the meane time, the Cleargie of Toledo and their Faction, bearing no affection to Don Alphonſo, becauſe he was too iuſt, and did looke for greater modeſtie in them, then there was, practiſed among themſelues to deliuer vppe the Cittie to King Henry. Wherefore they gaue order to Don Pedro de Silua, Biſhoppe of Badajos, who dwelt amongſt them, to trie if hee could winne or induce Don Pero Lopes d'Ayala, Gouernour of the towne, who had marryed Donna Maria de Silua his ſiſter, to lend a helping hand to their proceedings.

The Clergie of Toledo deliuer the citty to K. Henry.

The Biſhop hauing ſundrie times, with great pollicie, conferred with his ſiſter thereupon, and ſhee beeing wholly gouerned and ruled by his councell, they two ſent Fernand de Riuadeneyra to King Henry (not acquainting Don Pero Lopes of Ayala with any mat-
D ter) to aduertiſe him what they had determined for his ſeruice, and to aduiſe him for the better effecting of their purpoſe, to come ſecretly to Toledo. Now their intent and determination was, to bring the King ſecretly into the towne into the Biſhoppes houſe, and then vnder colour of other buſineſſe, to ſend for Don Pero Lopes of Ayala, and to cauſe him to come ſuddenly into the Kings preſence, thinking by that meanes to make him eaſily to graunt whatſoeuer the King would demaund: The King leauing the Arch-biſhoppe of Seuille, the Earles of Plaiſance and Benauent in Madrid to looke vnto his Caſtle and treaſure, came to Toledo, where hee entred by night diſguiſed, by the gate called Cambron: but as hee went toward the Biſhoppe of Badajos houſe, who dwelt in the Monaſterie of Saint Pedro Martyr, of the Order of the Fryars Preachers, a ſeruant
E of the Marſhall Payo de Ribera, who was greatly affectionate to the ſeruice of Don Alphonſo, knew him, and went and told his maſter of it. The Marſhall went inſtantly to find out Don Pero of Ayala, and gaue an alarme thorough the towne: the people put on armes, and came running in a confuſed manner to enuiron the houſe and Monaſterie, where the King did lye, who was in great danger, and without all doubt hee had beene taken by the mutinous people, had not Fernand de Riuadeneyra employed his beſt indeuours for his ſafetie and deliuerie: Then the Gouernour ſent his two ſonnes, Pero of Ayala, and Alphonſo de Silua, with Peralfan of Ribera, ſonne to the Marſhall Payo, to in-F treat the King to depart the Cittie, and to auoyd the preſent danger, aſſuring him that ſhortly matters would bee brought to better paſſe, and the Cittie reſtored vnto him: Whereunto the king yeelding moſt willingly, they found meanes about mid-night to put him out of the towne; and thoſe three Knights kept him companie awhile vppon the high way to Madrid.

Meanes deuiſed by the Biſhop of Badajos and his ſiſter, to giue the king entrance into Toledo.

Indiſcretion of King Henry.

VVeedome of the Gouernour Don Pero Ayala.

Now before hee came foorth of his lodging, the King who had ridden ſixteene miles that day vppon his owne horſe, intreated Peralfan de Ribera to lend him that which hee rode vppon, and to take his which was wearie, but hee like an vnciuill and diſcourteous Knight, Vnmannerlineſſe of Peralfan de Ribera.

Knight, refuſed it, which the two breethren of Ayala vnderſtanding, lighted on foote, and beſought the King to take both their horſes, one for his owne perſon, and the other for his Page, the which he thankfully accepted of: then theſe two brothers went with him out of the towne on foote, with Fernand de Riuadeneyra, who would not go with him to Madrid, but told him that he would tarrie at Toledo, where he would liue and dye for his ſeruice.

As ſoone as he was come backe into the cittie, the Gouernour Don Pero Lopes of Ayala, committed him priſoner in the caſtle, and commanded the Biſhop of Badajos to depart out of the cittie within an howers ſpace: by theſe diligent meanes, hee like a wiſe and diſcreet perſon did appeaſe the tumultuous Toledans. Not long after the king ſent a graunt to the two brothers of Ayala, who had giuen him their horſes, of a perpetuall pention of three-ſcore thouſand Marauidis, in recompence of their loue and loyalty towards him.

Courteſie fully recompenced.

When all men had layd downe their weapons, and the citie at quiet, the Gouernour returned home to his houſe, where he found his wife almoſt beſides her ſelfe with griefe, for that the King, hauing come to Toledo by her perſwaſion, had beene ſo vnreuerently vſed and receyued, and conſtrayned to flie away by night: but like a diſcreete woman ſhee gathered her ſpirits together, and did in ſuch ſort put her husband in mind of his dutie, as ſhee perſwaded him to inuent ſome fitter meanes to reduce that Cittie vnder the obedience of King Henry, their true and lawfull Prince: which Don Pedro much affecting, after that hee had vnderſtood the minds of the Sheriffes and Iurates of the Cittie, the fift day after the Kings departure, hee commaunded the Marſhall Payo de Ribera and his ſonne, to get them home to their owne houſes: Whereunto they yeelded without any delay, and foorth-with the whole Cittie beganne to cry, God ſaue king Henry, and let the Rebels bee deſtroyed, ſo much power hath the preſence and authoritie of one onely man to appeaſe or ſtirre vp a multitude. The caſtle gates, bridges, and other ſtrong places, beeing ſeized vppon by the Gouernour, and furniſhed with people at his deuotion for the Kings ſeruice, Fernand of Riuadeneyra beeing likewiſe ſet at libertie, the morrow after, the king came to Toledo, and was lodged in the Gouernour Don Pero's houſe, where he gaue Donna Maria of Silua great thankes for the good ſeruice which ſhee had done him, and called backe the Biſhop of Badajos, who was principall authour of that enterpriſe. After dinner, ſundry mechanicall tumultuous fellowes, two thouſand in number, came before the kings lodging, crauing confirmation of the citties priuiledges, and to be freed from the tribute called Alcauales: the king deſirous to be ridde of this inſolent crew, graunted their petition.

The Gouernor D. Pero of Ayala putteth Toledo in the kings power.

The next day, the ſelfe ſame raskally companie returned, asking other confirmations of writings, gifts, graunts, and liberties: wherewith the king beeing mooued, the Gouernour who had aſſembled men at armes, by reaſon of the former dayes tumult, ioyned them with the officers of iuſtice, and ranne vppon the multitude, who after they had hurt and ouerthrowne diuers of them, and put the reſt to flight, certaine of the principall were committed to priſon, and afterward vppon enquirie of the matter, according to their deſerts, ſome of them were hanged, and the reſidue loſt their eares, and were whipped. This tumult beeing appeaſed, there remayned yet in the tower or ſteeple of the great Church, the Abbot of Medina, and other Channons, who tooke the part of the Arch-biſhoppe Don Alphonſo Carillo of Acugna, who were beſeeged by the Gouernor, and enforced by famine to yeeld themſelues, their liues beeing ſaued.

All troubles beeing ended, the King confirmed Don Pero Lopes in his gouernement, enioyning the Toledans to obey him as his owne perſon, and ſo returned to Madrid, where hee beganne to thinke anew vppon the caſtle and his treaſures, which were in the power of Captaine Perucho of Munſaras, whome hee did not greatly truſt, and not without cauſe: for the Maſter of Saint Iames, and the Arch-biſhoppe of Toledo, had wonne him to deliuer vp that place into their hands: But the king vppon a time finding meanes to enter into the caſtle, beeing well accompanied, Perucho was conſtrayned to giue place, who notwithſtanding that he had ſlayne the Porter, and begunne to rayſe a mutinie, was neuertheleſſe taken, and forced to begge pardon; the which, the king beeing

A beeing mild and gentle, graunted vnto him, and gaue him leaue moreouer to carry away what he would, and beſtowed ſummes of money vppon him, ſending him home to his owne houſe. Theſe newes did greatly trouble the Infant Don Alphonſo, who was termed King: but aboue all, the loſſe of Toledo did amaze the Marquis, and the Arch-biſhoppe with their Confederates: Wherefore they departed from Areualo, and tooke the ready way to Auila, giuing out that they went to beſeege Toledo. The Infant Alphonſo being arriued at Cardegnoça, a towne neere to Auila, hee was ſtricken with the plague which infected the whole country, whereof hee dyed the fift day after, which was vppon the fift of Iuly, in the yeare 1468. hauing beene declared King three yeares before, hee dyed
E not without ſuſpition of poyſon, the which was prodigiouſly publiſhed and beleeued thorough the whole Realme three dayes before it was true indeed: by this accident Pope Psules Prophecie was verified: for the Confederates at that time found themſelues in great perplexity, and wonderfully deſtitute of counſell: his bodie for that time was kept in Areualo in the Monaſterie of Saint Francis, and ſince tranſported to Burgos to the Abbey of Mireſloure, where his father King Iohn was buried.

11 Death of the Infant Don Alphonſo.

The confederate Lords conſulting vppon what was beſt to bee done, now that they had loſt the Prince Alphonſo, all of them in a manner were of opinion, that King Henry was to be reſiſted, and that Donna Izabella his ſiſter, was to bee proclaymed and crowned Queene of Caſtile in her dead brothers ſtead: the Arch biſhop of Toledo beeing de-
C puted in all their names to go vnto her to exhort her, to receiue this honour and dignitie, who in a well-compoſed Oration, hauing propounded vnto her the aduice of all the Lords of the League: the Infanta, who was endowed with great iudgement and ſingular pietie, made him this anſwer, that ſhee could not entertaine in her heart any deſire of rule which might preiudice her brother King Henry, vnto whome both by diuine and humane lawes the Kingdome did appertaine: the which God had manifeſtly declared, confirming him therein, as well by the victorie of Olmedo, as by the death of the Infant D. Alphonſo: neuertheleſſe, ſhee did greatly thanke them for their loues, which ſhee could feele with more profite, and leſſe labour, if it would pleaſe them, by agreeing with the King hir brother, to procure him to declare her heire to his Kingdomes after his deceaſe,
D and to commaund, that oath ſhould bee made vnto her to the ſame effect, according to the cuſtome of Spayne: the which ſhee propounded vnto them, not ſo much for any deſire that ſhee had to raigne, as by that meanes to keepe the kingdome of Caſtile from falling into the hands of ſtrangers, and into any other bloud then that of Caſtile, meaning thereby Donna Ioane, who was borne in adulterie.

D. Izabella refuſeth the title of Queene of Caſtile.

This wiſe and vertuous anſwer, was of ſo great waight and conſequence, and ſo admired by all the Lords of the League, as changing their minds, they reſolued to follow the Infantaes aduice, and to trye if they could winne the King to condiſcend thereunto, the Maſter of Saint Iames taking vppon him the managing of their buſineſſe, and preſuming to bring it to paſſe: for (quoth he) I know the kings nature, who doth eaſily forget
E things that are paſt, and I doubt not but he will accept of this condition, for to liue in peace, and to recouer his former dignitie, and will graunt a generall pardon for all that is paſt.

D. Izabellas wiſe anſwer breeding the League, and procureth the peace of Caſtil.

Vppon the newes of the Infant Don Alphonſo's death, the Arch-biſhop of Seuile, the Earles of Plaiſance, Benauent, and Miranda, with others which were neere the kings perſon at Madrid, did make a new oath of allegeance vnto him, and meſſengers were diſpatched to the Lords of the League, to admoniſh them to deſiſt from their wicked practiſes, and to ſubmit themſelues to the Kings obedience: the confederates anſwered, that they would ſend ſome man of authoritie to the king, and ſoon after they did write to the Arch-biſhop of Seuil, intreating him to come to Auila, to treate vpon the meanes of F agreement, who with the Kings good liking went vnto them. In the meane ſeaſon the citty of Burgos, by the meanes of Pedro of Velaſco, returned to the Kings obedience. It was concluded in Areualo, that the Confederates ſhould intreat the king, that the Infanta Izabella might be ſworne vnto, and acknowledged Princeſſe and heire of his kingdomes, all other oathes made to the contrarie notwithſtanding: Which beeing done, euery of them would willingly obey him: theſe things beeing related at Madrid by the

The citty of Burgos yeelds to the king.

Arch-biſhop of Siuill, the King called a Councell thereuppon, where the opinions were diuers, ſome affecting Donna Ioane, whom the King ſtill called his daughter: but the Lord Steward Andrew de Cabrera, could ſo well ioyne reaſon to his opinion, as it was reſolued to graunt what the Confederates requeſted: then did they ſet downe theſe Articles: A Articles of peace agreed vpon.

That the Infanta Donna Izabella ſhould bee declared Princeſſe of the Aſturia's, and ſworne vnto, as eldeſt heire to the Kingdomes of Caſtile and Leon: That pardon ſhould bee graunted to the Maſter of Saint Iames, and to the other Lords his Confederates, for whatſoeuer they had committed againſt his royall Maieſtie, and free and ſafe acceſſe ſhould be giuen them to come to Court, with reſtitution of all that had been taken from them: That the King within foure moneths after ſhould ſend backe his wife Queen Ioan, and Donna Ioane his daughter into Portugall, and to be diuorced from her by the Popes authoritie: and that the citties of Auila, Vbeda, with the townes of Medina del campo, Olmedo, and Eſcalona, and the Lord-ſhip of Molina, ſhould be giuen to the Princeſſe Donna Izabella, who might not marrie with any one without the conſent of King Henry her brother, whereunto ſhe did ſweare. Into this councell were not admitted the Marquis of Santillana, nor his brother the Biſhoppe of Siguença, who were come to court to kiſſe the Kings hand, vppon the newes of the death of the Infant Don Alphonſo, for they fauoured and much reſpected Donna Ioane, who was reſident in the Caſtle of Buytrago vnder the keeping of the Marquis: therefore they returned male-content to Guadalajara. Queene Ioanes diſhoneſt life.

The Queene remayning in the Caſtle of Alaejos vnder the power of the Arch biſhop of Seuille, (as hath beene ſayd before) became enamoured on a young man, who had charge to keepe her, and as ſome ſay, hee was the Biſhoppes nephew, called Pedro, by whome in time ſhee had two children, namely, Don Fernand, and Don Apoſtol, who were brought vp in the Cittie of Toledo, in the Monaſterie of Saint Dominick the royal, by the Abbeſſe of the houſe, who was Aunt to their father Don Pedro: and it is reported that the King hauing notice thereof, cauſed Don Pedro to be taken, to the end to puniſh him as he had deſerued, but that the Queene ſhed ſo many teares, as ſhee ſaued his life, and begged him of the king, who in thoſe matters was the moſt careleſſe perſon liuing. D

Now theſe Lords of the houſe of Mendoza beeing departed diſcontented from the Court, thinking themſelues to be diſgraced, and on the other ſide, fauouring Donna Ioane, it happened that the Queene, hauing ſecret intelligence with certaine of her guard within and without, with Don Lewis Hurtado of Mendoza, ſonne to Ruy Diaz, eſcaped from the Caſtle of Alaejos, cauſing hir ſelfe to bee let downe in a basket from the Caſtle walles: but the rope beeing too ſhort, and thoſe which let her downe, thinking that ſhee had beene neere to the ground, did let her fall a good height, ſo as ſhee hurt her face and one of her feete, indangering alſo her life: neuertheleſſe Don Lewis, who was at the foote of the wall, tooke her vp, and layed her in a litter, ſtanding there readie for the ſame purpoſe, and ſo brought her away, the next day, to the Caſtle of Buytrago, where her daughter remayned, who was called all ouer Spayne, La Bertraneja, becauſe ſhee was reputed and ſuppoſed to bee the daughter of Bertrand de la Cueua, Duke of Albuquerque. E

The Arch-biſhoppe of Seuille thought himſelfe highly wronged by the violent and fraudulent deliuerie of the Queene, therefore hee haſtily perſwaded and procured the agreement to the Articles aboue-mentioned, and there was a place appoynted and determined, where the parties ſhould meete, betweene Zebreros and Cadahalſo, at a place called La venta du Tor de Guiſando, neere to a Monaſterie of Saint Hierome, the Arch-biſhoppe beeing much diſpleaſed and diſcontented with the Queene. Theſe met at Cadahalſo vppon the day appoynted and ſet downe, the King, the Arch-biſhop of Seuille, the Earles of Playſance, Benauent, and Miranda, together with others of the Councell on the one ſide: and the Infanta Donna Izabella, with the Confederates mette at Zebreros, the chiefe of whome were, Don Alphonſo Carillo Arch-biſhoppe of Toledo, Don Lewis of Acugna Biſhoppe of Burgos, Don Inigo Manrique Biſhop of Donna Izabella declared Princeſſe and heire of Caſtille.

A of Coria, and the Maſter of Saint Iames, Don Iohn de Pacheco, euery one of theſe, on the nineteenth day of September, the ſame yeare, one thouſand, foure hundred, ſixtie eight, in the preſence of the Popes Legate Antonio de Veneris, who afterward was Cardinall, with great ſolemnitie in the place aboue-mentioned, tooke the oath of allegeance and obedience to the King, and then they did ſweare to, and declare, the Infanta Donna Izabella, Princeſſe of the Aſturia's, and eldeſt lawfull heire to the kingdomes of Caſtile and Leon, with all the dependances, reuenues, and lands annexed and ioyned thereunto, the Legate Apoſtolicke diſpenſing and abſoluing all contrarie oathes, which had beene made in that nature before, and confirming the preſent.

B Great numbers and multitudes of people came running ioyfully, and with wonderfull applauſe, from all parts of the Country to this ſollemnitie, hoping that peace and quietneſſe ſhould be eſtabliſhed and planted in Spayne, and that all factions and oppoſitions of outragious and ciuill warres ceaſſing, Iuſtice ſhould euery where flouriſh. That beeing done and finiſhed, the king with the Princeſſe his ſiſter, and the reconciled Lords came to Cadahallo, the Arch biſhoppe of Toledo excepted, whoſe mind beeing not at quiet, returned to Zebrero, with the Biſhoppes of Burgos and Coria. The King paſſing on, left his ſiſter the Princeſſe, and the whole Court at Caſa Rubias, and went with the Maſter of Saint Iames to Pard, and to Raſcafria; beeing come thither, hee cauſed Pedro Arrias of Auila, together with the biſhoppe his brother, to leaue the cittie of Segoc uia, which greatly mooued and diſcontented them, the gouernement whereof was giuen and made ouer to his Steward Andrew de Cabrera, one newly come into Caſtile, and borne at Barcelona, ſonne to Iohn Fernandes, and Grand child to Andrew de Cabrera: Neuertheleſſe for that time, hee commaunded no where but in the towne, for the fort remayned in the power of the Maſter of Saint Iames, and becauſe the plague was very hotte within the Cittie of Segouia, the King, nor the Maſter would not come into the towne, but retired and went backe to Caſa Rubias, whither came Don Lewis of Mendoza, with a procuration from Queene Ioane, as Protectreſſe of her daughter, in whoſe name hee proteſted, that the oath made to the Princeſſe Izabella was of no force nor efficacie, and appealed to the Pope from the diſpenſations made by the Legate, but ſmall D account was made thereof.

Now did the Maſter of Saint Iames conſider with himſelfe, that the diſcontentment of the Marquis of Santillana, and the other Lords of the houſe of Mendoza, with Pedro de Velaſco, might produce and bring foorth ſome bad effects: Hee who ſeemed to bee borne to commaund, tooke in hand to appeaſe and qualifie them, and did inuite them to meete at Villarejo, belonging to the Order of Saint Iames, there to conſult and determine about the affaires of State with the Kings Commiſſioners. Thither came Don Pero Gonçales of Mendoza, Biſhoppe of Siguença, and Don Pedro Velaſco on the one ſide: and the Arch-biſhoppe of Seuille, the Maſter of Saint Iames, and the Earle of Plaiſance on the other: They did conclude, that the Princeſſe Izabella ſhould marrie with E Alphonſo King of Portugall who was a widdower: and Donna Ioane with his eldeſt ſonne, called Don Iohn heire to the Kingdome, and her couſin-germaine: with condition, that if the Princeſſe Izabella by this marriage ſhould haue no children, that then the iſſue of Donna Ioane ſhould ſucceed in the Kingdome of Caſtile: for the concluſion and confirmation of which marriages, there ſhould be an enterview of the King and Queene of Caſtile, and the King of Portugall. This agreement did not pleaſe the Ladies: for the Princeſſe Izabella had no deſire to marrie with a widower, and the Queen feared, that vnder color of this meeting ſhe ſhold be caſt off, and ſent home to Portugall, according to the treatie at la Venta du Tor de Guiſando: wherfore both of them reſiſted this determination with all their power, by reaſon wherof the Lords of Mendoza and Velaſco were F very angry with the Queene and her daughter. The Maſter of S. Iames ſollicited K. Henry to ſend Ambaſſadors into Portugal, to requeſt the king to meet, thinking by his coming to win the Princeſſe to condiſcend thereunto. And not long after, the biſhop of Siguença, and Don Pedro de Velaſco beeing with the king, perſwaded him, notwithſtanding the Queenes obſtinacy, vnder-hand to fauour D. Ioane, not acquainting the Arch-biſhop of Seuill, nor the Princeſſe Izabella therewith.

New treaties of marriage ſet a foot by the Maſter of S. Iames.

Theſe buſineſſes beeing managed with ſuch inconſtancie, there arriued daily meſſen- A gers at Court, who complayned, for that the King had cauſed this new oath to be made to his ſiſter, which moſt men thought to be a beginning of greater troubles than before, and alſo becauſe that diuers other great Lords of the Kingdome were not called to determine vppon a matter of ſo great conſequence. And indeed all thoſe which were diſcontented therewith, did ioyne themſelues in league with the Arch-biſhoppe of Toledo, who thought himſelfe to bee ill dealt with, for that he had not the Princeſſe Izabella in his keeping, as in time before.

In the meane time, diſorders were ſtill committed in diuers Prouinces, eſpecially in Andaluſia, where this yeare Don Iohn de Guzman, Duke of Medina Sidonia, and Earle of B
Niebla dyed, in whoſe goods, lands, and dignityes Don Henry de Guzman his baſtard-ſonne ſucceeded. It hapned at the ſame time neere to Toledo, that as an husband-man of the countrie called Pero Moro, did reape a corne-field, at the very firſt ſtroake which hee gaue with his ſickle, great quantitie of bloud iſſued foorth of the ſtalkes, the which his ſons perceyuing, who were at worke in the ſame field, came running vnto him, thinking that he had hurt himſelfe, but ſeeing he had no harme, they returned to their labour, and cut downe the corne in the ſame place where their father wrought, and at euery ſtroake they fetched, great ſtore of bloud iſſued, which they ſignified to the Lord of the place, who cauſed it to be recorded for a ſtrange prodigie.

13 Arragon. and Nauarre.

Whileſt the affaires of Caſtile ſtood vppon theſe tearmes, King Iohn of Arragon be- C
ing ridde of his enemie Don Pedro of Portugall, did labour by all meanes, after the taking of Tortoſa, to reduce the Barcelonois to their duties: but they, like obſtinat enemies to their Prince, would not hearken thereunto. Great were the alterations which they had among themſelues after the death of this Portugois: Some were of opinion to bring their ſtate into the forme of a Common-wealth, like Genoa, Venice, and other places of Italy, and others councelled to returne to the obedience of King Iohn. Each of theſe opinions being reiected, they elected for their King Reneé of Anion, Duke of Lorraine, and Earle of Prouence, a Prince of the royall bloud of France, who beeing alreadie old and decrepite, yet neuertheleſſe deſirous of the title of King, did accept the offer, and hauing (with the conſent of King Lewis the eleuenth) leauied ſouldiers in France, ſent his D ſonne Iohn Duke of Calabria or Lorrayne into Spaine, who at Manreça ioyned with the Cattelans: and hauing drawne diuers of the County of Roſſillon to his deuotion, he went and beſeeged Girona, where Peter of Rocabertin was Gouernour, who foorthwith aduertiſed King Iohn thereof, who by reaſon of his indiſpoſition and blindnes, could not come thither in perſon to ayde them, but ſent his ſon Prince Fernand, accompanied with diuers Lords and Knights, vnto whom, aboue all other things, hee recommended the Princes perſon: beeing on his way from Tortoſa towards Girona, Queene Ioane his mother, who loued him dearely, followed him the next day after: vpon the newes of the Princes comming, the Duke of Calabria rayſed his ſeege, and retired himſelfe to Denjat, from whence he went to Barcelona, and then returned with ſuccors in great ſecrecie, E and no leſſe danger. The Prince D. Fernand, deſirous to looke vppon the enemie, being come neere to the place, and prouoking the French-men to battell, they, being fortifyed with a great number of men at armes which K. Lewis had ſent them vnder the conduct of the Earle of Armignac, came forth into the fields, and fought and vanquiſhed the Arragonois, the Prince Don Fernand narrowly eſcaping from beeing taken, who had good meanes offered to ſaue himſelfe, thorough the indeauours of Rodrigo of Rebolledo, who was taken in his ſtead, and brought to Barcelona, and afterwards redeemed for tenne thouſand Florens. The King Don Iohn hauing notice of this defeate, came by ſea with a great army alongſt the coaſt of Ampurias, blind as he was, who no ſooner ſet foote on land, but miraculouſly he receiued his ſight. Hauing ioyned his forces with thoſe of the F
Prince his ſon, he marched couragiouſly againſt the French which were in the towne of Denjat, who putting no great truſt in the place, nor yet to the inhabitants thereof, they diſlodged, and withdrew themſelues to Perpignan, which by reaſon of engagement, was at that time in the poſſeſſion of king Lewis, where the Duke of Calabria hauing left his army, returned into France to make new leauies.

Rene of Anion made king of Arragon.

The Arragonois defeated by the French.

A The King of Arragon lodged his armie round about Figuera, and there wintered. Theſe things were done in Arragon, at the ſame time that the battayle of Olmedo was fought betwixt King Henry of Caſtile, and the Lords of the League aboue-mentioned. The Duke of Calabria beeing afterward returned to Perpignan with a freſh ſupply of ten thouſand men, obtayned from King Lewis the eleuenth, marched foorth with his forces to aſſayle the enemies.

King Iohn on the other ſide departed from Figuera, and preſented himſelfe in order of battaile within two miles neere to the French: but it is not knowne vpon what occaſion he departed thence, to beſeege the towne of Peralta, where hauing begunne a furi-
E ous batterie, and alreadie made a large and ſufficient breach to aſſayle it, the Duke of Calabria came ſuddenly, and vnlooked for, vppon him in the night, not being heard nor perceyued by the Sentinels which ſlept, who cut in peeces the firſt court of guard that he mette with, and entring furiouſly into the quarters and lodgings of the beſeegers, he did ſtrike ſuch a terrour amongſt them, as euery man leauing all that hee had behind him, they all betooke themſelues to flight in great diſorder. The King eſcaped bare-headed, gallowping apace towards Figuera: neuertheleſſe there were ſome which put themſelues in defence, by whoſe valour the artillerie and munition was ſaued, and the Frenchmen beeing retired, they held a forme of a ſeege, vntill that the King with greater forces was returned to Peralta, the which in the end he tooke. The Authors do greatly prayſe
C the valour of a certaine Knight of Guipuſcoa named Don Iohn de Gamboa in this nightly skirmiſh, who with his own hand ſlue three French-men at armes, who hauing his horſe ſlayne vnder him in the preſſe, did yet notwithſtanding ſaue himſelfe, hauing receyued eleuen wounds. Lewis of Mudar, a Caſtillan Knight, is likewiſe remembred for his valor in this fight, where Scipio Patella the Sicillian, mentioned heretofore, beeing a wiſe and valiant Knight, was ſlayne, fighting couragiouſly. The French beeing victorious, not caring for Peralta, returned to the ſeege of Girona, which without any difficulty they tooke. After this, Duke Iohn of Calabria beeing come to Barcelona to take order for the affaires of the warres, was tormented with a burning peſtilentiall feauer, whereof hee dyed this yeare 1468. to the great griefe of thoſe of Barcelona, and extreame trouble of

An. 1468.

Now let vs returne to Caſtille, where the Princeſſe Izabella beeing diſcontented with the marriage which was treated of betwixt her and the King of Portugall, ſollicited hereunto by the Arch-biſhoppe of Toledo, ſhee came to ſpeake with him at Yepes: where by the perſwaſion of her maſter-Pantler named Don Guttiere de Cardegna, he conſented, that ſhee ſhould marry Don Fernand, Prince of Girona, the eldeſt ſonne of Arragon, and heire to the ſame Crowne, who was by the King his father, in fauour of that marriage, entitled King of Sicill, much about the time of the Duke of Calabria's death, whereby the affaires of King Iohn beganne to proſper the better: for the French hauing loſt their head, retired themſelues to Perpignan, by meanes whereof the armie of Arragon
E had leyſure to ſcoure the coaſt of Ampurias, the Caſtle of which towne, with other places yeelded themſelues: ſo did Girona and Don Iohn Ferrier Biſhoppe thereof, with the Vicount of Cabrera, Martorella, and ſoone after Saint Felix, Palamos, and Vergues, with diuers Lords and Prelates, who demaunded and obtayned pardon for their rebellion. Whileſt King Iohn was in the ſame countrey, Don Alphonſo of Arragon, his Baſtard ſonne, did greatly moleſt the Barcelonois, forraging their territorie with a thouſand horſe, and fiue thouſand foot-men.

Caſtile.

At this time the Eſtate of Nauarre was not very quiet: for the factions of Grammont and Beaumont raigning in the countrey, the Earle Gaſton of Foix, husband to Donna Leonora heire of the kingdome, who did gouerne it, perſwaded himſelfe, that hee ought F to enioy the kingly title, with all other rights and preheminences of the ſame, wherefore ſtrengthening himſelfe with the Beaumontois faction, whilſt his father-in-law King Iohn was buſied in the wars of Cattelogne, he poſſeſt himſelfe of diuers ſtrong places of Nauar, and newly beſeeged Tudele, whereof K. Iohn being aduertiſed, vpon the good hap of his affaires in Cattelogne, he brought his army thither, which was well exerciſed in the former wars, to ſuccor thoſe which took his part, but before he came thither, Don Lewis ſeized vppon the Cittie of Pampelona, the Inhabitants whereof were for the moſt part followers of thoſe of Beaumont. A

Diuers hiſtories, of ſmall authoritie, make mention, that this Earle of Lerin made ſharp warre not onely vppon the Nauarrois of the other Faction, but alſo vppon the Arragonois, running on euen to Iaca and Exea belonging to the Knights: hauing for companion in his counſells and enterpriſes, Charles of Artieda, hee tooke from the Conſtable Don Pedro of Peralta, the towne of Andoſilla, and from Don Inigo of Eſtuniga, Earle of Nieua, that of Mendauia: then hee tooke Artaxona and Olito, with many other places, and did many other great exploits, by reaſon that hee held the cittie of Pampelona, diſpoſing of it, as if hee had beene Lord and maſter. At the ſame time alſo there was B Sancho Rotta, a famous theef Death of Q. Ioane of Arragon. mention made of a famous theefe called Sancho Rota, whoſe retreate was in a mountaine neere to Tudele, called las verdenas del Rey, who with thirtie horſe that hee kept, ranne into the country of Arragon, bringing from thence great ſtore of pillage, vſing all ſuch well as hee tooke priſoners. To ſuppreſſe the inſolencies done as well by him, as by the Earle of Lerin, the people of Iaca, and the Nobility thereabouts, made ſhew of entring into Nauarre: but the Earle of Lerin ſent a great number of ſouldiers to meete with them, conducted by Charles of Artieda, Machin de Gongorra Lord of Ciordia, Iohn d'Ayanc, and Fernand d'Aranc, who meeting with the Arragonois neere to Sangueſſa, at a certaine bridge vppon the riuer of Arragon, they lighted from their horſes, thinking to fight with greater aduantage on foote: and comming to handy-ſtrokes, they did hin- C der the Arragonois paſſage, and conſtrayned them to returne into their owne territories. Now King Iohns comming with his army, beeing knowne in Nauarre, encouraged thoſe of Grammont, and did greatly amaze the Beaumontois, who knew very well that they ſhould not be able to reſiſt ſuch great forces: wherefore taking counſell about the affaires with the Earle of Foix, they aduiſed him to make an agreement with the King his father-in-law, who had already reſolued, after his death, to leaue the kingdome to his daughter Donna Leonora, and to permit him to enioy it awhile, who by reaſon of his extreame age could not hold out long, therfore he ſhould be content to haue patience, and to ſuffer the King to enioy the title of King of Nauarre, the ſmall time he had to liue. The Earle was eaſily drawne thereto, for he ſaw no hope of victorie, if hee ſhould haue perſiſted in his raſh enterpriſe by armes: then they began to capitulate, ſetting downe arti- D

Before the finall concluſion whereof King Iohn beeing alreadie returned to Tarragona, to view his forces, and to take order for the warre of Barcelona, his wife Queene Ioane, being a long time tormented with a canker, which conſumed her, drew neere her end. It is reported, that when ſhee kuew ſhee muſt needs dye, fetching diuers ſighs and grones, remembring her ſon Prince Fernand, ſhee ſayd, O my ſon, thou haſt coſt me deare: and it is conſtantly affirmed, that ſhe did confeſſe to of Sicill: her body according to her will, was buried in the Monaſterie of Pobleta: about An. 1469. this time in the yeare 1469. hapned the lamentable death of Gaſton of Foix the younger, eldeſt ſon to the Earle Gaſton, and to the Princeſſe Leonora, who ſhould haue ſucceeded them in the kingdome of Nauarre. There was a great aſſembly of Princes & Knights at Liborne nere to Bourdeaux, who there met to honor & accompany Charles of France, brother to Lewis the 11. newly reconciled to him, and promoted to the Dutchy of Guyenne after the ciuill war: this young Knight Gaſton, running at tilt, which was performed in moſt coſtly and ſumptuous maner, was run with the ſplinter of a lance into the braynes, wherof he dyed, to the great griefe of as many as knew him, but eſpecially of duke Charles F whoſe ſiſter he had married, whoſe name was Magdalen, ſhe being likewiſe ſiſter to Lewis by whom he had two children, to wit, Francis Phœbus, who was king of Nauar, and Earle of Foix, and Catherine his ſiſter, who ſucceeded her brother dying without heires. Happily, it ſhall not be amiſſe to ſet downe here the ſucceſſion of the houſe of Foix, which hath inherited the kingdome of Nauar, fetching it as far as Hiſtories make mention thereof, to the which (as we haue ſayd) the Segneury of Bearn was vnited, about the yeare 1286.

We

Originall and continuance of the houſe of Foix.

A Wee finde that the countrey of Foix was erected into an Earledome about the yeare 1462. by Raymond, Earle of Tholouſa, who inueſted therewith Bernard, yongeſt ſonne to Roger Earle of Carcaſſone, and to Adela his wife: of this Bernard, and of Beatrice, daughter to the Earle of Beziers, was borne Roger, who was ſecond Earle of Foix, who begat an other Roger his ſucceſſor in the Countie of Foix, ſecond of that name, father to Roger the third, whom he had by Eximena his ſecond wife, hauing firſt of all married a Lady of Prouence called Eſtinetta. Of Roger the third, and of Ciceliſe, daughter to Earle Raymond of Barcelona, was borne Raymond Roger, who married a Lady called Phillip, by whom hee had a ſonne called Roger Bernard, who ſucceeded him in the Earledome
B of Foix, and a daughter called Eſclarmonde, married to the King of Majorca. This Raymond Roger cauſed his lawfull wife to ſuffer many indignities, at the requeſt of a Concubine, who was of the religion of the Albigeois. Roger Bernard was then Earle of Foix after his father, the ſixt in number, about the yeare 1223. and was ſurnamed the great. Hee married Brunixenda daughter to the Earle of Caſtelbon, by whom hee had Roger called Rotfer Earle of Foix after him, Eſclermond wife to the Vicount of Cardona, and Cicely, wife to the Earle of Vrgell. Roger Rotfer ſeaneth Earle of Foix, and fift of the name, married Brunixenda, daughter to the Vicount, on whom he begat Roger Bernard, the ſixt of that name, and eight Earle of Foix: of him, and of Manigarda of Narbona, were borne an other Roger Bernard, who ſucceeded in the Earledome, Agnes who was
C wife to Eſquibat Earle of Bigorre, and Phillip married to Arnold of Spaine, Vicount of Conſerans. Roger Bernard, ſeauenth of the name, and ninth Earle of Foix, came to the Earledome after the deceaſe of his father, about the yeer 1262. who married Marguerit, daughter to Gaſton de Moncada Lord of Bearne, and of Martha de Foix, by whoſe meanes he came to vnite the Lordſhip of Bearne to the Earledome of Foix, by the conſent of the eſtates of Bearne, to the preiudice of the Earle of Armagnac, who had married the elder daughter of Marguerite, whom Gaſton diſinherited, in diſdaine that her husband the Earle of Armignac did not helpe him in certaine warres that hee made, as well as his other ſonne in lawe the Earle of Foix. Now Roger Bernard had by his wife Marguerite of Bearne foure children, to weet, Gaſton the elder, who was Earle of Foix after his
D father, the tenth in number, and the firſt of that houſe, who enioyed the Lordſhip of Bearne, Brunixenda wife to Helie of Perigort, Conſtance married to Authonie de Leui, Lord of Mirepoix, and Ioane who married Peter, ſonne to King Iames of Arragon. Gaſton then the firſt of that name, Earle of Foix, and Lord of Bearne, married Ioane, daughter to Lewis of France Earle of Eureux, and of Marguerite of Artois, from whom iſſued Gaſton heire to the Earledome, Roger Bernard Vicount of Caſtelbon, father of Mathew, and of Iſabell of Caſtelbon, who ſucceeded one after an other in the Earledome of Foix, and Robert Biſhop of Vaur. He had alſo a baſtard ſonne named the Wolfe, Lord of Arauath, who begat Blanche wife to Iohn de Gaulti, or Grailhij Capdau de Buch. Gaſton the ſecond, the eleuenth Earle of Foix, and ſecond Lord of Bearne, of this family, had by his
E wife Elenor, daughter to the Earle of Comming, Gaſton Phœbus, who ſucceeded his father, in the yeare 1344. the fourth of that name, and hauing married Agnes, daughter to King Philip of Nauarre, had by her one onely ſonne, whoſe murtherer hee was, hauing found about him a box of poiſon, which his Vncle King Charles of Nauarre had giuen him to kill the Earle his father, with whom he was offended, the child being in no fault at all, for he knew not what drugge it was: wherefore at his death, hee left behind him no lawfull children, but diuers baſtards, as Iobbain who was one of thoſe which were burnt at the Mummery of King Charles the ſixt, at the banquet of Saint Marcean, and Gratian, and poſſibly that Bernard of Foix, who was maried into Spaine to Lady Iſabel de la Cerde, a Princeſſe of the blood royall of Caſtile, the ſtem of the houſe of the Dukes of Medina
F Celi, if he were not ſonne to Gaſton the ſecond, this mans predeceſſor. Then the ſucceſſion of the Earldome of Foix and Lordſhip of Bearne, fel to Mathew of Caſtelbon abouenamed, who had no children by his wife Ioane, daughter to the King of Arragon, wherefore his ſiſter Iſabell inherited his Lordſhips, who was wife to Archambald de Grailtry Captau de Buch, from which mariage iſſued Iohn the elder, the fifteene Earle of Foix, Gaſton Capdau de Buch, from whom deſcended the Lords of Capdolat and Candale,

Arch-

Archambald Lord of Nouailles Peter a friar of Morlas, ſince Biſhop of Leſcar, in the end Cardinall and founder of the Colledge of Foix at Tholouſa, and Mathew Earle of Comminges: Iohn the fifteenth Earle of Foix (as hath beene ſaid) and firſt of that name, had to his firſt wife Mary of Nauarre, who dying without children, he married Ioane de Albret, of whom was borne Gaſton his ſucceſſor in the Earledome of Foix and Lordſhip of Bearne. The houſe of Foix hath beene much ennobled by the deeds of this man: for during the wars betwixt the French and the Engliſh, in the daies of Charles the ſeuenth, this Earle Gaſton was he that made proofe of his valor againſt the Engliſh armies which held the Dutchy of Guyenne, where he twice tooke Saint Seuer chiefe of Gaſcony, and won Dax by force of armes, with great ſlaughter of Engliſhmen, who did valiantly defend thoſe places: he did ſuccor Tartax beſeeged ſeuen monthes by the gouernor of Bourdeaux. He reſtored his vncle Mathew into the Viſcounty of Comminges, being diſpoſſeſt by the French King, who had inſtalled a Spaniard therein, called Roderigo de Villandrada Earle of Ribadeo, where he ouerthrew the caſtle of Rocheford, he made means for the liberty of the Earl of Armagnac, who was in priſon for hauing intelligence with the Engliſh, and cauſed his goods and lands to be reſtored to him. Being afterwards made Gouernor of Guyenne by King Charles, he made ſuch cruell warre vpon the Engliſh as in ſhort time he in a manner diſpoſſeſt them of all there forces in the ſame Prouince, ſo as Burdeaux, the chiefe city and ſeat of the warre, was conſtrained to yeeld to the French King, in the yeere 1451. and ſoone after the city of Bayonne, ſo as the Engliſh were wholy excluded out of all Guyenne. Afterward when the city of Bourdeaux rebelled againſt the Earle of Clermont Iohn of Bourbon, the Engliſh being recalled by them (albeit they had poſſeſt themſelues of diuers places) were by the valor & good conduct; chiefly of the Earle Gaſton beaten back and repulſt, Cadillac being the laſt place that hee tooke from them: In all which warres, hee was faithfully and dilligently accompanied and aided by his brother Peter de Foix Viſcount of Lautier, the original of the renowned houſe of Lautrec, faither to Iohn de Lautrec Poſthumus, from whom did ſpring Odet de Foix, he that was the famous captaine in the warres of Lombardy and Naples. Anare de Aſperaut, and Thomas called L' Eſcut: Henry de Lautrec was ſonne to Odet. Charles the ſeuenth did ſo greatly fauor the Earle Gaſton de Foix, as he gaue in marriage to his eldeſt ſonne, called Gaſton, like him, his daughter Magdalen. At the arrainement of the Duke of Alançon at Vandoſme by King Lewis the eleuenth, he ſupplied the place of the Earle of Tholouſa in the ranke of the Peers of France, the which preeminence hath remained vpon ſuch occaſions in the houſe of Foix, the Lordſhips whereof were by him encreaſed with the Vicounty of Narbona, and with the lands of Capdolat & other purchaſes, and in the end with the crowne of Nauarre, by his marriage with Donna Leonora of Arragon, daughter to King Iohn, of whom we now treat: of this man iſſued the poſterity which followes: Gaſton who ſhould haue ſucceeded him, who (as we haue ſaid) died at Liborne at the tilting which was made at the comming of Charles Duke of Guyenne, brother to King Lewis the eleuenth, left heires behind him, Francis Phœbus, and Catherine his children: then Iohn Lord of Narbone from whom iſſued Gaſton Viſcount of Narbone, and ſince Duke of Nemours, who won the battaile of Rauenna, where neuertheleſſe he died, and Germain, ſecond wife to Fernand King of Spaine: of Gaſton and Elenor were borne, the third ſonne named Peter who was Cardinall, and the fourth, Iames, a valiant Knight, who died in the ſeruice of King Lewis the eleuenth: more fiue daughters, Mary wife to William Marquis of Montferrat, Ioane wife to the Earle of Armagnac, Marqueritte wife to Francis Duke of Brittaine, mother to Queene Anne of France, Catherine married to the Earle of Candale, who had three children, the eldeſt of whom was Earle of Candall, then an Archbiſhop of Bourdeaux and a daughter called Anne married to the King of Hungary: the fifth daughter of Gaſton and Elenor, was called Elenor, who died vnmarried.

Genealogie of Nauarre.

17 Couenants betwixt King Iohn and D. Leonora his daughter.

Now let vs returne to the controuerſie betweene Gaſton de Foix, father to theſe, and his father in law King Iohn. Hee following the good aduice of his friends and ſeruants, and hauing acquainted the King with his intent by meſſage, the King and D. Leonora his daughter, met at a day appointed at Olita, Gaſton being abſent in France, where they agreed

A agreed vpon theſe Articles following: Firſt, that the townes, cities, communalties of Nauarre, nobility and others of what Eſtate and condition ſoeuer, ſhould without contradiction acknowledge and obey King Iohn as their King during his life. That the Earle Gaſton and the Princeſſe his wife ſhould promiſe to maintaine the priuiledges, lawes and liberties of the Kingdome, as they had beene in times paſt. That the three Eſtates ſhould take the oth of alleageance, and doe homage to the Princes the husband and wife, and acknowledge them for their naturall King and Queene after the deceaſe of king Iohn, notwithſtanding any other act to the contrary: that the married couple ſhould irreuocably be perpeturall gouernors of the Kingdome during the Kings life, their go-
B uernment onely to ceaſe, when the King in perſon ſhould bee in the Realme: That neither the King nor the married Princes ſhould ingage the Kingdome in whole, nor in part: That the three Eſtates ſhould endeauor that the King and the Princes ſhould accompliſh and keepe all that had beene concluded, and oppoſe againſt them that ſhould infring them.

The ſame promiſe ſhould be made and ſworne to by the King and the Princes, and that for the peace of the Kingdome, all crimes and offences, how heinous ſoeuer, ſhould be generally pardoned that had beene committed til the Kings preſent comming into the country, re-eſtabliſhing by full power and royall authority, euery man in his honor; goods, and reputation, reuoking and adnulling all ſentences and proceedings made to
C the contrary. That all places, townes and caſtles, which had beene taken from one an other, all offices as wel Eccleſiaſticall as ſecular & vſurped ſince the taking of the caſtle of Morillo, ſhould bee reſtored to the firſt lawfull poſſeſſors thereof, within the terme of ſeuen monthes, excepting the moueables and frutes which were ſpent, reiecting al guifts, grants and ingagements made by the King, Princes, or any other: Neuertheleſſe herein was not to be comprehended the differences betwixt the Earle of Lerin, and Lord Iohn of Beaumont, and Charles de Artieda, againſt D. Pedro of Peralta Conſtable of Nauarre, and the Marſhall of Nauarre, who were enioyned to ſubmit themſelues to the Kings obedience, within twelue daies after the publication hereof; to the end to determine thoſe ſtaſes by way of Iuſtice, vpon paine, doing the contrary, to be held as contumelious re-D bels, and for ſuch to be purſued and puniſhed, as diſturbers of the publike quiet: That all thoſe who had beene wrongfully impriſoned, ſince the ſurceance made by the Archbiſhop of Saragoſſa the Kings ſonne, in his name, and the Princes, ſhould bee releaſed and ſet at liberty, paying their charges: That the truce granted by them or their captaines ſhould bee kept as well to ſtrangers as the naturall ſubiects, both in their perſons and goods. That whatſoeuer had beene taken, and retaken, to the preiudice of the ſame truce, ſhould be reſtored and deliuered without other ranſome then paying their expences: that the promiſes and obligations made in writing, or by word of mouth, betwixt the naturall ſubiects, by reaſon of ſuch priſes made ſince the ſurceaſe, ſhould be of no effect; and the Eccleſiaſticall ordinaries ſhould bee admoniſhed to abſolue them E from their othes made in that behalfe, enioyning euery one to ſet the priſoners at liberty within fifteene daies, and not to ganeſay this preſent treaty, vpon forefeiture of two thouſand royalls of gold to the Kings coffers: As concerning the caſtle of Leguin, belonging to the Prior of Rounceual, which had beene taken before, with great ſtore of goods belonging as well to the prior as the Monaſtery, they who had taken the ſame goods were enioyned to reſtore them, or the value thereof, ſeeing the Prior had alway beene a faithfull ſeruant to the King and the Princes: That the King and the Princes ſhould ſollemnely ſweare to cauſe all the heads and Articles aboue mentioned to bee effectually obſerued and kept in euery point.

Theſe things agreed vpon were publiſhed in the caſtle or pallace of Olita vpon
F Thurſday the thirtith day of May in the yeere 1471. and were receiued by the ſecretary Iohn of Saint Iordi: the Biſhop of Oleron taking the oth, with promiſe made by the Princeſſe Donna Leonora, to cauſe the Earle her husband to confirme theſe Articles, an authenticall coppy whereof, ſealed with the Earles ſeale, ſhe would ſend to the King her father. At which were preſent the Biſhop of Oleron, Pedro Lord of Ros the Earles Ambaſſador, Frier Bernard, Hugh de Rocabertin, captaine of the Caſtle of Ampoſta,

Roderigo

Roderigo de Robolledo, Gomes Suares of Figueroa, and I*ohn Payes* the Kings Vicechancel- A lor. After that, the Princeſſe, hauing ample procuration from her husband, dated at the Bathes of Caudes Aigues in the valley of Doſan, ſworne in his name to the Biſhop of Oleron to obſerue the aboue named couenants, in the preſence of the captaine of the caſtle of Ampoſta, I*ohn Payes* the Vicechancellor, and D. Fernand of Baquedan vicekar generall of the Church of Pampelona. All theſe capitulations were not of force to ceaſe the troubles of Nauarre, which continued along time after.

13 Caſtile. As concerning the affaires of Caſtile, King Henry, after reſolution taken about the marriages of the Princeſſe his ſiſter, and of Donna I*oane* in Portugall, beeing deſirous B to ſet downe ſome good forme of gouernment in his Kingdome, called a Parliament at the city of Ocagna, where the deputies of the townes and communalties did meete, except thoſe of Andaluzia, the great Lords of which Prouince were not well pleaſed with the dealings of the Maiſter of Saint Iames, whereat the King was much mooued, but moſt of al, whē he vnderſtood of the marriag which was intended, againſt his wil, betwixt the Princeſſe his ſiſter, and the new King of Sicil, Fernand of Arragon, which made him now more then before, deſirous to aduance Donna I*oane*, whom hee ſtil aduo ved for his daughter, notwithſtanding he hated the Queene her mother, by reaſon of her bad life, which he himſelfe had taught her: wherefore with his owne hand hee wrote a letter to the Pope, intreating him not confirme the ſucceſſion of the Kingdome of Caſtile, ſworne to the Princeſſe I*ſabella*, but to grant it to Donna I*oane*: Hee wrote alſo to his a- C gent at Rome, Doctor Roderigo de Vergara, borne in Logrogna, and likewiſe to King Alphonſo of Portugal, to the end that he ſhould make the like requeſt to the Pope: this was not done ſo ſecretly, but that the Archbiſhop of Siuill had notice thereof, who had it not beene for feare of the Maiſter of Saint Iames, who delt in this buſineſſe, would willingly haue daſhed that matter. The King leauing Ocagna came to madrid, where hee found Iohn Fernandes Galindo, captaine and gouernor of the fort of Madrid, and keeper of his treaſures ſicke to death, at whoſe entreaty, hee gaue the charge of the fort, and of that which was in it to Andrew of Cabrera his Steward, whom hee did dayly aduance, and made partaker of his greateſt ſecrets. The city of Leon, about that time, had like to haue beene ſurpriſed by Diego Fernand de Quignones, Earle of Luna; but the practize D being diſcouerd, Aluar Garcia, Citizen of the ſame towne, with whom the Earle had intelligence, was taken and beheaded as a traitor. At the intreaty of the Maiſter of Saint I*ames*, the King returned to Ocagna, where hee gaue the title of Marquis of Villena to Diego Lopes P*acheco* his eldeſt ſonne, a braue knight, who ſoone after Married the Counteſſe of Saint Stephen de Gormis, daughter to Don I*ohn* de Luna, Earle of Saint Stephen, and grand-child to the Conſtable Aluar de Luna, who was in the keeping of the Maiſter of Saint Iames, who was at the ſame time confirmed in his Maiſterſhip by the Pope and poſſeſſed more riches then any Lord of Spaine. The King of Portugall ſollicited by King Henry about the marriage of the Princeſſe Donna I*ſabella*, ſent his Ambaſſadors, the Archbiſhop of Lisbone, and two other Lords, who were at the Court more then E twenty daies without concluding any thing by reaſon that the Princeſſe had placed her affection vpon Prince Fernand, and ſo returned home, leauing the King highly diſpleaſed with his ſiſter, who diſſolued the Parliament at Ocagna, not ſuffering the peeres to ſweare to his ſiſters ſucceſſion in the kingdome.

Diego Lopes de Pacheco ſonne to the Maiſter of Saint Iames, made Marquis of Villena.

14 The King of Caſtile's voiage into Andaluzia. The aſſembly at Ocagna beeing broken vppe, the king beeing very deſirous to pacifie the Country of Andaluzia, which was full of diſſentions, hee went thither in perſon, leauing for Viceroies in Valiodolit, the Earle of Benauent and Don Pedro de Velaſco, with the Preſident and Chauncery; the Princeſſe Donna I*ſabella* remayning at Ocagna, who promiſed not to diſpoſe of her marriage till the returne of the King and the Councell. F

There went with the king, the Mr. of St. Iames, the Archbiſhop of Siuil, the Biſhop of Siguença and others of the councel, but the Archbiſhop remained ſick at Ciudad-real: the king came to Iaen, where hee was receiued & entertained by the Conſtable Michael Lucas d'Irançu, who proteſted to him that he would not ſuffer any one of the rebels in his traine to come into the city: wherefore, the Mr. of St. Iames ſearing to be accoũted one of

A the number, ſtaied at Oſuna; but Roderigo of Vlloa, beeing more fooliſh hardy then the reſt, receiued the diſgrace to be rudely repulſt by the Conſtable, who couched his launce againſt his breſt ſending him thence with many bitter ſpeeches: this Conſtable was very faithfull to the King his Maiſter, and was a liberall and generous Knight. To Pedro Gonçales de Mendoza Biſhop of Siguença, and to the whole houſe of Mendoza, who entred with the king, the Conſtable gaue openly a ſingular teſtimony of their fidelity with a loude voice as they paſſed thorow the gate. The King and the Lords of his traine, were for the ſpace of three daies feaſted at Iaen, from whence he went to Caſtro del Rio, where D. Pedro of Cordoua Earl of Cabra met him with a thouſand horſe, bringing with

D. Michael Lucas de Iranſo Conſtable of Caſtile a free and Generous Knight.

B him his children, and Martin Alphonſo Lord of Alcaudete his ſonne in law, who were all of them faithfull and good ſeruants to the King: With this company the King went to Cordoua, wherein remained Alphonſo de Aiguilar, one of the faction of the Maiſter of Saint Iames, the city gates were opened to him, and Alphonſo in recompence receiued certaine pentions: betwixt whom and the Earle of Cabra had beene old grudges, but the King went about to make them friends: the Gouernment of Cordoua, which in times paſt did belong to the Earle of Cabraes predeceſſors, was giuen vnto him, and the office likewiſe of Marſhall. Vpon a ſeditious petition preſented by thoſe of Cordoua, mentioning that Peter Earle of Cabra, and Martin Alphonſo his ſonne-in-law, and Alphonſo de Aguilar, ſhould deliuer vp certaine places belonging to the city and commu-

C nalty of Cordoua held by them during the troubles, it was determined that they ſhould giue caution for the deliuery of them by a certaine day: this was a tricke of Don Alphonſo de Aguilar, who ſtirred vp the people to conſtraine the Earle, and his ſonne-in-law, to reſtore that which they had vſurped, hee himſelfe perceiuing, that he could no longer hold the places, which hee had taken during the trouble, the which did greatly nouriſh and increaſe the hatred which the Earle and his ſonne-in-law did beare vnto him.

Whileſt the King lay at Cordoua, there arriued Ambaſſadors from the French King Lewis the eleuenth, the Cardinall of Albj, beeing the chiefe: the effect of his meſſage was, to breake the league betwixt the King of Caſtile and the Engliſh, which was very

D preiudiciall to King Lewis his Maiſter: After audience, he obtained what he demaunded, the Maiſter of Saint Iames working the matter, who perhaps was a faithfuller ſeruant to the French King, then to his Maiſter the King of Caſtile. This yeere 1469. died Friar Lopes of Barjentes Biſhop of Cuenca, the Biſhoprike of Leon beeing likewiſe voide, Anthony de Veneris the Popes Legat had that of Cuenca, and that of Leon was giuen to Doctor Roderigo de Vergara, the Kings agent at Rome.

The Princeſſe Donna I*ſabella*, during the Kings ſtay in Andaluzia was ruled by the aduice of the Admirall and the Archbiſhop of Toledo, and forgetting the promiſe which ſhee had made to the King her brother, ſhee inuented meanes to ſurpriſe the towne of Arcualo, held in the name of the Earle of Playſance by Aluaro de Beacamont, with

E whom ſhe practized: but ſhee was diſapointed of her purpoſe, which was diſcouered by the Earle, who preuented the Princeſſe, and committed the captaine to priſon. The Earle poſſeſt this place, as a pawne, engaged vnto him for a certaine ſumme of money, when the Infant Alphonſo was choſen King. The Princeſſe being deceiued in her hope, came to Madrigall, and from thence to Valliodolit, vnto whom the King ſent the Cardinall of Albi the French Kings Ambaſſador, and the Archbiſhop of Siuill, to poſſeſſe her with a diſtaſte of Fernand King of Sicill, which marriage did highly diſpleaſe him, fearing that by reaſon of the warres of Cattalonia, and former matters betwixt him and King I*ohn* of Arragon his father, ſome great loſſe might happen to Caſtile by that match.

F The Cardinall, and the Archbiſhop did their beſt, and made offer of a marriage betwixt her and Charles Duke of Guyenne, brother to the French King, but ſhee made no account thereof, perſiſting in her firſt reſolution, wherefore they returned backe without effecting that which they went about: the king iourneying thorough Andaluzia, was continually ſollicited by the Maiſter of Saint Iames (vnto whom he could deny nothing) to remoue and diſplace the captaines, gouernors & other officers of towns and caſtles,

This Maiſter of Saint Iames gotten out to diſplace the captaines of the Garriſons in Andaluzia, and to place therein ſuch as were at his deuotion.

to the end to place therein ſuch as were of his owne faction, which was granted to him at Eccia, where hee diſplaced Martin of Cordoua and put in Doctor Garcia Lopes of Madrid, one of his councel, and Frederick Manrique, and to recompence Martin, he aſſigned him certaine pentions hard to be recouered. And thinking to doe the like to Hernandes of Narbaez, the old Gouernor of Antiquera, he found himſelfe deceiued, for the Gouernor would not ſuffer the King to enter into his Fort with aboue fifteene men, and the reſidew of his traine were conſtrained to take vp their lodging in the country villages thereabouts.

These things did not diſpleaſe the King, who albeit he knew very well, that it was an vniuſt thing to diſplace the captaines that had beene faithfull vnto him, at a traitors motion, yet he had not the courage to reiect the importunities of the Maiſter, who would haue had his friend Alphonſo de Aguilar to haue commanded in Antiquera. The King being come to Archidonna had conference with a Moore of Malaga called Alquizote, an enemy to the King of Granada, who preſented him with certaine Barbary horſes and other Mooriſh preſents, vnto whom the King promiſed fauour and aſſiſtance againſt the King of Granado, as to his vaſſall. From thence he came to Carmona, where he remained a ſpace: In the ſame towne there was three caſtles, two of which were at the commandement of the Maiſter of Saint Iames, but the third was held by Gomes Mendes de Sotomajor, a Knight wholy leagued with thoſe of Siuill, whom the Maiſter had a great deſire to diſpoſſeſſe, and did greatly importune the King to conſent therevnto, and hee did promiſe Gomes Mendes a large recompence, the which hee refuſed, ſaying, that hee could not leaue that place without the conſent of the Knights of Siuill, vnto whom hauing declared the wrong that the King would haue done to him (onely to ſatisfie the Maiſter of Saint Iames) the Duke of Medina Sidonia, and Roderigo Ponce of Leon, Pedro de Eſtuniga, & Alphonſo Henriques Gouernor of the frontiers, ſent to aduertize the King, that they could not conſent to ſo vnreaſonable a matter, hurtfull to the crowne, as to alienate from the ſame, the town of Carmona; which the King at that time tooke in good part, but afterward hee was ouer-ruled by the Maiſter of Saint Iames, and would haue conſtrained Gomes Mendes to haue left the ſame place: wherefore the Duke of Medina, and the other Knights with the Inhabitants of Siuill, armed themſelues, and aſſailed the caſtle of Triana, from whence hauing driuen Hernandes Arias of Sahauedra, they placed therein an other captaine, then, their power increaſinge, they came into the field, giuing the King and the Maiſter of Saint Iames new matter to thinke on, who with the whole Court left Carmona and came to Alcala of Guadiaira, and from thence the King ſent to command the Duke to diſarme himſelfe and to ſend away his people: who anſwered, that hee had taken armes for his ſeruice, as alſo to defend himſelfe from his enemy the Maiſter of Saint Iames: The Maiſter fearing that this fire would kindle to his owne hurt, ſought meanes to conferre with the Duke, which the other Lords and Knights, with thoſe of Siuill would not agree vnto, ſaying that the Maiſter was a crafty wicked man, and that their talke would come to no good effect, and ſo ſent backe to the King, intreating him not to alienat Carmona from the crowne, and to confirme Gomes Mendes in his captaineſhip. The King, to auoide farther miſchiefes, made means himſelf, that the Duke and the Maiſter might talke together betweene Siuill and Cantillana. At this meeting it was onely determined, that the King ſhould enter into Siuill, and that the Maiſter ſhould ſtay at Cantillana, where they ſhould agree vpon thoſe things.

20 The King beeing receiued with great ioy into the city of Siuill, whileſt hee remaines there, about the appeaſing of thoſe differences, the Princeſſe Iſabella his ſiſter, being continually ſollicited by her Maiſter Pantaleon Guttieres of Cardegna to harken to the marriage of Fernand Prince of Girona, the heire of Arragon, and to reiect that of Portugall, and Duke Charles of France, with the King of Englands brother who was an other ſutor, at the laſt ſhe gaue her full conſent therevnto: wherefore the Archbiſhop of Toledo and the Admirall D. Frederike, wholy addicted to the ſeruice of this Princeſſe, and likewiſe to Prince Fernand King of Sicill, thinking that this marriage was moſt conuenient and proffitable for the affaires of the Kingdome, did conſent and conclude therevpon, cauſing the Bridegroome in a diſguiſed habit to come into Caſtile, whether hee was con-

A conducted by D. Pedro Manriques Earle of Treuigno, who afterwards was Duke of Nagera, and others, who brought him to Valiodolit. Where beeing preſented before the Princeſſe amongſt others, very few (nor yet ſhe her ſelfe) did know him: but her faithfull ſeruant Guttiere de Cardegna ſhewed her him, ſaying in his Spaniſh tongue, Eſſe es. This is he: to whom the Princeſſe readily replied and Eſſe ſhall be thine armes: for this cauſe, the houſe and poſterity of this Knight, beareth yet to this day, amidſt there blazons and deuiſes an S S: The royall aſpect and graue countenance of Prince Fernand did ſoone certifie the Princeſſe that it was he, therefore without any more delay, the marriage was ſollemnized and accompliſhed at Valiodolit, the eighteenth of October 1469. Donna Iſabella of Caſtil. marrieth Fernand of Arragon.

B in the houſe of Iohn de Bivero, where at this day the Kings Chancery is kept, King Henry not knowing thereof, who would rather haue hindred it then otherwiſe, for the ſmall good which he wiſhed to King Iohn of Arragon his father.

Theſe newes were preſently carried to the Maiſter of Saint Iames, who wrote to the King that he ſhould forthwith without delay come to Cantillana, the which he did, not knowing the cauſe why he was ſo haſtily ſent for: there, to his great griefe, he vnderſtood of his ſiſters marriage: wherefore vpon the inſtant hee departed out of Andaluzia, leauing thoſe of Siuill ſome-what mooued, vntill they knew the cauſe: and taking the ready way to Trugillo, hee was there ſtaied, by the refuſall of Garcia de Seſe captaine of the fort of that city, who would not yeeld the ſame place vp vnto him, the which hee

C ment to haue beſtowed vpon the Earle of Playſance, in recompence of the good ſeruice which hee had done vnto him. This captaine had agreed with the townes-men (who had foreſeene the Kings intent) to hold out and not to permit the ſame to bee alienated from the crowne, and giuen to a priuate Lord. The King perceiuing that hee could not gratifie the Earle with Trugillo, confirmed vnto him, and left for Inheritance to him and his heires for euer the towne of Arcualo, which was pawn'd vnto him, with title of Duke, doing thereby manyfeſt wrong to the widow Queene Iſabella, vnto whom that towne did belong.

Being at Trugillo, Gomes de Caceres Maiſter of Alcantara came vnto him, and craued pardon for his offences, the which hee freely obtained: and beſides that hee

D was confirmed in the gouernment of Badajos, and Caceres, which hee had vſurped during the reuolts: and at his intreaty, and of the Maiſter of Saint Iames, hee gaue to his brother Guttiere de Caceres the city of Coria, with the title of Earle. To Alphonſo Monroy, who had beene faithfull vnto him, and followed the warres at his owne charges, hee gaue many great guifts: ſo this King did good both to his friends and enemies. At the ſame place of Trugillo, hee receiued letters from the Princeſſe his ſiſter, by the which ſhee gaue him reaſon for her marriage with Prince Fernand, and for her refuſall of the others, intreating him to beleeue that it was done, for the good quiet and commodity of the Kingdome of Caſtile in time to come, and to aſſure him both of her good will and her husbands, who would for euer remaine his affectio-

E nate ſeruants, without inclyning to any thing that ſhould diſpleaſe him; beſeeching him to conſider with what hearty affection ſhee loued and honoured him, ſeeing that when it was in her power to take vpon her the regall dignitie, which was offered her, by the deceaſe of Prince Don Alphonſo, ſhee had refuſed it, and exhorted the confederate Lords to ſerue and honour him as their King: complayning beſides of many other greeuous wrongs offered as well vnto her ſelfe, as to the widow Queene Iſabell her mother yet liuing. The letter being read before the councell, the meſſenger receiued this anſwer, that the King would be ſhortly at Segobia, where all matters ſhould be debated on with reaſon and equity, and in deed the Court remooued thither preſentlie after, where the Ambaſſadors of the Princes Fernand and Donna Iſabella did

F arriue, who were Don Pedro de Baca, and Diego de Ribera, who had brought vp the Infant Don Alphonſo deceaſſed: and on the Archbiſhop of Toledos part, Lewis of Antecana, who beſought the King to approoue the marriage, and to excuſe the Princes, for that they had not acquainted all the great Lords of the Kingdome therewith, who by reaſon that they were deuided into diuerſe factions, could not chooſe thereby but nouriſh greater occaſions of diſcord: As for themſelues, they wiſhed nothing more, then to be obedient vnto him, and for ſuch to be reputed, deſiring A to imploy themſelues for the maintenance of the peace of the Kingdome, and adminiſtration of Iuſtice, which in a maner was chaſed away, in ſteed whereof al manner of outrages, extortions and confuſions did reigne. Laſtly they entreated him to appoint ſome place where the Princes might come and viſit him, to the end to certifie him in perſon of their ſincere affection and deſire to doe him ſeruice.

Matrimoniall Articles betwixt Fernand of Arragon, and Iſabel of Caſtile.

Beſides theſe demaunds, they declared vnto the King the Articles and Couenants, wherevpon this marriage was contracted, which were theſe.

ſonne to the Sea of Rome, and to honour and well intreat the Eccleſiaſticall Perſons and B Miniſters of the ſame.

2 That hee ſhould honour and acknowledge King Henry for his King (if it pleaſed him to accept thereof) and ſhould imploy his perſon and meanes to cauſe all his ſubiects to doe the like.

3 That he ſhould likewiſe honor the widdow Queene Iſabella, mother to the Princeſſe.

4 That he ſhould cauſe Iuſtice to be eſtabliſhed, and ſhould aſſiſt the King therein, ob-

5 That he ſhould endeauor, with his vttermoſt power, to maintaine the peace betwixt the King, Himſelfe and the Princeſſe.

6 That hee ſhould not depart out of the Kingdome of Caſtile, nor carry away the C Princeſſe, nor the children that God ſhould ſend them, eſpecially the Prince his heire, without expreſſe deliberation and conſent of the councell.

7 That in the letters and royall charters, the Prince and the Princeſſe ſhould bee named both together, as well in thoſe which concerned Caſtile and Leon, as thoſe in the Kingdomes and Lands which the Prince now poſſeſſeth, or may enioy hereafter.

8 That the naturall borne of the Kingdome ſhould be admitted into the councel and offices of either of them, with conſent of the Princeſſe.

9 That the Princeſſe ſhould receiue the othes of homage and fidelity, and ſhould haue power to place officers, captaines and guards, in the cities, caſtles and fortreſſes of the Kingdome, as well by her preſently poſſeſſed, as in others, which might hereafter fall D vnto her, placing therein perſons borne in the Kingdome of Caſtile, and appurtenances thereof and none others.

10 That all guifts and pentions granted by the Princeſſe, ſhould bee approued and confirmed by Prince Fernand.

11 That he ſhould not procure the hurt of any one of the Kingdomes of Caſtile and Leon for the occaſion of the warres, quarrels, and outrages paſt, betwixt Caſtile and Arragon.

12 That he ſhould not enterpriſe, nor make warre, league, nor confederacy, with any neighbour King, Lord or Knight of this Kingdome, without the conſent of the Princeſſe, and her councell. E

13 That for the increaſe of the Princeſſe dowry, he ſhould giue to her Borja and Ma-gallon in the Kingdome of Arragon: and in that of Valencia, Elche and Euillen: and in Sicill, Siracuça and Catanea, according as thoſe places had beene aſſigned and giuen from time to time to the Queenes of Arragon.

14. Beſides, that the Princeſſe ſhould euery yeere, during her life, receiue the rents & reuenues of one towne in the ſaid Kingdoms which ſhe ſhould beſt like of, prouided that it were not a capitall or chiefe towne of the Kingdome, or principallity, the gouernors and officers whereof ſhould neuertheleſſe be natiues of the ſame country.

15 And if the Prince ſhould happen to die firſt, the Princeſſe ſhould neuertheleſſe, during her life, enioy thoſe places; after whoſe deceaſe they ſhould returne to the crowne, F and to the heires thereof.

16 And if it ſhould be found, that greater dowries, profits, lands, authority & preeminence had bin giuen to Queene Ioane of Arragon the Princes mother, or to Queene Mary wife to King Alphonſo, daughter to King Henry the Princeſſe grand-father, that the Prince ſhould ſupply that defect within two monthes after.

17 That

17 That within the terme of foure monthes he ſhould giue to the Princeſſe in ready money a hundred thouſand florins of the coyne of Arragon for hir expences, and to beſtow as ſhe pleaſed.

18 That if any warre or ſtrife ſhould ariſe in the Kingdome, the Prince did oblige himſelfe to ſerue in perſon with foure thouſand Launces til the war were ended, and if he ſhould not furniſh ſo many launces, that he ſhould then pay with his owne money, ſuch forces as ſhould ſerue vnder him.

King Henry hauing heard the Ambaſſadors, anſwered, that the buſineſſe being of great conſequence, it was requiſite to aduiſe thereon with mature deliberation, and that after he had conſulted with the great Lords of his Court and councell, hee would then anſwere their meſſage, and ſo ſent them backe.

In the meane ſpace a notable Inſolency was committed in Andaluzia, which cauſed great ſtirres: for albeit that through the Kings meanes and authority it ſeemed that the Biſhop of Siguença, had made an agreement and pacified Alphonſo de Aguilar with the Earle of Cabra and his children, neuertheleſſe their hatred ſlept not in their hearts, ſo as Alphonſo vpon a time hauing inuited to a banquet in the towne-houſe of Cordoua called Caſa del Cabildo, D. Diego the Marſhall of Cordoua, eldeſt ſonne to the Earle, who held the place of Alguazil Major of the ſame city, hee kept him there priſoner, and ſent him away with great indignity, with a ſure guard, to his fort of Cagnete, he tooke alſo his brother Sancho, and kept him priſoner likewiſe, hauing the Magiſtrates of the city at his deuotion: whereof complaints being made to the King, he did write in great choller to Alphonſo, commanding him without delay to releaſe the brethren; otherwiſe hee would come in perſon into Andaluzia and inforce him to doe it, puniſhing him as a rebellious perſon: wherefore the Marſhall was releaſed and ſent to Baena, who reſenting this iniury, wrote a letter to the King full of accuſations, crauing leaue of him to defie his enemy, and to prouoke him to ſingle fight, thereby to conſtraine him to repaire and ſatisfie his honour and reputation: The King hauing heard the meſſenger and read the letter, would by no meanes allow of the combate, becauſe ſundry diſorders ariſe thereof; as alſo for that thoſe matters of Duell or ſingle combate, are contrary both to diuine and humaine lawes, eſpecially betwixt ſubiects belonging to one and the ſelfe ſame Prince, who hath hath power and authority, to bring them to reaſon by way of Iuſtice: herevpon the Marſhall publiſhed infamous libels and declarations, againſt Alphonſo, and he obtained free liberty of the King of Granado to enter the combate in his country, aſſigning Alphonſo to meet in the plaine of Granada, and ſending him a ſafe-conduct from the Moore King: The day appointed for the fight beeing come Alphonſo would not appeare: wherefore after that the Marſhall had made the acts and proteſtations which are accuſtomed in in ſuch caſes, about the ſetting of the Sun, he tooke a picture repreſenting Alphonſo de Aguilar, and hauing tied it to his horſe taile with the face to the ground, he gallopt vp and downe the plaine, dragging it after him; crying aloude: This is the traitor Alphonſo de Aguilar, who durſt not meet me in ſingle fight, nor venture his body againſt mine: Then the King of Granado adiudged him a victor, and condemned Alphonſo: diuerſe draughts of that picture were afterward ſent to ſundry Lords and Knights of Spaine to Alphonſo's great diſgrace.

Duello granted by the King of Granado to Diego of Cordoua againſt Alphonſo de Aguilar.

The city of Simancas, with the caſtle thereof, were in this meane time ſurpriſed againſt the Kings authority, by the Admirall, wherewith the King was greatly troubled, in regard that the Maiſter of Saint Iames was very ſicke, without whom he was not able to negotiate or reſolue vpon any matter of importance: This yeere King Lewis the eleuenth, demaunded Donna Ioane in marriage for his brother Charles Duke of Guyenne, whoſe Ambaſſadors were put in good hope that it ſhould bee accompliſhed. An other Ambaſſage was ſent to King Henry from the ſame King Lewis, to induce him to ioyne with him about calling of a councell againſt Pope Paul the ſecond: but his councell was of opinion that the King ſhould not medle in a matter ſo diſpleaſing to the Pope, by whom, and by the Sea of Rome his progenitors had beene alwaies fauored, wherefore the Ambaſſadors were anſwered in this manner, that the King would not harken to their requeſt, and that hee did wiſh King Lewis to deſiſt from his purpoſe, and to aſſure him that al the meanes of Spaine ſhould be emploied for Gods vickar, vnto whom King Henry, beſides the dignity which hee held, was particularly obliged, for that he had aided and comforted him in his troubles. At the ſame time the Knights of Alcantara, conducted by the treaſurer Alphonſo de Mont Roy, roſe in mutiny againſt their Maiſter D. Gomes de Caceres, and purſued him to death: ſo as after they had taken from him Badajos, Alcantara, and Valence of Alcantara, they fought with him and ouercame him in battaile, ſo as hee could neuer after raiſe himſelfe againe: his brother Guttiere Earle of Coria, hauing for his ſuccor demaunded ſouldiars of the Earle of Alua D. Garci Aluares of Toledo his father in law, engaged to him the city of Coria for money to pay them, who being gathered togither in great numbers, their paſſage was hindred at the riuer of Taio by the dilligence of Alphonſo de Mont Roy, and the other Knights his aduerſaries, who brake all the bridges, and ſunke all the boates, ſo as they could not paſſe: wherefore they returned without doing any thing, and Coria remained to the Earle of Alua. By this euill hap, the Maiſter wholy ruined and in diſpaire, died ſoone after in great pouerty and miſery: the Maiſterſhip whereof was begged of the Pope, by Donna Leonora Pimencell, Counteſſe of Playſance, for her ſonne D. Iohn de Eſtuniga. The King did willingly conſent to the purſute of the Counteſſe, whom he honored aboue all others, and allowed and confirmed the Popes Bul. And albeit that the treaſurer, Alphonſo of Montroy, and the Knights did oppoſe themſelues againſt ſuch an irregular election, the Counteſſe who had more then a womans heart, tooke Alcantara with other places by force, and delt in ſuch manner, as her ſonne poſſeſt the Maiſterſhip: and was the laſt that had the title of Maiſter of that Order.

Roderigo Biſhop of Zamora at that time floriſhed in Spaine for his learning: but whileſt the Prelats and Gouernors of the Church gaue themſelues ouer to worldly greatneſſe, and to nouriſh and ſow diſcord and diuiſions, Religion it ſelfe was mannaged according to euery mans deuotion. There is in the Prouince of Guipuſcoa in the mountaine of Aloya, in the territory of Ognate a Couent of Friars, the originall, whereof began about this time: for it is reported that a certaine herdſman called Roderigo Balçategui who dwelt in Vribarri, keeping his goates vpon that mountaine, went down the ſame hil into a rocky place, which was nere to no high-way, where he found by chance an Image of the Virgin Mary vpon a green thorn. This ſeemed vnto him a wonderful matter becauſe of the deſertneſſe of the place: therefore he fell to ſaying his Aue Maries, and other ſuch like praiers as he had beene taught: then night drawing on hee couered the Image with boughes and other things, and went home to his village, and told this great wonder: The rumor thereof being ſpred thorow the towne of Ognate, the Miniſters of Iuſtice, the Clergy, and the common people, being guided by the ſhepheard, went to the ſame place, where they found in a hedge a very little Image of the Virgin Mary, holding her Sonne in her armes, before which they all kneeled downe and beganne to ſing many ſongs and hymnes, thanking God that had ſent them ſo pretious a iewell, thinking it a great miracle to haue found it in ſo deſert and remote a place: wherefore they conſulted together about building a Chappell there, and whileſt prouiſion was made for the manner and matter of that building, they reſolued to encloſe it with boords, notwithſtanding it was ſeated very diſcomodiouſly, they not daring to vndertake to tranſport it from thence, nor to build an houſe for it in any other place then where it firſt appeared, and they named it the hermitage of our Lady of Arançaçu, which is to ſay, of the thorne; the which in ſhort time was held for a very religious place, beeing viſited, and indowed by diuerſe deuout people. Wherefore thoſe of Ognate and Mondragon, which are the neereſt places to it, ſeeing that great numbers of pilgrims came thither, they beganne to make the waies plaine; and to cut the rocke to make the paſſage thither more eaſie. Vpon this beginning, grounded vpon the ſimple credulity of a ſort of rude people, it came to paſſe that this Image beeing famous and greatly viſited, certaine of the religious of La Merced were greatly deſirous to build a Couent there, wherein one of them named Frier Peter of Ariaran did greatly imploy himſelfe, whoſe mother was ſo ſuperſtitious, as ſhee dedicated her whole life to the ſeruice of this Couent: but theſe fathers being kept there a certaine time, as well by the almes of the good people of the country

The people of Ognate ſuperſtitious.

A country thereabouts as alſo by the bounty of the pilgrims, in the end by reaſon of the extreame cold of the winter, and barrennes of the place, they grew weary and left it: in whoſe roomes came certaine religious people of the third Order of Saint Francis, or Tercerones (as they call them) who did enlarge the Couent begonne by the Friers of La Merced, who were by the Popes prouided of diuerſe pardons and indulgencies for thoſe which ſhould viſit it, and doe them any good: now, in the reigne of the Catholike King and Queene Fernand and Iſabella, vpon the occaſion of reforming the religions of Spaine, theſe Friers Tercerons were admoniſhed by this Obſeruantines to turne to their rule: which is, ſay they, the true rule of Saint Francis, which they refuſed, and being vrg-

Friers tranſormed to Iacobins.

B ed therevnto by way of Iuſtice; theſe fathers reſolued to giue ouer their firſt religion, and did put on the habit of the Iacobins, or Friers Prechers of Saint Dominike: then there aroſe an other ſtrife betwixt the Friers of Saint Francis, and the Dominicans, about the poſſeſſion of this Couent, the Friers ſaying that it belonged vnto them, and to none others, ſeeing that the brethren of their Order had held it ſo long a time without contradiction of thoſe of La Merced: Therefore they beganne by ordinary and extraordinary meanes to contend about this poſſeſſion, and at the laſt fell to blowes: but the Dominicans being vpheld by the Inhabitants of Oguate, the friers withdrew themſelues, not attempting it any more by ſuch meanes, then they beganne their ſute about it at Rome, whether they ſent for their ſoliciter, a frier called Martin Garibay, who vſed ſuch

C dilligence, as the right was iudged to the brethren of his order, and the Couent reſtored to the Obſeruant friers: So at the returne of friar Martin into Spaine, who brought with him the execution of that ſentence, the Dominicans came forth, and left the poſſeſſion to their aduerſaries, who at this preſent doe enioy it, and haue greatly augmented it with building; and it is ſaid, that it is an harbour and retreat for many afflicted people ſpecially of Marriners, who come thither to pay their vowes: to the great commodity of the friers: theſe exercizes of religion are greatly vſed in Spain: but in the yeere 1552. vpon the ſixth of December, the whole Cloiſter, with the lodgings and other buildings were burnt downe to the ground by caſualty: but the fire touched not the Church which they account for a great miracle.

D This yeere 1469. died Don Pedro Fernandes of Velaſco Earle of Haro who was reputed to bee a Knight that led the moſt Chriſtian life of any other of his time, in teſtimony whereof the Spaniards write that hee did build the Monaſtery of Pomar, where hee made three of his daughters Nunnes, with an hoſpitall where twelue Gentlemen, falne into pouerty, ſhould be honorably entertained, and a Chappell for the buriall of him and his: liuing afterward very retiredly in Medina de Pomar, eſchewing the daungers and troubles of this world: theſe religious workes are practized in Spaine, by the great Lords that are rich, when they are become old and haue many children. Now his ſonne Don Pedro of Velaſco, oftentimes named in this Hiſtory, ſucceeded in the Earledome.

Religious deeds of Pedro Fernandes de Velaſco, Earle of Haro.

E But returning to the Hiſtory of King Henry, who beeing come to Segobia, the abſence of the Maiſter of Saint Iames, who was extreamely ſicke of a quartan feuer, did greatly trouble him, for without him hee could doe nothing: therefore it was thought fit, that for their better conferring together, the King ſhould come to Madrid, whether the Maiſter beeing very weake was brought, the King and the whole Court going forth to meet him, not without the wonder of diuerſe, which thought it a ſtrange matter to ſee this Prince, ſo much to abaſe himſelfe to Iohn de Pacheco, who notwithſtanding that hee was ſicke, yet all matters paſſed thorough his hands, and nothing was concluded on without him. About the ſame time died Don Lewis de la Cerde, who had held Eſcalona all the time of the troubles, and appointed at his death,

F that his people ſhould yeeld it vp to the King: the Maiſter of Saint Iames, demaunded this place and obtained it: and becauſe the ſouldiars of the deceaſſed, did ſay that they would not deliuer it to any other but to the King himſelfe, hee came thether in perſon, and receiued the towne, and gaue it forthwith to the maiſter of Saint Iames: ſo as all that which had beene taken from Aluar de Luna, Maiſter of Saint Iames, fell to this man.

Contempt of Iuſtice in theſe daiesin Caſtile.

In theſe daies the great Lords of Spaine grew ſo licentious, as he which was ſtrongeſt, A would right himſelfe, the King nor his lawes beeing in no ſort feared nor reuerenced.

Quarrel betwixt the Earles of Benauent and Lemos.

There was a quarrell betwixt the Earles of Benauent, Lemos, and the Vicont of Vaçan, about the towne of Matilla, poſſeſſed by the Earle of Lemos, the Earle of Luna laboured to reconcile them, and to bring them to talke togither; but he of Benauent came thither ſo well accompanied, as hee tooke the Vicount priſoner, and ſent him away to Benauent, then he tooke the towne of Matilla by force, and reſtored to Garcia of Toledo, Biſhop of Aſtorga, certaine places which had beene vſurped vpon him. The fort of Çanales was likewiſe taken from the Archbiſhop of Toledo by a captaine called Peter Bermudes of the Kings party, who was nothing ſorry therefore. In Biſcay and B

Canales taken from the Archbiſhop of Toledo.

Guipuſcoa, the factions of Gamboinnes and Ognazines grew outragious, the chiefe heads whereof were Peter Abendagno and Iohn Alphonſo of Murica, whereof followed ſo many murthers, rapes, and other cruell and wicked acts, as the King, at the requeſt of them of the country, ſent D. Pedro of Velaſco the new Earle of Haro thither, with power and authority to finde out and puniſh the offenders, and to reduce thoſe two Prouinces into a quiet and peaceable Eſtate. The Earle vpon due information made, banniſhed for euer out of Guipuſcoa and Biſcay, the two ring-leaders of theſe factions, who vpon paine of death and confiſcation of their goods, ſhould neuer more ſet foote in thoſe countries, and beſides he cauſed diuerſe theeues and murtherers to bee executed. Wee haue declared heretofore, how that the confederate Lords, deſiring to draw the Earle C of Alua to their league, had giuen him in hoſtage, for the performance of the capitulations made betwixt them, the townes of Montalban, and the Archbiſhops bridge, which place the Marquis of Villena Maiſter of Saint Iames (who was now rid of his feuer, and ruled the King more then before) deſiring to draw from him, he vſed ſuch means with the Earle as he was contented to deliuer thoſe townes vnto him, the Archbiſhop of Siuill being a third man, and arbitrator betwixt them. They promiſed the Earle that the King ſhould giue him the title of Duke of Alua, and Earle of Barco: and beſides, in regard he was poſſeſſed of the city of Coria, pawned to him by his ſonne in law, deceaſſed, they would be a means to haue it confirmed to him with the title of Marquis thereof, vpon this condition that he ſhould deliuer vp Montalban & the Archbiſhops bridge D which the Earle agreeing to, the Maiſter of Saint Iames ſent him the Kings letters-patents for the confirmation of his titles: and ſo they two remained friends. Wherefore D. Garcia Aluares of Toledo was euer after called Duke of Alua, Earle of Barca, and Marquis of Coria. The ordinary inuaſions and ſpoiles made by the Moores vpon the frontiers of Andaluzia in theſe confuſions, by reaſon that there was ſmall or no reſiſtance at all in that part of the Kingdome, mooued the Archbiſhop of Toledo, and the great Lords of Spaine earneſtly to ſollicite the King to call an aſſembly of the chiefe men of the Kingdome, where there ſhould aſſiſt the Maiſter of Saint Iames, the Dukes of Areualo, Alua and Albuquerque, the Admirall and the Marquis of Santillana, the Earles of Benauent and Treuigno, the Popes Nuntio, the Archbiſhops of Toledo and Siuill, and E the Biſhops of Siguença, Burgos and Coria, who ſhould aduiſe of ſome fit expedient to remedy ſo many inconueniences, and make Iuſtice to floriſh againe in the realmes of Caſtile. The ſame requeſt was afterwards made by the Princes D. Fernand and Donna Iſabella, and by the Deputies of the cities and communalties, vniuerſities, orders of religious men, and the Colledges of Churchmen, to call the aſſembly in ſome city or town, vnder the ſafegard of foure great Lords, there for to make ſome good concluſion with a common conſent: and if the commiſſioners ſhould not agree, that the deciſion of the whole matter might bee put to the iudgement of foure wiſe religious perſons, choſen ont of the Orders of the Chartreux, Saint Francis, Saint Dominike and Saint Ierome, vnto theſe demaunds, made with ſo great inſtance by the States of Caſtile, the King F made none other anſwere, but that hee would thinke vpon it and prouide for it accordingly by the aduice of his councell.

Muley

Muley Albohacen, the nineteenth King of Granado.

IN the meane ſpace the Moores, of whom wee haue ſpoken, did waſt and ſpoyle the countrey of Andaluſia. They were commaunded at that time by Muley Albohacen king 24 Moores.
B of Granado, or as ſome others call him, Haly Muley Hacen, or Hali Aben Açan: for Muley among the Mooriſh Princes, namely, of Marocco, Sus Fez, Vilez, Tremeſſen, Tunis and Eſcuray, is a common title and ſurname, ſignifying, Prince, King, or Lord. This man was ſurnamed the Great, and ſucceeded his father king Iſmael, who died in Almeria, the yeare 1465. after he had raigned twelue yeares: he was a valiant ſouldier, and yet neuertheleſſe for certaine yeares he was at peace with the Chriſtian Princes: hee had two wiues which were married to him, the one a Moore, by whome, among other children, hee had a ſonne called Mahumet Boabdelin, or Boabdile, who raigned after his father, and was called king Chiquito, which is to ſay, little: his ſecond wiues name was Zoroyra, who hauing beene a Chriſtian, did at her husbands inſtigation, returne to the Arabian Sect
C of Mahumet: by her he had two ſonnes, the one called Cad, and the other Nacre, who after the taking of Granado, and the finall conqueſt of that Kingdome, were baptized and tooke new names, to wit, the mother Izabella, and the children, Fernand and Iohn: of whoſe royall race, there is yet at this day ſucceſſion in Caſtile.

The Conſtable Michaell Lucas de Irançu, who kept a garriſon at Iaen, had regard to the dangers that might happen to the kingdome of Caſtile, on that ſide of Andaluſia in Eccia, Don Martin of Cordoua, with others in other places, who were aſſiſted but with weake forces, by Don Pedro of Cordoua, Earle of Cabra, and Martin Alphonſo of Cordoua his ſonne-in-law: but within the kingdome of Granado, the Moore King had to D enemie, a knight named Alquizot, Captaine and Gouernour of Malaga, who had intelligence with King Henry of Caſtile then raigning, vnder whoſe protection hee had put himſelfe, as hath beene heretofore declared, and was held by him as one of his vaſſals: by reaſon whereof Muley Albohacen, (who deſired and ſought by all meanes to driue this Moore out of Malaga) beeing mooued againſt King Henry, and taking aduantage by reaſon of the troubles and confuſions in Caſtile, hee entred oftentimes with a great armie into Andaluſia, which he led further into the countrie, then any of his predeceſſors, Kings of Granado had done, by reaſon of the weak reſiſtance which he there found, from whence followed death and captiuitie of people, with burning and deſolation to the Countrie.

The petitions and complaints which were daily made to king Henry, were full fraught 25
E with the contents of theſe miſeries, but hee did not taſt them as hee ought, but partly Caſtile.
thorough negligence, and hatred which hee did beare to buſineſſes, and partly with ouer much intending his owne paſſions, he did deferre the remedies, beeing at that time buſied with a deſire to marrie his ſuppoſed daughter to the Duke of Guienne, and to the ſame effect he treated with the French Ambaſſadours, which were arriued at Medina del campo, to wit, the Biſhop and Cardinall of Albi aboue-mentioned, and the Lord of Torſi from the French King, and from the Duke of Guienne, the Earle of Bologne, and the Lord of Malicorne, who hauing declared their Commiſſion to the King, and vſed ſome ſharpe aud bitter ſpeeches againſt the Princeſſe Izabella, he ſeemed to like very well of the marriage, and appoynted the Arch-biſhop of Seuile, the Biſhop of Siguença, and
F the Maſter of S. Iames, to agree about the matrimoniall conditions: who whileſt they were in this ſort buſied, there happened a great riot at Guadalupa, occaſioned by Donna Eluira, Ladie of Belalcaçar, who hauing vnderſtood that Don Alphonſo Ponce of Leon, Baſtard-brother to Don Rodrigo Ponce of Leon, Earle of Arcos, did accompany and bring backe two young Ladies, daughters to the Counteſſe of Medellin, who till then had beene kept vnder the power of the Earle of Ciſuentes, ſhee ſent her brother Don

Franciſco

Franciſco of Eſtuniga, accompanied with thoſe of the family of Chaues of Trugillo with A a great company of ſouldiers, to make repriſall of theſe Ladies for certaine priſoners, Kinsfolks, and friends of the Chaues, who were kept by the Counteſſe of Medellin: wherfore Don Franciſco hauing ouertaken them at Guadalupa, D. Alphonſo Ponce, who conducted them, thought to get the franchiſe of the Monaſterie of Guadalupa, where hee was beſeeged, and the Ladies, with thoſe that conducted them, and the Monkes of the ſame place, did ſuffer many outrages, notwithſtanding that the King thought to remedy the matter, by ſending thither the Licenciate Don Henriques, who could do no good:
in the end Don Franciſco of Eſtuniga and his people hauing broken vp the gates of the Couent, enforced Don Alphonſo to yeeld himſelfe, and to deliuer the Ladies into his B hands, whom they ledde away with them. Now the marriage beeing concluded betwixt Donna Ioane and the Duke of Guienne, to the great diſcontent of diuers Spaniards, the King and the Ambaſſadours went to Segobia, there to receiue Donna Ioane, who was at Guadalajara, and alſo to apply to themſelues the pardons of the Iubile, which the Pope graunted this yeare, vnto ſuch as would giue money for them: to wit, the richer ſort, foure royals of plate, thoſe of the meaner ſort, three, and the meaneſt of all, two, the third part whereof was to bee applyed to the ſea of Rome and chamber Apoſtolicke, and the other two thirds towards the building of the Cloiſter of the great Church of the ſame cittie, whereunto the King furniſhed aboundantly to that which was wanting, and gaue vnto it certaine Coapes of cloath of gold. Donna Ioane was in the keeping of the C Marquis of Santillana, who in recompence of his paynes, and coſt, beſtowed about her entertainment, receiued in gift from the King, the three townes of the Infantaſgo, namely, Alcoçer, Valdoliuas, and Salmeron, the which did belong to the Counteſſe of Saint Steephen, wife to Don Diego Lopes de Pacheco, Marquis of Villena: but ſhee was recompenced foure fold, for the King gaue her the towne of Requegna with the rights of the port thereof: the Maſter of Saint Iames, father to the Marquis, beeing hee that did order and diſpoſe of all matters after his owne pleaſure and profite.

Concluſion of the marriage betwixt Charls Duke of Guien and D. Ioane.

The townes of the Infantaſgo giuen to the Marquis of Santillana.

There aroſe about the ſame time a great tumult in Vailliodolit betwixt the old and new Chriſtians, the old beeing fauoured and vpheld by Iohn de Biuero, a rich Cittizen of the ſame towne, and very affectionate to the ſeruice of the Princes Don Fernand, and D Donna Izabella, who vppon this occaſion came from Duegnas, where they remayned, to Vailliodolit, and were lodged in Iohn de Biuero's houſe: the which did ſo ſtirre vp the mutinous people, as they came running in armes to force that houſe, the Princes were in danger to haue beene taken, if the Biſhop of Salamanca, who was Preſident of the Chancerie, had not ſuddainly put them out of the towne, and cauſed them to returne to Duegnas.

The King hauing notice of this tumult, came to Vailliodolit, confiſcated Iohn de Bi- uero's houſe, and gaue it to the Earle of Benauent with the Captaine-ſhip of the towne, and hauing pacified the people, he returned to Segobia, where his chiefeſt and moſt pleaſing aboad was, the fortreſſe of the which place, held for a certaine time by the Ma- E ſter of Saint Iames, was a little while before yeelded vp vnto him, where hee made An- drew de Cabrera Captaine.

Certaine dayes after, the King remooued from Segobia, and came to lye in the Mo-naſterie of Paular in the valley of Loçoia, bringing with him his wife Queene Ioane, D.
Ioane her daughter, the French Ambaſſadours, and others, the Dukes of Areualo and Valence, the Maſter of Saint Iames, the Earles of Benauent, Miranda, S. Martha, the Arch-biſhop of Seuile, with many other Lords, Knights, and Prelates: but the Lords of the houſe of Mendoza, did chiefly accompany the Queene and her daughter, namely, the Marquis of Santillana, the Biſhop of Siguença, the Earles of Tendilla and Crugna, and F
Don Iohn Hurtado, the which Lords and Ambaſſadours, beeing by the Kings commandement aſſembled in an open field, vpon the banke of the riuer which runneth thorough the ſame valley, where from all parts of the Countrie, great numbers of people of all ſorts were gathered together.

The Licentiate Antonio Nugnes of Cité Rodrigo was commaunded by the king to reade a writing ſigned with his hand, and ſealed with his ſeale, contayning in ſubſtance, that

A that whereas he in times paſt, at the intreatie and requeſt of the great Lords of his kingdome, and for to pacifie the troubles and ciuil warres of the ſame, had declared his ſiſter Donna Izabella his heire, and ſucceſſor in the State and royall dignitie of Caſtile, and procured the Lords, Prelates, and Communalties of the kingdome to ſweare vnto her, vppon condition, that ſhe ſhould be obedient vnto him: ſhe notwithſtanding reiecting all reſpect and duty due vnto him, who was her king, father, and elder brother, had married her ſelfe without his knowledge, and againſt his expreſſe commandement, to Don Fernand king of Sicill and Prince of Arragon: in regard whereof, hee did at that preſent manifeſt and declare her to be fallen from all the right which ſhee might pretend there-
B unto, and did diſinherit her, diſanulling all promiſes, declarations, and inſtitutions made vnto her in that behalfe: commanding all his ſubiects, that from thence forward they ſhould not acknowledge her for Princeſſe, but obey (with a ſollemne oath) his daughter Donna Ioane there preſent: This writing beeing read openly with a loud voice, the Cardinall of Albi, the French Ambaſſadour, came to the Queene, requeſting her to affirme by oath, whether Donna Ioane were truly the daughter of the king her husband or not, whereunto ſhe anſwered, that vndoubtedly ſhe was: then he made the like requeſt to the king, namely, whether he did ſtedfaſtly beleeue, that Donna Ioane there preſent, were his daughter, the which he affirmed, ſaying, that he had alwaies reputed and accounted her for his owne naturall daughter euer ſince ſhee was borne: then preſently, the Prelates,
C Lords, and others which were preſent at that act, came and kiſſed the Infanta's hands, and following the Kings commaundement, they tooke the oath of fidelity vnto her, after the manner accuſtomed to the eldeſt ſonnes of the kings of Caſtile, all of them calling her Princeſſe and heire, the Marquis of Santillana, the Biſhopp of Siguença and his other breethren excepted, who excuſed themſelues, ſaying, that they had alreadie at another time taken the ſame oth, which was not now needfull to be reiterated. After theſe things the Earle of Bologne hauing exhibited the authoritie which hee had from the Duke of Guienne, the Cardinall tooke Donna Ioane, and the Earle by the hands, and betrothed them, with all the vſuall ceremonies and ſollemnities: and then the drummes and trumpets ſounded, and all ſorts of ſignes of ioy and gladneſſe were made by the aſſiſtants.
D This done, the Ambaſſadours returned to Segobia, where by the way they were ſo beaten with a violent tempeſt of wind, raine and hayle, as they were in danger of their liues, and diuers of their traine periſhed, which was an euident token, that the miſeries of Spayne were not yet at an end. From Segobia, the King cauſed the Biſhop of Siguença to accompany them to Burgos, from whence they returned highly contented to France: but the Duke of Guienne his death, who liued in continuall diſcord with his brother king Lewis, hindred the accompliſhment of this marriage.

King Henry of Caſtile his falſe oath.

The Lords of Mendoza refuſe to kiſſe the hands of D. Ioane.

The Duke of Guienne his death, breakes this marriage.

The Arch-biſhop of Toledo was then at home in his houſe, contriuing of new troubles, and held the party contrarie to the Maſter of S. Iames, who did wholly poſſeſſe the King, to the great indignation of the great Lords, who vppon that occaſion left the E Court, and retired themſelues home to their houſes, the kingdome beeing oppreſt with miſeries, plagues, famines, murthers, and falſhood in all things, eſpecially in mony, to the great hurt of the people, who wanted the adminiſtration of iuſtice. Baſco de Contreras one of the Kings captaines, had taken the fortreſſe of Perales from this Arch-biſhop, the which cauſed new troubles: for the Arch-biſhop beeing deſirous to recouer it, aſſembled forces, and came and beſeeged it: the King on the other ſide ſent him commandement to withdraw his ſouldiers, threatning, if he refuſed, to fall vppon him and his, and was already come to Madrid, with troupes of horſe and foote. The Arch-biſhop perceyuing himſelfe inferiour in ſtrength, obeyed the Kings commandement, and brought backe his people to Alcalá.

New troubles by the Arch-biſhop of Toledos meanes.

F The Princes Don Fernand and D. Izabella, remayned at Duegnas, beeing counſelled and fauoured in all things by the Arch-biſhop of Toledo, and his faithful companion Don Iohn of Arias Biſhop of Segobia, by reaſon whereof the King complayned to the Pope by his Ambaſſadour reſident at Rome, of both theſe Prelates, accuſing them of committing many things to the preiudice and contempt of his royall Crowne. The Pope vnderſtanding ſo much, ſent to the Biſhop of Segobia, commanding him within the Proceedings againſt the Archb of Toledo.

the terme of ninety dayes to make his perſonall appearance at Rome. And hee appoynted that the Lords of the Kings Councell, ſhould cauſe the Arch-biſhop to be ſummoned and exhorted by foure Channons, according to the forme of law, to returne to the obedience due vnto the king, which if he ſhould refuſe to do, they ſhould then thunder out his proceſſe, and ſend it to Rome, that the Pope might ſee it, to the end to proceede againſt him, and chaſtiſe him as a rebellious Prelate. The Popes Briefe beeing declared in the Chapter-houſe of Toledo, there came to the Court at Madrid, Fernand Peres of Ayala, baſtard-brother to Pero Lopes of Ayala, who had beene Earle of Fuençalida, Diego del Gadillo, Marco Dias, and Don Franciſco of Palencia, Prior of Arrochio, Chanons of the ſame church, who hauing ſhewed to the King, how highly their Prelates diſobedience did diſpleaſe not onely them, but the whole Chapter, they offered themſelues to performe whatſoeuer the Kings Councell ſhould thinke fit to bee done for his ſeruice, and for reducing the Arch-biſhop to his duty to his royall Maieſtie. Now, becauſe the King and his trayne were at that time in the Dioceſſe of Toledo, and fearing the Arch-biſhops cenſures and interdictions, they defended themſelues with an appeale, putting themſelues vnder the protection of the Sea Apoſtolicke: and then a Knight and a Doctor was ſent to giue the Arch-biſhop notice of the Briefe, and to commaund him to returne to the Kings ſeruice, and to abandon the Princes, whom the King deſired to chaſe out of the Realme. The Arch-biſhop excuſed himſelfe, and anſwered, that heretofore by the Kings commaundement he had ſworne to the Princeſſe Donna Izabella, as to the eldeſt heire of the Crowne, therefore he could not acknowledge any other but her: and he beſought the king to deale no farther in that buſineſſe, becauſe ſuch was his determinate will and purpoſe. The King vnderſtanding this anſwer, commanded to proceed againſt the Arch-biſhop with all rigour: but the Maſter of Saint Iames, who managed the affaires with more cunning, was of a contratie opinion: he aduiſed the King to ſend the Licentiate Diego Henriques vnto him, to offer him, if he would adhere to the Kings partie, and forſake the Princeſſe, three thouſand tennants, and two forts for his two ſons Troilo Carillo of Acugna, and Lope Vaſques of Acugna.

The Arch-biſhop reiected theſe temptations, and would by no meanes forſake the Princeſſe ſeruice. This notwithſtanding, the Maſter cauſed all proceedings againſt her to ceaſe, and the foure Channons were ſent backe to Toledo diſcontented enough, three of them were taken by the way, and brought to Torrejon de Velaſco, by Pero Arias of Auila, who by the Arch-biſhops commandement lay in ambuſh to ſurpriſe them. Fernand Peres of Ayala, onely ſaued himſelfe in Canales. The King beeing very much diſpleaſed herewith, ſent diuers horſe-men to field, who tooke diuers friends and ſeruants of the Arch-biſhos, and among others, Don Diego of Gueuara, a Channon of Toledo, in exchange of whome the three Chanons were deliuered. And ſo the matter paſſed on betwixt the King and the Arch-biſhop for that time.

In the meane time, the Maſter of Saint Iames intending his owne profite, and beeing aſſured of his credit and power, had taken the cittie of Alcaraz, which imported him very much, beeing neere to his Marquiſat of Villena, and was eaſily confirmed in the poſſeſſion and reuenue of the ſame by the King, which diſcontented diuers: for by his example, the Earle of Benauent, ſeized vpon Villalua, and depoſing Pero Nugno from his office of Merin major of the cittie of Valliodolit, he gaue it to his brother Don Pedro Pimentell. It was then an ordinarie tricke in Spayn, for thoſe that were able to ſeize vpon any place to do it, without caring for robberies, murthers, and other hainous crimes, which they by ſuch attempts affoorded matter and occaſion too, beeing aſſured that if they had any little fauour in Court, to poſſeſſe their booties without controule. It happened euen ſo to the Earle of Arcos, Don Rodrigo Ponce of Leon, who hauing taken, during the furies of the League, the cittie of Cales, he obtayned the ſame in full proprietie, with title of Marquis therof, by the meanes and furtherance of the Maſter of Saint Iames his father-in-law.

Diſorders in the gouernement of Caſtile

If two Lords were at ſtrife, without any reſpect of the Royall Maieſtie, they would ſtrike vp the drumme, and raiſe forces to ruine one another, as if they had beene Soueraigne Princes, which had held of none but of God and the ſword (as they ſay.) Vppon theſe

A theſe tearmes ſtood Don Manuel Ponce of Leon, brother to the Earle of Arcos, and Don Fernand of Velaſco, brother to the Earle of Siruela, who were in the field, accompanied with great number of horſe-men readie to come to battaile betwixt Madrid and Alcala, neere enough to the Court: wherefore the King to hinder them, ſent thither his great Maſter Andrew Cabrera with ſufficient forces. Cabrera vſing great diligence, and gallowping apace in a duſtie high way, his horſe raiſing a great cloud of duſt, hee was not perceiued by thoſe which followed him, but was ouerthrowne, and ſo troden vnder the horſe feete, that beeing well-neere bruiſed to death, hee was brought backe ſpeechleſſe to Madrid, where after he had beene well viſited by the Chirurgions and Phiſitions, hee
B recouered at leyſure.

There was a quarrell betwixt the Earles of Haro and Treuigno, about certaine words of contempt vttered by the Counteſſe of Haro, the Earle of Treuigno ſtrengthened himſelfe with Pedro Abendagno, and Iohn Alphonſo of Muxica, chiefe of the Mutins of Biſcay and Guipuſcoa, who were baniſhed not long before by the Earle of Haro, committed by the King for the ordering and pacifying of thoſe Prouinces. The Earle of Treuigno then hauing giuen them entrance into the countrey, againſt the Kings leaue, and contrarie to the ſentence: and beeing confederated together, they ioyned to their league Don Pedro Lopes of Padilla, Gouernour and Captaine of the frontiers of Caſtile, riding vp and downe, and commaunding in the Countrie without any feare at all: wherefore
C the Earle of Haro, by the Kings commaundement, came to Burgos, and there leauied certaine forces in haſt as well hee, as the Earle of Salines Don Lewis, and Don Sancho of Velaſco his breethren, and brought them into Biſcay, beeing moſt of them horſemen. 28 Quarrell betwixt the Earles of Haro and Treuigno.

The Earle of Treuigno and the Gouernour, did the like on their parts, vnto whome were ioyned with great numbers of foot-men leuyed in Biſcay and Guipuſcoa, the heads of the faction aboue named, to encourage whome the Earle of Treuigno vſed a policy. My companions in armes (quoth he) is it poſſible that you can indure, that this Earle " Pedro of Velaſco, with his credite and fauour gotten by flatterie, ſhould hence-foorth " commaund ouer you as your Lord, and ſeparate you from the Crowne of Caſtile, into "
D the which your Predeceſſours were incorporated with ſo great affection? Will you a- " gaine ſubiect your ſelues to follow thoſe priuate paſſions, which haue ſo often troubled " the generall ſtate of the Kingdome, and expoſed the ſubiects to extreame miſeries, " whereof you haue ſo many recent examples before your eyes? I do not thinke that the " auncient valour of the Biſcans is ſo farre degenerate, as euer to conſent to ſubmit them- " ſelues to any ſubalterne iuriſdiction, eſpecially when at this inſtant, an occaſion pre- " ſents it ſelfe to be reuenged vppon him, who is the oppreſſour of your liberties: For if " wee do not fight valiantly, and cut this Earle of Haro in peeces, aſſure you that hee will " become your Lord: For hee hath without all doubt obtayned of the King (who reſpects " not the worthineſſe or vnworthineſſe of thoſe hee doth good vnto) the Lordſhippe of "
E Biſcay, and hath Letters pattents thereof, the which I haue ſeene and read: Wherefore " it remaynes then in your prowes and valour, to ſet free your ſelues from this inconue- " nience. "

The Biſcains animated by this ſpeech, beeing come to blowes, neere the towne of Mugnia, in ſtreight places and aduantageous for foote-men, as they were, againſt horſmen, did fight ſo furiouſly, as they put them to flight, with great ſlaughter, & taking of diuerſe perſons of woorth, among whom were ledde away the Earle of Salines, and Don Lewis of Velaſco. The King hauing notice that theſe Lords were in armes, was come as farre as Burgos to hinder their fight, but hee came not ſoone enough. Wherefore hee went to Odugna, and from thence ſent commaundement to the two Earles to lay downe
F their armes, and to retire themſelues to their owne houſes, enioyning the Earle of Treuigno, vpon paine of his indignation, to deliuer the priſoners: then hee cauſed them to make truce, the better to reconcile them, and make them friends. In this incounter, the valour of one Iohn de Leyua was noted on the Earle of Treuigno's partie. On the other ſide Don Pedro Manrique ſonne to the Earle of Paredes, beeing accompanied with certaine baſe fellowes, ſurprized the Citty of Alcarras, and enforced Iohn de Haro, who was

Gouernor

Gouernour thereof for the Maſter of Saint Iames, to ſaue himſelfe within the Caſtle, A where hee beſeeged him: but the Gouernour valiantly defended himſelfe, and aduertized the Maſter of his diſtreſſe, who vppon this occaſion beeing come to Ocagna, and hauing ſpeedily gathered together eight hundred horſe, hee with his ſonne Don Diego Lopes de Pacheco came to Alcarras, and cauſed Don Pedro Manriques to diſlodge, who at the bare report of his comming did rayſe his ſeege, beeing not ſtrong enough to attend him.

During theſe ſtirres, the Kingdome of Caſtile was like a Forreſt, where freely, and without controule, all ſorts of miſchiefes were committed, the head that had power to redreſſe them, not regarding it: Wherefore the townes and communalties were enfor- B ced to ſet downe ſome remedie for it, to the end they might liue in better ſafetie, for men were more aſſured from the violence of theeues in their owne houſes, then in the fields: Hermandades of Caſtile. and they eſtabliſhed in euery corner honeſt men, who went vp and downe well accompanied, preuenting thoſe outrages the beſt they could, puniſhing the offendours, as often as they could lay hands on them, leauing the wayes in ſome ſort aſſured by that meanes: the King beeing contented there-with, and letting them alone, albeit the Factious were greatly diſpleaſed there-with, and namely, the Maſter of Saint Iames, who ſayd it was not well done, to put baſe people in authoritie, and to keepe the Nobilitie vnder.

Now the Court beeing returned to Segobia, in the Caſtle of the which Cittie, the C King had cauſed his Treaſure, Iewels, and other rich ſtuffe to be tranſported from Madrid, hee determined to leauie an armie, beeing reſolued to chaſe the Prince Don Fernand, and Donna Izabella out of the kingdome of Caſtile, for they were beames in his eyes, which did hinder him (as hee ſayd) from prouiding for the preſent calamities and miſeries of his kingdome. The Maſter of Saint Iames, who euer held the euent of battell doubtfull and ſuſpitious, was of opinion to vſe meanes more cunning, and leſſe dangerous. The King beeing come to Coca with this purpoſe and determination, leauing at Segobia the Earle of Vruegna, and Andrew de Cabrera, with the Queene, and Donna Ioane, whome hee called Princeſſe, and the Maſter, who made vſe of the Arch-biſhop of Seuile at his owne pleaſure, cauſed him to counſell him not to proceede againſt the D Princeſſe by way of force, but to trie other meanes to draw them to his will. The King An. 1470. perſwaded thereunto, diſſolued his armie. Theſe things paſſed in the yeare 1470. at Genealogie of Caſtile. which time the Princeſſe Donna Izabella was deliuered of hir firſt child, in the Cittie of Duegnas, the firſt day of October, to wit, of a daughter called Elizabeth, or Izabella like the mother.

Moores. Then the Moores of Granado, proude, becauſe of their fore-paſſed proſperities, forraged the Countrie belonging to the Maſter-ſhippe of Alcantara, againſt whome was ſent the new Marquis of Cales, Don Rodrigo Ponce of Leon, Earle of Arcos, who repreſſed theſe runnagates, and tooke from them the Cittie of Cardela, the which ſoone after was taken againe by the Moores: neuertheleſſe hee carried away with him great E ſpoyles, and many Moores priſoners. In the meane ſpace the Duke of Alua came to the Court at Medina del Campo, who was kindly receyued and welcommed by the King.

29 Caſtile. Now the marriage of Donna Ioane beeing daſhed, by reaſon of the Duke of Guiens death, who departed this life at Bourdeaux, the King by the aduiſe of the Maſter of Saint Iames, ſent Ambaſſadours to King Don Alphonſo of Portugall, to treate with him about a marriage betwixt him and her. This King had no deſire thereunto, becauſe of the common report, which was, that ſhee was borne in adulterie betwixt Don Bertrand de la Cueua, and the Queene of Caſtile: and therefore he had wholy reiected it, at ſuch Genealogie of Portugal. time as ſhe ſhould haue beene married to the Prince Don Iohn his ſonne, whome hee F married about that time to Donna Leonora, daughter to the Infant Don Fernand Duke of Viſeo, and of Donna Beatrix, daughter to the Infant Don Iohn, who had beene in former time Maſter of Saint Iames, and the ſecond Conſtable of Portugall: of the which Don Fernand, and Beatrix were borne, Don Domingo who was Duke of Viſeo after his father, and Don Manuell who raigned in Portugall, after this Don Iohn his brother

A brother in law. Donna Beatrice had builded the Monaſtery of Nunnes, called the conception of Veja, where ſhee with her husband Don Ferdinand lye buried. Now King Alphonſo at ſuch time as this Ambaſſage was making ready, was buſied with good ſucceſſe about the Affrican expedition: for hauing in perſon tranſported beyond the ſea a very mighty armie, being followed by the Prince Don Iohn his ſonne, and by many great Lords, and experimented Captaines of his kingdome, amongſt whom the moſt renowmed were Don Iohn Coutin Earle of Marialua, Don Aluaro de Caſtro Earle of Monteſanto, and his ſonne Don Iohn de Caſtro, Don Henry de Meneſes Earle of Valencia, Ruy de Merlo Captaine of his guardes, who afterward was Earle of Oliuença, Arzilla and Tanger in Affrick taken by the King of Portugall.

B and Don Alphonſo Vaſconcello, who was Earle of Penela, hee tooke by force Arzilla, and did ſo terrifie them of Tanger, as they forſooke the Cittie, and left it empty to the enemy, ſo as King Don Alphonſo hauing amply enlarged his Empire, beyond the ſea, the Kings of Portugall haue ſince intituled themſelues, Kings on this ſide and beyond the Sea. The Earles of Monteſanto and Marialua dyed at the taking of Arzilla.

The gouernment of Tanger was giuen to Ruy de Merlo with a good garriſon: and the King and the Armie beeing returned to Lisbone, Don Alphonſo Baſconcello, was made Earle of Penela, and then was the marriage of the Prince celebrated, beeing ſeuenteene yeares of age, with Donna Leonora his couſin germaine, with Marriage of the Prince Don of Portugall with Donna Leonora of Viſeo.

C diſpenſation made ſince by Pope Sixtus the fourth, who ſucceeded Paul the ſecond in the Sea of Rome. The Ambaſſadors of Caſtile agreed vpon an enterview of the the two Kings, betwixt the townes of Badajos and Yelues: but they departed one from an other diſcontented, without any concluſion of the marriage, the principall impediment was, the ſmall truſt which the King of Portugall repoſed in the Maiſter of Saint Iames, whoſe inconſtancie hee merueilouſly ſuſpected; together with the diſordered life of the Queene, who was deteſted of all men. This marriage afterwards was thought vppon to bee renewed, as ſhall bee heere-after declared.

The King of Caſtile wanted no troubles and diſcontents in this iourney, by meanes 30 ſhed, the one taking euill example from the other. Firſt of all the Biſhop of Siguença refuſed to accompany the King, and notwithſtanding any entreaty, he would not ſtirre forth of Guadalajara, whether hee had with-drawne himſelfe, beeing highly diſpleaſed that hee had beene diſappointed of a Cardinals Hatte, whereunto by the kings fauour hee had earneſtly aſpyred, the Maiſter of Saint Iames hauing ſupplanted him, who procured and obteined it for Don Lewis d' Acugna Biſhop of Burgos his nephew, the Biſhop of Siguença beeing neuer ſatiſfied with ſpeaking euill of Donna Ioane and the Queene her mother. The king with his traine beeing come to Badajos, hee was conſtrained to lodge in the ſuburbes, and villages there-Inſolency of the Maiſter of Saint Iames.

E abouts: for the Earle of Feria ſhutte the gates againſt him, ſaying, that hee was certaine that hee would vpon his entry giue the ſame towne to the Maiſter of Saint Iames, to whom hee durſt deny nothing: for hee went about not long before to ſnatch the towne of Sepulueda by force as it were from the king, which was neere to the Earledome of Saint Steuens, the which notwithſtanding the requeſt, admoniſhment, and reſiſtance of the inhabitants, who could not endure to bee alienated from the Crowne, the king was conſtrained to grant vnto him by reaſon of his importunity: but the townesmen not reſolued to obey the Maiſter, gaue themſelues ouer to the Princeſſe, who with Prince Ferdinand her husband came thither, and remained for a certaine time in thoſe quarters, and in the territories of the Archbiſhop of Toledo, who

F was alwayes their faithfull ſeruant. At Siuill the Duke of Medina Sidonia, and the Marquis of Cales were at great ſtrife, and ioyned battaile the one againſt the other, by meanes whereof the Marquis was driuen forth of the citty, and withdrew himſelfe to Xeres, where being fauoured by the knights of Saint Iames, and thoſe of Calarraua, and the Duke by thoſe of the Citty, they made cruell warres one vpon another, the Maiſter of Saint Iames vpholding the Marquis his ſonne in law.

In an incounter made betwixt Seuile and Alcala of Guadiaira, two baſtard ſonnes of A the Duke of Medina were ſlayne, and other diſorders followed thereuppon: for the redreſſing whereof, the King ſent Don Inigo Lopes of Mendoza, Earle of Tendilla, to Seuile, who by his diligence and good counſell, cauſed them to lay downe their armes, and made thoſe two Lords friends, and the Duke had his towne of Medina Sidonia, and the fortreſſe of the ſame reſtored vnto him.

At Toledo Pero Lopes of Ayala newly made Earle of Fuenſalida, was ſollicited by the brother of his deceaſed wife Donna Maria de Silua, to wit, the Biſhop of Badajos, who was deſirous to bring againe the Earle of Ciſuentes, and his Vncle Don Iohn de Ribera into Toledo, to giue his eldeſt daughter Donna Leonora in marriage to the Earle of Ciſuentes, ſeeking by that meanes to reconcile and make them friends, which the Maſter B of Saint Iames did likewiſe procure, building ſome deſſeignes vppon the ſame citty: but the king being aduertized thereof, ſent foorth-with the Licenciate Diego Henriques to aduertiſe the Earle of Fuenſalida by no meanes to make that marriage, and not to ſuffer the Earle of Ciſuentes nor Don Iohn de Ribera to enter into Toledo, becauſe he was aſſured, that as ſoone as they ſhould ſet foot within the cittie, they would driue him thence.

The Earle giuing more credit to the Biſhoppe, then to the King, was very willing to agree vppon the marriage, by reaſon whereof the Earle of Ciſuentes, and Don Iohn de Ribera, were no ſooner entred into the cittie, but contrarie to their oath and promiſe, People of Tolc. do mutinous. which was not to attempt any innouation, nor ſtirre vp any troubles, they put themC ſelues in armes, and bandied themſelues in ſuch ſort, as there was nothing to bee ſeene but daily and continuall skirmiſhes, fights, murthers, robberies, and other miſeries, vſual in diuided Citties, the common people of this towne beeing more mutinous and apt to enter into factions and leagues, then any other Cittie of Spaine: Wherefore the King, the better to redreſſe theſe inconueniences, beeing at Madrid, ſent the Biſhoppe of Burgos, together with the Licentiate Diego Henriques, who for a time cauſed thoſe inſolencies to ceaſe.

The King comming afterwards thither, tooke away, againſt all reaſon, the gouernement of the cittie from the Earle of Fuenſalida, and put it againſt his will, into the hands of Doctor Garcy Lopes of Madrid, with charge of an aſſiſtant, and with great authoritie, D onely to pleaſe and content the Maſter of Saint Iames. The diſpoſſeſſed Earle went home to his owne houſe, and the Earle of Ciſuentes afterward had no deſire to accompliſh the marriage with Donna Leonora, alleadging certaine lets and hinderances, by reaſon of their neere conſanguinitie, and ſo ſoone after married elſe-where. The Earle of Ciſuentes, and Don Iohn de Ribera, tooke Doctor Garcy Lopes, committed him to priſon, and made themſelues maſters of the Cittie gates, and other ſtrong places, and beſeeged the Caſtle, the which they had taken, with the abſolute commaund ouer the whole Citie, had not certaine Channons reſiſted them, who fortifying themſelues in the great Church, held out till ſuch time as the Marſhals Fernand de Riuadeneyra, and Peraſan de Ribera were come to their ayde, who cauſed the Earle and his people to with-draw themE ſelues.

The Maſter of Saint Iames, who was at that time in the territorie of Leon, making his progreſſe vp and downe about the ordering of the affaires of that Prouince, beeing aduertized of that which had befallen Garcy Lopes, came in great haſt to Toledo, from whence hauing driuen the Earle of Ciſuentes, Don Iohn de Ribera, Lope of Eſtuniga, with Arias de Silua, and other of their complices, hee left the Cittie in quiet. The King not long after came to the Monaſterie of Siſla, halfe a league diſtant from the Cittie, but hee did in no ſort touch any of the ſeditious, becauſe all the miſchiefe had beene procured by the Maſter. As hee thought to returne to Segobia, hee found the Cittie in a mutinie, and reuolted from the Corrigidor or Gouernour of the ſame, by the meanes of F certaine Gentlemen, who were taken, and ſent with yrons vppon their legges to the Caſtle of Madrid, where they remayned a long time after.

Now if temporall matters were ſo ill gouerned, it is to bee ſuppoſed, that ſpirituall affaires were farre worſe: for what good could happen to the people, whoſe Paſtors, neglecting their eccleſiaſticall functions, had no other care but to heape vp worldly riches

and

A and honours, making themſelues heads of Factions, and by their couetouſneſſe and ambition, did themſelues moſt of all trouble and diſquiet all Kingdomes and Commonwealths.

Whileſt theſe miſeries troubled the Realme of Caſtille, King Iohn of Arragon did ſtil endeauour to reduce the Rebels of Cattalonia to his obedience, and after that hee had ended the queſtion betwixt himſelfe and his ſonne-in-law Gaſton of Foix about the kingdome of Nauarre, hee did ſend his ſonne Don Alphonſo of Arragon, with the Earle of Prades, who was returned to his ſeruice, into the confines of Barcelona, who encamped themſelues alongſt the riuer of Beſon, and made courſes euen to the Cittie gates, burB ning and ſpoyling, houſes, gardens, and other places of pleaſure of that countrie. Then they went to batter a ſtrong caſtle ſeated vppon the riuer, which the Barcelonois beeing deſirous to ſuccour, Iames Galliot Gouernour of the cittie, came into the field with a great number of horſe-men, and foure thouſand foot, bringing with him Don Denis of Portugall, and Gratian of Aguirre, who preſenting themſelues before the enemie, with intent to fight, were ſo rudely receyued, as within awhile they were defeated, with maThe Barcelonois defeated. ny of their people ſlayne, hurt, and taken priſoners, in the number of whom were Iames Galliot, and Denis of Portugall: part of thoſe which fled, came backe to the cittie, and the reſt retired themſelues into the woods and mountaines. This loſſe did ſo daunt the courage of thoſe of Barcelona, as deſpayring of their affaires, they all began to hearken vnC to peace, whereunto they were the rather incited by the Kings comming, who ioyned himſelfe ſoone after with the forces of his ſonne Alphonſo, taking the towne of Valdonzellas, hee made ſhew as if he would beſeege the Cittie both by ſea and land, the which The cittie of Barcelona yeeldeth to the mercie of the King. beeing filled with great feare, and yet neuertheleſſe truſting to the Kings clemencie, they ſent Commiſſioners vnto him, to craue his pardon, and to offer him the keyes of the Cittie, ſubmitting themſelues to his mercie.

These men beeing come into the kings preſence, did by the mouth of Lewis Setenti a Florentine, confeſſe the Cittizens fault, and did implore his mercie, preſenting him with the keyes, the which the King holding in his hands, re-deliuered forth-with to the Commiſſioners, contrarie to the expectation of all his followers, who thought, that in reKing Iohns clemency. D gard hee had beene ſo many yeares troubled and diſquieted with the obſtinate and cruell warres of the Barcelonois, hee would haue executed ſeuere vengeance vppon them: but hee on the contrarie, with a ſingular mildneſſe, did not onely pardon them, and their Confederates, for whatſoeuer they had committed againſt him, but confirmed them in their goods, liberties, priuiledges, exemptions, and auncient rights. The next day following, the Cittizens had prepared a triumphant chariot for him, that he might make his entrie with great pompe and magnificence, the which he would not accept, but was contented to enter into the Cittie riding vppon a white Courſer, by Saint Anthonies gate of the ſame cittie, which hee found vnprouided of all manner of victuals, wherewith he cauſed them preſently to bee furniſhed; ſo as without the aboue-named defeate, E neceſſity would haue enforced them to haue yeelded.

By this peace which happened ſo opportunely, the miſeries of Cattalonia were ended, which had troubled the whole State of Arragon for the ſpace of tenne yeares. He which ſhewed moſt proweſſe, and performed the notableſt exploites in this warre, was Don Alphonſo of Arragon, Duke of Villahermoſa, a Prince worthie of great prayſe, and high commendation, who dyed afterwards in the ſeruice of his brother King Fernand raigning in Caſtile, at a place called Linares, leauing his ſonne Don Alphonſo of D. Alphonſo of Arragon his poſteritie. Arragon, heire to his Dutchie of Villa-hermoſa, who was Knight of the Order of Saint Iames, and a Daughter called Donna Maria of Arragon, who was maaried to the Prince of Salerne. Hee had out of wedlocke Don Iohn of Arragon, Earle of Luna, F Captaine of the Caſtle of Ampoſta, Don Alphonſo of Arragon, who was Biſhop of Tortoſa, and afterward Arch-biſhoppe of Tarragone, Don Fernand of Arragon, Prior of Saint Iohns of Cattalonia, together with Donna Leonora of Arragon, wife to the Earle of Albayda.

This peace was no ſooner concluded, but the King had newes of a new rumult, raiſed in Nauarre, whereinto the Princeſſe his daughter voluntarily had runne herſelfe with Nauarre.

great danger, and many of her ſeruants loſt their liues. It happened after this manner: A Iohn d'Athondo the Kings Auditour of his accounts, and Cittizen of Pampelona, with Michaell Ollacarizqueta, and others of the ſame cittie, ſeruants to the King and the Princeſſe, and of the Faction of Grammont, did vndertake, in hatred and diſgrace of the contrarie partie of Beaumont, who poſſeſſed the Cittie of Pampelona, to bring the Princeſſe Donna Leonora into the ſame, with troupes of ſouldiers, and to make her peaceable and abſolute Ladie thereof: they hauing then communicated together about their plot, it was thought fit, that the Princeſſe ſhould come in a morning before day to the Iewes gate, otherwiſe called the Tower of the royall gate, and the Marſhall Don Pedro of Nauarre, ſhould make himſelfe Maſter of the two next towers. The appoynted B time beeing come, the Princeſſe with her attendants, found the gate opened by thoſe of Grammont, through the which beeing brought in, the Marſhall poſſeſſed the two Towers with three-ſcore and tenne Gentlemen, and on a ſuddaine, they beganne to crie, God ſaue the Princeſſe, God ſaue the Princeſſe: at this rumour thoſe of Beaumont, (albeit they were amazed at ſo vnlooked-for an accident happening in the night) ranne to armes, and behaued themſelues in ſuch ſort, as they not onely hindred their enemies from further entring into the cittie, but enforced the Princeſſe and her people to get them thence in great haſt: for the moſt part of the ſouldiers which ſhould haue followed her, were not yet arriued. Hauing recouered the gate, they beſeeged the Marſhall Don Pedro and his ſouldiers which were in the two towers, who at the firſt would not yeeld, C but in the end, when they ſawe the Cannon was readie to play vppon them, they were content to parley.

Priſoners of D. Leonora Counteſſe of Foix.

Raſhneſſe of D. Leonora.

The Princeſſe fearing leaſt ſome euill might happen to the Marſhall, and thoſe that were beſeeged with him, ſent word to the Cittizens, that what was done, was by her ſpeciall commaundement, and therefore intreated them to do them no hurt. At the laſt they yeelded, vppon promiſe made, that they ſhould all depart with their Armes, without any harme either in word or deed, which notwithſtanding, they were all taken, and ſhut vp in the Kings priſons of the cittie, where ſoone after they were cruelly and perfidiouſly ſtabd to death with daggers: and it is reported, that the Marſhall was ſlaine by the hands of Philip of Beaumont, brother to the Earle of Lerin. This act did very much diſpleaſe D the Princeſſe, who commaunded that the ſame gate ſhould euer after be called the gate of treaſon, or the traytors gate: and in ſome ſort to reuenge that wrong, they proceeded againſt the Earle of Lerin, and againſt Don Iohn of Beaumont, Prior of Saint Iohns, and Chancellor of the Kingdome, and againſt Don Philip, and their breethren, and Don Iohn Earle of Luza, Charles of Artieda and his children, Arnold d'Otza, the Prouoſts and Iurates of Pampelona, with others their allyes and complices, who by the iudgement and authoritie of the King and his Councell, were condemned to death, depriuation of honours, defamation of their houſes, and confiſcation of their goods, as guiltie of high treaſon.

The Marſhall with his followers ſlayne.

The Records of thoſe times taxe the Earle of Lerin, ſaying, that hee, to the end hee E might the better enioy the cittie, had driuen thence the Kings and Princeſſes ſeruants, and had eſtabliſhed therein Officers and ſouldiers, ſuch as were at his deuotion, contrary to their authoritie, whoſe iuriſdiction hee did vſurpe, vexing and tyrannizing the Kingdome: That by the fauour and ayde of the Earle, the Guipuſcoans had ouerthrowne the forts of Larraun, Lecunberry, Leyça, and Gorriti: and that hee beeing ſundrie times ſent for by the Princeſſe, to come to the Parliament and Aſſembly of the Eſtates of the Kingdome, would neuer obey her commaundement: That the Earle of Foix, hauing ſent his children, Iohn and Peter of Foix, both in his own name and the Princeſſe, to perſwade him to returne to his due obedience, hee did reiect their admoniſhments, and derided Pope Pauls commandement in that behalfe: the which things, full of contumacie F and contempt, had induced the Princeſſe to make that attempt. Others thinke, that her owne extreame ambition and deſire to beare rule, did more mooue her, than any of the Earles miſdemeanours which were not lightly to bee eſteemed.

On the other ſide, the Earle of Lerin, and his Faction, did arraigne and condemne others of their aduerſe partie, and as for the Marſhals death, hee excuſed himſelfe, ſaying,

A ſaying, that he came to ſeeke him, and had done his beſt to ſurpriſe the Cittie, and to cut the throates of thoſe of Beaumont who were in the ſame: yet for all that, this could not excuſe his breach of promiſe.

The King afterward recompenced Iohn d' Athondo, with a perpetuall rent to him and his heires of ſixe-ſcore golden Florens by the yere of the coyne of Arragon, and beſides that, did permit him to beare in a quarter of his coate, the royall of Armes of Nauarre. To Michael Ollacarizqueta was likewiſe giuen other rewards. This ſedition happened in Pampelona about the end of the yeare, one thouſand, foure hundred, ſeuenty one.

Concerning the affaires of Caſtile: about the time that Toledo, and other Cities Caſtile.
B of the Kingdome did reuolt, the which wee lately mentioned, Donna Maria of Portocarrero, wife to Don Iohn de Pacheco, Marquis of Villena, and Maſter of Saint Iames, died of a canker at Segobia, and it is reported, that ſhee beeing a wiſe and vertuous Lady, did greatly reprooue her husbands extreame ambition, and that at her death, ſhe made him ſundrie remonſtrances which tended greatly to his honour and commoditie, and the preſeruation of his houſe, ſhee did greatly aduiſe him to maintaine the King in his honour and reputation, towards whome hee had inſolently behaued himſelfe, and moſt commonly without reſpect, to the great griefe of all the great Lords of Spaine: whereuppon the Maſter made her many faire promiſes of amendment, which after her death were ſoone forgotten: therefore conſidering with himſelfe, that hee was now a widow-
C er, and badly beloued, he thought it expedient for him, and greatly profitable for his affaires in hand, to marrie againe, and to ſtrengthen himſelfe with ſome good allyance: wherefore he bended his thoughts vppon the houſes of Mendoza and Velaſco, rich and mightie families, the chiefe of which, hee hauing ſounded and practiſed, there was a meeting betwixt Segobia and Pedraza, by the Biſhoppes of Siguença, Palença, and Burgos, the Earles of Haro, Medina Celi, and the Maſter, who agreed vpon a marriage betwixt the ſayd Maſter, and the Earle of Haros daughter: wherewith the king was well pleaſed. Maſter of S. Iames allyes himſelfe with the houſe of Velaſco.

The marriage was afterward ſollemnized at Pegnafiell, a place belonging to the Earle of Vregna, who was Nephew to the Maſter. By this allyance the Biſhop of Siguen-
D ça was pacifyed, came to Court, and had promiſe of the Kings fauour for his obtayning of a Cardinals hat, whereon he dreamed day and night, from Pope Sixtus the fourth, newly elected, who was borne in Sauona of the family of Rouero, a Friar, and Cardinal of the title of Saint Peter ad vincula, whoſe Legate Roderigo Borgia, Biſhop of Albi, and Cardinall of the title of S. Nicholas in carcere Tulliano, Vice-chancellour of the ſea of Rome, who afterward was Pope, came this yeare 1471. into Spayne, where hee was receiued at Madrid by King Henry, with all the honour and ſubmiſſion, that a ſeruant or an obedient ſonne could vſe towards his ſuperiour and father, as alſo in all places as hee came by the way: as ſoone as he was entred into Caſtile, eſpecially when hee arriued in the territories belonging to the Maſterſhippe of Saint James, hee went vnder a rich ca-

Hauing then declared his legation, and ſhewed his faculties, which were to viſit the Kingdome of Caſtile, and the Iſles neere adiacent, to ordayne what was neceſſarie for the Church of Rome, the King ſhewing himſelfe very obedient and willing, hee deputed the Licenciate Diego Henriques his Chronicler, Chaplaine, and Councellour, to accompanie, and conferre with him about theſe matters. At the intreatie of the King and the Maſter of Saint Iames, the Legate diſpatched a meſſage to Rome, for the Biſhoppe of Siguença's hatte: this was in the yeare, one thouſand, foure hundred, ſeuenty two. When An. 1472.
F the Court and the Legate came to Segobia, there was made a generall aſſembly of the Commiſſioners of euery Cathedrall Church of Spaine, where a certaine Subſidie was graunted to the Pope, which was the principall cauſe of his Legation, in recompence whereof, the Legate beſtowed pardons and indulgences vppon euery place with meaſure and proportion, according to euery mans qualitie, and beſides did ordaine to euery Church two Channonries, the one for a Diuine, the other for a Chanoniſt, the which ſhould be giuen by the Biſhops and Chapters.

Some neuertheleſſe, namely, of thoſe which did cleaue and adhere to the partie of the Princes Don Ferdinand and Donna Iſabella, did not appeare at this aſſembly, in the number of whom was Don Inigo Manrique Biſhop of Coria, who requeſted the legate to come to Valiodolit, ſaying, that they were to conferre with him about matters touching the ſucceſſion of the kingdomes; but the King perſwaded him to the contrary, accuſing the Princes and their followers of many matters. The Legate neuertheleſſe went to Alcala to viſit the Princes, who remained there with the Archbiſhop of Toledo, by whom he was ſumptuouſly receiued and with great pompe, as alſo in Guadalajara, the Marquis of Santillanas houſe, where hee remained a certaine ſpace, with the Marquis and the Earles his bretheren.

Enormous ſins cauſe thoſe newly conuerted to returne to Juda iſme.

The impieties, ſuperſtitions, thefts, rapines, and other inſolencies vſed at that time among the Chriſtians in Spaine, namely the Prelates and Church-men, were ſoſcandalous to all men, as diuerſe newe Chriſtians, who were conuerted from Iudaiſme to the profeſſion of Chriſtianity, being conſtrained more by the rigor of the lawes, then perſwaded by wholeſome doctrine, and good examples, began to returne to Iudaiſme, not being able to beleeue by humaine reaſon, that the religion profeſſed by ſuch deteſtable people, could bee the true. The remedy applied to this miſchiefe was the ſame which arrogant men and ſuch as hate correction, and are deſirous to liue in their errors and corruptions, doe commonly vſe, namely the ſword, maſſacres, and all manner of exceſſe. For in the Citty of Cordoua, inſteed of bringing back theſe ſtraies by meekneſſe, holineſſe of life, and ſuch like examples, which is the duty of the miniſters of the Church, they did let looſe the bridle to the raſh mutinous people, who made a cruell ſlaughter of them, and ſpoiled their goods.

Maſſacre of the new Chriſtians.

The Conſtable Don Michael Lucas de Iranſu, murthered by the people.

Thoſe of Iaen followed this example, againſt whom the Conſtable Michaell Lucas de Iranço oppoſing himſelf, was moſt inhumainly murthered in the Cathedral Church by the enraged multitude. The like eruelties and robberies were committed in Andujar and other places of Andaluzia, wherewith King Henry was extreamly diſcontented, but being faint-harted and of no courage in theſe matters, hee did no more puniſh the murtherers, then the Paſtors were diligent in ſeeking out fit Chriſtian meanes to bring back theſe Apoſtata's into the right way. The office of Conſtable was giuen to Don Pedro Velaſco Earle of Haro the Kings great Chamberlaine, at the interceſſion of the Maiſter of Saint Iames his Sonne in law, the which dignity hath euer ſince, euen till our time, continued in that family: The King like-wiſe gaue the ſeales of his Chancery, to the Biſhogge of Siguença.

D. Pedro de Velaſco made Conſtable of Caſtill.

The King finding that Donna Ioane his ſuppoſed daughter, had very ill ſucceſſe in her treaties of marriage, reſolued to beſtow her vpon Don Henry, Sonne to the Infant Don Henry who was Maiſter of S. Iames, & brother to Don Ferdinand Infant of Caſtile, which was King of Arragon, who at the ſame time, remayned in the Citty of Barcelona, from whence hee cauſed him to come ſecretly into Caſtile. This Prince, who by the commandement of King Iohn his vnckle, was called in his dominions, the Infant of Arragon, and by ſome others the fortunate Infant, was very proud, the which hee ſhewed in Caſtile before his time, which did greatly hinder his aduancement, in that Kingdome. Hee with his mother Donna Beatrice Pimentell, Aunt to the Earle of Benauent, arriued at Requegna, from whence afterward, (the King hauing furniſhed them with all things neceſſary for their calling, and place which they held) the Maiſter of Saint Iames cauſed them to come to the Caſtle of Garcy Nugnos, ſending two of his Gentlemen to accompany them thither. During the time that this Don Henry remayned there, ſundry Lords and Knights came to viſit him, diuers of whome becauſe they would bee reputed ciuill and curteous, offered to kiſſe his hand, thinking that hee would not haue ſuffered it, but hee keeping a great grauity preſented his hand freely vnto them: but one amongſt the reſt taking him by the hand, ſayd to him in deriſion, my Lord you haue a very faire hand, and ſo without kiſſing it let goe his hold, whereat D. Henry was much offended.

36

The Maiſter of Saint Iames remayned at that time in Madrill, being diſcontented with an accident hapned at Segobia: Hee had ſundry times ſolicited the king to commit the Caſtle and gates of the citty to his keeping, alleadging that in that place Queene

Ioane

A Ioane and her daughter, might lodge more ſafely then any where elſe, and that he ſhould by no meanes giue the charge thereof to Andrew de Cabrera, becauſe he was aſſured that Beatrice of Bouadilla his wife, was drawne to the Princeſſe party, and beſides, that he being a Cattelan, was an affectionate ſeruant to Prince Fernand, all which was very true. The King yeelded to the Maiſters requeſt; But Andrew de Cabrera refuſed to diſpoſſeſſe himſelfe of the caſtle: whereat the Maiſter beeing highly offended, practiſed his ruine, and thought to effect it by this practiſe: He cauſed Diego Tapia and certaine other Gentlemen to come into the city, giuing them charge to ſtirre vp the people, whom he knew to be deſirous to fall vpon the new conuerted Chriſtians, and to ſpoile them of their
B goods, as they of Cordoua and other places of Andaluzia had lately done; and they appointed that during the tumult, ſome band of ſouldiars ſhould force the Kings houſe and take both him and Andrew de Cabrera, his Steward, to make him deliuer vp the caſtle: Diego de Tapia needed not to vſe much labour to ſtirre vp the people who were ouermuch addicted to miſchiefe: wherefore it was concluded that at the ringing of a larum bell in the Church of Saint Peter de los Picos, they ſhould aſſaile the city in fiue ſundry places, on a ſunday after dinner, namely in the quarter of Saint Olalla, in that of Saint Colomba, Saint Martin, Saint Iohn, and that of Saint Michael, appointing a ſquadron to goe vp and downe, and to diſcouer in euery place of the city. But it was the will of God, that this complot came to the knowledge of the Legat, who lay then at Guadalaja-
C ra, who forth-with reuealed it to the King, the King ſent word thereof to Andrew de Cabrera, captaine of the fort, to the end he ſhould ſtand vpon his gard, & preuent this danger in the city; Cabrera hauing ſecretly armed many ſouldiars, and all the Conuerts which were fit to beare arms, did ſo preuent his enemies, as he ſlew and defeated moſt of them, and Diego Tapia was ſhot through the body with an arrow. The Maiſter hauing failed in his enterpriſe, and fearing leaſt ſome euill might betide him, departed the ſame night from Segobia, and came to the Monaſtery of Parrall, to goe from thence to Ma-D drid: the King tooke the paines to come and viſit him in the Monaſtery, and vſed all the entreaties that he could to bring him backe: but the Maiſter ſaid vnto him, that he had no confidence in Andrew de Cabrera nor his wife, and that hee would neuer ſet foote in Segobia vntill ſuch time as hee were poſſeſt of the caſtle: wherefore the King returned to Segobia to pacifie and appeaſe the tumult. It is moſt certaine that the enterpriſes of the Maiſter, beeing preiudiciall to an other, were very dangerous to himſelfe: for his ſonne-in-law the Earle of Benauent, ſtill bearing in minde how hee had preuented him of the Maiſterſhip of Saint Iames, did keepe armed men in his houſe, who were appointed to haue ſlaine him in that tumult, wherefore hee did wiſely to goe to Madrid, whether neuertheleſſe, all matters being appeaſed, the King and the whole Court came, and namely the Earle of Benauent: and thither were alſo brought the Queene, and D. Ioane her daughter. At Madrid there arriued a meſſenger from the Pope, who aduer-
E tized the King that D. Pero Gonçal de Mendoza, Biſhop of Siguença, was created Cardinall of the title of holy Croſſe, the which did greatly pleaſe the King, who commanded him to be called the Cardinall of Spaine, the which title hee vſed during his life, and receiued many honors of King Henry.

In theſe times beganne the Order of the Religious of Saint Francis of Paul, who was a Calabrian borne at a place called Paul, who was drawne into France by King Lewis the eleuenth, and died at Tours; his Order called the Minims of Saint Francis, was approued by Pope Sixtus this yeere 1473. and afterwards at the requeſt of King Francis the firſt, of Queene Claude his wife, and of Donna Louiſe of Sauoy his mother, the Author was canonized by Pope Leo the tenth, in the yeere 1529. of this Religious Order there are many Monaſteries in Spaine, diuided into two Prouinces.

An. 1473. Order of Saint Francis of Paul.

F King Henry beeing deſirous to conſumate the marriage, betwixt Donna Ioane and his couſin the Infant Don Henry, tooke councell thereupon of the Biſhop of Siguença choſen Cardinall, and of others of his councell, and cauſed the Infant with his mother to come to Xetafa, betwixt which place and Madrid, he did ſee them, and would willingly haue brought them to Madrid, but the Maiſter of Saint Iames, who did not allow of this marriage, delt in ſuch ſort as they came not thither: afterward, the king hauing founded Mariage of D. Ioane ſuppoſed daughter of Henry of Arragon, broken by the Maiſter of S. Iames.

founded the maiſter concerning this match, hee did openly diſwade him from it, ſaying, A that he ought not to marry his daughter to any other then to a King or a mighty Prince: and that if he were determined to giue her to Don Henry, it behooued him then to leuie men of warre, and to appoint for their pay, more then twenty millions of Marauedis; the King (who had treaſures in the Caſtle of Segobia) ſaid, that hee would not want money; and therefore, hee ſent the Maiſter, and the new elected Cardinall to Segobia, to take out of the Caſtle ſuch ſummes as hee appointed: but the Captaine Andrew de Cabrera, delayed them many dayes, ſaying, that hee would cauſe the money to bee told out, but yet they did it not; for indeed hee was ſeruant to the Princes, and wholy contrary to the Kings will, as concerning Donna Ioanes marriage; and beſides that hee B would haue nothing to doe with the Maiſter, whom hee deadly hated, fearing that all that hee went about tended to no other end but to diſpoſſeſſe him of his Gouernment. In the meane time the Earle of Benauent (who was cooſin Germaine to to Don Henry,) perceiuing that chiefly by the practiſes of the Maiſter, the mariage was delayed, and incenſed with an old hatred againſt him, about the Maiſterſhip of Saint Iames, had bitter words with him, telling him that hee ſhould better haue conſidered of matters, and not to haue procured the Infant Don Henry to haue come into Spaine, in a manner to deride him, and vnder colour of lyes to abuſe the King, the Realme, and the great Lords, with many other bitter words, which the Maiſter endured with patience. C

37 The death of Don Alphonſo of Fonſeca, Archbiſhoppe of Siuill, did promote Pero Goncales of Mendoça Biſhop of Siguença to that dignity, vnto whom almoſt at the ſame time that his Bulls were diſpatcht from Rome, was the Cardinals Hatte preſented. And the King beeing ſolicited to prouide for the troubles and miſeries of his kingdome, hee did the ſame yeare one thouſand, foure hundered, ſeuenty and three, call the Eſtates to Saint Mary de Nieua, whether came the Deputies of the Communalties and cities of Caſtile, and Regions annexed to the ſame. There were ſundry exactions aboliſhed, which had beene leuied vppon the poore people by the Kings officers, and by ſubalterne Lords following his example, as paiments for the Portes, bridges, taxes, watching and warding, and other ſuch like impoſitions, leuied without D any lawfull cauſe, vpon wayfaring men, paſſengers, and the inhabitants of places. There was alſo granted to the King a certaine Subſidie of money: At this parlament the Infant Don Henry, and his mother Donna Beatrice Pimentell were preſent. And then the Maiſter of Saint Iames bethinking himſelfe of another pollicy, by meanes whereof hee might get the citty of Segobia into his hands, hee counſelled the King to remooue the aſſembly of the eſtates to Segobia, where more commodiouſly the affaires of the kingdome might bee managed, and Donna Ioanes marriage concluded vpon: the which aſſembly ſhould bee there in ſafety, vnder the faith and ſafeguard of the Marquis of Santillana, whom hee perſwaded to demand, for the ſame purpoſe, the Keyes of the gates of Saint Iohn and Saint Martin, of the ſame E citty, of Andrew de Cabrera: but Cabrera perceiuing very well whereunto it tended, and beeing reſolued couragiouſlie to oppoſe himſelfe againſt the Maiſter of Saint Iames, found many probable excuſes, and delayed the matter, till ſome other determination was taken, wherein hee was ſupported and fauoured by the new Archbiſhop of Siuill, and Cardinall of Spaine, who had ſecretly vnited himſelfe to the Princes, and was wholy againſt Donna Ioane. In this manner the Maiſter was diſappointed of his purpoſes to his great greefe, who in like manner ſought to ſurpriſe the caſtle of Toledo, and raiſed ſuch a tumult there, as the King was faine to goe thither in perſon to appeaſe it: but hee cauſed no enquirie to bee made for the ring-leaders to that miſchiefe, to puniſh them according to their deſerts: by reaſon wher- F of euery man almoſt committed what miſchiefe hee pleaſed, without any feare of the lawes.

Taxes leuied by vſurpation vpon the poore people aboliſhed.

The Maiſter of S. Iames his couetouſneſſe cut ſhort.

Impunity, the nurſe of all diſorders.

Whileſt the king remained at Toledo, the Marquis of Villena, ſonne to the Maiſter of Saint Iames, came to doe him reuerence, whom hee receiued with extraordinary kindneſſe, the Maiſter beeing then at Pignafiell with his wife the Dutcheſſe

of

A of Eſcalona. And when the King returned to Segobia, the Marquis of Villena followed him, but he lodged without the city at the Monaſtery of Parrall, becauſe of the quarrels betwixt his father and Andrew de Cabrera: the King went often to heare maſſe at this Monaſtery, and to viſit the Marquis.

As theſe matters paſſed, the Princeſſe D. Iſabella hauing intelligence with the Inhabitants of Aranda de Duero, tooke that place which belonged to the Queene, whereat the King merueilouſly ſtorming, Andrew de Cabrera put him in minde of the great tirannies of the Maiſter of Saint Iames, and of his inſatiable couetouſneſſe in getting of townes and cities, and how hee had continually, without any reſpect, hurried and tired his royall B perſon, as hee himſelfe very well knew: and therefore hee perſwaded him to be pleaſed, that the Princeſſe his ſiſter might ſafely come to the caſtle of Segobia, where they might ſee one an other, and conferre together, which could not chooſe but bee exceeding profitable for the Kingdome and for all good men. The King, who was tender hearted, and eaſie to bee carried away, was pleaſed therewith, and after that hee had heard the opinion of the Cardinall of Spaine, and of the Earle of Benauent, hee was more deſirous of it; and Donna Beatrice of Bouadilla, wife to Andrew of Cabrera, diſguiſed in the habit of a country-man, and riding vpon an aſſe, went her ſelfe to Aranda to cauſe the Princeſſe to come to the caſtle of Segobia, who beeing accompanied with the Archbiſhop of Toledo, and others, came thither, and entred the caſtle in a morning before day, where Enterview of King Henry and the Princeſſe Iſabella his ſiſter. C ſhe was courteouſly entertained. Her comming was on the ſodaine, the King beeing abſent at that time from Segobia, hunting in the forreſt of Balſain, who was haſtned by Cabrera, who did greatly ſuſpect the ſtay of the Marquis of Villena at the Monaſtery of Parrall, fearing that hee remained there to make ſome practiſe vpon him. Now aſſoone as the Marquis of Villena knew that the Princeſſe was come to the caſtle of Segobia, he diſlodged in all haſt, and neuer left galloping till hee was arriued at Aillon, fearing to be taken.

The Earle of Benauent, and Cabrera, rode forthwith to the forreſt to giue the King notice that his ſiſter was come, who returned to Segobia, and after that hee had dined, he came to the caſtle to ſee the Princeſſe, to whom he vſed all ſignes of loue and friend- D ſhip: and ſitting downe, one neere to an other, they talked a long while togither, and at laſt the King tooke his leaue of her with many curteous ceremonies, ſeeming to bee highly pleaſed. The Maiſter of Saint Iames hauing intelligence of all theſe matters, thought to prouide for his owne ſafety whatſoeuer ſhould happen, and therefore hee went to Cuellar to talke with D. Bertrand de la Cueua Duke of Albuquerque, whether, at his intreaty, came the new Conſtable Don Pedro de Velaſco Earle of Haro his father in law, and there they made a league and confederacy together: afterward they began to ſollicite the King, to put the Princeſſe his ſiſter forth of Segobia; wherevnto (being bewitched by the Maiſter) hee conſented, but his councell therein was diuided. The Princeſſe, the better to order her affaires, was of opinion to cauſe the Prince her hus- E band to come to the caſtle of Segobia, thinking by his preſence the King would be ſooner brought to reaſon, and all matters concluded with more facility. The Prince beeing come, the King ſaw him, and receiued him with a cheerefull countenance, and they rode togither on horſe-backe thorough the city, to the great contentment of the people, and likewiſe of the Courtiers, though not of all. The great Maiſter Andrew de Cabrera made them a Royall banquet in the Biſhops houſe, at which the Earle of Ribadeo, by priuiledge from his anceſtors, did eate at the King and the Princes table. The feaſt beeing ended, with ſtore of muſike and other delights, the King grew ſicke and complained of his ſide, and was carried into his lodging, where after a while, hee recouered, but not without hauing certaine relicks of rheume, fluxes of bloud by vrine, with vomitings, and F other ſuch like mortall accidents: The Princes did hourely viſit him, and cauſed others to ſolicite him to declare the Princeſſe his ſiſter heire to the Kingdomes, wherevpon there paſſed diuerſe ſtrang and bitter words betwixt thoſe which mannaged this buſineſſe on either ſide: but nothing being concluded, the Princeſſe reſolued not to leaue Segobia. The Maiſter of Saint Iames was aduertized of all that paſſed, by the King himſelfe, who went about on a night to put certaine companies of ſouldiars into the city, who ſhould

The Maiſter had as bad ſucceſſe in this plot as in the former: for God who had predeſtinated the Princes Fernand and Iſabella to reigne in Spaine, ſuffered this practize to be diſcouered, by meanes whereof the daunger was preuented, the Princeſſe ſtood vpon her gard, and the Prince retired himſelf in time, and went into Arragon, whether he was called by warres and troubles which there happened.

38 Nauarre. and Arragon.

King Iohn of Arragon, his father, was in his old age oppreſſed with croſſes, as well in Nauarre, by the ſeditions of his ſubiects, as on the frontiers of France and County of Roſſillon. In Nauarre, ſoone after that the Princeſſe Donna Leonora failed in her en- B terpriſe of taking Pampelona, her husband the Earle Gaſton of Foix, returning out of France into Nauarre, fell ſicke and died at a place called Roncevaux, in the yeere 1472. leauing heire of his Lands and Lordſhips of Bearn and Foix his ſonnes ſonne, Francis Phœbus a child of the age of fiue yeeres, who remayning vnder the gouernment of his mother Donna Magdalen of France, and of the Princeſſe Donna Leonora his grand-mother, was likewiſe, after her death, heire to the Kingdome of Nauarre. Donna Leonorаes titles were then, Princeſſe, heire of Nauarre, Infanta of Arragon and Sicill, and Lieutenant Generall for the King her Lord and father in the ſaid Kingdome of Nauarre.

Death of Gaſton de Foix.

Titles of D. Leonor of Nauar.

After the deceaſe of Gaſton Earle of Foix, this Princeſſe making her aboade in the C city of Tafalla, called there a Parliament, to the which the great Lords came, and eſpecially the chiefe of the faction of Grammont and Beaumont, who inflamed with enuy were ſtill deſirous to ruine one an other. It happened (as it is eaſie amongſt thoſe that are of trobleſome and enuious diſpoſitions) that diuerſe bitter ſpeeches paſſed betwixt the Earle of Lerin and the Conſtable of Nauarre Pedro de Peralta, which cauſed great contention: into the which quarrell Nicholas de Echauarri, Biſhop of Pampelona, did ſo farre enter, as the Conſtable thinking himſelfe greatly iniured by him, threatned him that it ſhould coſt him his life.

Suſpition of loue betwixt the Princeſſe D. Leonora, and the Biſhop of Pampelona.

This Biſhop was ſuſpected to bee more familliar with the Princeſſe Donna Leonora D then honeſty required, which cauſed him to be hated of diuerſe men, who were iealous of their Princeſſe honour, taking it more heinouſly at his hands, who was a prelat and ought to giue good example, then if it had beene any other. The Biſhop, after this threatning, beeing fearefull, would by no meanes come forth of his houſe. The Princeſſe, either deſirous to pacifie this quarrell, or elſe not able to endure him long out of her ſight, ſent diuerſe meſſengers to him, to bring him vnto her to the Monaſtery of Saint Sebaſtian of the Order of Saint Francis at Tafalla, where ſhee accompliſhed a nine daies vowes which ſhee had made, for ſhee vſed great deuotion to thoſe fathers, and beſtowed many benifits vpon them: but the Biſhop ſtill fearing to bee met with by the way, prayed her for to excuſe him. At the laſt ſhee ſent vnto him one of her familliar friends called Fernand de Baquedan with an other E
Knight named Sir Hughe, who promiſed to conduct him ſafely thether, whereupon hee mounted on his Mule, and rode in their company towards Tafalla, whereof the Conſtable beeing aduertized, hee was ſo farre tranſported with rage, as leaping on horſe-backe, hee met with the Biſhop on the way, and ſlew him hard by the gates of Tafalla, not reſpecting or regarding the Princeſſes word, nor yet his Epiſcopall dignity, for the which inhumane fact he remained diuerſe monthes together excommunicate.

The Biſhop of Pampelona ſlaine by the Conſtable.

This mans death did greatly offend diuerſe both in Nauarre and in King Iohn of Arragons Court, but eſpecially the Princeſſe. Don Alphonſo Carillo a Spaniard, was promoted to that dignity in his ſted, being in number the fortith Biſhop of that Sea. F

On the other ſide, King Iohn beeing then threeſcore and tenne yeeres of age, was ingaged in a tedious quarrell with the French, vpon this occaſion: The Earledome of Roſſillan was ingaged vnto King Lewis the eleuenth for the ſumme of three hundred thouſand crownes, who kept therein Gouernors and Officers which did oppreſſe the people, and committed diuerſe inſupportable outrages, where the inhabitants daily com-

A complained,requeſting their King to protect them, wherewith the Frenchmen were diſpleaſed: in regard whereof King Lewis ſent Ambaſſadors to King Iohn, who ſommoned him to make paiment of the three hundred thouſand crownes, and to receiue his Earledome,or elſe to appropriat it vnto him for the ſame ſumme, or if hee were not pleaſed with theſe two motions: that then hee ſhould giue him ſuerties in France,for the payment of the money at a certaine time. This did greatly trouble King Iohn, neuertheleſſe,with great modeſty hee made anſwere, that hee would requeſt King Lewis not to vrge him at ſo vnſeaſonable a time, after his long and chargeable warres made againſt his ſubiects,to repay the ſaid ſumme,which as then was impoſſible for him to doe,much-
B leſſe to ſell the Earledome vnto him, and wholy to alienate that which did belong to the crowne of Arragon: And as for the ſuerties which he demaunded; hee did not thinke it a reaſonable requeſt, nor yet beſeeming him,who had(God be thanked) wherewith to pay his debts in time: with this anſwere the Ambaſſadors were not ſatisfied,as alſo by reaſon that thoſe of Perpignan, impatient of the French yoake, beganne manifeſtly to rebell againſt them: wherefore King Lewis ſent forces into the county of Roſſillon,to chaſtice thoſe of Perpignan, who had conſtrained the Frenchmen dwelling amongſt them,to retire themſelues into the caſtle,from whence they ſhot into the towne with the Canon,doing great harme therevnto. King Iohn came thither in haſt to appeaſe this ſtire,and endeauored by all meanes to perſwade the people to obey the French,promi-
C ſing them ſhortly to deliuer them from that trouble: but they anſwered him boldly,that they had rather ſuffer death then returne to the ſubiection of ſuch Lords.

The Earledome of Roſſillon,original of all the warres betwixt France and Spaine in our dayes.

During theſe diſputations King Iohn was on a ſodaine beſeeged in the towne by the French army, which the Spaniſh Authors number to bee forty thouſand, who hauing enuironed it on euery ſide, beganne to batter it without, and within to aſſaile it from the caſtle,ſo as it behooued the beſeeged to be couragious, and valiantly to defend themſelues,the Kings preſence ſeruing them greatly to that purpoſe. The ſeege continued foure monthes: in the end,at the report of Prince Fernands comming,who vpon the newes of the French mens arriuall,had leauied ſouldiars both in Caſtile,Arragon and Cattalonia, they raiſed their ſeege and retired themſelues into France. King
D Iohn and the towne beeing deliuered from this danger, all men went out to meete the Prince,and the father and the ſonne embraced one an other with great ioy, who came togither into Perpignan. The King did againe entreat the Inhabitants to obey the French for a ſhort time,till he could otherwiſe diſpoſe of his affaires, aſſuring them that he would pay the French King his money,and take them againe to himſelfe. They being obſtinate refuſed it,and requeſted him,to giue King Lewis other pledges, or elſe to ſuffer them to depart thence,for they would willingly giue ouer their houſes, goods,yea and their owne liues,rather then to ſubmit themſelues to the vilde vſage of the French. King Iohn ſeeing them ſo reſolued,left D. Lewis de Requeſens for the Gouernor,and with the Prince his ſonne returned to Barcelona.

E Before the Princes departure out of Caſtile, there aroſe a great quarrel betwixt the Marquis of Santillana,and the Earle of Benauent,becauſe that the Earle(poſſeſſing the towne of Carrion, by the Kings permiſſion, the which hee had held during the former troubles,had vildely and iniuriouſly intreated certaine Gentlemen which dwelt in the ſame towne, who were neere in bloud and parentage to the Marquis, who hauing notice thereof ſent vnto him, and deſired him in regard that thoſe Gentlemen did belong vnto him,that hee would for reuerence due to the boanes of his anceſtors ſpare and reſpect them: the Earle made him a proude anſwere and ſaid,that hee would cauſe his anceſters bones to be taken vp,and ſend them vnto him in baskets,to the end he might beſtow them ſafer with himſelfe at Guadalajara amongſt the reſt of his progenitors. The F Marquis being iuſtly mooued hereat,conſpired with the Earle of Treuigno, and others his friends and kinſfolkes,to take that place from the Earle, who had builded a new fort there; the Earle of Treuigno hauing intelligence with the wronged Gentlemen(his lands lying neere to Carrion)he entred the towne with ſouldiars, and beſeeged the fort and ſoone after the Marquis arriued with troupes of horſe and foote,as well of his owne tenants as thoſe of the Conſtable Pedro de Velaſco,the duke of Albuquerque and others, who who ſupported him in this quarrell. The Earle of Benauent hauing notice of what the Marquis had done, and ment to doe, came in ſpeedily to Valiodolit, and gathered his friends togither, ſo as with the helpe of the Maiſter of Saint Iames his father in law, who in this tooke his part, hee found himſelfe able to offer battaile to his aduerſary: but the King beeing accompanied with the Cardinall of Spaine brother to the Marquis, and with the Maiſter, father in law to the Earle, did put himſelfe betwixt them, and handled the matter in ſuch ſort by the Cardinalls meanes, as he hindred them from ioyning battaile: and it was agreed, that the towne of Carion ſhould returne to the crowne, and the Earle ſhould haue the towne of Magaua in recompence, which belonged to the Cardinall, who to make them friends was content to diſpoſſeſſe himſelfe thereof, and receiued other recompences for the ſame. Prince Fernand when this quarrell beganne, was ready to depart into Arragon, and had leauied certaine companies of ſouldiars, the which wich his owne perſon hee offered to the Marquis who gaue him humble thankes, ſaying that he was ſtrong enough to incounter a greater Lord then the Earle of Benauent: and therefore hee beſought him to preſerue his perſon in ſafety, that hee might in time to come reigne in Spaine, and not to hazard it now when there was no need.

The Marquis afterwards returned to Guadalajara, and went to Saint Chriſtofers to viſit the Princeſſe Donna Iſabella, who went forth to meete him: hee offred her his ſeruice, and all aide and aſſiſtance for the obteining of her right, after the King her brothers death. The Earle of Benauent returned into his owne poſſeſſions, the King with the Cardinall to Segobia, and the Maiſter to Cuellar: but ſoone after, the King with the whole Court, and the Maiſter likewiſe, came to Madrid, where by the Maiſter his Councell it was thought fit that the Cardinall ſhould returne to Segobia to treat with the Princeſſe, and the Maiſter brought the King to Trugillo, to cauſe the fort of the ſame city to be deliuered vnto him, which hee had ſo importunately a long time begged: but the Gouernor of that place whoſe name was Gratian de Seſe would not conſent therevnto, nor obey the Kings commandment; yet neuertheleſſe hee hauing beene ſollicited by the Maiſter with promiſe of great recompences hee beganne to negociate about the deliuery thereof: but the matter being delaied, the King, who ſince his laſt ſickneſſe decaied in his health, was conſtrained to returne to Madrid, there to take his reſt: In the ſame place remained Donna Ioane in the keeping of the Marquis of Villena: as for the Queene, ſhe was elſe-where, and lead a pleaſant life without any ſhame at all. In the meane time the Maiſter of Saint Iames, who remained at Santa Cruz de la Sierra, delt in ſuch ſort as captaine Gratian of Seſe deliuered him the fort of Trugillo, being recompenced with the Lordſhip of Saint Helice de los Gallegos, where ſhortly after he was cruelly murthered and ſtoned to death by his owne tenants. About the ſame time the Maiſter of Saint Iames D. Iohn de Pacheco fell ſicke of an Impoſtume in his throate, which cauſed him to voide great quantity of putrified bloud at his mouth, which in the end ſtrangled him, he died in the threeſcore and fourth yeere of his age, hauing more credit and authority in Spaine, then any Lord in his time: his death was kept ſecret by his ſeruants, vntill the fort of Trugillo was yeelded vp, which was forthwith done, and then it was openly declared to all men: his body was carried to Parrall neere Segobia, a Monaſtery of Saint Ieroſme, founded by King Henry then reigning for his place of buriall, and the Maiſter was buried in the chiefe chappell with great pompe and ſollemnity. Great was the Kings ſorrow for the Maiſters death, to whoſe ſonne and heire Don Diego Lopes de Pacheco Marquis of Villena, he did not only confirme the guifts of the townes, cities and caſtles, granted to his father, but beſtowed likewiſe vpon him the Maiſterſhip of Saint Iames, and ſent a meſſenger to the Pope to obtaine the confirmation thereof, not reſpecting the Knights of the ſame Order, who began to murmur and ſtrongly to oppoſe themſelues againſt it, and they did not onely bandy themſelues againſt the Marquis of Villena, who was not choſen according to the rules of the Order, but they likewiſe fell at variance amongſt themſelues: for D. Roderigo Manrique Earle of Paredes Commander of Segura, ſaid, that the election of the new Maiſter ought to be made in the Couent of Vcles, according to the ancient cuſtome: On the other ſide, D. Alphonſo de

Death of D. Iohn de Pacheco Maiſter of Saint Iames.

A de Cardegna great Commander of Leon, affirmed, that it stood with great reason that the election should be made in Saint Marks of Leon, in regard the deceased Maister died in the confines of Leon: wherefore each of them standing firme in their allegations, and having their factions and partakers, those two were chosen and saluted for Maisters; in such sort as the Order of Saint Iames, had at that time three heads, like vnto Cerberus the three headed dogge of hell. The Marquis of Villena, besides the Kings fauour, did hope that the Earle of Osorno, great Commander of Castile, would take his part; and because he had the keeping of Donna Ioane the Kings supposed daughter, it made the King more bound vnto him, and in very deed by reason thereof the King did greatly ad-
B uance him: the which gained diuers seruants to the Princesse Donna Isabella, who were iealous to see his sonne who had done them so much mischiefe in so great credit and authority.

The Cardinall of Spaine hauing beene a certaine time at Segobia with the Princesse, came backe to Madrid to the King, with the Constable Don Pedro de Velasco, who ioyntly spake to the King with great boldnesse touching the succession of the Kingdome, beseeching him to take in good part, that which they should say vnto him vpon their consciences, which was, that he ought to maintaine the Princesse Isabels right, be- King Henry takes no care for the succession of his Kingdome.
C cause he knew better then any that this Donna Ioane was not his daughter: and they requested him, in the name of God, not to be the cause of so great miseries which would oppresse his Kingdome after his decease, if hee should dissemble in that behalfe, but to speake the truth, for his peoples sake, in declaring his sister the Princesse his true and lawfull heire: wherevnto the King without any trouble made answere, that Order should be taken for them both; neuertheless hee delaied all hee could from medling in that businesse. In the meane space the Marquis of Villena, who promised to him selfe the Maister-ship of Saint Iames, thinking to practize with the Knights of Castile, and chiefly with the Earle of Osorno, the great Commander, came to Villarejo, in which place the enterview of him and the Earle was agreed vpon: but the Earle feigning him- The Marquis of Villena taken prisoner by his competitor.
D selfe sicke, sent thither his wife, well accompanied with men at armes, by whom the Marquis, at his lighting from his horse was seized vpon, and carried away prisoner into the castle of Fuente Duegna.

The King being aduertized hereof, did presently take horse, notwithstanding he was very sicke, and came to the Earle of Osorno, who shewed himselfe sterne and obstinate, without respect or reuerence, wherefore the King returned highly displeased to Madrid. By the way he met with the Archbishop of Toledo at Villa Verde, who offered him his seruice, and therevpon, to please him hee beseeged out of hand the castle of Fuente Duegna, whether the King likewise came in person. The seege lasting long, Lopes Vasques de Acugna, brother to the Archbishop, making shew of ending this strife as a friend, found meanes to bring the Countesse of Osorno to a parley, who comming abroade with a sonne of hers, was deceiued in the same manner as she had beguiled the E Marquis, and the mother and the sonne were brought prisoners into the castle of Hueta.

This pollicy did highly please the King and the Archbishop, and was the cause that the Marquis was deliuered: the Cardinall and the Constable made an end of the matter, and the prisoners were set at liberty on either side: the Archbishop of Toledo returned to Alcala, and the King, beeing much afflicted and weake, to Madrid, where Catarres, vomitings, and other mortall accidents brought him to his last houre. The physitions hauing told the Cardinall of Spaine, the Constable, the Marquis of Villena, the Earle of Benauent and other Lords of his Councel there present, that his sicknesse was mortall, they caused Frier Peter Maçuelo, prior of Saint Ieroſme of Madrid, his confessor, to F put him in minde of matters belonging to his soules health, and the peace of his Kingdome. Hee had long discourse with the prior in confession; then hee made his will, appointing the Cardinall, the Duke de Areualo, the Marquis of Villena, and the Earle of Benauent for his executors; and hee commaunded that his seruants should bee paide and well recompenced with his treasure and iewells, and declared Donna Ioane to bee his lawfull daughter, and true heire to his Kingdomes; the The Countesse of Osorno, and her sonne taken, the Marquis of Villena set at liberty.

which will was written by Iohn de Ouiedo, one of his ſecretaries: neuertheleſſe, diuers A authors affirme, that he made no will, and ſay, that as he was in the agony of death, thoſe that were preſent, asked him whom he would declare to be his heire, to whom hee made none other anſwere, but that Iohn Gonçall his Chaplaine knew his minde therein, vnto whom he referred them, naming the foure aboue mentioned for the executors of his laſt will and teſtament, and ordained his body to bee buried at Guadalupa. Vpon this doubt, whether the King made a will or not, were afterward great troubles raiſed, but that which is moſt likely to be true, is the teſtimony of the Lieutenant Diego Henriques his Cronicler and Counſellor, who ſaith, that he did make a will, and in deed his teſta-ment was found the yeere 1504. thirty yeeres after his death. B

Order and continuance of the Kings reigning in Spaine, written in this two and twentith Booke.

CASTILE. LEON. ARRAGON. PORTVGAL. NAVARRE.

20. D Fernand the 5. and Queene Iſabella 41. 19. the ſame Ferdi 2. 13. D. Leonora the 1. 34. D. Francis Phœbus 1.

D.Fernand the 5.King 20.of Caſtile and 41.of Leon, and Donna Iſabella the 4. a woman which inherited the Kingdome of Caſtile, and the 5.which inherited in Leon.

AT ſuch time as the Princes D. Fernand, and Donna Iſabella came to the crowne of Caſtile, and Leon, by the deceaſe of King Henry the fourth, then did iuſtice and peace beginne to ſmile vpon Spaine. And it ſeemed that for the quiet, honour and exaltation of the Spaniſh nation, God had choſen and defended them, in the middeſt of ſo many ſtraits and difficulties, wherein they were oftentimes plunged, as well during the reigne of the Lord King Henry, as afterward: adorning each of them for that purpoſe with royall quallities, and heroike vertues, both of body and minde. For, as well Don Fernand as Queene Iſabella, were of meane ſtature and proportion, yet well compoſed, faire and pleaſant aſpect, gratious in their ſpeeches and of ſuch Maieſty in the geſture and motion of their bodies, as was requiſit for ſuch grent Princes: they were ſober and moderate in their diet, and all other their actions, deuout and religious, as they had beene inſtructed, but yet for all that a little to much couetous of glory and honour which made them oftentimes ſtumble, and tranſported them out of the right way of equity, eſpecially D. Fernand. To loue, and deſire honour and glory, is in deed an affection beſeeming great perſons, and without the which they can hardly giue themſelues to any laudable exercize: but the exceſſe thereof, which men call ambition, is alwaies accompanied with the greateſt vices: They were alſo maintainers of iuſtice in Spaine, the which they executed in ſuch ſort, as their ſeuerity did not depriue them of the praiſe which they deſerued by their mildneſſe and clemency. The plaies and paſtimes which King Fernand vſed in his youth, were Cardes and Cheſſe; but afterward he became inclined to hunting and hawking, to the exercize of armes, and he did proone excellent in all kindes of horſemanſhip: he loued learned men: but his euil hap was, not to be inſtructed therein in his youth, which was thorough his fathers negligence, who was alſo himſelf in a maner wholy vnlearned: King Fernand did greatly delight to heare learned men talke, and to vnderſtand of the laudable actions of great men, but eſpecially of his anceſtors.

Qualities of the Princes Fernand and Iſabel.

Queene Iſabella, for her part, tooke great pleaſure in learning the Latin tongue, and proffited ſo well therein, as in leſſe then a yeere, ſhe was able to vnderſtand what her ſelfe did reade, or what was ſpoken vnto her in the ſame language: her continency and chaſtity was rare, and it did appeere in all her actions, ſpeeches, attire and countenance. Shee kept ordinarily in her houſe young men and women of noble parentage, whom ſhee brought vp, and alſo Ladies of great place, who were honoured for their vertue and honeſty: She would willingly haue had the King her husband like her ſelfe, of whom ſhe was extreamely iealous, and if at any time ſhee perceiued him familliar with any of her Ladies or Gentlewomen, ſhe preſenty ſought meanes to quench thoſe vnlawfull fires yet without ſcandall, either by marrying them, ſending them away, or admoniſhing them, or by ſome other honeſt and diſcreet meanes, deſyring that the Ladies of her traine ſhould be rather vertuous then faire.

It is noted of her, that in her trauaile of child, what paine ſoeuer ſhe indured, ſhee did neuer fetch one ſigh or groane, and at that time ſhe would cauſe her face to be couered. Charmes and inchantements ſhe abhorred as became a Chriſtian: ſhe did greatly loue learned men, who were of good conuerſation; eſpecially prelats of an holy and religious life, doing more good vnto ſuch, and ſooner preferring them to liuings and dignities, then others of greater houſes, who made more ſhew of the fame and glory of their anceſtors then of their owne vertues.

Theſe Princes being thus qualified, obtained the crowne of Caſtile and afterwards, that of Arragon, not without paine, trauaile and great oppoſitions (as hereafter ſhall appeare) which being by them ſurmounted and paſſed ouer, they eſtabliſhed iuſtice, gaue peace to the Spaniards, quenching all forepaſſed ciuill warres, and did zealouſly labour about the ordering of religion, wherein they wanted good helpe: this at the leaſtwiſe redounded to their honour, that they did roote the Moores out of Spaine, and made conqueſts in Affrica, they did quicken vp the Spaniards ſpirits, and incited them to al excellent artes and ſciences, ordayning great ſtipends to learned men, namely benefices and Eccleſiaſticall reuenewes: they made diuerſe good and profitable lawes, A and by their authoritie and meanes, the inhabitants of a new world came to the knowledge of thoſe Regions, the which hath for all that in diuerſe ſorts redounded to the hurt of man-kinde: not by theſe Princes occaſion, but by the couetouſneſſe and cruelty of thoſe which came after them.

The Princeſſe Iſabell (as hath beene already ſaid) was at Segobia, at the time hir brother King Henry died, whither the Princes and Lords, which tooke his part, did come, after the Kings obſequies were finiſhed, which laſted nine dayes, and there they ſaluted her as Queene of Caſtile and Leon, taking the oath of fealty, and dooing her homage after the accuſtomed manner. There were preſent when this was done Don Alphonſo B Carillo d' Acugna Archbiſhop of Toledo, D. Pero Gonçall of Mendoça Archbiſhop of Siuill, called Cardinall of Spaine, and the Biſhop of Siguença, Don Pedro de Velaſco, Conſtable of Caſtile, Don Alphonſo Henriques Admirall of Caſtile, by the death of his father Don Frederick, newly deceaſed, and Vnckle by the mothers ſide to the new King, Don Garcy Aluares of Toledo, Duke of Alua, Don Bertrand de la Cueua Duke of Albuquerque, Don Diego Hurtado de Mendoça Marquis of Santillana, Don Roderigo Alphonſo Pimentel Earle of Benauent, Don Pedro Manrique Earle of Treuigno, and others, ſome of whom were already with the Princeſſe before the Kings death.

Lords holding the party of the Princes Ferdinand & Iſabel.

Prince Ferdinand was at the ſame time in Cattalonia with his father King Iohn, who beeing aduertiſed of that which hapned, came ſpeedily to Segobia, where hee in like C manner was receiued and acknowledged as King, to the great ioy and contentment, not onely of the Citty but of the whole kingdome, who ſent their Deputies vnto him, to doe him homage and ſeruice, as to their lawfull Lord and King, in the right of his wife: it beeing a matter out of all queſtion, that Donna Ioane was a baſtard, borne in adultery, and not capable of any right to the Crowne. Other Lords, which were abſent, did in like manner ſend their deputies to make their ſubmiſſions, and to take the oathes due to the new King. But the Marquis of Villena, who had Donna Ioane in keeping, and Don Aluaro d' Eſtuniga Duke of Areualo, Don Roderigo Telles Gyron, Maiſter of Calatraua, and Don Iohn Gyron Earle of Vregna, couſins to the Marquis of Villena, with others their confederates and adherents, were of another opinion, and did not D onely fauour Donna Ioane, who called her ſelfe Queene of Caſtile, but craued many things for their owne particular profit. The Marquis would haue the Maiſterſhip of Saint Iames, and the places belonging therevnto, which Don Iohn de Pacheco his father had enioyed: The Duke of Areualo would haue his Dutchy confirmed to him, and the Maiſterſhip of Alcantara for Don Iohn d' Eſtuniga his ſonne; other men demanded other matters. Now the firſt thing that was thought vpon by the King and Queenes Councell, was, about the ordering of their treaſures, and adminiſtration of iuſtice, the managing and execution whereof, was to be committed to fit perſons, and capable of ſuch affaires: wherefore Don Guttiere de Cardegna, the Queenes Chamberlaine, and Gonçalo Chacon, were created chiefe Treaſurers, and with them Roderigo de Villao was E ioyned: then they ſent Ambaſſadors to Lewis the eleuenth the French King, to aduertiſe him of King Henries death, of their promotion, and to requeſt him to continue, and confirme the ancient alliance with the houſe of Spaine. The Ambaſſadors had likewiſe commiſſion and inſtructions, for the reſtitution of the Earldome of Roſſillon to the King of Arragon. King Lewis made a ſhew of ſorrow for King Henries death, and ſeemed to reioyce that they had ſucceeded him: but touching the reſtoring of the County of Roſſillon, hee would by no meanes hearken therevnto, but ſent a learned Lawyer to King Ferdinand and Queene Iſabell to ſhew his reaſons for the contrary, who came to Valiodolit with the Ambaſſadors, his comming beeing to no purpoſe. 2 Arragon.

The citty of Perpignan beeing ſuccoured (as heretofore hath beene ſaid) by Prince Ferdinand, was after his returne into Caſtile againe beſieged by the French. King Lewis willing and commanding his Captaines, who had ſhamefully raiſed their ſiege, and were retired into the countrie and territory of Narbona, on paine of being puniſhed as traitors to their king and country, to returne and aſſaile the towne, and not to ſtirre from thence

A thence till they had taken it, although it ſhould coſt all their liues: whervpon, they came backe, and by the helpe of the Caſtle, did for eight moneths ſpace, ſo preſſe the beſeeged, as they brought them to the extreameſt poynt of neceſſitie: for beſides the continuall toyle, watchings, fights, and daily reparations of the breaches, whereunto they were conſtrained, the want of victuals was ſo great in the towne, as they were not onely enforced to eate dogges, cattes, and all other ſorts of vncleane meates, but alſo the very bodies of men, friends or enemies, which were ſlayne in the aſſault, yea mothers did deuoure their owne children: ſuch was the obſtinacie of thoſe people, who would not yeeld to an enemie, whome they had deſpiſed and offended, and from whome they did expect
B no mercie: but in the end, extreame neceſſitie, and inexorable famine brought them to that poynt which they ſought moſt to auoyde, and they found more mercie then they hoped for: for they were taken by compoſition, their offences pardoned, and the Garriſon permitted to depart with their armour and weapons: ſo as King Lewis, by the taking thereof, pretended now more intereſt to it then before. This was the laſt quarrell which King Iohn of Arragon had with the French, or any other: for the goute, his yeares, and other diſcommodities of old age, perſwaded him to ſpend the remainder of his dayes in reſt and quiet in the citty of Barcelona, leauing the gouernement of the Kingdome of Nauarre to his daughter, who was heire thereunto, and his other dominions to the reſt of his children and Lieutenants.

Famine in Perpignan.

Perpignan yeelded to the French.

C This yeare 1457. there grew a contention betwixt King Fernand and Queene Izabella about the gouernement of Caſtile, diſputing which of them two had moſt right to the ſucceſſion thereof: ſhe, as daughter to King Iohn of Caſtile the ſecond: and hee, as ſonne to King Iohn of Arragon, who deſcended in direct maſculine line from King Iohn the firſt, in the third degree. Some, who tooke the Kings part, did ſay, that it was a thing againſt nature and all good order, that the regiment of ſo great a State ſhould be in a womans power, and that ſo many great Lords and braue Knights ſhould be vnder the commaund of that ſexe, weake both in body and mind, without experience, wiſedome or knowledge of what was profitable or hurtfull to a kingdome, vnleſſe it were by heareſay, beeing ofteneſt deceyued by ignorance, and which did follow their owne paſſions,
D and thoſe of them that they fauoured, who for the moſt part were choſen amongſt the worſt ſort of people. 3 Caſtile.

That all kingdomes, Iuriſdictions, and well-gouerned Common-wealths, as well auncient as moderne, had wholy reiected a womans empire, and if at any time they had ſubmitted themſelues thereunto, their ruine and deſolation had ſoone after enſued: alledging for example the Sallicke law of France, which is a good old cuſtome, alwaies profitable when it was obſerued, either in the totall gouernement, or parts thereof. On the contrarie part, others who held with Queene Izabella, did ſay, that euery one ought to be maintayned in their right, and that there was nothing more conſonant to nature, then that children ſhould ſucceed their fathers and neereſt kinsfolke: that diuers women had
E beene profitable to Kingdomes and Common-wealths, as well in old times, as of freſh memorie, namely, that there were ſundrie recent examples thereof in the Monarchie of Caſtile. And as for Queene Izabella, her conſtancie, iudgement, and wiſedome was ſufficiently knowne, and that all men were aſſured of her good gouernement, and that ſhee was not the firſt woman which had inherited that kingdome.

Contentions betwixt king Fernand and Q. Izabella.

This laſt opinion was followed and allowed of, whereat king Fernand ſeemed to be highly diſpleaſed: but the Queene, who did dearely loue him, and would not willingly haue him diſcontented, told him, that her intent was not in matters concerning the affaires of Caſtile and Leon to bee more obeyed than himſelfe, and requeſted him to conſider, that whatſoeuer was decreed in that poynt, was for the good and benefite of their
F onely daughter Donna Izabella: if ſo bee that they ſhould happen to haue no iſſue male, who otherwiſe ſhould bee wholly depriued of that honour and royall dignitie, if what hee had purſued and alleadged, ſhould take place, by theſe probable reaſons the king was ſatisfied with that which the great Lords had decreed.

Yet neuertheleſſe it was concluded and determined, that all letters miſſiue, writings, and other expeditions, ſhould bee made in both their names, and vnder the ſeale

of

of the two kingdomes of Caſtile and Arragon, and that all coyne ſhold be likewiſe ſtamped with both their armes quartered therein. A

4 The Marquis of Villena his demaunds.

The Marquis of Villena mooued the King and Queene, that by their fauour he might be confirmed in the Maſter-ſhippe of Saint Iames, and that a husband might be prouided for Donna Ioane, with a dowrie befitting her eſtate: which beeing performed, hee promiſed to become their faithfull and obedient ſeruant: hee was one of the braueſt Knights, and beſt men at armes in all Spaine: tthe King and Queene ſent him word, that concerning the Maſter-ſhippe, hee ſhould haue all their fauours and aſſiſtance, as well to the Pope, as to the Knights of the ſame Order, notwithſtanding that Don Alphonſo of Cardegna, and Don Roderigo Manrique had diuided it betwixt themſelues, and were in B poſſeſſion thereof, and that as for Donna Ioane, they would intreate her kindly and honourably, and prouide her a husband, but in any caſe it behooued him to deliuer her into their hands.

A ſeditious Prelate.

The Marquis who had bad counſell, and was ſtill accompanied with ſeditious perſons, refuſed to deliuer the Ladie, and that which was worſe, at the perſwaſion of Doctor Anthonie Nuenes of Cité Rodrigo, hee beganne to broach new practiſes with Don Alphonſo king of Portugall, for to procure him to marrie Donna Ioane, promiſing to make him King of Caſtile. On the other ſide the Arch-biſhop of Toledo, a man of a turbulent ſpirit, and a louer of Innouations, complayned, that the King and Queene, did not accompliſh that which he had hoped for and deſerued, nor yet what they had pro- C miſed him before their comming to the Crowne, ſeeking all meanes and occaſions to free himſelfe from their ſeruice. But enuie was it that vexed him, to ſee the Cardinall of Spaine (whome he hated) to be in ſo great credit and authoritie by their meanes: for theſe reſpects hee left the Court, beeing accompanied by Hernando Alarçon his familiar Councellour, the great and renowned Alcumiſt of thoſe dayes.

Hernando Alarcon.

The king and Queene beeing come to Vailliodolit, by the way of Medina del Campo, the mote or fort whereof they left in the keeping of the Duke of Alua, they were viſited by diuers Deputies of Townes and Citties, who came to do them homage, and to offer them all dutie and obedience. In the meane time, the Marquis of Villena importuned the king of Portugall to marrie Donna Ioane, with the kingdome for her dow- D rie, or elſe to defend her as an Vnkle, aſſuring him that hee ſhould find readie to do him ſeruice, himſelfe, the Maſter of Calatraua, the Earle of Vregna, the Marquis of Cales his brother-in-law, Don Alphonſo of Aguilar, the Earle of Benauent, and alſo the Dukes of Arcualo and Albuquerque, and the Arch-biſhoppe of Toledo, together with fourteene of the chiefe Citties of Caſtile, who wanted but a head, who at his firſt arriuall would furniſh him with fiue thouſand Lances, with other forces and meanes. And among theſe bargaines, hee demaunded of King Don Alphonſo diuers great gifts and aduancements both for himſelfe and for others.

Practiſes of the Marquis of Villena in Portugal.

The king of Portugall hauing conſulted with his Councell about this buſineſſe, notwithſtanding that their opinions were diuers and contrarious, yet hee ſent Commiſ- E ſioners to treate of this marriage with Donna Ioane his Neece, and by Ruy de Seça his Ambaſſadour, hee willed king Don Fernand and Queene Izabella, to giue ouer freely vnto him the kingdomes of Caſtile and Leon, the which they did vniuſtly poſſeſſe and inherit, in regard they did belong and appertaine to D. Ioane, whome the Ambaſſadour called Queene, ſaying, that if they had any right or intereſt in thoſe Realmes, they ſhould ſubmit themſelues to the tryall of lawe, and that hee would lay downe his armes, ſo as they would diſpoſſeſſe themſelues, and leaue the kingdomes in the hands of a third perſon: and if they ſhould refuſe ſo to do, hee then tooke God for witneſſe and iudge, that he was not the author of thoſe miſeries which ſhould enſue.

Vntill that time, king Don Alphonſo had liued and raigned in great credit, magnifi- F cence, and reputation, and with good and happie ſucceſſe in his affaires concerning his State: but the couetous and greedie deſire hee had to raigne in Spayne, by the meanes of Donna Ioane, whome hee had oftentimes reiected and refuſed, as beeing aſſured, and confidently reſolued, that ſhee was not lawfull daughter to the late king Henry, did caſt him head-long into a gulph of miſeries, by the vnluckie and inteſtine warres, which which hee tooke in hand by her meanes againſt the Kings Fernand and Izabella: who by the aduice of their Councell, did wiſely anſwer his demaunds, ſhewing him, that there was no reaſon in that which hee went about, and that he ought to call to mind the cauſe why hee had refuſed Donna Ioane in King Henryes life-time, whoſe daughter hee very well knew ſhee was not, and that therefore they did greatly meruaile at that which hee now beganne to attempt: and they did likewiſe proteſt not to bee guiltie of any miſeries which follow warre, beeing determined by all meanes to defend and protect their kingdomes.

The King and Queene finding hereby, that warre would follow, they did ſeeke by all Caſtile.
meanes to giue contentment to the Marquis, the Arch-biſhoppe of Toledo and others, on whome thoſe affaires depended, but their labour was in vaine. The Arch-biſhoppe ſhewed himſelfe moſt obſtinate, who among other furious ſpeeches, ſayd, that he would teach the King and Queene what it was to offend the Arch-biſhoppe of Toledo: and no perſwaſions nor intreatie of Don Pedro of Acugna, Earle of Buendia his brother, nor of other graue and religious perſons, could alter his determination, but hee did ſtill with great obſtinacie perſiſt in that which Hernando Alarcon had ſuggeſted: Therefore on either ſide great preparitions of warre were made, and the Kingdome was in ſuch ſort diuided, as diuers, who ſeemed to be deſirous of quiet, gaue occaſion to haue their loyaltie called in queſtion: ſouldiers were leauied euery where, and diligent watch was kept in all the Citties, Townes, and Caſtles, ſome taking the Kings and Queenes part, others adhering to the King of Portugall, who aduertiſed his Partiſans, that hee would ſhortly come into the Countrey with a great army. Audacious ſpeech of the Archb.

The King Don Fernand, and Queene Izabella diuided betwixt them the charge of the defence of the Kingdomes, ſo as King Fernand ſhould haue a care of that part which was toward the North, that is to ſay, old Caſtile, Leon, and the countries next adjacent, and Queene Izabella ſhould looke to thoſe Regions and Prouinces which are beyond the mountaines, namely, Toledo, Andaluſia, and Murcia: ſhee was accompanied by Don Pedro de Velaſco the Conſtable, Don Diego Hurtado of Mendoza, who was created Duke of Infantaſgo, and by Don Garcy Aluares of Toledo Duke of Alua: by the way ſhee cauſed the Arch-biſhoppe to be ſounded once againe, who lay at Alcala, ſending the Conſtable vnto him, who was a wiſe and diſcreet Knight, who did ſo well handle the matter, as the Arch-biſhop had condiſcended to the Queenes demaunds, had not Hernando Alarcon and his aſſociates perſwaded him to the contrarie. Dukedome of Infantaſgo.

King Ferdinand beeing deſirous to haue the Citties of Salamanca and Zamora to take a new oath of allegeance, went thither, and would willingly haue exacted the like from them of Toro, but hee would not hazard his perſon in going thither, albeit that Roderigo de Vllos his chiefe Treaſurer, had the Caſtle in his power: for not long before, his elder brother Iohn de Vlloa, had made himſelfe Maſter of the Cittie, whither he had drawne diuers leude perſons, who fearing puniſhment, for their many heinous crimes, did ſhadow themſelues vnder his protection: who for his owne part did greatly tyrannize in the citty and had newly cauſed the Licenciate Roderigo of Valdiuieſſo to bee hanged foorth at the windowes of his owne houſe, and had moreouer receyued money of the king of Portugall, at whoſe ſeruice and deuotion he kept the ſame place.

The Cardinall of Spaine did at the ſame time write to King Don Alphonſo, alledging many reaſons to diuert him from a warre ſo dangerous and vncertaine, but the King in his anſwer wanted no contrarie reaſons. Queen Izabella in the meane time furniſhed Toledo with Garriſons, and placed Don Roderigo Manriques, Earle of Paredes for an aſſiſtant there, who tearmed himſelfe Maſter of Saint Iames, and hauing by her preſence well ordered that Cittie, and by letters and commaundements other places of Andaluſia and Murcia, ſhee returned to Vailliodolit. At the ſame time the Inhabitants of Alcarras rebelled againſt the Marquis of Villena, and craued ayde of Don Roderigo Manriques againſt the Marquis, who intended to beſeege them, the which they obtayned, moreouer the King and Queene ſent vnto them the Biſhop of Auila, and the Lord of Coca and Alaexos, who were both of them called Alphonſo de Fonſeca.

The Marquis fearing leaſt other places might reuolt, by the example of Alcarras, ſolliſolicited the Kings of Portugall to make haſt, and hauing taken Donna Ioane whome he termed Queene, out of Eſcalona, hee brought her by Trugillo vnto Plaiſance, where as King Alfonſo of Portugall arriued with an army of fiue thouſand horſe, of all ſorts, and fifteene thouſand foote. Hee was attended on by the Archbiſhoppe of Lisbone, the Biſhoppe of Ebora and Coimbra, and many other Prelats, and Church-men, who are alwaie deſirous to bee where ſtirres and tumults are, albeit the true followers of Chriſt Ieſus, haue peace in greateſt recommendation: more-ouer, there were with him, the Conſtable, and Marſhall of Portugall, the Duke of Bragança, and his brother the Earle of Faro, the Earles of Villa-real, Penela, Marialua, and Pegnamaçor, with a great numbet of other Nobillity, deſirous to ſerue their King to winne honour, and to encreaſe their eſtates by the enlargement of ſo great a conqueſt as they hoped to make vpon the Kingdomes of Caſtile and Leon, with the teritories annexed there-vnto, the moſt part of whome, hauing vpon this vncertaine ground, ſold or morgaged their lands and liuings.

The King of Portugall and Donna Ioane were betrothed each to other in the Citty of Playſance, proteſting to craue a diſpenſation from the Pope: there were preſent, Don Diego de Eſtuniga Duke of Areualo, and his brother the Earle of Miranda, and King Alfonſo, and Donna Ioane, were at that act and ceremony called and intitled, King and Queene of Caſtile and Leon. King Alfonſo at his departure out of Portugal, leaft his Sonne the Prince Don Iohn Regent and gouernor there, who was newly made father to a Sonne by his wife Donna Leonor, who was named Alfonſo being borne at Lisbone in the yeare 1475. King Fernand and Queene Iſabell did like-wiſe intitle themſelues Kings of Portugall and of the Algarues, and either-ſide did beare the armes of both the Kingdomes indifferently. The gouernors of the frontiers were commanded to inuade one another, which they readily executed with great cruelty, and to the great ſpoyle of the realme of Portugall, the people of Caſtile putting all to fire and ſword that were neere to their borders, eſpecially on the coaſt of Badajos, where the Caſtle of Nodar was taken from the Portugalls, and Martin de Sepulueda, one of the foure and twenty of Siuill, was made gouernor thereof, who from thence made ſharpe warre vpon the Portugois, and yet in the end hee proued ſcarce faithfull to his Kings. Don Alfonſo of Montroy, Treaſorer of the order of Alcantara, who ſeemed him-ſelfe Maiſter thereof, did on the other-ſide winne Algretta.

An. 1475.

In like manner Don Alfonſo de Cardegna, great commander of Leon, who called him-ſelfe maiſter of Saint Iames, did with ſundry troupes of horſe forrage and ſpoile the fronters of Portugall, and brought great booties from thence. Don Pero Aluares de Soto mayor, ſhewed him-ſelfe on the King of Portugalls ſide, and tooke Tuy, calling him-ſelfe Vicount thereof, and tooke alſo Bayon of Minio: ſundry other exploits of warre, with burning of houſes and robberies, were committed on the frontiers by this enraged multitude.

Now the king of Portugall did perceaue that the warre was likely to laſt longer and bee more difficult than hee had expected, and almoſt deſpairing of ending it with honour, vnles hee had the aide and ſupply of ſome greater power, hee ſought by all meanes to incite the French King, Lewis the leauenth, to breake his alliance with the Kings of Caſtile, and to aſſaille them on that ſide of Guipuſcoa, the which hee obtayned, as hereafter ſhalbe mentioned. In the meane time, hauing receiued the Citty of Toro, by the treaſon of Iohn Vlloa, hee aſſayled the Caſtle, and tooke it by force, and by the like treaſon made him-ſelfe Maiſter of Zamora, the which was deliuered vnto him, by Iohn de Porras one of the chiefe cittizens thereof, whoſe Sonne in law named Alfonſo de Valencia beeing Maſhall, was Captayne of the Caſtle, who had rather truſt to the vncertaine promiſes of the King of Portugall, than reſpecting his owne honour, relie vpon the offers of King Fernand and Queene Iſabell: from Zamora King Alfonſo came backe to Toro, where his new betrothed wife and her mother Queene Ioane lay, who was ſiſter to this King, who dyed about that time, and was very honorably buried at Madrid in the monaſtery of S. Francis.

The

A The Kings, Fernand and Izabella, greatly apprehending the wrongs and loſſes which they daily ſuſtained, they haſted on their ſubiects and ſouldiers to ſuppreſſe the Portugois, or elſe to fight with them. Great numbers of Lords, Knights, and men at armes came to Vailliodolit, where the whole bodie of the armie, from all places of Spayne, was aſſembled, Andaluſia excepted, in which Prouince the quarrell did ſtill continue betwixt the Duke of Medina Sidonia, and the Marquis of Cales, and betwixt the Earle of Cabrera, and Don Alphonſo of Aguilar: and there was ſome likeli-hood, that the Marquis, and Don Alphonſo would take the Marquis of Villena's part their brother-in-law. The men of note that were come to Vailliodolit, were theſe, Don Pedro Gonçal of Mendoza,
B Cardinall of Spayne, and his breethren Don Diego Hurtado of Mendoza, Duke of Infantaſgo, Don Inigo Lopes of Mendoza, Earle of Tendilla, Don Lorenzo Suares, Earle of Crugna, Don Pedro de Velaſco, Conſtable of Caſtile, Don Alphonſo Henriques high Admirall, Don Garcy Aluares of Toledo, Duke of Alua, Don Roderigo Alphonſo Pimentel, Earle of Benauent, Don Henry Henriques, Earle of Alua de Liſta, Don Pedro Manrique Earle of Treuigno, Don Iohn Manrique, Earle of Caſtagneda, and his brother Don Gabriel Manrique, Earle of Oſorno, Don Pedro Aluares of Oſorio, Marquis of Aſtorga, D. Diego Lopes Sarmiento, Earle of Salinas, Don Pedro of Mendoza, Earle of Montagu, D. Alphonſo d'Areillan, Earle of Aguilar, Don Pedro of Acugna, Earle of Buendia, with other Lords eccleſiaſticall and temporall.

C Don Bertrand de la Cueua, Duke of Albuquerque remayned neuter, knowing not how to reſolue: he would willingly haue adhered to the King of Portugall, who was to bee husband to her, who was reputed to be his daughter, but he durſt not: yet for all that at the laſt, he tooke the partie of king Fernand and Queene Izabella, by meanes whereof diuers did take their parts, who before that time were doubtfull what to do: Garcy Lopes of Padilla Treaſurer of Alcantara, who was the laſt Maſter of that Order, and Don Diego of Caſtile, with diuers Knights and Commanders came to the Kings and Queenes ſeruice. The armie beeing muſtred, there were of the Prouinces of Guipuſcoa, Biſcay, Alaua, Gallicia, and the Aſturia's, thirty thouſand foote, foure thouſand men at armes, and eight hundred Genets or light horſe. King Fernand with this mighty armie marched
D along the riuer of Duero againſt the cittie of Toro, where the King of Portugall, with his betrothed bride, did remayne: by the way the Biſcans and Guipuſcoans did take by force a place called las Hazegnas de los Hierros, and ſome of the Inhabitants thereof in regard of the rebellion, were hanged.

The King of Portugall who was inferiour in forces, would not come to field, but kept himſelfe within Toro, before which cittie king Fernand ſtood with his armie embatteled aboue fiue howers, and at the laſt he ſent Don Gomez Manrique, to tell king Alphonſo, that he ſhould do well to giue ouer the title of king of Caſtile, and to returne into his owne kingdome, and that if his future wife did lay any claime to the Realme of Caſtile, that the ſame might be referred to the iudgement of the Sea of Rome, or if he had rather
E to trie the matter by armes, that then he ſhould come foorth to fight, or elſe to accept the ſingle combate betwixt them two, to ſaue that effuſion of innocent bloud: King Alphonſo made anſwer to euery poynt with great modeſty, but to that of Duell or ſingle fight, hee required, that Izabella, and Donna Ioane, (who pretended each of them to be Queene of Caſtile) ſhould be kept as hoſtages, to the end that hee which ſhould prooue conqueror, might enioy his prize, to wit, the kingdomes of Caſtile and Leon: thereupon were diuers meſſages and anſwers ſent too and fro, but to no purpoſe: ſo as King Don Fernand hauing tarried certaine dayes about Toro, his army beginning to want victuals, and other neceſſaries, hee was aduiſed to retire from thence, notwithſtanding that hee was aſſured, that the Portugals were in the ſelfe ſame eſtate. Howſoeuer, the ar-
F mie was brought backe, to the great diſcontent of the ſouldiers, who were extreamely ſorrowfull, that ſo great a force had beene ſo vnprofitably and idly employed: and they did much murmure againſt the great Lords, whome the king had much ado to qualifie and appeaſe.

Toro beſieged by King Fernand.

Beeing returned to Medina del Campo, Queene Izabella came thither from Tordeſillas: then the king had great need of money, by reaſon that his treaſures were drawne dry, drie, hauing ſpent all that which King Henry had left in the Caſtle of Segobia, whereof Andrew de Cabrera was keeper, who was newly made Marquis of Moya, in recompence of his good ſeruice: the meanes to get money, and leaſt hurtfull to the people, who were ouer-much ſpoiled and conſumed, was to take the Iewels and plate of the Church, whereunto the Arch-biſhoppes and Biſhoppes did conſent, in regard of the Kings neceſſitie, ſeeing it had beene aduiſed by good councell. Whileſt theſe things were doing, the Earle of Paredes, and other the Kings ſeruants did aſſayle Ciudad Real, which the Maſter of Calatraua, with other places, had vſurped: Moreouer, the Earle beeing come to Vcles, made ſuch ſharpe warre vppon the Marquis of Villena, as hee hindred both of them from going to the ayde of the King of Portugall, taking diuers commodious places belonging to the Marquiſate of Villena, thereby to fruſtrate the Marquis of the reuenues thereof, which he receyued of the tenants with a better will then they payed it to the Marquis, in regard they did extreamely hate the Portugals. Hauing rebelled, they did fauour the Earle in the taking of the Caſtle of Villena, who was likewiſe ayded therein by the Arragonois, and by that meanes the Marquiſate was re-united to the Crowne, with promiſe, neuer more to alienate it. The Captaine of Requegna deliuered vppe the fort to King Fernand, which held for the Marquis, beeing aduertized that the people were in armes readie to aſſaile it.

In theſe aduerſities the Marquis alwaies ſhewed an incredible conſtancie, and ſayd, that hee did not reſpect the loſſe of a little, ſeeing that hee hoped to haue the command of Toledo, Burgos, Cordoua, and Seuile; and hee did place good Garriſons in thoſe townes and fortreſſes which were left. The Maſter of Calatraua, the Earle of Vregna, and the Duke of Arcualo were almoſt in the like diſtreſſe, for they were earneſtly ſollicited by the King of Portugall, to accompliſh what they had promiſed him, the which they could not performe, and they excuſed themſelues, in regard they were of neceſſitie to defend the townes and forts which had taken his part, acquainting him with the toyle and trauaile which they did endure and vndergo, in going about to make him the king of Caſtile.
